45 And, father cardinal, I have heard you say,

That we shall see and know our friends in heaven :

If that be true, I shall see my boy again ;

For, since the birth of Cain, the first male-child,

To him that did but yesterday suspire⁵,

50 There was not such a gracious⁶ creature born.

But now will canker sorrow eat my bud,

And chase the native beauty from his cheek.

And he will look as hollow as a ghost ;

As dim and meagre as an ague's fit :

55 And so he'll die ; and, rising so again,

When I shall meet him in the court of heaven

I shall not know him : therefore never, never

Must I behold my pretty Arthur more.

Pand. You hold too heinous a respect of grief.

60 Const. He talks to me, that never had a son.

K. Phil. You are as fond of grief, as of your child.

Const. Grief fills the room up of my absent child,
Lies in his bed, walks up and down with me;
Puts on his pretty looks, repeats his words,
Remembers me of all his gracious parts,
Stuffs out his vacant garments with his form;
Then, have I reason to be fond of grief.
Fare you well: had you such a loss as I,
I could give better comfort than you do.—
I will not keep this form upon my head,

[Tearing off her head-dress.]

When there is such disorder in my wit.
O lord! my boy, my Arthur, my fair son!
My life, my joy, my food, my all the world!
My widow-comfort, and my sorrows' cure! [Exit.]

K. Phil. I fear some outrage, and I'll follow her. [Exit.]

Lewis. There's nothing in this world can make Life is as tedious as a twice-told tale, [me joy:
Vexing the dull ear of a drowsy man; [taste,
And bitter shame hath spoil'd the sweet world's
That it yields nought, but shame, and bitterness.

Pand. Before the curing of a strong disease,
Even in the instant of repair and health,
The fit is strongest; evils, that take leave,
On their departure most of all shew evil:
What have you lost by losing of this day?

Lewis. All days of glory, joy, and happiness.

Pand. If you had won it, certainly, you had.
No, no: when fortune means to men most good,
She looks upon them with a threatening eye.
'Tis strange, to think how much king John hath lost
In this which he accounts so clearly won:
Are not you griev'd, that Arthur is his prisoner?

Lewis. As heartily, as he is glad he hath him.

Pand. Your mind is all as youthful as your blood.
Now hear me speak, with a prophetic spirit;
For even the breath of what I mean to speak
Shall blow each dust, each straw, each little rub,
Out of the path which shall directly lead
Thy foot to England's throne; and, therefore, mark.
John hath seiz'd Arthur; and it cannot be,
That while warm life plays in that infant's veins,
The misplaced John should entertain an hour,
One minute, nay, one quiet breath of rest:
A sceptre, snatch'd with an unruly hand,
Must be as boisterously maintain'd as gain'd:
And he, that stands upon a slippery place,
Makes nice of no vile hold to stay him up:
That John may stand, then Arthur needs must fall;

So be it, for it cannot be but so.

Lewis. But what shall I gain by young Arthur's fall?

Pand. You in the right of lady Blanch your wife,
May then make all the claim that Arthur did.

Lewis. And lose it, life and all, as Arthur did.

Pand. How green you are, and fresh in this old world!

John lays you plots; the times conspire with you:
For he, that steeps his safety in true blood,¹
Shall find but bloody safety, and untrue.

This act, so evilly born, shall cool the hearts
Of all his people, and freeze up their zeal;
That none so small advantage shall step forth,
To check his reign, but they will cherish it:

No natural exhalation in the sky,
No scape of nature², no distemper'd day,
No common wind, no custom'd event,
But they will pluck away his natural cause,
And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs,
Abortives, presages, and tongues of heaven,
Plainly denouncing vengeance upon John.

Lewis. May be, he will not touch young Arthur's life,

But hold himself safe in his prisonment.

Pand. O, sir, when he shall hear of your approach,
If that young Arthur be not gone already,
Even at that news he dies: and then the hearts
Of all his people shall revolt from him,

And kiss the lips of unacquainted change;
And pick strong matter of revolt, and wrath,
Out of the bloody fingers' ends of John.

Methinks; I see this hurly all on foot;

And, O, what better matter breeds for you,

Than I have nam'd!—The bastard Faulconbridge
Is now in England, ransacking the church,
Offending charity: If but a dozen French
Were there in arms, they would be as a call
To train ten thousand English to their side;

Or, as a little snow, tumbled about,
Anon becomes a mountain. O noble Dauphin,
Go with me to the king; 'Tis wonderful
What may be wrought out of their discontent:
Now that their souls are top-full of offence,
For England go; I will whet on the king.

Lewis. Strong reasons make strong actions:—

Let us go;

If you say, ay, the king will not say, no.

[Exeunt.]

A C T IV.

S C E N E I.

England.

Northampton. A room in the castle.

Enter Hubert, and Executioners.

Hub. H EAT me these irons hot; and, look thou stand
Within the arras: when I strike my foot

Upon the bosom of the ground, rush forth;
And bind the boy, which you shall find with me,
Fast to the chair: be heedful: hence, and watch.

Exec. I hope, your warrant will bear out the deed.

Hub. Uncleanly scruples! Fear not you: look to't.— [Exeunt Executioners.]

Young lad, come forth; I have to say with you.

¹ Meaning, the blood of him that has the just claim. ² The author very finely calls a monstrous birth, an escape of nature; as if it were produced while she was busy elsewhere, or intent on some other thing.

Enter Arthur.

Arth. Good morrow, Hubert.

Hub. Good morrow, little prince.

Arth. As little prince (having so great a title
To be more prince) as may be.—You are sad.

Hub. Indeed, I have been merrier.

Arth. Mercy on me!

Metanks, nobody should be sad, but I:

Yet, I remember, when I was in France,
Young gentlemen would be as sad as night,
Only for wantonness. By my christendom,
So I were out of prison, and kept sheep,
I should be as merry as the day is long;
And so I would be here, but that I doubt
My uncle practises more harm to me:

He is afraid of me, and I of him:

Is it my fault that I was Geoffrey's son?

No, indeed, is't not; And I would to heaven,
I were your son, so you would love me, Hubert.

Hub. If I talk to him, with his innocent prate,
He will awake my mercy, which lies dead:
Therefore I will be sudden, and dispatch. [Aside.

Arth. Are you sick, Hubert? you look pale
to-day:

In sooth, I would you were a little sick;

That I might sit all night, and watch with you:
I warrant, I love you more than you do me.

Hub. His words do take possession of my bosom.—
Read here, young Arthur—— [Shewing a paper.
How now, foolish rheum! [Aside.

Turning despiteous torture out of door?

I must be brief; lest resolution drop

Out at mine eyes, in tender womanish tears.—

Can you not read it? is it not fair writ?

Arth. Too fairly, Hubert, for so foul effect:
Must you with hot irons burn out both mine eyes?

Hub. Young boy, I must.

Arth. And will you?

Hub. And I will.

Arth. Have you the heart? When your head did but ache,

I knit my handkerchief about your brows,
(The best I had, a princess wrought it me)

And I did never ask it you again:

And with my hand at midnight held your head;

And, like the watchful minutes to the hour,

Still and anon cheer'd up the heavy time;

Saying, What lack you? and, Where lies your grief?

Or, What good love may I perform for you?

Many a poor man's son would have lain still,

And ne'er have spoke a loving word to you;

But you at your sick service had a prince.

Nay, you may think, my love was crafty love,

And call it, cunning: Do, an if you will:

If heaven be pleased that you must use me ill,

Why, then you must.—Will you put out mine eyes?

These eyes, that never did, nor never shall,

So much as frown on you?

Hub. I have sworn to do it;

And with hot irons must I burn them out.

Arth. Ay, none, but in this iron age, would do it!

The iron of itself, though heat red-hot,

Approaching near these eyes, would drink my tears,

And quench his fiery indignation,

Even in the matter of mine innocence:

Nay, after that, consume away in rust,

But for containing fire to harm mine eye.

Are you more stubborn-hard than hammer'd iron?

5 An if an angel should have come to me,

And told me, Hubert should put out mine eyes,

I would not have believ'd him; no tongue, but

Hubert's. [Hubert stamps, and the men enter.

Hub. Come forth; do as I bid you do.

10 Arth. O, save me, Hubert, save me! my eyes are out,

Even with the fierce looks of these bloody men.

Hub. Give me the iron, I say, and bind him here.

Arth. Alas, what need you be so boistrous-rough?

15 I will not struggle, I will stand stone-still.

For heaven's sake, Hubert, let me not be bound!

Nay, hear me, Hubert! drive these men away,

And I will sit as quiet as a lamb;

I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word,

20 Nor look upon the iron angrily:

Thrust but these men away, and I'll forgive you,
Whatever torment you do put me to.

Hub. Go, stand within; let me alone with him.

Exec. I am best pleas'd to be from such a deed.

25 [Exeunt.

Arth. Alas, I then have chid away my friend;
He hath a stern look, but a gentle heart:—

Let him come back, that his compassion may Give life to yours.

30 Hub. Come, boy, prepare yourself.

Arth. Is there no remedy?

Hub. None, but to lose your eyes. [In yours,

Arth. O heaven!—that there were but a mote

A grain, a dust, a gnat, a wandering hair,

35 Any annoyance in that precious sense!

Then, feeling what small things are boistrous there,

Your vile intent must needs seem horrible.

Hub. Is this your promise? go to, hold your tongue.

40 Arth. Hubert, the utterance of a brace of tongues
Must needs want pleading for a pair of eyes:

Let me not hold my tongue; let me not, Hubert!

Or, Hubert, if you will, cut out my tongue,

So I may keep mine eyes; O, spare mine eyes:

45 Though to no use, but still to look on you!

Lo, by my troth, the instrument is cold,

And would not harm me.

Hub. I can heat it, boy. [Grief,

Arth. No, in good sooth; the fire is dead with

50 Being create for comfort, to be us'd

In undeserv'd extremes: See else yourself;

There is no malice in this burning coal;

The breath of heaven hath blown his spirit out,

And strew'd repentant ashes on his head.

55 Hub. But with my breath I can revive it, boy.

Arth. And if you do, you will but make it blush,

And glow with shame of your proceedings, Hubert:

Nay, it, perchance, will sparkle in your eyes;

And, like a dog, that is compell'd to fight,

60 Snatch at his master that doth tarre him on.

All things, that you should use to do me wrong,

Deny their office; only you do lack

That mercy, which fierce fire, and iron, extends,

Creatures of note for mercy-lacking uses.

Hub.

Hub. Well, see to live: I will not touch thine eye
For all the treasure that thine uncle owes* :
Yet am I sworn, and I did purpose, boy,
With this same very iron to burn them out.

Arth. O, now you look like Hubert! all this
You were disguised. [while

Hub. Peace: no more. Adieu ;
Your uncle must not know but you are dead :
I'll fill these dogged spies with false reports.
And, pretty child, sleep doubtless, and secure,
That Hubert, for the wealth of all the world,
Will not offend thee.

Arth. O heaven!—I thank you, Hubert.

Hub. Silence; no more: Go closely in with me;
Much danger do I undergo for thee. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.

The Court of England.

Enter King John, Pembroke, Salisbury, and other lords.

K. John. Here once again we sit, once again
crown'd,
And look'd upon, I hope, with chearful eyes.

Pemb. This once again, but that your highness pleas'd,

Was once superfluous: you were crown'd before,
And that high royalty was ne'er pluck'd off;
The faiths of men ne'er stained with revolt;
Fresh expectation troubled not the land
With any long'd-for change, or better state.

Sal. Therefore, to be possess'd with double pomp,
To guard¹ a title that was rich before,
To gild refined gold, to paint the lily,
To throw a perfume on the violet,
To smooth the ice, or add another hue
Unto the rainbow, or with taper-light
To seek the beauteous eye of heaven to garnish,
Is wasteful, and ridiculous excess.

Pemb. But that your royal pleasure must be done,
This act is as an ancient tale new told;
And, in the last repeating, troublesome,
Being urged at a time unseasonable.

Sal. In this, the antique and well-noted face
Of plain old form is much disfigured:
And, like a shifted wind unto a sail,
It makes the course of thoughts to fetch about;
Startles and frights consideration;
Makes sound opinion sick, and truth suspected,
For putting on so new a fashion'd robe. [well,

Pemb. When workmen strive to do better than
They do confound their skill in covetousness² :
And, oftentimes, excusing of a fault
Doth make the fault the worse by the excuse;
As patches, set upon a little breach,
Discredit more in hiding of the fault,
Than did the fault before it was so patch'd.

Sal. To this effect, before you were new-crown'd,
We breath'd our counsel: but it pleas'd your highness
To over-bear it; and we are all well pleas'd;
Since all and every part of what we would,
Must make a stand at what your highness will.

K. John. Some reasons of this double coronation]

I have possess'd you with, and think them strong;
And more, more strong (when lesser is my fear)
I shall endue you with: Mean time, but ask
What you would have reform'd, that is not well;
And well shall you perceive, how willingly
I will both hear, and grant you your requests.

Pemb. Then I, (as one that am the tongue of these,
To sound³ the purposes of all their hearts)
Both for myself and them (but, chief of all,
Your safety, for the which myself and them
Bend their best studies) heartily request
The enfranchisement of Arthur; whose restraint
Doth move the murmuring lips of discontent
To break into this dangerous argument:—
If, what in rest you have, in right you hold,
Why then your fears (which, as they say, attend
The steps of wrong) should move you to mew up
Your tender kinsman, and to choak his days
With barbarous ignorance, and deny his youth
The rich advantage of good exercise?
That the time's enemies may not have this
To grace occasions, let it be our suit,
That you have bid us ask his liberty;
Which for our goods we do no further ask,
Than whereupon our weal, on you depending,
Counts it your weal, he have his liberty.

K. John. Let it be so; I do commit his youth

Enter Hubert.

To your direction.—Hubert, what news with you?

Pemb. This is the man should do the bloody deed;

He shew'd his warrant to a friend of mine:
The image of a wicked heinous fault
Lives in his eye; that close aspect of his
Does shew the mood of a much troubled breast;
And I do fearfully believe, 'tis done,
What we so fear'd he had a charge to do.

Sal. The colour of the king doth come and go,
Between his purpose and his conscience⁴,
Like heralds' twixt two dreadful battles set⁵:
His passion is so ripe, it needs must break.

Pemb. And, when it breaks, I fear will issue thence

The foul corruption of a sweet child's death.

K. John. We cannot hold mortality's strong hand:—

Good lords, although my will to give is living,
The suit which you demand is gone and dead;
He tells us, Arthur is deceas'd to-night.

Sal. Indeed, we fear'd his sickness was past cure.

Pemb. Indeed, we heard how near his death he was,

Before the child himself felt he was sick:

This must be answer'd, either here, or hence.

K. John. Why do you bend such solemn brows on me?

Think you, I bear the shears of destiny?

Have I commandment on the pulse of life?

Sal. It is apparent foul-play; and 'tis shame,

That greatness should so grossly offer it:—

So thrive it in your game! and so farewell.

* i. e. owns. ¹ To guard, is to fringe. ² i. e. not by their avarice, but in an eager emulation, an intense desire of excelling. ³ i. e. to declare, to publish. ⁴ i. e. between his consciousness of guilt, and his design to conceal it by fair professions. ⁵ i. e. placed.

Pemb. Stay yet, lord Salisbury; I'll go with thee,
And find the inheritance of this poor child,
His little kingdom of a forced grave.
That blood, which ow'd the breadth of all this isle,
Three foot of it doth hold; Bad world the while!
This must not be thus borne: this will break out
To all our sorrows, and ere long, I doubt. [Exeunt.]

K. John. They burn in indignation; I repent:
There is no sure foundation set on blood;
No certain life atchiev'd by others' death.—

Enter a Messenger.

A fearful eye thou hast; where is that blood,
That I have seen inhabit in those cheeks?
So foul a sky clears not without a storm:
Pour down thy weather:—How goes all in France?

Mes. From France to England.—Never such a
From any foreign preparation, [power
Was levy'd in the body of a land!

The copy of your speed is learn'd by them;
For, when you should be told they do prepare,
The tidings come, that they are all arriv'd. [drunk?]

K. John. O, where hath our intelligence been Where hath it slept? Where is my mother's care;
That such an army could be drawn in France,
And she not hear of it?

Mes. My liege, her ear
Is stopt with dust; the first of April, dy'd
Your noble mother: And, as I hear, my lord,
The lady Constance in a frenzy dy'd
Three days before: but this from rumour's tongue
I idly heard; if true or false, I know not.

K. John. Withhold thy speed, dreadful occasion!
O, make a league with me, till I have pleas'd
My discontented peers!—What! mother dead?
How wildly then walks my estate in France?—
Under whose conduct came those powers of France,
That, thou for truth giv'st out, are landed here?

Mes. Under the Dauphin.

Enter Faulconbridge and Peter of Pomfret.

K. John. Thou hast made me giddy
With these ill tidings.—Now, what says the world
To your proceedings? do not seek to stuff
My head with more ill news, for it is full.

Faulc. But if you be afeard to hear the worst,
Then let the worst, unheard, fall on your head.

K. John. Bear with me, cousin; for I was amaz'd
Under the tide: but now I breathe again
Aloft the flood; and can give audience
To any tongue, speak it of what it will.

Faulc. How I have sped among the clergymen,
The sums I have collected shall express.
But, as I travell'd hither through the land,
I find the people strangely fantasy'd;
Possess'd with rumours, full of idle dreams;
Not knowing what they fear, but full of fear:
And here's a prophet, that I brought with me
From forth the streets of Pomfret, whom I found
With many hundreds treading on his heels;
To whom he sung in rude harsh-sounding rhimes,
That, ere the next Ascension-day at noon,
Your highness should deliver up your crown.

K. John. Thou idle dreamer, wherefore didst thou say so? [so.]

Peter. Fore-knowing that the truth will fall out

K. John. Hubert, away with him; imprison him;

5 And on that day at noon, whereon, he says,
I shall yield up my crown, let him be hang'd:
Deliver him to safety¹, and return,

For I must use thee.—O my gentle cousin,
[Exit Hubert, with Peter.]

10 Hear'st thou the news abroad, who are arriv'd?

Faulc. The French, my lord; men's mouths are full of it:

Besides, I met lord Bigot, and lord Salisbury,
(With eyes as red as new-enkindled fire)

15 And others more, going to seek the grave
Of Arthur, who, they say, is kill'd to-night
On your suggestion.

K. John. Gentle kinsman, go,
And thrust thyself into their companies:

20 I have a way to win their loves again;
Bring them before me.

Faulc. I will seek them out. [before.—

K. John. Nay, but make haste; the better foot
O, let me have no subject enemies,

25 When adverse foreigners affright my towns
With dreadful pomp of stout invasion!

Be Mercury, set feathers to thy heels;
And fly, like thought, from them to me again.

Faulc. The spirit of the time shall teach me speed.
[Exit.]

30 K. John. Spoke like a sprightly noble gentleman.
Go after him; for he, perhaps, shall need
Some messenger betwixt me and the peers;
And be thou he.

35 Mes. With all my heart, my liege. [Exit.

K. John. My mother dead!

Re-enter Hubert. [to-night:

Hub. My lord, they say, five moons were seen Four fixed; and the fifth did whirl about 40 The other four, in wond'rous motion.

K. John. Five moons?

Hub. Old men, and beldams, in the streets
Do prophesy upon it dangerously:

45 Young Arthur's death is common in their mouths:
And when they talk of him they shake their heads,
And whisper one another in the ear;

And he, that speaks, doth gripe the hearer's wrist;
Whilst he, that hears, makes fearful action

50 With wrinkled brows, with nods, with rolling eyes.
I saw a smith stand with his hammer, thus,
The whilst his iron did on the anvil cool,

With open mouth swallowing a taylor's news;
Who, with his shears and measure in his hand,

55 Standing on slippers (which his nimble haste
Had falsely thrust upon contrary feet²)
Told of a many thousand warlike French,

That were embattled and rank'd in Kent:
Another lean unwash'd artificer

60 Cuts off his tale, and talks of Arthur's death.

K. John. Why seek'st thou to possess me with these fears?

Why urgest thou so oft young Arthur's death?

¹ i. e. into custody. ² From this we are to infer, that some shoes of those times could only be worn on that foot for which they were made.

Thy hand hath murder'd him: I had a mighty cause
To wish him dead, but thou hadst none to kill him.

Hub. Had none, my lord! why, did not you provoke me?

K. John. It is the curse of kings, to be attended
By slaves, that take their humours for a warrant
To break within the bloody house of life:
And, on the winking of authority,
To understand a law; to know the meaning
Of dangerous majesty, when, perchance, it frowns
More upon humour than advis'd respect.

Hub. Here is your hand and seal for what I did.

K. John. Oh, when the last account 'twixt heaven and earth

Is to be made, then shall this hand and seal
Witness against us to damnation!
How oft the sight of means to do ill deeds,
Makes deeds ill done? Had'st not thou been by,
A fellow by the hand of nature mark'd,
Quoted¹, and signed to do a deed of shame,
This murder had not come into my mind:
But, taking note of thy abhorr'd aspect,
Finding thee fit for bloody villainy,
Apt, liable, to be employed in danger,
I faintly broke with thee of Arthur's death;
And thou, to be endeared to a king,
Mad'st it no conscience to destroy a prince.

Hub. My lord,—

K. John. Hadst thou but shook thy head, or made a pause,
When I spake darkly what I purposed;
Or turn'd an eye of doubt upon my face;
Or bid me tell my tale in express words; [off,
Deep shame had struck me dumb, made me break
And those thy fears might have wrought fears in
But thou didst understand me by my signs, [me:
And didst in signs again parley with sin;
Yea, without stop, didst let thy heart consent,
And, consequently, thy rude hand to act
The deed, which both our tongues held vile to name.
Out of my sight, and never see me more!
My nobles leave me; and my state is brav'd,
Even at my gates, with ranks of foreign powers:
Nay, in the body of this fleshly land,
This kingdom, this confine of blood and breath,
Hostility and civil tumult reigns
Between my conscience, and my cousin's death.

Hub. Arm you against your other enemies,
I'll make a peace between your soul and you.
Young Arthur is alive: This hand of mine
Is yet a maiden and an innocent hand,
Not painted with the crimson spots of blood.
Within this bosom never enter'd yet
The dreadful motion of a murd'rous thought,
And you have slander'd nature in my form;
Which, howsoever rude exteriorly,
Is yet the cover of a fairer mind
Than to be butcher of an innocent child.

K. John. Doth Arthur live? O, haste thee to the peers,
Throw this report on their incensed rage,
And make them tame to their obedience!

Forgive the comment that my passion made
Upon thy feature; for my rage was blind,
And foul imaginary eyes of blood
Presented thee more hideous than thou art.
Oh, answer not; but to my closet bring
The angry lords, with all expedient haste:
I conjure thee but slowly; run more fast. [Exe.

SCENE III.

A Street before a Prison.

Enter Arthur on the walls.

Arth. The wall is high; and yet will I leap down:—
Good ground, be pitiful, and hurt me not!—
There's few, or none, do know me; if they did,
This ship-boy's semblance hath disguis'd me quite.
I am afraid; and yet I'll venture it.
If I get down, and do not break my limbs,
I'll find a thousand shifts to get away:
As good to die, and go, as die, and stay.

[Leaps down.

Oh me! my uncle's spirit is in these stones:—
Heaven take my soul, and England keep my bones!

[Dies.

Enter Pembroke, Salisbury, and Bigot.

Sal. Lords, I will meet him at Saint Edmund's—
It is our safety, and we must embrace [bury;
This gentle offer of the perilous time.

Pemb. Who brought that letter from the cardinal?

Sal. The count Melun, a noble lord of France;
Whose private² with me, of the Dauphin's love,
Is much more general than these lines import.

Bigot. Tomorrow morning let us meet him then.

Sal. Or, rather, then set forward: for 'twill be
Two long days' journey, lords, or ere³ we meet.

Enter Faulconbridge.

Faulc. Once more to-day well met, distemper'd lords!

The king, by me, requests your presence straight.

Sal. The king hath disposess'd himself of us;
We will not line his thin-bestained cloak
With our pure honours, nor attend the foot
That leaves the print of blood where-e'er it walks:
Return, and tell him so; we know the worst.

Faulc. Whate'er you think, good words, I think, were best. [now.

Sal. Our griefs, and not our manners, reason⁴

Faulc. But there is little reason in your grief:

Therefore, 'twere reason, you had manners now.

Pemb. Sir, sir, impatience hath its privilege.

Faulc. 'Tis true; to hurt his master, no man else.

Sal. This is the prison: What is he lies here?

[Seeing Arthur,

Pemb. O death, made proud with pure and princely beauty!

The earth had not a hole to hide this deed.

Sal. Murder, as hating what himself hath done,
Doth lay it open to urge on revenge. [grave,

Bigot. Or, when he doom'd this beauty to the Found it too precious-princely for a grave.

Sal. Sir Richard, what think you? Have you beheld,

¹ i. e. observed, distinguished. ² Meaning, his private account, or letter to me. ³ i. e. before.
⁴ i. e. speak.

Or have you read, or heard? or could you think?
Or do you almost think, although you see,
That you do see? could thought, without this object,
Form such another? This is the very top,
The height, the crest, or crest unto the crest,
Of murder's arms: this is the bloodiest shame,
The wildest savag'ry, the vilest stroke,
That ever wall-ey'd wrath, or staring rage,
Presented to the tears of soft remorse.

Pemb. All murders past do stand excus'd in this,
And this, so sole, and so unmatched,
Shall give a holiness, a purity,
To the yet-unbegotten sins of time;
And prove a deadly bloodshed, but a jest,
Exemplified by this heinous spectacle.

Faulc. It is a damned and a bloody work;
The graceless action of a heavy hand.
If that it be the work of any hand.

Sal. If that it be the work of any hand?—
We had a kind of light, what would ensue:
It is the shameful work of Hubert's hand;
The practice, and the purpose, of the king:
From whose obedience I forbid my soul,
Kneeling before this ruin of sweet life,
And breathing to this breathless excellence
The incense of a vow, a holy vow;
Never to taste the pleasures of the world,
Never to be infected with delight,
Nor conversant with ease and idleness,¹
'Till I have set a glory² to his hand,
By giving it the worship³ of revenge.

Pemb. Bigot. Our souls religiously confirm thy words.

Enter Hubert.

Hub. Lords, I am hot with haste in seeking you:
Arthur doth live; the king hath sent for you.

Sal. Oh, he is bold, and blushes not at death:—
Avaunt, thou hateful villain, get thee gone!

Hub. I am no villain.

Sal. Must I rob the law? [Drawing his sword.]

Faulc. Your sword is bright, sir; put it up again.

Sal. Not till I sheath it in a murderer's skin.

Hub. Stand back, lord Salisbury, stand back, I say;

By heaven, I think my sword's as sharp as yours:
I would not have you, lord, forget yourself,
Nor tempt the danger of my true⁴ defence;
Lest I, by marking of your rage, forget
Your worth, your greatness, and nobility.

Bigot. Out, dunghill! dar'st thou brave a nobleman?

Hub. Not for my life: but yet I dare defend
My innocent life against an emperor.

Sal. Thou art a murderer.

Hub. Do not prove⁵ me so; [false,
Yet⁶, I am none: Whose tongue soe'er speaks
Not truly speaks; who speaks not truly, lies.

Pemb. Cut him to pieces.

Faulc. Keep the peace, I say.

Sal. Stand by, or I shall gaul you, Faulconbridge.

Faulc. Thou wert better gaul the devil, Salis-
If thou but frown on me, or stir thy foot, [bury:
Or teach thy hasty spleen to do me shame,
I'll strike thee dead. Put up thy sword betime;
Or I'll so maul you and your toasting iron,
That you shall think the devil is come from hell.

Bigot. What wilt thou do, renowned Faulcon-
Second a villain, and a murderer? [bridge?]

Hub. Lord Bigot, I am none.

Bigot. Who kill'd this prince?

Hub. 'Tis not an hour since I left him well:
I honour'd him, I lov'd him; and will weep
My date of life out, for his sweet life's loss.

Sal. Trust not those cunning waters of his eyes,
For villainy is not without such rheum;
And he, long traded in it, makes it seem
Like rivers of remorse and innocency.
Away with me, all you whose souls abhor
The uncleanly savours of a slaughter-house;
For I am stifled with the smell of sin.

Bigot. Away, toward Bury, to the Dauphin there!

Pemb. There, tell the king, he may enquire us out. [Exeunt lords.]

Faulc. Here's a good world!—Knew you of this Beyond the infinite and boundless reach [fair work?
Of mercy, if thou didst this deed of death,
Art thou damn'd, Hubert.

Hub. Do but hear me, sir.

Faulc. Ha! I'll tell thee what;

Thou art damn'd so black--nay, nothing is so black;
Thou art more deep damn'd than prince Lucifer:
There is not yet so ugly a fiend of hell
As thou shalt be, if thou didst kill this child.

Hub. Upon my soul,—

Faulc. If thou didst but consent
To this most cruel act, do but despair,
And, if thou want'st a cord, the smallest thread
That ever spider twisted from her womb
Will serve to strangle thee; a rush will be a beam
To hang thee on: or, would'st thou drown thyself,
Put but a little water in a spoon,
And it shall be as all the ocean,
Enough to stifle such a villain up.—
I do suspect thee very grievously.

Hub. If I in act, consent, or sin of thought,
Be guilty of the stealing that sweet breath
Which was embounded in this beauteous clay,
Let hell want pains enough to torture me!
I left him well.

Faulc. Go, bear him in thine arms.—
I am amaz'd, methinks; and lose my way
Among the thorns and dangers of this world.—
How easy dost thou take all England up!
From forth this morsel of dead royalty,
The life, the right, and truth of all this realm
Is fled to heaven; and England now is left
To tug, and scramble, and to part by the teeth
The unow'd⁷ interest of proud swelling state.
Now, for the bare-pick'd bone of majesty,
Doth dogged war bristle his angry crest,
And snarleth in the gentle eyes of peace:

¹ This is a copy of the vows made in the ages of superstition and chivalry. ² Glory here means, splendor, or renown. ³ i. e. the honour or dignity. ⁴ i. e. honest. ⁵ i. e. do not make me one.

⁶ Yet for hitherto. ⁷ i. e. unclaimed, or unowned.

Now powers from home, and discontents at home,
Meet in one line; and vast confusion waits
(As doth a raven on a sick-fallen beast)
The imminent decay of wrested pomp¹.
Now happy he, whose cloak and ciacture can

Hold out this tempest. Bear away that child,
And follow me with speed; I'll to the king:
A thousand business es are brief in hand,
And heaven itself doth frown upon the land.

[Exeunt.

And from his holiness use all your power
To stop their marches, 'fore we are inflam'd.

Our discontented counties do revolt;

Our people quarrel with obedience;

Swearing allegiance, and the love of soul,

To stranger blood, to foreign royalty.

This inundation of mistemper'd humour

Rests by you only to be qualify'd.

Then pause not; for the present time's so sick,

That present medicine must be ministred,

Or overthrow incurable ensues. [up,

Pand. It was my breath that blew this tempest

Upon your stubborn usage of the Pope:

But, since you are a gentle convertite²,

My tongue shall hush again this storm of war,

And make fair weather in your blustering land.

On this Ascension-day, remember well,

Upon your oath of service to the Pope,

Go I to make the French lay down their arms. [Ex.

I did suppose, it should be on constraint;

But, heaven be thank'd, it is but voluntary.

Enter Faulconbridge.Faulc. All Kent hath yielded; nothing there holds

But Dover castle: London hath receiv'd, [out,

Like a kind host, the Dauphin and his powers;

Your nobles will not hear you, but are gone

To offer service to your enemy;

And wild amazement hurries up and down

The little number of your doubtful friends.

An empty casket, where the jewel of life,

By some damn'd hand, was robb'd and ta'en away.

K. John. That villain Hubert told me he did live.Faulc. So, on my soul, he did, for aught he knew.

But wherefore do you droop? why look you sad?

15 Be great in act, as you have been in thought;

Let not the world see fear, and sad distrust,

Govern the motion of a kingly eye:

Be stirring as the time; be fire with fire;

Threaten the threatner, and out-face the brow

20 Of bragging horror: so shall inferior eyes,

That borrow their behaviours from the great,

Grow great by your example, and put on

The dauntless spirit of resolution.

Away; and glisten like the god of war,

Shew boldness, and aspiring confidence.

What shall they seek the lion in his den? [there?

And fright him there; and make him tremble

And he hath promis'd to dismiss the powers

Faulc. Oh inglorious league!

Shall we, upon the footing of our land,

Send fair-play orders, and make compromise,

Insinuation, parley, and base truce,

40 To arms invasive? Shall a beardless boy,

A cocker'd silken wanton brave our fields,

And flesh his spirit in a warlike soil,

Mocking the air with colours idly spread,

And find no check? Let us, my liege, to arms:

50 Our party may well meet a prouder foe. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.

The Dauphin's camp at St. Edmund's-bury.

55 Enter, in arms, Lewis, Salisbury, Melun, Pembroke, Bigot, and Soldiers.

Lewis. My lord Melun, let this be copied out,

And keep it safe for our remembrance:

Return the precedent⁴ to these lords again;

60 That, having our fair order written down,

Both they, and we, perusing o'er these notes,

May know wherefore we took the sacrament,
And keep our faiths firm and inviolable.

Sal. Upon our sides it never shall be broken.
And, noble Dauphin, albeit we swear
A voluntary zeal, and an unurg'd faith,
To your proceedings; yet, believe me, prince,
I am not glad that such a sore of time
Should seek a plaister by contemn'd revolt,
And heal the inveterate canker of one wound,
By making many: Oh, it grieves my soul,
That I must draw this metal from my side
To be a widow-maker; oh, and there,
Where honourable rescue, and defence,
Cries out upon the name of Salisbury:
But such is the infection of the time,
That, for the health and physic of our right,
We cannot deal but with the very hand
Of stern injustice and confused wrong.—
And is't not pity, oh, my grieved friends!
That we, the sons and children of this isle,
Were born to see so sad an hour as this;
Wherein we step after a stranger march
Upon her gentle bosom, and fill up
Her enemies' ranks, (I must withdraw and weep
Upon the spot of this enforced cause)
To grace the gentry of a land remote,
And follow unacquainted colours here?
What, here?—O nation, that thou could'st remove!
That Neptune's arms, who clippeth thee about,
Would bear thee from the knowledge of thyself,
And grapple thee unto a pagan shore;
Where these two christian armies might combine
The blood of malice in a vein of league,
And not to spend it so unneighbourly!

Lewis. A noble temper dost thou show in this;
And great affections, wrestling in thy bosom,
Do make an earthquake of nobility.
Oh, what a noble combat hast thou fought,
Between compulsion, and a brave respect!
Let me wipe off this honourable dew,
That silverly doth progress on thy cheeks:
My heart hath melted at a lady's tears,
Being an ordinary inundation;
But this effusion of such manly drops,
This shower, blown up by tempest of the soul,
Startles mine eyes, and makes me more amaz'd
Than had I seen the vaulty top of heaven
Figur'd quite o'er with burning meteors.
Lift up thy brow, renowned Salisbury,
And with a great heart heave away this storm:
Command these waters to those baby eyes,
That never saw the giant world enrag'd;
Nor met with fortune other than at feasts,
Full warm of blood, of mirth, of gossiping.
Come, come; for thou shalt thrust thy hand as deep
Into the purse of rich prosperity,
As Lewis himself:—so, nobles, shall you all,
That knit your sinews to the strength of mine.

Enter Pandulph, attended.

And even there, methinks, an angel spake:
Look, where the holy legate comes apace,

To give us warrant for the hand of heaven;
And on our actions set the name of right,
With holy breath.

Pand. Hail, noble prince of France!

5 The next is this,—king John hath reconcil'd Himself to Rome; his spirit is come in,
That so stood out against the holy church,
The great metropolis and see of Rome:
Therefore thy threat'ning colours now wind up,
10 And tame the savage spirit of wild war;
That, like a lion foster'd up at hand,
It may lie gently at the foot of peace,
And be no further harmful than in shew. [back;

Lewis. Your grace shall pardon me, I will not 15 I am too high-born to be property'd,
To be a secondary at controul,
Or useful serving-man, and instrument,
To any sovereign state throughout the world.
Your breath first kindled the dead coal of wars
20 Between this chastis'd kingdom and myself,
And brought in matter that should feed this fire;
And now 'tis far too huge to be blown out
With that same weak wind which enkindled it.
You taught me how to know the face of right,
25 Acquainted me with interest to this land,
Yea, thrust this enterprize into my heart;
And come ye now to tell me, John hath made
His peace with Rome? What is that peace to me?
I by the honour of my marriage-bed,

30 After young Arthur, claim this land for mine;
And, now it is half-conquer'd, must I back,
Because that John hath made his peace with Rome?
Am I Rome's slave? What penny hath Rome borne,
What men provided, what munition sent,
35 To underprop this action? Is't not I,
That undergo this charge? who else but I,
And such as to my claim are liable,
Sweat in this business, and maintain this war?
Have I not heard these islanders shout out,
40 Vive le roy! as I have bank'd their towns?
Have I not here the best cards for the game,
To win this easy match play'd for a crown?
And shall I now give o'er the yielded set?
No, no, on my soul, it never shall be said.

45 Pand. You look but on the outside of this work,

Lewis. Outside or inside, I will not return
'Till my attempt so much be glorify'd
As to my ample hope was promised
Before I drew this gallant head of war,
50 And cull'd these fiery spirits from the world,
To out-look conquest, and to win renown
Even in the jaws of danger and of death.—

[Trumpet sounds.]

What lusty trumpet thus doth summon us?

Enter Faulconbridge, attended.

Faulc. According to the fair play of the world,
Let me have audience; I am sent to speak:—
My holy lord of Milan, from the king
I come, to learn how you have dealt for him;
60 And, as you answer, I do know the scope
And warrant limited unto my tongue.

¹ This compulsion was the necessity of a reformation in the state; which, according to Salisbury's opinion (who, in his speech preceding, calls it an enforced cause), could only be procured by foreign arms: and the brave respect was the love of his country.

Pand. The Dauphin is too wilful-opposite,
And will not temporize with my entreaties;
He flatly says, he'll not lay down his arms.

Faulc. By all the blood that ever fury breath'd,
The youth says well:—Now hear our English
For thus his royalty doth speak in me. [king;
He is prepar'd; and reason, too, he should:
This apish and unmannerly approach,
This harness'd masque, and unadvised revel,
This unhair'd¹ sauciness, and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at; and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms,
From out the circle of his territories.
That hand, which had the strength, even at your door,

To cudgel you, and make you take the hatch²;
To dive like buckets of concealed wells;
To crouch in litter of your stable planks;
To lie, like pawns, lock'd up in chests and trunks;
To hug with swine; to seek sweet safety out
In vaults and prisons; and to thrill, and shake,
Even at the crying of your nation's crow,
Thinking this voice an armed Englishman;—
Shall that victorious hand be feeble here,
That in your chambers gave you chastisement?
No: Know, the gallant monarch is in arms;
And, like an eagle o'er his airy³ towers,
To souse annoyance that comes near his nest.—
And you degenerate, you ingrate revolts,
You bloody Nereids, ripping up the womb
Of your dear mother England, blush for shame:
For your own ladies, and pale-visag'd maids,
Like Amazons, come tripping after drums;
Their thimbles into armed gantlets change,
Their needs to lances, and their gentle hearts
To fierce and bloody inclination.

Lewis. There end thy brave, and turn thy face
in peace;

We grant, thou canst out-scold us: fare thee well;
We hold our time too precious to be spent
With such a brabler.

Pand. Give me leave to speak.

Faulc. No, I will speak.

Lewis. We will attend to neither:
Strike up the drums; and let the tongue of war
Plead for our interest, and our being here.

Faulc. Indeed, your drums, being beaten, will cry out;

And so shall you, being beaten: Do but start
An echo with the clamour of thy drum,
And even at hand a drum is ready brac'd,
That shall reverberate all as loud as thine;
Sound but another, and another shall,
As loud as thine, rattle the welkin's ear,
And mock the deep-mouth'd thunder: for at hand
(Not trusting to this halting-legate here, Whom he hath us'd rather for sport than need)
Is warlike John; and in his forehead sits
A bare-ribb'd death, whose office is this day
To feast upon whole thousands of the French.

Lewis. Strike up our drums to find this danger out.

Faulc. And thou shalt find it, Dauphin, do not doubt. [Exeunt.

S C E N E III.

A Field of Battle.

Alarums. Enter King John and Hubert.

K. John. How goes the day with us? oh, tell me, Hubert.

Hub. Badly, I fear: How fares your majesty?

K. John. This fever, that hath troubled me so long,
Lies heavy on me; Oh, my heart is sick!

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. My lord, your valiant kinsman, Faulconbridge,

Desires your majesty to leave the field;

And send him word by me, which way you go.

K. John. Tell him, toward Swinstead, to the abbey there.

Mess. Be of good comfort; for the great supply,
That was expected by the Dauphin here,
Are wreck'd three nights ago on Goodwin-sands.

This news was brought to Richard⁴ but even now:
The French fight coldly, and retire themselves

K. John. Ah me! this tyrant fever burns me up,
And will not let me welcome this good news.—

Set on toward Swinstead: to my litter straight;
Weakness possesseth me, and I am faint. [Exe.

S C E N E IV.

The French Camp.

Enter Salisbury, Pembroke, and Bigot.

Sal. I did not think the king so stor'd with friends.

Pemb. Uponce again; put spirit in the French;
If they miscarry, we miscarry too.

Sal. That misbegotten devil, Faulconbridge,
In spite of spight, alone upholds the day. [field.

Enter Melun wounded, and led by soldiers.

Melun. Lead me to the revolts of England here.

Sal. When we were happy, we had other names.

Pemb. It is the count Melun.

Sal. Wounded to death. [sold;

Mel. Fly, noble English, you are bought and Unthread the rude eye of rebellion,

And welcome home again discarded faith.

Seek out king John, and fall before his feet:

For, if the French be lords of this loud day,
He means to recompense the pains you take,

By cutting off your heads: Thus hath he sworn,

And I with him, and many more with me,

Upon the altar at Saint Edmund's-bury;

Eyen on that altar where we swore to you

Dear amity and everlasting love.

Sal. May this be possible! may this be true!

Melun. Have I not hideous death within my Retaining but a quantity of life; [view,

Which bleeds away, even as a form of wax

Resolveth from his figure 'gainst the fire?

What in the world should make me now deceive,

Since I must lose the use of all deceit?

¹ i. e. unbearded sauciness, alluding to the Dauphin's youth. ² To take the hatch, is to leap the hatch. ³ An airy is the nest of an eagle. ⁴ Meaning, Faulconbridge. ⁵ Alluding to the images made by witches.

Why should I then be false ; since it is true
 That I must die here, and live hence by truth?
 I say again, if Lewis do win the day,
 He is forsworn, if ever those eyes of yours
 Behold another day break in the east:
 But even this night, — whose black contagious breath
 Already smokes about the burning crest
 Of the old, feeble, and day-wearied sun, —
 Even this ill night, your breathing shall expire ;
 Paying the fine of rated treachery,
 Even with a treacherous fine of all your lives,
 If Lewis by your assistance win the day.
 Commend me to one Hubert with your king ;
 The love of him, — and this respect besides,
 For that my grandsire was an Englishman, —
 Awakes my conscience to confess all this.
 In lieu whereof, I pray you, bear me hence
 From forth the noise and rumour of the field ;
 Where I may think the remnant of my thoughts
 In peace, and part this body and my soul
 With contemplation and devout desires. [soul]
Sal. We do believe thee, — and beshrew my
 But I do love the favour and the form
 Of this most fair occasion, by the which
 We will untread the steps of damned flight ;
 And like a bated and retired flood,
 Leaving our rankness and irregular course,
 Stoop low within those bounds we have o'er-look'd,
 And calmly run on in obedience,
 Even to our ocean, to our great king John. —
 My arm shall give thee help to bear thee hence ;
 For I do see the cruel pangs of death [flight ;
 Right¹ in thine eye. — Away, my friends ! New
 And happy newness, that intends old right.

[Exeunt, leading off Melun.]

SCENE V.

A different part of the French Camp.

Enter Lewis and his train.

Lewis. The sun of heaven, methought, was loth to set ;
 But staid, and made the western welkin blush,
 When the English measur'd backward their own ground
 In faint retire : Oh, bravely came we off,
 When with a volley of our needless shot,
 After such bloody toil, we bid good night ;
 And wound our tatter'd colours clearly up,
 Last in the field, and almost lords of it ! —

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Where is my prince, the Dauphin ?

Lewis. Here : — What news ? [lords,

Mes. The count Melun is slain ; the English
 By his persuasion, are again fallen off :
 And your supplies, which you have wish'd so long,
 Are cast away, and sunk, on Goodwin-sands.

Lewis. Ah foul shrewd news ! — Beshrew thy very heart !

I did not think to be so sad to-night,
 As this hath made me. — Who was he, that said,
 King John did fly, an hour or two before,
 The stumbling night did part our weary powers ?

Mes. Whoever spoke it, it is true, my lord.

Lewis. Well ; keep good quarter and good care
 to-night :

The day shall not be up so soon as I,
 To try the fair adventure of to-morrow. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.

An open place in the neighbourhood of Swinstead Abbey.

Enter Faulconbridge, and Hubert, severally.

Hub. Who's there ? speak, ho ! speak quickly, or I shoot.

Faulc. A friend : — What art thou ?

Hub. Of the part of England.

Faulc. Whither dost thou go ?

Hub. What's that to thee ? Why may I not demand

Of thine affairs as well as thou of mine ?

Faulc. Hubert, I think.

Hub. Thou hast a perfect thought :

I will, upon all hazards, well believe

Thou art my friend, that know'st my tongue so
 Who art thou ? [well :

Faulc. Who thou wilt : an if thou please,

Thou may'st befriend me so much, as to think
 I come one way of the Plantagenets.

Hub. Unkind remembrance ! thou, and eyeless night,

Have done me shame : — Brave soldier, pardon me,
 That any accent, breaking from thy tongue,
 Should scape the true acquaintance of mine ear.

Faulc. Come, come, sans compliment, what news abroad ? [night,

Hub. Why, here walk I, in the black brow of
 To find you out.

Faulc. Brief, then, and what's the news ?

Hub. O my sweet sir, news fitted to the night,
 Black, fearful, comfortless, and horrible. [news ;

Faulc. Shew me the very wound of this ill
 I am no woman, I'll not swoon at it.

Hub. The king, I fear, is poison'd by a monk :
 I left him almost speechless, and broke out
 To acquaint you with this evil, that you might
 The better arm you to the sudden time,
 Than if you had at leisure known of this.

Faulc. How did he take it ? who did taste to him ?

Hub. A monk, I tell you ; a resolved villain,
 Whose bowels suddenly burst out : the king
 Yet speaks, and, peradventure, may recover.

Faulc. Who didst thou leave to tend his majesty ?

Hub. Why, know you not ? the lords are all come back,

And brought prince Henry in their company ;
 At whose request the king hath pardoned them,
 And they are all about his majesty.

Faulc. Withhold thine indignation, mighty hea-
 And tempt us not to bear above our power ! — [ven,
 I'll tell thee, Hubert, half my power this night,
 Passing these flats, are taken by the tide,

These Lincoln washes have devoured them ;
 Myself, well-mounted, hardly have escap'd.

Away, before ! conduct me to the king :

I doubt, he will be dead, or ere I come. [Exeunt.]

The Orchard in Swinstead-Abbey.Enter Prince Henry, Salisbury, and Bigot.

Hen. It is too late; the life of all his blood
Is touch'd corruptibly; and his pure brain [house]
(Which some suppose the soul's frail dwelling-
Doth, by the idle comments that it makes,
Foretell the ending of mortality.

Enter Pembroke.

Pemb. His highness yet doth speak; and holds belief,

That, being brought into the open air,
It would allay the burning quality
Of that fell poison which assaileth him.

Hen. Let him be brought into the orchard here.—
Doth he still rage?

Pemb. He is more patient

Than when you left him: even now he sung.

Hen. O vanity of sickness! fierce extremes,
In their continuance, will not feel themselves.
Death, having prey'd upon the outward parts,
Leaves them: invisible his siege is now,
Against the mind, the which he pricks and wounds
With many legions of strange fantasies;
Which in their throng and press to that last hold,
Confound themselves. 'Tis strange, that death should sing.—

I am the cygnet to this pale faint swan,
Who chaunts a doleful hymn to his own death;
And, from the organ-pipe of frailty, sings
His soul and body to their lasting rest.

Sal. Be of good comfort, prince; for you are born
To set a form upon that indigest
Which he hath left so shapeless and so rude.

King John brought in.

K. John. Ay, marry, now my soul hath elbow-room;

It would not out at windows, nor at doors.

There is so hot a summer in my bosom,
That all my bowels crumble up to dust:
I am a scribbled form, drawn with a pen
Upon a parchment; and against this fire
Do I shrink up.

Hen. How fares your majesty? [cast off:

K. John. Poisoned,—ill fare;—dead, forsook.
And none of you will bid the winter come,
To thrust his icy fingers in my maw;
Nor let my kingdom's rivers take their course
Through my burn'd bosom; nor intreat the north
To make his bleak winds kiss my parched lips,
And comfort me with cold:—I do not ask you much,
I beg cold comfort; and you are so strait,
And so ingrateful, you deny me that.

Hen. Oh, that there were some virtue in my tears,
That might relieve you!

K. John. The salt of them is hot.—
Within me is a hell; and there the poison
Is, as a fiend, confin'd to tyrannize
On unreprieveable condemned blood.

Enter Faulconbridge.

Faulc. Oh, I am scalded with my violent motion,
And spleen of speed to see your majesty.

K. John. Oh, cousin, thou art come to set mine eye:
The tackle of my heart is crack'd and burnt;
And all the shrowds, wherewith my life should sail,
Are turned to one thread, one little hair;

My heart hath one poor string to stay it by,
Which holds but 'till thy news be uttered;
And then all this thou seest, is but a clod,
And module of confounded royalty.

5 Faulc. The Dauphin is preparing hitherward:
Where, heaven he knows, how we shall answer him;
For, in a night, the best part of my power,
As I upon advantage did remove,
Were in the washes, all unwarily,

10 Devoured by the unexpected flood. [The king dies.

Sal. You breathe these dead news in as dead an ear.—

My liege! my lord!—But now a king,—now thus.

Hen. Even so must I run on, and even so stop.
15 What surety of the world, what hope, what stay,
When this was now a king, and now is clay!

Faulc. Art thou gone so? I do but stay behind,
To do the office for thee of revenge;

And then my soul shall wait on thee to heaven,

20 As it on earth hath been thy servant still.—

Now, now, you stars, that move in your right
spheres, [faiths;

Where be your powers? Shew now your mended
And instantly return with me again,

25 To push destruction, and perpetual shame,

Out of the weak door of our fainting land:

Straight let us seek, or straight we shall be sought;
The Dauphin rages at our very heels.

Sal. It seems, you know not then so much as we:

30 The cardinal Pandolph is within at rest,
Who half an hour since came from the Dauphin;
And brings from him such offers of our peace
As we with honour and respect may take,

With purpose presently to leave this war.

35 Faulc. He will the rather do it, when he sees Ourselves well sinewed to our defence.

Sal. Nay, it is in a manner done already;

For many carriages he hath dispatch'd
To the sea-side, and put his cause and quarrel

40 To the disposing of the cardinal:

With whom yourself, myself, and other lords,

If you think meet, this afternoon will post

To consummate this business happily.

Faulc. Let it be so:—And you, my noble prince,

45 With other princes that may best be spar'd,
Shall wait upon your father's funeral.

Hen. At Worcester must his body be interr'd;
For so he will'd it.

Faulc. Thither shall it then.

50 And happily may your sweet self put on

The lineal state and glory of the land!

To whom, with all submission, on my knee,

I do bequeath my faithful services

And true subjection everlastingly.

55 Sal. And the like tender of our love we make,
To rest without a spot for evermore. [thanks,

Hen. I have a kind soul, that would give you
And knows not how to do it, but with tears.

Faulc. Oh, let us pay the time but needful woe,

60 Since it hath been beforehand with our griefs.—

This England never did, nor never shall,

Lye at the proud foot of a conqueror,

But when it first did help to wound itself.

Now these her princes are come home again,

65 Come the three corners of the world in arms, [rue,

And we shall shock them: nought shall make us

If England to itself do rest but true. [Exeunt Omnes.

A C T I.

SCENE I.

The Court.

Enter King Richard, John of Gaunt, with other Noblemen and Attendants.

K. Rich. OLD John of Gaunt, time-honour'd Lancaster,

Hast thou, according to thy oath and band⁵,
Brought hither Henry Hereford thy bold son;
Here to make good the boisterous late appeal,
Which then our leisure would not let us hear,
Against the duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray?

Gaunt. I have, my liege. [him,

K. Rich. Tell me moreover, hast thou sounded
If he appeal the duke on ancient malice;

Or worthily, as a good subject should,
On some known ground of treachery in him?

Gaunt. As near as I could sift him on that argument,—

5 On some apparent danger seen in him,
Aim'd at your highness, no inveterate malice.

K. Rich. Then call them to our presence; face to face,

And frowning brow to brow, ourselves will hear

10 The accuser, and the accused, freely speak:—

High-stomach'd are they both, and full of ire,

In rage deaf as the sea, hasty as fire.

Enter Bolingbroke and Mowbray.

Boling. Many years of happy days befall

15 My gracious sovereign, my most loving liege!

¹ This history, however, comprises little more than the two last years of this prince. The action of the drama begins with Bolingbroke's appealing the duke of Norfolk, on an accusation of high treason, which fell out in the year 1398; and it closes with the murder of king Richard at Pomfret-castle towards the end of the year 1400, or the beginning of the ensuing year. ² Aumerle is the French for what we now call Albemarle, which is a town in Normandy. ³ Mr. Steevens says, it ought to be Lord Berkley, as there was no Earl Berkley 'till some ages after. ⁴ Now spelt Roos, one of the duke of Rutland's titles. ⁵ i. e. bond.

Mowb. Each day still better other's happiness;
Until the heavens, envying earth's good hap,
Add an immortal title to your crown!

K. Rich. We thank you both: yet one but flatters us,

As well appeareth by the cause you come;
Namely, to appeal each other of high treason.—
Cousin of Hereford, what dost thou object
Against the duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray?

Boling. First (heaven be the record to my speech!)
In the devotion of a subject's love,
Tendering the precious safety of my prince,
And free from other misbegotten hate,
Come I appellant to this princely presence.—
Now, Thomas Mowbray, do I turn to thee,
And mark my greeting well; for what I speak,
My body shall make good upon this earth,
Or my divine soul answer it in heaven.

'Thou art a traitor, and a miscreant;
Too good to be so, and too bad to live;
Since, the more fair and crystal is the sky,
The uglier seem the clouds that in it fly.

Once more, the more to aggravate the note,
With a foul traitor's name stuff I thy throat;
And wish (so please my sovereign) ere I move,
What my tongue speaks, my right-drawn¹ sword
may prove. [zeal:]

Mowb. Let not my cold words here accuse my
'Tis not the trial of a woman's war,
The bitter clamour of two eager tongues,
Can arbitrate this cause betwixt us twain;
The blood is hot, that must be cool'd for this.

Yet can I not of such tame patience boast,
As to be hush'd, and nought at all to say:

First, the fair reverence of your highness curbs me,
From giving reins and spurs to my free speech;
Which else would post, until it had return'd
These terms of treason doubled down his throat.

Setting aside his high blood's royalty,
And let him be no kinsman to my liege,
I do defy him, and I spit at him;
Call him—a slanderous coward, and a villain:

Which to maintain, I would allow him odds;
And meet him, were I ty'd to run a-foot
Even to the frozen ridges of the Alps,
Or any other ground² inhabitable

Where ever Englishman durst set his foot.

Mean time, let this defend my loyalty,—
By all my hopes, most falsely doth he lie.

Boling. Pale trembling coward, there I throw my gage,

Disclaiming here the kindred of a king;
And lay aside my high blood's royalty,
Which fear, not reverence, makes thee to except:

If guilty dread hath left thee so much strength,
As to take up mine honour's pawn, then stoop;
By that, and all the rights of knighthood else,
Will I make good against thee, arm to arm,
What I have spoke, or thou canst worst devise.

Mowb. I take it up; and, by that sword I swear,
Which gently lay'd my knighthood on my shoulder,
I'll answer thee in any fair degree,

Or chivalrous design of knightly trial:

And, when I mount, alive may I not light,
If I be traitor, or unjustly fight! [charge?]

K. Rich. What doth our cousin lay to Mowbray's
5 It must be great, than can inherit us³

So much as of a thought of ill in him. [true;—]

Boling. Look, what I said, my life shall prove it
That Mowbray hath receiv'd eight thousand nobles,
In name of lendings for your highness' soldiers;
The which he hath detain'd for lewd employments,
Like a false traitor, and injurious villain.

Besides I say, and will in battle prove,—
Or here, or elsewhere, to the furthest verge
That ever was survey'd by English eye,—

15 That all the treasons, for these eighteen years
Complotted and contrived in this land, [spring.]

Fetch from false Mowbray their first head and Further I say,—and further will maintain
Upon his bad life, to make all this good,—

20 That he did plot the duke of Gloster's death;
Suggest his soon-believing adversaries;

And, consequently, like a traitor coward, [blood:]
Slur'd out his innocent soul through streams of Which blood, like sacrificing Abel's, cries,

25 Even from the tongueless caverns of the earth,
To me, for justice, and rough chastisement;

And, by the glorious worth of my descent,
This arm shall do it, or this life be spent.

K. Rich. How high a pitch his resolution soars!—

30 Thomas of Norfolk, what say'st thou to this?

Mowb. O, let my sovereign turn away his face,
And bid his ears a little while be deaf,

'Till I have told this slander of his blood,
How God, and good men, hate so foul a liar. [ears:]

35 K. Rich. Mowbray, impartial are our eyes, and Were he my brother, nay, my kingdom's heir,

(As he is but my father's brother's son)
Now by my sceptre's awe I make a vow,
Such neighbour nearness to our sacred blood

40 Should nothing privilege him, nor partialize
The unstooping firmness of my upright soul:

He is our subject, Mowbray, so art thou;
Free speech, and fearless, I to thee allow.

Mowb. Then, Bolingbroke, as low as to thy heart,
45 Through the false passage of thy throat, thou liest!

Three parts of that receipt I had for Calais,
Disburs'd I to his highness' soldiers:

The other part reserv'd I by consent;
For that my sovereign liege was in my debt,

50 Upon remainder of a dear account,
Since last I went to France, to fetch his queen:

Now swallow down that lie.—For Gloster's
death,—

I slew him not; but, to mine own disgrace,
55 Neglected my sworn duty in that case.—

For you, my noble lord of Lancaster,
The honourable father to my foe,—

Once did I lay an ambush for your life,
A trespass that doth vex my grieved soul:

60 But, ere I last receiv'd the sacrament,
I did confess it; and exactly begg'd

Your grace's pardon, and, I hope, I had it.

² i. e. not habitable,

³ i. e. possess us.

This is my fault: as for the rest appeal'd,
It issues from the rancour of a villain,
A recreant and most degenerate traitor:
Which in myself I boldly will defend;
And interchangeably hurl down my gage
Upon this over-weening traitor's foot,
To prove myself a loyal gentleman
Even in the best blood chamber'd in his bosom:
In haste whereof, most heartily I pray
Your highness to assign our trial-day. [me; 10

K. Rich. Wrath-kindled gentlemen, be rul'd by Let's purge this choler without letting blood:
This we prescribe, though no physician;
Deep malice makes too deep incision:
Forget, forgive; conclude, and be agreed;
Our doctors say, this is no time to bleed.—
Good uncle, let this end where it begun;
We'll calm the duke of Norfolk, you your son.

Gaunt. To be a make-peace shall become my age:
Throw down, my son, the duke of Norfolk's gage. 20

K. Rich. And, Norfolk, thrown down his.

Gaunt. When, Harry? when?

Obedience bids, I should not bid again.

K. Rich. Norfolk, throw down; we bid; there is no boot'. [foot: 25

Mowb. Myself, I throw, dread sovereign, at thy
My life thou shalt command, but not my shame:
The one, my duty owes; but my fair name,
(Despight of death, that lives upon my grave)
To dark dishonour's use thou shalt not have. 30
I am disgrac'd, impeach'd, and baffled² here;
Pierc'd to the soul with slander's venom'd spear;
The which no balm can cure, but his heart's blood
Which breath'd this poison.

K. Rich. Rage must be withstood:
Give me his gage:—lions make leopards tame.

Mowb. Yea, but not change their spots: take but my shame,

And I resign my gage. My dear dear lord,
The purest treasure mortal times afford,
Is—spotless reputation; that away,
Men are but gilded loam, or painted clay.
A jewel in a ten-times-barr'd-up chest
Is—a hold spirit in a loyal breast.

Mine honour is my life; both grow in one;
Take honour from me, and my life is done:
Then, dear my liege, mine honour let me try;
In that I live, and for that will I die.

K. Rich. Cousin, throw down your gage; do you begin.

Boling. Oh, heaven defend my soul from such foul sin!

Shall I seem crest-fallen in my father's sight?
Or with pale beggar face³ impeach my height
Before this out-dar'd dastard? Ere my tongue
Shall wound mine honour with such feeble wrong,
Or sound so base a parle, my teeth shall tear
The slavish motive of recanting fear;
And spit it bleeding, in his high disgrace,
Where shame doth harbour, even in Mowbray's 60
face. [Exit Gaunt.]

K. Rich. We were not born to sue, but to command:

Which since we cannot do to make you friends,
Be ready, as your lives shall answer it,
5 At Coventry, upon St. Lambert's day;
There shall your swords and lances arbitrate
The swelling difference of your settled hate;
Since we cannot atone you, you shall see
Justice decide the victor's chivalry.—

Lord marshal, command our officers at arms
Be ready to direct these home-alarms. [Exit. 10

S C E N E II.

The Duke of Lancaster's Palace.

Enter Gaunt, and Dutchess of Gloster.

15 Gaunt. Alas! the part⁴ I had in Gloster's blood
Doth more solicit me, than your exclaims,
To stir against the butchers of his life.
But, since correction lieth in those hands,
Which made the fault that we cannot correct,
Put we our quarrel to the will of heaven;
Who, when they see the hours ripe on earth,
Will rain hot vengeance on offenders' heads.

Dutch. Finds brotherhood in thee no sharper spur?
Hath love in thy old blood no living fire?

25 Edward's seven sons, whereof thyself art one,
Were as seven phials of his sacred blood,
Or seven fair branches, springing from one root:
Some of those seven are dry'd by nature's course,
Some of those branches by the destinies cut.
30 But Thomas, my dear lord, my life, my Gloster,—
One phial full of Edward's sacred blood,
One flourishing branch of his most royal root,—
Is crack'd, and all the precious liquor spilt;
Is hack'd down, and his summer leaves all faded,
35 By envy's hand, and murder's bloody axe.

Ah, Gaunt! his blood was thine; that bed, that womb,

That metal, that self-mould, that fashion'd thee,
Made him a man; and though thou liv'st, and 40 breath'st,

Yet art thou slain in him: thou dost consent
In some large measure to thy father's death,
In that thou seest thy wretched brother die,
Who was the model of thy father's life.

45 Call it not patience, Gaunt, it is despair:
In suffering thus thy brother to be slaughter'd,
Thou shew'st the naked path-way to thy life,
Teaching stern murder how to butcher thee:
That which in mean men we entitle—patience,
50 Is pale cold cowardice in noble breasts.

What shall I say? to safeguard thine own life,
The best way is to venge my Gloster's death.

Gaunt. Heaven's is the quarrel; for heaven's substitute,

55 His deputy anointed in his sight,
Hath caus'd his death: the which if wrongfully,
Let heaven revenge; for I may never lift
An angry arm against his minister.

Dutch. Where then, alas! may I complain myself?

Gaunt. To heaven, the widow's champion and defence.

¹ i. e. no advantage in delay or refusal. ² Baffled, in this, as has been noted in a former place, means, treated with the greatest ignominy imaginable. ³ i. e. with a face of supplication. ⁴ i. e.
my relation of consanguinity to Gloster.

Dutch. Why then, I will. Farewel, old Gaunt!
Thou go'st to Coventry, there to behold
Our cousin Hereford and fell Mowbray fight:
O, sit my husband's wrongs on Hereford's spear,
That it may enter butcher Mowbray's breast!
Or if misfortune miss the first career,
Be Mowbray's sins so heavy in his bosom,
That they may break his foaming courser's back,
And throw the rider headlong in the lists,
A caitiff recreant to my cousin Hereford!
Farewel, old Gaunt; thy sometime brother's wife
With her companion grief must end her life.

Gaunt. Sister, farewell: I must to Coventry:
As much good stay with thee, as go with me!

Dutch. Yet one word more;—Grief boundeth where it falls,

Not with the empty hollowness, but weight:
I take my leave before I have begun;
For sorrow ends not, when it seemeth done.
Commend me to my brother, Edmund York.
Lo, this is all:—Nay, yet depart not so;
Though this be all, do not so quickly go;
I shall remember more. Bid him—Oh, what?—
With all good speed at Plashy visit me.
Alack, and what shall good old York there see,
But empty lodgings, and unfurnish'd walls,
Unpeopled offices, untrodden stones?
And what hear there for welcome, but my groans?
Therefore commend me; let him not come there,
To seek out sorrow, that dwells every where:
Desolate, desolate, will I hence, and die,
The last leave of thee takes my weeping eye.

[Exeunt.]

S C E N E III.

The Lists at Coventry.

Enter the Lord Marshal and Aumerle.

Mar. My lord Aumerle, is Harry Hereford arm'd?

Aum. Yea, at all points; and longs to enter in.

Mar. The duke of Norfolk, sprightly and bold,
Stays but the summons of the appellant's trumpet.

Aum. Why then, the champions are prepar'd, and stay

For nothing but his majesty's approach. [Flourish.]

The trumpets sound, and the King enters with Gaunt, Bushy, Bagot, and others: when they are set, enter the Duke of Norfolk in armour.

K. Rich. Marshal, demand of yonder champion
The cause of his arrival here in arms:

Ask him his name; and orderly proceed
To swear him in the justice of his cause.

Mar. In God's name, and the king's, say who thou art, [To Mowbray.]

And why thou com'st, thus knightly clad in arms;
Against what man thou com'st, and what thy quar-
Speak truly, on thy knighthood, and thy oath, [rel:]
And so defend thee heaven, and thy valour!

Mowbr. My name is Thomas Mowbray, duke of Who hither come engaged by my oath, [Norfolk;
(Which heaven defend a knight should violate!)
Both to defend my loyalty and truth,
To God, my king, and his succeeding issue,
Against the duke of Hereford that appeals me;

And by the grace of God, and this mine arm,
To prove him, in defending of myself.
A traitor to my God, my king, and me:
And, as I truly fight, defend me heaven!

5 Trumpets sound. Enter Bolingbroke, appellant, in armour.

K. Rich. Marshal, ask yonder knight in arms,
Both who he is, and why he cometh hither
Thus plated in habiliments of war;

10 And formally according to our law
Depose him in the justice of his cause.

Mar. What is thy name? and wherefore com'st thou hither,

Before king Richard, in his royal lists? [To Boling.
Against whom comest thou? and what's thy quarrel?
Speak like a true knight, so defend thee heaven!

Boling. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,

Am I; who ready here do stand in arms,
20 To prove, by heaven's grace, and my body's valour,
In lists, on Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk,
That he's a traitor, foul and dangerous,
To God of heaven, king Richard, and to me;
And, as I truly fight, defend me heaven!

25 Mar. On pain of death, no person be so bold,
Or daring-hardy, as to touch the lists;
Except the marshal, and such officers
Appointed to direct these fair designs.

Boling. Lord marshal, let me kiss my sovereign's hand,

And bow my knee before his majesty:
For Mowbray, and myself, are like two men
That vow a long and weary pilgrimage;
Then let us take a ceremonious leave,
35 And loving farewell, of our several friends.

Mar. The appellant in all duty greets your highness, [To K. Rich.]

And craves to kiss your hand, and take his leave.

K. Rich. We will descend and fold him in our arms.

Cousin of Hereford, as thy cause is right,
So be thy fortune in this royal fight!
Farewel, my blood; which if to-day thou shed,
Lament we may, but not revenge thee dead.

45 Boling. Oh, let no noble eye profane a tear
For me, if I be gor'd with Mowbray's spear:
As confident, as is the falcon's flight
Against a bird, do I with Mowbray fight.—
My loving lord, I take my leave of you;—
50 Of you, my noble cousin, lord Aumerle;—
Not sick, although I have to do with death;
But lusty, young, and chearly drawing breath.—
Lo, as at English feasts, so I regret
The daintiest last, to make the end most sweet:

55 Oh thou, the earthly author of my blood,—
[To Gaunt.]

Whose youthful spirit, in me regenerate,
Doth with a two-fold vigour lift me up
To reach at victory above my head,—
60 Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers;
And with thy blessings steel my lance's point,
That it may enter Mowbray's waxen¹ coat,

¹ Mr. Steevens observes on this passage, that “waxen may mean either soft, and consequently penetrable, or flexible. The brigandines or coats of mail, then in use, were composed of small pieces of steel quilted over one another, and yet so flexible as to accommodate the dress they form to every motion of the body.”

And furbish new the name of John of Gaunt,
Even in the lusty 'haviour of his son.

Gaunt. Heaven in thy good cause make thee prosperous!

Be swift like lightning in the execution;
And let thy blows, doubly redoubled,
Fall like amazing thunder on the casque
Of thy adverse pernicious enemy:

Rouse up thy youthful blood, be valiant and live.

Boling. Mine innocence, and saint George to thrive!

Mowb. However heaven, or fortune, cast my lot,

There lives, or dies, true to king Richard's
A loyal, just, and upright gentleman:

Never did captive with a freer heart

Cast off his chains of bondage, and embrace

His golden uncontroll'd enfranchisement,

More than my dancing soul doth celebrate

This feast of battle with mine adversary.—

Most mighty liege,—and my companion peers,—

Take from my mouth the wish of happy years:

As gentle, and as jocund, as to jest¹,

Go I to fight; truth hath a quiet breast.

K. Rich. Farewel, my lord: securely I espy

Virtue with valour couched in thine eye.—

Order the trial, Marshal, and begin.

Mar. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,

Receive thy lance; and heaven defend the right!

Boling. Strong as a tower in hope, I cry—Amen.

Mar. Go bear this lance to Thomas duke of Norfolk.

1 Her. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Der-

Stands here for God, his sovereign, and himself,

On pain to be found false and recreant,

To prove the duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray,

A traitor to his God, his king, and him,

And dares him to set forward to the fight.

2 Her. Here standeth Thomas Mowbray, duke of

On pain to be found false and recreant, [Norfolk,

Both to defend himself, and to approve

Henry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,

To God, his sovereign, and to him, disloyal;

Courageously, and with a free desire,

Attending but the signal to begin. [A charge sounded.

Mar. Sound, trumpets; and set forward, combatants.

Stay, the king has thrown his warder² down.

K. Rich. Let them lay by their helmets, and their spears,

And both return back to their chairs again:—

Withdraw with us;—and let the trumpets sound,

While we return these dukes what we decree.—

[A long flourish; after which, the king

speaks to the combatants.

Draw near,

And list, what with our council we have done.

For that our kingdom's earth should not be soil'd

With the dear blood which it hath fostered,

And for our eyes do hate the dire aspect [swords;
Of civil wounds plough'd up with neighbours,
[¹ And for we think, the eagle-winged pride
Of sky-aspiring and ambitious thoughts,

5 With rival-hating envy, set you on

To wake our peace, which in our country's cradle

Draws the sweet infant breath of gentle sleep;]

Which so rous'd up with boisterous untun'd drums,

And harsh-resounding trumpets' dreadful bray,

10 And grating shock of wrathful iron arms,

Might from our quiet confines fright fair peace,

And make us wade even in our kindred's blood,—

Therefore, we banish you our territories.—

You, cousin Hereford, upon pain of death,

15 'Till twice five summers have enrich'd our fields,

Shall not regret our fair dominions,

But tread the stranger paths of banishment.

Boling. Your will be done: This must my comfort be,—— [me;

20 That sun, that warms you here, shall shine on

And those his golden beams, to you here lent,

Shall point on me, and gild my banishment.

K. Rich. Norfolk, for thee remains a heavier doom,

Which I with some unwillingness pronounce:

25 The fly-slow hours shall not determinate—

The dateless limit of thy dear exile;—

The hopeless word of—never to return,

Breathe I against thee, upon pain of life.

Mowb. A heavy sentence, my most sovereign liege,

30 And all unlook'd for from your highness' mouth:

A dearer merit⁴, not so deep a maim

As to be cast forth in the common air,

Have I deserved at your highness' hand.

The language I have learn'd these forty years,

35 My native English, now I must forego:

And now my tongue's use is to me no more

Than an unstringed viol, or a harp;

Or like a cunning instrument cas'd up,

Or, being open, put into his hands

40 That knows no touch to tune the harmony.

Within my mouth you have engao'd my tongue,

Doubly portcullis'd with my teeth and lips;

And dull, unfeeling, barren ignorance

Is made my gaoler to attend on me.

45 I am too old to fawn upon a nurse,

Too far in years to be a pupil now;

What is thy sentence then, but speechless death,

Which robs my tongue from breathing native breath?

K. Rich. It boots thee not to be compassionate;

50 After our sentence, plaining comes too late.

Mowb. Then thus I turn me from my country's light,

To dwell in solemn shades of endless night.

K. Rich. Return again, and take an oath with thee.

55 Lay on our royal sword your banish'd hands;

Swear by the duty that you owe to heaven,

(Our part therein we banish with yourselves)

To keep the oath that we administer:—

You never shall (so help you truth and heaven!)

¹ Mr. Farmer remarks, that to jest sometimes signifies in old language to play a part in a mask. ² A warder appears to have been a kind of truncheon carried by the person who presided at these single combats. ³ Mr. Pope restored these five verses from the first edition of 1598. ⁴ Instead of merit Dr. Johnson proposes to read, "a dearer meed," or reward—have I deserved, &c. ⁵ Compassionate for plaintive.

Embrace each other's love in banishment ;
 Nor ever look upon each other's face ;
 Nor ever write, regret, nor reconcile
 This lowering tempest of your home-bred hate ;
 Nor never by advised purpose meet,
 To plot, contrive, or complot any ill,
 'Gainst us, our state, our subjects, or our land.

Boling. I swear.

Mowb. And I, to keep all this.

Boling. Norfolk,—so far as to mine enemy¹ ;—
 By this time, had the king permitted us,
 One of our souls had wander'd in the air,
 Banish'd this frail sepulchre of our flesh,
 As now our flesh is banish'd from this land :
 Confess thy treasons, ere thou fly this realm ;
 Since thou hast far to go, bear not along
 The clogging burthen of a guilty soul.

Mowb. No, Bolingbroke ; if ever I were traitor,
 My name be blotted from the book of life,
 And I from heaven banish'd, as from hence !
 But what thou art, heaven, thou, and I do know ;
 And all too soon, I fear, the king shall rue.—
 Farewel, my liege :—Now no way can I stray ;
 Save back to England, all the world's my way.

[Exit.

K. Rich. Uncle, even in the glasses of thine eyes
 I see thy grieved heart : thy sad aspect
 Hath from the number of his banish'd years
 Pluck'd four away ;—Six frozen winters spent,

[To Boling.

Return with welcome home from banishment.

Boling. How long a time lies in one little word !
 Four lagging winters, and four wanton springs,
 End in a word : Such is the breath of kings.

Gaunt. I thank my liege, that in regard of me,
 He shortens four years of my son's exile :
 But little vantage shall I reap thereby ;
 For, ere the six years that he hath to spend,
 Can change their moons, and bring their times about,
 My oil-dry'd lamp, and time-bewasted light,
 Shall be extinct with age, and endless night ;
 My inch of taper will be burnt and done,
 And blindfold death not let me see my son.

K. Rich. Why, uncle, thou hast many years to live.

Gaunt. But not a minute, king, that thou can'st give.
 Shorten my days thou can'st with sullen sorrow,
 And pluck nights from me, but not lend a morrow :
 Thou can'st help time to furrow me with age,
 But stop no wrinkle in his pilgrimage ;
 Thy word is current with him for my death ;
 But, dead, thy kingdom cannot buy my breath.

K. Rich. Thy son is banish'd upon good advice,
 Whereto thy tongue a party-verdict gave ;
 Why at our justice seem'st thou then to lour ? [sour.]

Gaunt. Things sweet to taste, prove in digestion
 You urg'd me as a judge ; but I had rather,
 You would have bid me argue like a father :—
 O, had it been a stranger, not my child,
 To smooth his fault I would have been more mild ;
 Alas, I look'd, when some of you should say,
 I was too strict, to make mine own away ;

But you gave leave to my unwilling tongue,
 Against my will, to do myself this wrong :
 A partial slander² sought I to avoid,
 And in the sentence my own life destroy'd. [so ;
 5 K. Rich. Cousin, farewell :—and, uncle, bid him
 Six years we banish him, and he shall go. [Flourish.

[Exit.

Aum. Cousin, farewell : what presence must not
 From where you do remain, let papers show. [know,

10 Mar. My lord, no leave take I ; for I will ride,
 As far as land will let me, by your side. [words,
Gaunt. Oh, to what purpose dost thou hoard thy
 That thou return'st no greeting to thy friends ?

Boling. I have too few to take my leave of you,
 15 When the tongue's office should be prodigal
 To breathe the abundant dolour of the heart.

Gaunt. Thy grief is but thy absence for a time.

Boling. Joy absent, grief is present for that time.

Gaunt. What is six winters ? they are quickly gone.

20 Boling. To men in joy ; but grief makes one hour ten. [sure.

Gaunt. Call it a travel that thou tak'st for plea-

Boling. My heart will sigh, when I miscall it so,
 Which finds it an enforced pilgrimage.

25 Gaunt. The sullen passage of thy weary steps
 Esteem a foil, wherein thou art to set
 The precious jewel of thy home-return.

Boling. Nay, rather every tedious stride I make
 Will but remember me, what a deal of world
 I wander from the jewels that I love.

30 Must I not serve a long apprenticeship
 To foreign passages ; and in the end,
 Having my freedom, boast of nothing else,
 But that I was a journeyman to grief ?

35 Gaunt. All places that the eye of heaven visits,
 Are to a wise man ports and happy havens :
 Teach thy necessity to reason thus ;
 There is no virtue like necessity.

40 Think not, the king did banish thee ;
 But thou the king : Woe doth the heavier sit,
 Where⁴ it perceives it is but faintly borne.

Go say—I sent thee forth to purchase honour,
 And not—the king exil'd thee : or suppose,
 Devouring pestilence hangs in our air,
 And thou art flying to a fresher clime.

45 Look, what thy soul holds dear, imagine it
 To lie that way thou go'st, not whence thou com'st :
 Suppose the singing birds, musicians ; [strow'd ;
 The grass whereon thou tread'st, the presence

50 The flowers, fair ladies ; and thy steps, no more Than a delightful measure or a dance :

For gnarling sorrow hath less power to bite
 The man that mocks at it, and sets it light.

Boling. Oh, who can hold a fire in his hand,
 By thinking on the frosty Caucasus ?

Or cloy the hungry edge of appetite,
 By bare imagination of a feast ?

Or wallow naked in December snow,
 By thinking on fantastic summer's heat ?

60 Oh, no ! the apprehension of the good
 Gives but the greater feeling to the worse :

¹ Dr. Johnson understands this passage thus : “ Norfolk, so far I have addressed myself to thee as to mine enemy, I now utter my last words with kindness and tenderness, confess thy treasons.” ² i. e. the reproach of partiality.

Fell sorrow's tooth doth never rankle more,
Than when it bites, but lanceth not the sore.

Gaunt. Come, come, my son, I'll bring thee on thy way:

Had I thy youth and cause, I would not stay.

Boling. Then, England's ground, farewell; sweet soil, adieu;

My mother and my nurse, that bears me yet!

Where-e'er I wander, boast of this I can,—

Though banish'd, yet a true-born Englishman.

[Exeunt.]

S C E N E IV.

The Court.

Enter King Richard, and Bagot, &c. at one door, and the Lord Aumerle at the other.

K. Rich. We did observe.—Cousin Aumerle,
How far brought you high Hereford on his way?

Aum. I brought high Hereford, if you call him so,

But to the next high-way, and there I left him.

K. Rich. And say, what store of parting tears were shed? [wind,

Aum. 'Faith, none by me: except the north-east
Which then blew bitterly against our faces,

Awak'd the sleepy rheum; and so, by chance,
Did grace our hollow parting with a tear.

K. Rich. What said our cousin, when you parted with him?

Aum. Farewel:

And for my heart disclaimed that my tongue
Should so prophane the word, that taught me craft

To counterfeit oppression of such grief,

That word seem'd buried in my sorrow's grave.

Marry, would the word farewell have lengthen'd hours,

And added years to his short banishment,

He should have had a volume of farewells;

But since it would not, he had none of me.

K. Rich. He is our cousin, cousin; but 'tis doubt,

When time shall call him home from banishment,

Whether our kinsman come to see his friends.

Ourselves, and Bushy, Bagot here, and Green,

Observ'd his courtship to the common people:

How he did seem to dive into their hearts,

With humble and familiar courtesy;

What reverence he did throw away on slaves;

Wooing poor craftsmen with the craft of smiles,

5 And patient underbearing of his fortune,

As 'twere, to banish their effects with him.

Off goes his bonnet to an oyster-wench;

A brace of dray-men bid—God speed him well,

And had the tribute of his supple knee, [friends;"]—

10 With—"Thanks, my countrymen, my loving

As were our England in reversion his,

And he our subjects' next degree in hope.

Green. Well, he is gone; and with him go these thoughts.

15 Now for the rebels, which stand out in Ireland;—

Expedient¹ manage must be made, my liege;

Ere further leisure yield them further means,

For their advantage, and your highness' loss.

K. Rich. We will ourself in person to this war.

20 And, for our coffers—with too great a court,

And liberal largess—are grown somewhat light,

We are enforc'd to farm our royal realm;

The revenue whereof shall furnish us

For our affairs in hand: If that come short,

25 Our substitutes at home shall have blank charters;

Whereto, when they shall know what men are rich,

They shall subscribe them for large sums of gold,
And send them after to supply our wants;

30 For we will make for Ireland presently.

Enter Bushy.

K. Rich. Bushy, what news? [lord;

Bushy. Old John of Gaunt is grievous sick, my 35 Suddenly taken; and hath sent post-haste,

To intreat your majesty to visit him.

K. Rich. Where lies he?

Bushy. At Ely-house. [mind,

K. Rich. Now put it, heaven, in his physician's

40 To help him to his grave immediately!

The lining of his coffers shall make coats

To deck our soldiers for these Irish wars.—

Come, gentlemen, let's all go visit him:

Pray heaven, we may make haste, and come too late! [Exeunt.

A C T II.

S C E N E I.

London.

A room in Ely-house.

Gaunt brought in sick: with the Duke of York.

Gaunt. WILL the king come? that I may breathe my last

In wholesome counsel to his unstay'd youth.

York. Vex not yourself, nor strive not with your breath;

For all in vain comes counsel to his ear.

Gaunt. Oh, but they say the tongues of dying men

Inforce attention, like deep harmony:

55 Where words are scarce they are seldom spent in vain;

For they breathe truth, that breathe their words in

He, that no more must say, is listen'd more [pain.

Than they whom youth and ease have taught to glose; [fore:

More are men's ends mark'd, than their lives be—

The setting sun, and music at the close,

As the last taste of sweets, is sweetest last ;
Writ in remembrance, more than things long past :
Though Richard my life's counsel would not bear,
My death's sad tale may yet undeaf his ear.

York. No; it is stop'd with other flattering sounds, 5
As, praises of his state : then, there are found
Lascivious meeters¹ ; to whose venom'd sound
The open ear of youth doth always listen :
Report of fashions in proud Italy ;
Whose manners still our tardy apish nation
Limps after, in base imitation.
Where doth the world thrust forth a vanity,
(So it be new, there's no respect how vile)
That is not quickly buzz'd into his ears ?
Then all too late comes counsel to be heard,
Where will doth mutiny with wit's regard² :
Direct not him, whose way himself will chuse³ ;
'Tis breath thou lack'st, and that breath wilt thou lose.

Gaunt. Methinks, I am a prophet new inspir'd ; 20
And thus, expiring, do foretell of him :—
His rash⁴ fierce blaze of riot cannot last ;
For violent fires soon burn out themselves :
Small showers last long, but sudden storms are short ;
He tires betimes, that spurs too fast betimes ;
With eager feeding, food doth choak the feeder :
Light vanity, insatiate cormorant,
Consuming means, soon preys upon itself.
This royal throne of kings, this scepter'd isle,
This earth of majesty, this seat of Mars,
This other Eden, demy paradise ;
This fortress, built by nature for herself,
Against infection⁵, and the hand of war ;
This happy breed of men, this little world ;
This precious stone set in the silver sea,
Which serves it in the office of a wall,
Or as a moat defensive to a house,
Against the envy of less happier lands ; [land,
This blessed plot, this earth, this realm, this Eng-
This nurse, this teeming womb of royal kings,
Fear'd for their breed, and famous by their birth,
Renowned for their deeds as far from home,
For Christian-service, and true chivalry,
As is the sepulchre in stubborn Jewry,
Of the world's ransom, blessed Mary's son ;
This land of such dear souls, this dear dear land,
Dear for her reputation through the world,
Is now leas'd out (I die pronouncing it)
Like to a tenement, or pelting⁶ farm :
England, bound in with the triumphant sea,
Whose rocky shore beats back the envious siege
Of wat'ry Neptune, is now bound in with shame,
With inky blots, and rotten parchment bonds⁷ ;
That England, that was wont to conquer others,
Hath made a shameful conquest of itself :
Ah ! would the scandal vanish with my life,

How happy then, were my ensuing death !
Enter King Richard, Queen, Aumerle, Bushy, Green, Bagot, Ross, and Willoughby.

York. The king is come : deal mildly with his youth ;

For young hot colts, being rag'd, do rage the more.

Queen. How fares our noble uncle, Lancaster ?

K. Rich. What comfort, man ? How is't with aged Gaunt ? [tion !

10 Gaunt. Oh, how that name befits my composi-
Old Gaunt, indeed ; and gaunt in being old :

Within me grief hath kept a tedious fast ;

And who abstains from meat, that is not gaunt ?

For sleeping England long time have I watch'd ;

15 Watching breeds leanness, leanness is all gaunt :

The pleasure that some fathers feed upon,

Is my strict fast, I mean my children's looks ;

And therein fasting, thou hast made me gaunt :

Gaunt am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave,

20 Whose hollow womb inherits nought but bones.

K. Rich. Can sick men play so nicely with their names ?

Gaunt. No, misery makes sport to mock itself :
Since thou dost seek to kill my name in me,

25 I mock my name, great king, to flatter thee.

K. Rich. Should dying men flatter with those that live ?

Gaunt. No, no ; men living flatter those that die.

30 K. Rich. Thou, now a dying, say'st—thou flatter'st me. [be.

Gaunt. Oh ! no ; thou dy'st, though I the sicker

K. Rich. I am in health, I breathe, I see thee
ill. [ill ;

Gaunt. Now, He that made me, knows I see thee
35 Ill in myself to see, and in thee seeing ill.

Thy death-bed is no lesser than the land,

Wherein thou liest in reputation sick ;

And thou, too careless patient as thou art,

Giv'st thy anointed body to the cure

40 Of those physicians that first wounded thee :

A thousand flatterers sit within thy crown,

Whose compass is no bigger than thy head ;

And yet, incaged in so small a verge,

The waste is no whit lesser than thy land.

45 Oh, had thy grandsire, with a prophet's eye,

Seen how his son's son should destroy his sons,

From forth thy reach he would have laid thy shame ;

Deposing thee before thou wert possess'd,

Who art possess'd now to depose thyself.

50 Why, cousin, wert thou regent of the world,

It were a shame, to let this land by lease :

But, for thy world, enjoying but this land,

Is it not more than shame, to shame it so ?

Landlord of England art thou now, not king :

55 Thy state of law is bond-slave to the law⁸ ;

And—

¹ i. e. metres, or verses. ² Meaning, where the will rebels against the understanding. ³ i. e. will follow his own course. ⁴ i. e. hasty, violent. ⁵ i. e. against pestilence. ⁶ i. e. mean, paltry. ⁷ Alluding to the great sums raised upon the subject by loans and other exactions, in this reign. ⁸ Dr. Johnson interprets this passage thus : " By setting the royalties to farm thou hast reduced thyself to a state below sovereignty ; thou art now no longer king but landlord of England, subject to the same restraint and limitations as other landlords ; by making thy condition a state of law, a condition upon which the common rules of law can operate, thou art become a bond-slave to the law ; thou hast made thyself amenable to laws from which thou wert originally exempt."

K. Rich. —Thou, a lunatic, lean-witted fool,
Presuming on an ague's privilege,
Dar'st with thy frozen admonition
Make pale our cheek; chasing the royal blood,
With fury, from his native residence.

Now by my seat's right royal majesty,
Wert thou not brother to great Edward's son,
This tongue, that runs so roundly in thy head,
Should run thy head from thy irreverent shoulders.

Gaunt. Oh, spare me not, my brother Edward's son,

For that I was his father Edward's son;
That blood already, like the pelican,
Hast thou tap'd out, and drunkenly carows'd:
My brother Gloster, plain well-meaning soul,
(Whom fair befall in heaven 'mongst happy souls!)
May be a precedent and witness good,
That thou respect'st not spilling Edward's blood:
Join with the present sickness that I have;
And thy unkindness be like crooked age,
To crop at once a too long wither'd flower.
Live in thy shame, but die not shame with thee!
These words hereafter thy tormentors be!—
Convey me to my bed, then to my grave:—
Love they to live¹, that love and honour have.

[Exit, borne out.]

K. Rich. And let them die, that age and sullens have;

For both hast thou, and both become the grave.

York. 'Beseech your majesty, impute his words
To wayward sickliness and age in him:

He loves you, on my life, and holds you dear
As Harry duke of Hereford, were he here.

K. Rich. Right; you say true: as Hereford's love,
As theirs, so mine; and all be as it is. [so his;

Enter Northumberland.

North. My liege, old Gaunt commends him to

K. Rich. What says he? [your majesty.

North. Nay, nothing; all is said:

His tongue is now a stringless instrument;
Words, life, and all, old Lancaster hath spent. [so]

York. Be York the next that must be bankrupt
Though death be poor, it ends a mortal woe.

K. Rich. The ripest fruit first falls, and so doth he;
His time is spent, our pilgrimage must be:

So much for that.—Now for our Irish wars:
We must supplant those rough rug-headed kerns²;

Which live like venom, where no venom else³,
But only they, have privilege to live.

And, for these great affairs do ask some charge,—
Towards our assistance, we do seize to us

The plate, coin, revenues, and moveables,
Whereof our uncle Gaunt did stand possess'd. [long]

York. How long shall I be patient? Oh, how Shall tender duty make me suffer wrong?

Not Gloster's death, nor Hereford's banishment,
Not Gaunt's rebukes, nor England's private wrongs,

Nor the prevention of poor Bolingbroke
About his marriage, nor my own disgrace,

Have ever made me sour my patient cheek,
Or bend one wrinkle on my sovereign's face.—

I am the last of noble Edward's sons,
Of whom thy father, prince of Wales, was first;
In war was never lion rag'd more fierce,
In peace was never gentle lamb more mild,

5 Than was that young and princely gentleman:

His face thou hast, for even so look'd he,

Accomplish'd with the number of thy hours;

But, when he frown'd, it was against the French,

And not against his friends: his noble hand

10 Did win what he did spend, and spent not that

Which his triumphant father's hand had won:

His hands were guilty of no kindred's blood,

But bloody with the enemies of his kin.

Oh, Richard! York is too far gone with grief,

15 Or else he never would compare between.

K. Rich. Why, uncle, what's the matter?

York. O, my liege,

Pardon me, if you please; if not, I, pleas'd

Not to be pardon'd, am content withal.

20 Seek you to seize, and gripe into your hands,

The royalties and rights of banish'd Hereford?

Is not Gaunt dead? and doth not Hereford live?

Was not Gaunt just? and is not Harry true?

Did not the one deserve to have an heir?

25 Is not his heir a well-deserving son?

Take Hereford's rights away, and take from time

His charters, and his customary rights;

Let not to-morrow then ensue to-day:

Be not thyself, for how art thou a king,

30 But by fair sequence and succession?

Now, afore God (God forbid, I say true!)

If you do wrongfully seize Hereford's rights,

Call in his letters patents that he hath

By his attornies-general to sue

35 His livery, and deny⁴ his offer'd homage,

You pluck a thousand dangers on your head,

You lose a thousand well-disposed hearts,

And prick my tender patience to those thoughts

Which honour and allegiance cannot think. [hands

40 K. Rich. Think what you will; we seize into our

His plate, his goods, his money, and his lands.

York. I'll not be by, the while: My liege, farewell:

What will ensue hereof, there's none can tell;

But by bad courses may be understood,

45 That their events can never fall out good. [Exit.

K. Rich. Go, Bushy, to the earl of Wiltshire

Bid him repair to us, to Ely-house, [straight;

To see this business: To-morrow next

We will for Ireland; and 'tis time, I trow;

50 And we create, in absence of ourself,

Our uncle York lord-governor of England,

For he is just, and always lov'd us well.—

Come on, our queen: to-morrow must we part;

Be merry, for our time of stay is short. [Flourish.

[Exeunt King, Queen, &c.]

North. Well, lords, the duke of Lancaster is dead.

Ross. And living too; for now his son is duke.

Will. Barely in title, not in revenue.

North. Richly in both, if justice had her right.

60 Ross. My heart is great; but it must break with Ere't be disburden'd with a liberal tongue. [silence,

¹ That is, let them love to live. ² Kern signifies an Irish foot-soldier; an Irish boor. ³ Alluding to a tradition, that St. Patrick freed the kingdom of Ireland from every species of venomous reptiles. ⁴ i. e. refuse.

North. Nay, speak thy mind; and let him ne'er speak more,

That speaks thy words again, to do thee harm!

Willo. Tends that thou'dst speak, to the duke of Hereford?

If it be so, out with it boldly, man;

Quick is mine ear, to hear of good towards him.

Ross. No good at all, that I can do for him;

Unless you call it good, to pity him,

Bereft and gelded of his patrimony.

North. Now, afore heaven, 'tis shame such wrongs are borne,

In him a royal prince, and many more

Of noble blood in this declining land.

The king is not himself, but basely led

By flatterers; and what they will inform,

Merely in hate, 'gainst any of us all,

That will the king severely prosecute

'Gainst us, our lives, our children, and our heirs.

Ross. The commons hath he pill'd with grievous taxes,

And quite lost their hearts: the nobles he hath fin'd
For ancient quarrels, and quite lost their hearts.

Willo. And daily new exactions are devis'd;

As—blanks, benevolences, and I wot not what:

But what, o' God's name, doth become of this?

North. War hath not wasted it, for warr'd he hath not,

But basely yielded upon compromise

That which his ancestors atchiev'd with blows:

More hath he spent in peace, than they in wars.

Ross. The earl of Wiltshire hath the realm in farm. [man.]

Willo. The king's grown bankrupt, like a broken

North. Reproach, and dissolution, hangeth over him.

Ross. He hath not money for these Irish wars,
His burthenous taxations notwithstanding,

But by the robbing of the banish'd duke. [king!]

North. His noble kinsman:—Most degenerate

But, lords, we hear this fearful tempest sing,

Yet seek no shelter to avoid the storm:

We see the wind sit sore upon our sails,

And yet we strike not¹, but securely perish.

Ross. We see the very wreck that we must suffer;
And unavoided is the danger now,

For suffering so the causes of our wreck.

North. Not so; even through the hollow eyes
I spy life peering: but I dare not say, [of death,

How near the tidings of our comfort is. [dost ours.]

Willo. Nay, let us share thy thoughts, as thou

Ross. Be confident to speak, Northumberland:

We three are but thyself; and, speaking so,
Thy words are but as thoughts; therefore, be bold.

North. Then thus:—I have from Port le Blanc,
In Brittany, receiv'd intelligence, [a bay]

5 That Harry Hereford, Reignold Lord Cobham,

That late broke from the duke of Exeter²;

His brother, archbishop late³ of Canterbury,

Sir Thomas Erpingham, Sir John Ramston,

Sir John Norbery, Sir Robert Waterton, and

10 Francis Quoint,—

All these, well furnish'd by the duke of Bretagne,

With eight tall ships, three thousand men of war,

Are making hither with all due expedience,

And shortly mean to touch our northern shore:

15 Perhaps, they had ere this; but that they stay

The first departing of the king for Ireland.

If then we shall shake off our slavish yoke,

Imp out⁴ our drooping country's broken wing,

Redeem from broking pawn the blemish'd crown,

20 Wipe off the dust that hides our scepter's gilt,

And make high majesty look like itself,

Away with me, in post to Ravenspurge:

But if you faint, as fearing to do so,

Stay, and be secret, and myself will go:

25 Ross. To horse, to horse! urge doubts to them that fear.

Willo. Hold out my horse, and I will first be there. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

The Court.

Enter Queen, Bushy, and Bagot.

Bushy. Madam, your majesty is much too sad:
You promis'd, when you parted with the king,

35 To lay aside life-harming heaviness,

And entertain a cheerful disposition. [self.]

Queen. To please the king I did; to please my-
I cannot do it; yet I know no cause

Why I should welcome such a guest as grief,

40 Save bidding farewell to so sweet a guest

As my sweet Richard: Yet again, methinks,

Some unborn sorrow, ripe in fortune's womb,

Is coming toward me; and my inward soul

With nothing trembles: at something it grieves,

45 More than with parting from my lord the king.

Bushy. Each substance of a grief hath twenty shadows,

Which shew like grief itself, but are not so:

For sorrow's eye, glazed with blinding tears,

50 Divides one thing entire to many objects;

Like perspectives⁵, which, rightly gaz'd upon,

Shew nothing but confusion; ey'd awry,

¹ To strike the sails, is, to contract them.

² Mr. Steevens observes, that this circumstance, of having broke from the duke of Exeter, applies solely to Thomas Arundel, son and heir to the earl of Arundel who was beheaded in this reign; and from thence conjectures, that a line is lost, in which his name had originally a place. The archbishop next mentioned, was uncle to this young lord, though Shakspeare mistakenly calls him his brother. ³ Having been deprived by the pope of his see, at the request of the king. ⁴ This expression is borrowed from falconry. To imp a hawk, was to supply such wing-feathers as dropped, or were forced out by any accident. ⁵ Warburton says this is a fine similitude, and the thing meant is this: "Amongst mathematical recreations, there is one in optics, in which a figure is drawn, wherein all the rules of perspective are inverted: so that, if held in the same position with those pictures which are drawn according to the rules of perspective, it can present nothing but confusion: and to be seen in form, and under a regular appearance, it must be looked upon from a contrary station; or, as Shakspeare says, ey'd awry."

Distinguish form: so your sweet majesty,
Looking awry upon your lord's departure,
Finds shapes of grief, more than himself, to wail;
Which, look'd on as it is, is nought but shadows
Of what it is not. Then, thrice gracious queen,
More than your lord's departure weep not; more's not seen:

Or if it be, 'tis with false sorrow's eye,
Which, for things true, weeps things imaginary.

Queen. It may be so; but yet my inward soul
Persuades me, it is otherwise: Howe'er it be,
I cannot but be sad; so heavy sad,
As, though, in thinking, on no thought I think,
Makes me with heavy nothing faint and shrink.

Bushy. 'Tis nothing but conceit, my gracious lady.

Queen. 'Tis nothing less: conceit is still deriv'd
From some fore-father grief; mine is not so;
For nothing hath begot my something grief;
Or something hath, the nothing that I grieve:
'Tis in reversion that I do possess;
But what it is, that is not yet known; what
I cannot name; 'tis nameless woe, I wot.

Enter Green.

Green. Heaven save your majesty!—and well met, gentlemen:—

I hope the king is not yet ship'd for Ireland.

Queen. Why hop'st thou so? 'tis better hope, he is;
For his designs crave haste, his haste good hope;
Then wherefore dost thou hope, he is not ship'd?

Green. That he, our hope, might have retir'd his power,

And driven into despair an enemy's hope,
Who strongly hath set footing in this land:
The banish'd Bolingbroke repeals himself,
And with uplifted arms is safe arriv'd
At Ravenspurg.

Queen. Now God in heaven forbid! [worse,—

Green. O, madam, 'tis too true: and that is
The lord Northumberland, his young son Henry
Percy,

The lords of Ross, Beaumont, and Willoughby,
With all their powerful friends, are fled to him.

Bushy. Why have you not proclaim'd Northumberland,

And the rest of the revolted faction, traitors?

Green. We have: whereupon the earl of Worcester
Hath broke his staff, resign'd his stewardship,
And all the household servants fled with him
To Bolingbroke. [woe,

Queen. So, Green, thou art the midwife of my
And Bolingbroke my sorrow's dismal heir:
Now hath my soul brought forth her prodigy;
And I, a gasping new-deliver'd mother,
Have woe to woe, sorrow to sorrow join'd.

Bushy. Despair not, madam.

Queen. Who shall hinder me?

I will despair, and be at enmity
With cozening hope: he is a flatterer,
A parasite, a keeper-back of death,
Who gently would dissolve the bands of life,
Which false hope lingers in extremity.

Enter York.

Green. Here comes the duke of York.

Queen. With signs of war about his aged neck;
Oh, full of careful business are his looks!—

5 Uncle, for heaven's sake, speak comfortable words.

York. Should I do so, I should bely my thoughts:
Comfort's in heaven; and we are on the earth,
Where nothing lives, but crosses, care, and grief.
Your husband he is gone to save far off,

10 Whilst others come to make him lose at home:

Here am I left to underprop his land;
Who, weak with age, cannot support myself:—
Now comes the sick hour that his surfeit made;
Now shall he try his friends that flatter'd him.

Enter a Servant.

Ser. My lord, your son was gone before I came.

York. He was?—Why, so!—go all which way it will!— [cold.

The nobles they are fled, the commons they are 20 And will, I fear, revolt on Hereford's side.—

Sirrah,

Get thee to Plashy², to my sister Gloster;
Bid her send me presently a thousand pound:—
Hold, take my ring.

25 Ser. My lord, I had forgot to tell your lordship:
To-day, I came by, and call'd there;—but I Shall grieve you to report the rest.

York. What is it, knave?

Ser. An hour before I came, the duchess dy'd.

30 York. Heaven for his mercy! what a tide of woes
Comes rushing on this woeful land at once!

I know not what to do:—I would to heaven,
(So my untruth¹ hath not provok'd him to't)
The king had cut off my head with my brother's.—

35 What, are there posts dispatch'd for Ireland?

How shall we do for money for these wars?—

Come, sister,—cousin, I would say; pray, pardon me.—

*Go, fellow, get thee home, provide some carts,
[To the servant.*

And bring away the armour that is there.—

*Gentlemen, will you go muster men? If I know
How, or which way, to order these affairs,
I thus disorderly thrust into my hands,*

45 Never believe me. Both are my kinsmen;

*The one's my sovereign, whom both my oath
And duty bids defend; the other again,*

*Is my kinsman, whom the king hath wrong'd;
Whom conscience and my kindred bids to right.*

50 Well, somewhat we must do.—Come, cousin, I'll

*Dispose of you:—Go, muster up your men,
And meet me presently at Berkley, gentlemen.*

I should to Plashy too;—

But time will not permit:—All is uneven,

55 And every thing is left at six and seven.

[Exeunt York and Queen.

Bushy. The wind sits fair for news to go to Ire-
But none returns. For us to levy power, [land,
Proportionable to the enemy,

60 Is all impossible.

Green. Besides, our nearness to the king in love,
Is near the hate of those love not the king.

i. e. drawn it back.

² The lordship of Plashy was a town of the dutchess of Glor' er's in Essex.

i. e. disloyalty, treachery.

Bagot. And that's the wavering commons: for their love

Lies in their purses; and whoso empties them,
By so much fills their hearts with deadly hate.

Bushy. Wherein the king stands generally condemn'd.

Bagot. If judgment lie in them, then so do we,
Because we have been ever near the king. [castle;

Green. Well, I'll for refuge straight to Bristol
The earl of Wiltshire is already there.

Bushy. Thither I will with you: for little office
The hateful commons will perform for us;
Except, like curs, to tear us all in pieces.—
Will you go along with us?

Bagot. No; I'll to Ireland to his majesty.
Farewel: if heart's presages be not vain,
We three here part, that ne'er shall meet again.

Bushy. That's as York thrives to beat back Bolingbroke.

Green. Alas! poor duke, the task he undertakes
Is—numb'ring sands, and drinking oceans dry;
Where one on his side fights, thousands will fly.

Bushy. Farewel at once; for once, for all, and ever.

Green. Well, we may meet again.

Bagot. I fear me, never.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.

The wilds in Glostershire.

Enter Bolingbroke and Northumberland.

Boling. How far is it, my lord, to Berkley now?

North. Believe me, noble lord,

I am a stranger here in Glostershire.

These high wild hills, and rough uneven ways,
Draw out our miles, and make them wearisome:
And yet your fair discourse hath been as sugar,
Making the hard way sweet and delectable.

But, I bethink me, what a weary way,
From Ravenspurg to Cotswold, will be found
In Ross, and Willoughby, wanting your company;
Which, I protest, hath very much beguil'd
The tediousness and process of my travel:
But theirs is sweeten'd with the hope to have
The present benefit that I possess:
And hope to joy, is little less in joy,
Than hope enjoy'd: by this, the weary lords
Shall make their way seem short; as mine hath done
By sight of what I have, your noble company.

Boling. Of much less value is my company,
Than your good words. But who comes here?

Enter Harry Percy.

North. It is my son, young Harry Percy,
Sent from my brother Worcester, whencesoever.—
Harry, how fares your uncle?

Percy. I had thought, my lord, to have learn'd his health of you.

North. Why, is he not with the queen? [court,

Percy. No, my good lord; he hath forsook the Broken his staff of office, and dispers'd
The household of the king.

North. What was his reason?

He was not so resoly'd, when last we spake together.

Percy. Because your lordship was proclaimed
But he, my lord, is gone to Ravenspurg, [traitor.

To offer service to the duke of Hereford;
And sent me o'er by Berkley, to discover
What power the duke of York hath levied there;
Then with direction to repair to Ravenspurg.

North. Have you forgot the duke of Hereford,
boy?

Percy. No, my good lord; for that is not forgot,
Which ne'er I did remember: to my knowledge,
I never in my life did look on him.

North. Then learn to know him now; this is the duke. [vice,

Percy. My gracious lord, I tender you my service
Such as it is, being tender, raw, and young;
Which elder days shall ripen and confirm
To more approved service and desert.

Boling. I thank thee, gentle Percy: and be sure,
I count myself in nothing else so happy,
As in a soul remembering my good friends;
And, as my fortune ripens with thy love,

It shall be still thy true love's recompence: [it.
My heart this covenant makes, my hand thus seals

North. How far is it to Berkley? And what stir Keeps good old York there, with his men of war?

Percy. There stands the castle, by yon tuft of trees,

Mann'd with three hundred men, as I have heard:
And in it are the lords of York, Berkley, and None else of name, and noble estimate. [Seymour,

Enter Ross and Willoughby.

North. Here come the lords of Ross and Willoughby,

Bloody with spurring, fiery-red with haste. [sues

Boling. Welcome, my lords: I wot, your love pur-
A banish'd traitor; all my treasury

Is yet but unfelt thanks, which, more enrich'd,
Shall be your love and labour's recompence.

Ross. Your presence make us rich, most noble lord.

Will. And far surmounts our labour to attain it.

Boling. Evermore thanks, the exchequer of the poor;

Which, 'till my infant fortune comes to years,
Stands for my bounty. But who comes here?

Enter Berkley.

North. It is my lord of Berkley, as I guess.

Berk. My lord of Hereford, my message is to you.

Boling. My lord, my answer is, to Lancaster;
And I am come to seek that name in England:

And I must find that title in your tongue,
Before I make reply to aught you say.

Berk. Mistake me not, my lord; 'tis not my meaning,

To raze one title of your honour out:—

To you, my lord, I come, (what lord you will)
From the most glorious of this land,

The duke of York; to know, what pricks you on
To take advantage of the absent time¹,

And fright our native peace with self-born arms.

Enter York, attended.

Boling. I shall not need transport my words by you;
Here comes his grace in person.—My noble uncle!

[Kneels.

York. Shew me thy humble heart, and not thy Whose duty is deceivable and false. [knee,

¹ Meaning, perhaps, the time of the king's absence.

Boling.

Boling. My gracious uncle!—

York. Tut, tut!

Grace me no grace, nor uncle me no uncle:
I am no traitor's uncle; and that word—grace,
In an ungracious mouth, is but prophane.
Why have those banish'd and forbidden legs
Dar'd once to touch a dust of England's ground?
But more than why,—Why have they dared to march

So many miles upon her peaceful bosom;
Frighting her pale-fac'd villages with war,
And ostentation of despised arms?
Com'st thou because the anointed king is hence?
Why, foolish boy, the king is left behind,
And in my loyal bosom lies his power.
Were I but now the lord of such hot youth,
As when brave Gaunt, thy father, and myself,
Rescu'd the Black Prince, that young Mars of men,
From forth the ranks of many thousand French;
Oh, then, how quickly should this arm of mine,
Now prisoner to the palsy, chastise thee,
And minister correction to thy fault!

Boling. My gracious uncle, let me know my fault;
On what condition stands it, and wherein?

York. Even in condition of the worst degree,—
In gross rebellion, and detested treason:
Thou art a banish'd man, and here art come,
Before the expiration of thy time,
In braving arms against thy sovereign. [ford;

Boling. As I was banish'd, I was banish'd Here—
But as I come, I come for Lancaster.

And, noble uncle, I beseech your grace,
Look on my wrongs with an indifferent eye:
You are my father, for, methinks, in you
I see old Gaunt alive; O, then, my father!
Will you permit that I shall stand condemn'd
A wand'ring vagabond; my rights and royalties
Pluck'd from my arms perforce, and given away
To upstart unthrifths? Wherefore was I born?
If that my cousin king be king of England,
It must be granted, I am duke of Lancaster.
You have a son, Aumerle, my noble kinsman;
Had you first dy'd, and he been thus trod down,
He should have found his uncle Gaunt a father,
To rouse his wrongs, and chase them to the bay.
I am deny'd to sue my livery here,
And yet my letters patents give me leave:
My father's goods are all distrain'd, and sold:
And these, and all, are all amiss employ'd.
What would you have me do? I am a subject,
And challenge law: Attornies are deny'd me;
And therefore personally I lay my claim
To my inheritance of free descent. [abus'd.

North. The noble duke hath been too much

Ross. It stands your grace upon, to do him right.

Will. Base men by his endowments are made great.

York. My lords of England, let me tell you this,—
I have had feeling of my cousin's wrongs,
And labour'd all I could to do him right:

But in this kind to come, in braving arms,
Be his own carver, and cut out his way,
To find out right with wrong,—it may not be;
And you, that do abet him in this kind,
5 Cherish rebellion, and are rebels all.

North. The noble duke hath sworn, his coming is
But for his own: and, for the right of that,
We all have strongly sworn to give him aid;
And let him ne'er see joy, that breaks that oath.

10 York. Well, well, I see the issue of these arms;
I cannot mend it, I must needs confess,
Because my power is weak, and all ill left:
But, if I could, by Him that gave me life,
I would attach you all, and make you stoop
15 Unto the sovereign mercy of the king;
But, since I cannot, be it known to you,
I do remain as neuter. So, fare you well;—
Unless you please to enter in the castle,
And there repose you for this night.

20 Boling. An offer, uncle, that we will accept.
But we must win your grace, to go with us
To Bristol castle; which, they say, is held
By Bushy, Bagot, and their complices,
The caterpillars of the commonwealth,
25 Which I have sworn to weed, and pluck away.

York. It may be, I will go with you:—but yet
I'll pause;

For I am loth to break our country's laws.
Nor friends, nor foes, to me welcome you are:
Things past redress, are now with me past care.

[Exeunt.

2 S C E N E IV.

In Wales.

Enter Salisbury and a Captain.

35 Cap. My lord of Salisbury, we have staid ten days,
And hardly kept our countrymen together,
And yet we hear no tidings from the king;
Therefore we will disperse ourselves: farewell.

40 Sal. Stay yet another day, thou trusty Welshman;
The king reposeth all his confidence in thee. [stay.

Cap. 'Tis thought, the king is dead; we will not
The bay-trees in our country all are wither'd,
And meteors fright the fixed stars of heaven:

45 The pale-fac'd moon looks bloody on the earth,
And lean-look'd prophets whisper fearful change;
Rich men look sad, and ruffians dance and leap,—
The one, in fear to lose what they enjoy,
The other, to enjoy by rage and war:

50 These signs forerun the death of kings—
Farwel; our countrymen are gone and fled,
As well assur'd, Richard their king is dead. [Exit.

Sal. Ah, Richard! with eyes of heavy mind,
I see thy glory, like a shooting star,
Fall to the base earth from the firmament!
Thy sun sets weeping in the lowly west,
Witnessing storms to come, woe, and unrest;
Thy friends are fled, to wait upon thy foes;
And crossly to thy good all fortune goes.

[Exeunt.

¹ On for in. ² Dr. Johnson conjectures that this dialogue was probably the second scene in the ensuing act, and advises the reader to insert it there.

A C T III.

S C E N E I.

Bolingbroke's Camp at Bristol.Enter Bolingb. York, Northumb. Ross, Percy, Willoughby, with Bushy and Green, prisoners.Boling. BRING forth these men.—

Bushy, and Green, I will not vex your souls

(Since presently your souls must part your bodies)
 With too much urging your pernicious lives,
 For 'twere no charity : yet to wash your blood
 From off my hands, here, in the view of men,
 I will unfold some causes of your death.
 You have misled a prince, a royal king,
 A happy gentleman in blood and lineaments,
 By you unhappy'd and disfigur'd clean.
 You have, in manner, with your sinful hours,
 Made a divorce betwixt his queen and him;
 Broke the possession of a royal bed,
 And stain'd the beauty of a fair queen's cheeks
 With tears drawn from her eyes by your foul wrongs.

Myself—a prince, by fortune of my birth;
 Near to the king in blood; and near in love,
 'Till you did make him misinterpret me,—
 Have stoop'd my neck under your injuries,
 And sigh'd my English breath in foreign clouds,
 Eating the bitter bread of banishment:
 Whilst you have fed upon my signories,
 Dispark'd¹ my parks, and fell'd my forest woods;
 From mine own windows torn my household coat²,
 Raz'd out my impress³, leaving me no sign,—
 Save men's opinions, and my living blood,—
 To shew the world I am a gentleman. [this,
 This, and much more, much more than twice all Condemns you to the death:—See them deliver'd over

To execution and the hand of death. [me,
Bushy. More welcome is the stroke of death to Than Bolingbroke to England.—Lords, farewell.

Green. My comfort is, that heaven will take our souls,

And plague injustice with the pains of hell.

Boling. My lord Northumberland, see them dispatch'd.—

Uncle, you say, the queen is at your house;
 For heaven's sake, fairly let her be entreated:
 Tell her, I send to her my kind commends;
 Take special care my greetings be deliver'd.

York. A gentleman of mine I have dispatch'd With letters of your love to her at large.Boling. Thanks, gentle uncle.—Come, lords, away;

[To fight with Glendower and his complices⁴;
 A while to work, and, after, holiday. [Exeunt.]

S C E N E II.

*The coast of Wales. A castle in view.Flourish drums and trumpets.*5 Enter King Richard, Aumerle, Bishop of Carlisle, and soldiers.K. Rich. Barkloughly castle call you this at hand?Aum. Yea, my lord: How brooks your grace the air, 10 After your late tossing on the breaking seas?

K. Rich. Needs must I like it well; I weep for joy,

To stand upon my kingdom once again.—

Dear earth, I do salute thee with my hand,

15 Though rebels wound thee with their horses' hoofs:

As a long-parted mother with her child

Plays fondly with her tears, and smiles in meeting;

So weeping, smiling, greet I thee, my earth,

And do thee favour with my royal hands.

20 Feed not thy sovereign's foe, my gentle earth,

Nor with thy sweet comfort his rav'nous sense:

But let thy spiders, that suck up thy venom,

And heavy-gaited toads, lie in their way;

Doing annoyance to the treacherous feet,

25 Which with usurping steps do trample thee:

Yield stinging nettles to mine enemies:

And when they from thy bosom pluck a flower,

Guard it, I pray thee, with a lurking adder;

Whose double tongue may with a mortal touch

30 Throw death upon thy sovereign's enemies.—

Mock not my senseless conjuration, lords:

This earth shall have a feeling, and these stones

Prove armed soldiers, ere her native king

Shall fault under foul rebellious arms.

35 Bishop. Fear not, my lord; that Power, that made you king,

Hath power to keep you king, in spite of all.

The means that heaven yields must be embrac'd,

And not neglected; else, if heaven would,

40 And we would not heaven's offer, we refuse

The proffer'd means of succour and redress.

Aum. He means, my lord, that we are too remiss;

Whilst Bolingbroke, through our security,

Grows strong and great, in substance, and in friends.

45 K. Rich. Discomfortable cousin! know'st thou not,

That, when the searching eye of heaven is hid

Behind the globe, and lights the lower world,

Then thieves and robbers range abroad unseen,

In murders, and in outrage, bloody here;

50 But when, from under this terrestrial ball,

He fires the proud tops of the eastern pines,

And darts his light through every guilty hole,

Then murders, treasons, and detested sins, [backs,

The cloak of night being pluckt from off their

¹ To dispark is to throw down the hedges of an enclosure. ² It was then the practice to anneal the arms of the family in the windows of the house. ³ The impress was a device or motto. ⁴ Theobald is of opinion (and we think his reasons for thinking so are just), that this line is an interpolation. ⁵ Here, Dr. Johnson thinks, may be properly inserted the last scene of the second act.

Stand bare and naked, trembling at themselves?
 So when this thief, this traitor, Bolingbroke,—
 Who all this while hath revell'd in the night,
 Whilst we were wand'ring with the antipodes,—
 Shall see us rising in our throne the east,
 His treasons will sit blushing in his face,
 Not able to endure the sight of day,
 But, self-affrighted, tremble at his sin.
 Not all the water in the rough rude sea
 Can wash the balm from an anointed king;
 The breath of worldly men cannot depose
 The deputy elected by the Lord:
 For every man that Bolingbroke hath prest,
 To lift shrewd steel against our golden crown,
 God for his Richard hath in heavenly pay
 A glorious angel: then, if angels fight, Weak men must fall; for heaven still guards the right.

Enter Salisbury.

Welcome, my lord; How far off lies your power?
Sal. Nor near, nor further off, my gracious lord, Than this weak arm: Discomfort guides my
 tongue,

And bids me speak of nothing but despair.
 One day too late, I fear, my noble lord,
 Hath clouded all thy happy days on earth:
 Oh, call back yesterday, bid time return,
 And thou shalt have twelvethousand fighting men!
 To-day, to-day, unhappy day, too late,
 O'erthrows thy joys, friends, fortune, and thy state;
 For all the Welshmen, hearing thou wert dead,
 Are gone to Bolingbroke, dispers'd, and fled.

Aum. Comfort, my liege; Why looks your grace so pale? [men

K. Rich. But now the blood of twenty thousand
 Did triumph in my face, and they are fled;
 And 'till so much blood thither come again,
 Have I not reason to look pale and dead?
 All souls that will be safe, fly from my side;
 For time hath set a blot upon my pride. [are.

Aum. Comfort, my liege; remember who you

K. Rich. I had forgot myself: am I not king?
 Awake, thou cowardly majesty! thou sleepest.
 Is not the king's name forty thousand names?
 Arm, arm, my name; a puny subject strikes
 At thy great glory.—Look not to the ground,
 Ye favourites of a king; Are we not high?
 High be our thoughts: I know, my uncle York Hath power enough to serve our turn. But who Comes here?

Enter Scroop.

Scroop. More health and happiness betide my
 Than can my care-tun'd tongue deliver him!

K. Rich. Mine ear is open, and my heart prepar'd;
 The worst is worldly loss, thou canst unfold.
 Say, is my kingdom lost? why, 'twas my care;
 And what loss is it, to be rid of care?
 Strives Bolingbroke to be as great as we?
 Greater he shall not be; if he serve God,
 We'll serve him too, and be his fellow so.
 Revolt our subjects? that we cannot mend;
 They break their faith to God, as well as us:

Cry, woe, destruction, ruin, loss, decay;
 The worst is—death, and death will have his day.
Scroop. Glad am I, that your highness is so arm'd
 To bear the tidings of calamity.

5 Like an unseasonable stormy day,
 Which makes the silver rivers drown their shores,
 As if the world were all dissolv'd to tears;

10 So high above his limits swells the rage
 Of Bolingbroke, covering your fearful land
 With hard bright steel, and hearts harder than steel.
 Whitebeards have arm'd their thin and hairless scalps
 Against thy majesty; boys, with women's voices,
 Strive to speak big, and clasp their female joints
 In stiff unwieldy arms against thy crown:

15 Thy very beadsmen¹ learn to bend their bows
 Of double-fatal² yew against thy state;
 Yea, distaff women manage rusty bills
 Against thy seat: both young and old rebel,
 And all goes worse than I have power to tell. [ill.

20 K. Rich. Too well, too well, thou tell'st a tale so Where is the earl of Wiltshire? where is Bagot?
 What is become of Bushy? where is Green?

25 That they have let the dangerous enemy
 Measure our confines with such peaceful steps?
 If we prevail, their heads shall pay for it.

I warrant, they have made peace with Bolingbroke.

Scroop. Peace have they made with him, indeed, my lord. [demption!

30 K. Rich. O villains, vipers, damned without re-
 Dogs, easily won to fawn on any man! [heart!
 Snakes, in my heart-blood warm'd, that sting my Three Judases, each one thrice worse than Judas!
 Would they make peace? Terrible hell make war
 Upon their spotted souls for this offence!

35 Scroop. Sweet love, I see, changing his property,
 Turns to the sourest and most deadly hate:—
 Again uncure their souls; their peace is made
 With heads, and not with hands; those whom you curse,

40 Have felt the worst of death's destroying wound,
 And lie full low, grav'd in the hollow ground.

Aum. Is Bushy, Green, and the earl of Wiltshire dead?

Scroop. Yea, all of them at Bristol lost their heads.

45 Aum. Where is the duke my father with his power? [speak:

K. Rich. No matter where; of comfort no man
 Let's talk of graves, of worms, and epitaphs;
 Make dust our paper, and with rainy eyes
 Write sorrow on the bosom of the earth.

50 Let's chuse executors, and talk of wills:—
 And yet not so,—for what can we bequeath,
 Save our deposed bodies to the ground?

55 Our lands, our lives, and all are Bolingbroke's,
 And nothing can we call our own but death;
 And that small model³ of the barren earth,
 Which serves as paste and cover to our bones.
 For heaven's sake, let us sit upon the ground,
 And tell sad stories of the death of kings:—

60 How some have been depos'd, some slain in war;
 Some haunted by the ghosts they have depos'd;
 Some poison'd by their wives, some sleeping kill'd;

¹ The king's beadsmen were his chaplains. ² Called so, because the leaves of the yew are poison, and the wood is employed for instruments of death. ³ i. e. mould.

All murder'd:—For within the hollow crown,
That rounds the mortal temples of the king,
Keeps Death his court: and there the antic¹ sits
Scoffing his state, and grinning at his pomp;
Allowing him a breath, a little scene
To monarchize, be fear'd, and kill with looks;
Infusing him with self and vain conceit,—
As if this flesh, which walls about our life,
Were brass impregnable; and humour'd thus,
Comes at the last, and with a little pin
Bores through his castle wall, and—farewell king!
Cover your heads, and mock not flesh and blood
With solemn reverence; throw away respect,
Tradition², form, and ceremonious duty,
For you have but mistook me all this while:
I live on bread like you, feel want, taste grief,
Need friends;—Subjected thus,
How can you say to me—I am a king?

Carl. My lord, wise men ne'er wail their present woes,

But presently prevent the ways to wail.
To fear the foe, since fear oppresseth strength,
Gives, in your weakness, strength unto your foe,
And so your follies fight against yourself.
Fear, and be slain: no worse can come, to fight:
And fight and die, is death destroying death³;
Where fearing dying, pays death servile breath.

Aum. My father hath a power, enquire of him;
And learn to make a body of a limb.

K. Rich. Thou chid'st me well:—Proud Bolingbroke, I come

To change blows with thee for our day of doom.
This ague-fit of fear is over-blown;

An easy task it is, to win our own.—
Say, Scroop, where lies our uncle with his power?
Speak sweetly, man, although thy looks be sour.

Scroop. Men judge by the complexion of the sky
The state and inclination of the day;

So may you by my dull and heavy eye,
My tongue hath but a heavier tale to say.

I play the torturer, by small and small,
To lengthen out the worst that must be spoken:—

Your uncle York hath join'd with Bolingbroke;
And all your northern castles yielded up;

And all your southern gentlemen in arms
Upon his party.

K. Rich. Thou hast said enough.—
Beshrew thee, cousin, which didst lead me forth

Of that sweet way I was in to despair!
What say you now? what comfort have we now?

By heaven, I'll hate him everlastingly,
That bids me be of comfort any more.

Go, to Flint castle; there I'll pine away;
A king, woe's slave, shall kingly woe obey.

That power I have, discharge; and let them go
To ear the land⁴ that hath some hope to grow,

For I have none:—Let no man speak again
To alter this, for counsel is but vain.

Aum. My liege, one word.

K. Rich. He does me double wrong,
That wounds me with the flatteries of his tongue.
Discharge my followers, let him hence;—Away.
From Richard's night, to Bolingbroke's fair day.

[Exeunt.]

S C E N E III.

The Camp of Bolingbroke, before Flint Castle.
Enter with drums and colours, Bolingbroke,
York, Northumberland, and Attendants.

Boling. So that by this intelligence we learn,
The Welshmen are dispers'd; and Salisbury
Is gone to meet the king, who lately landed,
With some few private friends upon this coast.

North. The news is very fair and good, my lord;
Richard, not far from hence, hath hid his head.

York. It would beseem the lord Northumberland
To say—king Richard:—Alack the heavy day,
When such a sacred king should hide his head!

North. Your grace mistakes; only to be brief,
Left I his title out.

York. The time hath been,
Would you have been so brief with him, he would Have been so brief with you, to shorten you,
For taking so the head⁵, the whole head's length.

Boling. Mistake not, uncle, farther than you should. [should,

York. Take not, good cousin, farther than you
Lest you mis-take: The heavens are o'er your head.

Boling. I know it, uncle; and oppose not Myself against their will.—But who comes here?

Enter Percy.

Welcome, Harry; what, will not this castle yield?

Percy. The castle royally is mann'd, my lord,
Against thy entrance.

Boling. Royally! Why, it contains no king?

Percy. Yes, my good lord,
It doth contain a king; king Richard lies

Within the limits of yon lime and stone;
And with him lord Aumerle, lord Salisbury,

Sir Stephen Scroop; besides a clergyman
Of holy reverence, who, I cannot learn.

North. Belike, it is the bishop of Carlisle.

Boling. Noble lord, [To North.
Go to the rude ribs of that ancient castle;

Through brazen trumpet send the breath of parle
Into his ruin'd ears, and thus deliver:

Harry of Bolingbroke, on both his knees,
Doth kiss king Richard's hand;

And sends allegiance, and true faith of heart,
To his most royal person; hither come

Even at his feet to lay my arms and power;
Provided that, my banishment repeal'd,

And lands restor'd again, be freely granted:
If not, I'll use the advantage of my power,

And lay the summer's dust with showers of blood,
Rain'd from the wounds of slaughter'd Englishmen:

The which, how far off from the mind of Bolingbroke

It is, such crimson tempest should bedrench

¹ This alludes to the antic or fool of old farces, whose principal business is to ridicule the graver and more splendid personages. ² Tradition seems here used for traditional practices. ³ The meaning is, to die fighting, is to return the evil that we suffer, to destroy the destroyers. ⁴ i. e. to plough it.

⁵ To take the head is, is to take undue liberties.

The fresh green lap of fair king Richard's land,
My stooping duty tenderly shall shew.
Go, signify as much: while here we march
Upon the grassy carpet of this plain.—

Let's march without the noise of threat'ning drum,
That from this castle's totter'd battlements
Our fair appointments may be well perus'd.
Methinks, king Richard and myself should meet
With no less terror than the elements
Of fire and water, when their thund'ring shock
At meeting tears the cloudy cheeks of heaven.
Be he the fire, I'll be the yielding water:
The rage be his, while on the earth I rain
My waters; on the earth, and not on him.

March on, and mark king Richard how he looks.
A parle sounded, and answered by another trumpet within. Flourish. Enter on the walls King Richard, the Bishop of Carlisle, Aumerle, Scroop, and Salisbury.

York. See, see, king Richard doth himself appear,
As doth the blushing discontented sun
From out the fiery portal of the east;
When he perceives, the envious clouds are bent
To dim his glory, and to stain the tract
Of his bright passage to the occident.
Yet looks he like a king; behold, his eye,
As bright as is the eagle's, lightens forth
Controlling majesty: Alack, alack, for woe,
That any harm should stain so fair a show!

K. Rich. We are amaz'd; and thus long have we stood

[To North.]
To watch the fearful bending of thy knee,
Because we thought ourself thy lawful king;
And if we be, how dare thy joints forget
To pay their awful duty to our presence?
If we be not, shew us the hand of God
That hath dismiss'd us from our stewardship;
For well we know, no hand of blood and bone
Can gripe the sacred handle of our sceptre,
Unless he do prophane, steal, or usurp.
And though you think, that all, as you have done,
Have torn their souls, by turning them from us,
And we are barren, and bereft of friends;—
Yet know,—my master, God omnipotent,
Is must'ring in his clouds, on our behalf,
Armies of pestilence; and they shall strike
Your children yet unborn, and unbegot,
That lift your vassal hands against my head,
And threat the glory of my precious crown.
Tell Bolingbroke (for yond', methinks, he is)
That every stride he makes upon my land,
Is dangerous treason: He is come to ope
The purple testament of bleeding war;
But ere the crown he looks for live in peace,
Ten thousand bloody crowns of mothers' sons
Shall ill become the flower of England's face;
Change the complexion of her maid-pale peace
To scarlet indignation, and bedew
Her pasture's grass with faithful English blood.

North. The King of heaven forbid, our lord
the king
Should so with civil and uncivil arms
Be rush'd upon! Thy thrice noble cousin,

¹ i. e. the flowery surface of England's soil.

Harry Bolingbroke, doth humbly kiss thy hand,
And by the honourable tomb he swears,
That stands upon thy royal grandsire's bones;
And by the royalties of both your bloods,
Currents that spring from one most gracious head;
And by the bury'd hand of warlike Gaunt;
And by the worth and honour of himself,
Comprising all that may be sworn or said;—
His coming hither hath no farther scope,
Than for his lineal royalties, and to beg
Entranchisement immediate on his knees:
Which on thy royal party granted once,
His glittering arms he will commend to rust,
His barbed steeds to stables, and his heart
To faithful service of your majesty.
This swears he, as he is a prince, is just;
And as I am a gentleman, I credit him.

K. Rich. Northumberland, say,—thus the king returns:—

His noble cousin is right welcome hither;
And all the number of his fair demands
Shall be accomplish'd without contradiction:
With all the gracious utterance thou hast,
Speak to his gentle hearing kind commends—
We do debase ourself, cousin, do we not, [To Aum.]
To look so poorly, and to speak so fair?
Shall we call back Northumberland, and send Defiance to the traitor, and so die? [words,
Aum. No, good my lord; let's fight with gentle Till time lend friends, and friends their helpful
swords. [of mine,

K. Rich. Oh God! oh God! that e'er this tongue
That laid the sentence of dread banishment
On yon proud man, should take it off again
With words of sooth²! Oh, that I were as great
As is my grief, or lesser than my name!
Or that I could forget what I have been!
Or not remember what I must be now! [beat,
Swell'st thou, proud heart? I'll give thee scope to Since foes have scope to beat both thee and me.

Aum. Northumberland comes back from Bolingbroke. [submit?

K. Rich. What must the king do now? Must he
The king shall do it. Must he be depos'd?
The king shall be contented. Must he lose
The name of king? o' God's name, let it go:
I'll give my jewels for a set of beads;
My gorgeous palace, for a hermitage;
My gay apparel, for an alms-man's gown;
My figur'd goblets, for a dish of wood;
My sceptre, for a palmer's walking-staff;
My subjects, for a pair of carved saints;
And my large kingdom, for a little grave,
A little little grave, an obscure grave:—
Or I'll be bury'd in the king's highway,
Some way of common trade, where subjects' feet
May hourly trample on their sovereign's head:
For on my heart they tread, now whilst I live;
And, bury'd once, why not upon my head?—
Aumerle, thou weep'st; My tender-hearted cousin!—

We'll make foul weather with despised tears;
Our sighs, and they, shall lodge the summer corn,

² In this place sooth means sweetness or softness.

And

SCENE IV.

Langley.

The Duke of York's garden.Enter the Queen, and two Ladies.

Queen. What sport shall we devise here in this garden,

To drive away the heavy thought of care?

Lady. Madam, we'll play at bowls.

Queen. 'Twill make me think, the world is full of rubs,

And that my fortune runs against the bias.

Lady. Madam, we'll dance.

Queen. My legs can keep no measure in delight,

When my poor heart no measure keeps in grief; Therefore, no dancing, girl; some other sport.

Lady. Madam, we will tell tales.

Queen. Of sorrow, or of joy?

Lady. Of either, madam.

Queen. Of neither, girl:

For if of joy, being altogether wanting,

It doth remember me the more of sorrow;

Or if of grief, being altogether had,

It adds more sorrow to my want of joy:

For what I have, I need not to repeat;

And what I want, it boots not to complain.

Lady. Madam, I'll sing.

Queen. 'Tis well, that thou hast cause:

But thou should'st please me better, would'st thou weep. [good.]

Lady. I could weep, madam, would it do you

Queen. And I could weep, would weeping do me good,

And never borrow any tear of thee.

But stay, here come the gardeners:

Let's step into the shadow of these trees.—

My wretchedness unto a row of pins,

Enter a Gardener, and two servants.

They'll talk of state; for every one doth so

Against a change; Woe is fore-run with woe.

[Queen and Ladies retire.]

Gard. Go, bind thou up yon dangling apricocks,

Which, like unruly children, make their sire

Stoop with oppression of their prodigal weight;

Give some supportance to the bending twigs.—

Go thou, and like an executioner,

Cut off the heads of too-fast growing sprays,

That look too lofty in our commonwealth:

All must be even in our government.—

You thus employ'd, I will go root away

The noisome weeds, that without profit suck

The soil's fertility from wholesome flowers.

Serv. Why should we, in the compass of a pale,

Keep law, and form, and due proportion,

Shewing, as in a model, our firm state;

When our sea-walled garden, the whole land,

Is full of weeds; her fairest flowers choak'd up,

Her fruit-trees all unprun'd, her hedges ruin'd,

Her knots disorder'd, and her wholesome herbs

Swarming with caterpillars?

Gard. Hold thy peace:

He that hath suffer'd this disorder'd spring,

And make a dearth in this revolting land.
Or shall we play the wantons with our woes,
And make some pretty match with shedding tears?
As thus;—To drop them still upon one place,
'Till they have fretted us a pair of graves
Within the earth; and, therein laid,—There lies
Two kinsmen digg'd their graves with weeping eyes?
Would not this ill do well?—Well, well, I see
I talk but idly, and you mock at me.

[North. advances.]

Most mighty prince, my lord Northumberland,
What says king Bolingbroke? Will his majesty
Give Richard leave to live 'till Richard die?
You make a leg, and Bolingbroke says—ay.

North. My lord, in the base court¹ he doth attend

To speak with you; may't please you to come down.

K. Rich. Down, down, I come; like glist'ring Phaeton, Wanting the manage of unruly jades.

[North. retires to Bol.]

In the base court? Base court where kings grow
To come at traitors' calls, and do them grace. [base,
In the base court? Come down? Down, court!
down, king!]

For night-owls shriek, where mounting larks should sing. [Exeunt, from above.]

Boling. What says his majesty?

North. Sorrow and grief of heart
Makes him speak fondly², like a frantic man:
Yet he is come. [Enter Richard, &c. below.]

Boling. Stand all apart,
And shew fair duty to his majesty.—

My gracious lord,— [Kneels.]

K. Rich. Fair cousin, you debase your princely knee,

To make the base earth proud with kissing it:

Me rather had, my heart might feel your love,

Than my unpleas'd eye see your courtesy.

Up, cousin, up; your heart is up, I know,

Thus high at least, although your knee be low.

[Touching his own head.]

Boling. My gracious lord, I come but for mine own.

K. Rich. Your own is yours, and I am yours, and all.

Boling. So far be mine, my most redoubted lord,
As my true service shall deserve your love.

K. Rich. Well you deserve:—They well deserve to have,

That know the strongest and surest way to get.—

Uncle, give me your hand: nay, dry your eyes;

Tears shew their love, but want their remedies.—

Cousin, I am too young to be your father;

Though you are old enough to be my heir.

What you will have, I'll give, and willing too;

For do we must, what force will have us do.—

Set on towards London:—Cousin, is it so?

Boling. Yea, my good lord.

K. Rich. Then I must not say, no.

[Flourish. Exeunt.]

² i. e. foolishly.

Hath now himself met with the fall of leaf:
The weeds, that his broad spreading leaves did shelter,

That seem'd, in eating him, to hold him up,
Are pull'd up, root and all, by Bolingbroke;
I mean, the earl of Wiltshire, Bushy, Green.

Serv. What, are they dead?

Gard. They are; and Bolingbroke
Hath seiz'd the wasteful king.—What pity is it,
That he had not so trimm'd and dress'd his land,
As we this garden! who at time of year
Do wound the bark, the skin of our fruit-trees;
Lest, being over-proud with sap and blood,
With too much riches it confound itself:

Had he done so to great and growing men,
They might have liv'd to bear, and he to taste
Their fruits of duty. All superfluous branches
We lop away, that bearing boughs may live:
Had he done so, himself had borne the crown,
Which waste and idle hours hath quite thrown down.

Serv. What think you then, the king shall be depos'd?

Gard. Depress'd he is already; and depos'd,
'Tis doubt, he will be: Letters came last night
To a dear friend of the good duke of York's,
That tell black tidings.

Queen. Oh, I am press'd to death, through want of speaking!—

[Coming from her concealment.

Thou old Adam's likeness, set to dress this garden,
How dares thy harsh tongue sound this displeasing news?

What Eve, what serpent hath suggested thee
To make a second fall of cursed man?

Why dost thou say, king Richard is depos'd?

Dar'st thou, thou little better thing than earth,
Divine his downfall? Say, where, when, and how,
Cam'st thou by these ill tidings? Speak, thou wretch.

5 Gard. Pardon me, madam: little joy have I
To breathe these news, yet, what I say is true.
King Richard, he is in the mighty hold
Of Bolingbroke; their fortunes both are weigh'd:
In your lord's scale is nothing but himself,
10 And some few vanities that make him light;
But in the balance of great Bolingbroke,
Besides himself, are all the English peers,
And with that odds he weighs king Richard down.—
Post you to London, and you'll find it so:
15 I speak no more than every one doth know.

Queen. Nimble mischance, that art so light of Doth not thy embassy belong to me, [foot,
And am I last that knows it? Oh, thou think'st
To serve me last, that I may longest keep Thy sorrow in my breast.—Come, ladies, go,
To meet at London London's king in woe.—
What, was I born to this! that my sad look
Should grace the triumph of great Bolingbroke!—
25 Gard'ner, for telling me these news of woe,
I would, the plants, thou graft'st, may never grow.

[Exeunt Queen and Ladies.

Gard. Poor queen! so that thy state might be no worse,

I would my skill were subject to thy curse.—
Here did she drop a tear; here, in this place,
I'll set a bank of rue, sour herb of grace:
Rue, even for ruth, here shortly shall be seen,
In the remembrance of a weeping queen.

[Exeunt Gard. and Serv.

A C T IV.

S C E N E I.

London. The Parliament-House.

*Enter Bolingbroke, Aumerle, Northumberland,
Percy, Fitzwater, Surry, Bishop of Carlisle, Abbot of Westminster, Herald, Officers, and Bagot.*

Boling. CALL forth Bagot:

Now, Bagot, freely speak thy mind;
What thou dost know of noble Gloster's death;
Who wrought it with the king, and who perform'd
The bloody office of his timeless¹ end.

Bagot. Then set before my face the lord Aumerle.

Boling. Cousin, stand forth, and look upon that man.

Bagot. My lord Aumerle, I know, your daring
Scorns to unsay what once it hath deliver'd.
In that dead time when Gloster's death was plotted,
I heard you say,—“Is not my arm of length,
“That reacheth from the restful English court
“As far as Calais, to my uncle's head?”
Amongst much other talk, that very time,

I heard you say, “You rather had refuse
“The offer of an hundred thousand crowns,
“Than Bolingbroke return to England;
45 “Adding withal, how blest this land would be,
“In this your cousin's death.”

Aum. Princes, and noble lords,
What answer shall I make to this base man?
Shall I so much dishonour my fair stars²,
50 On equal terms to give him chastisement?
Either I must, or have mine honour soil'd
With the attainder of his sland'rous lips.—
There is my gage, the manual seal of death,
That marks thee out for hell: Thou liest, and 55 I will maintain what thou hast said, is false,
In thy heart-blood, though being all too base
To stain the temper of my knightly sword.

Boling. Bagot, forbear, thou shalt not take it up.

Aum. Excepting one, I would he were the best
60 In all this presence, that hath mov'd me so.

Fitzw. If that thy valour stand on sympathies³,
There is my gage, Aumerle, in gage to thine:

² Meaning, his high or noble birth.

³ i. e. upon equality of blood.

By that fair sun that shews me where thou stand'st,
I heard thee say, and vauntingly thou spak'st it,
That thou wert cause of noble Gloster's death.
If thou deny'st it, twenty times thou liest;
And I will turn thy falsehood to thy heart,
Where it was forged, with my rapier's point.

Aum. Thou dar'st not, coward, live to see the day.

Fitzw. Now, by my soul, I would it were the hour.

Aum. Fitzwater, thou art damn'd to hell for this.

Percy. Aumerle, thou liest; his honour is as true,
In this appeal, as thou art all unjust:

And, that thou art so, there I throw my gage,
To prove it on thee to the extremest point
Of mortal breathing! Seize it, if thou dar'st.

Aum. And if I do not, may my hands rot off,
And never brandish more revengeful steel
Over the glittering helmet of my foe!

Another Lord. I take the earth¹ to the like, for-sworn Aumerle;

And spur thee on with full as many lies
As may be halloo'd in thy treacherous ear
From sin to sin: there is my honour's pawn:
Engage it to the trial, if thou dar'st. [all:

Aum. Who sets me else? By heaven, I'll throw at 25
I have a thousand spirits in one breast,
To answer twenty thousand such as you.

Surry. My lord Fitzwater, I do remember well
The very time Aumerle and you did talk.

Fitzw. 'Tis very true: you were in presence then; 30
And you can witness with me, this is true.

Surry. As false, by heaven, as heaven itself is true.

Fitzw. Surry, thou liest.

Surry. Dishonourable boy!

That lie shall lie so heavy on my sword,
That it shall render vengeance and revenge,
Till thou the lie-giver, and that lie, do lie
In earth as quiet as thy father's scull.

In proof whereof, there is my honour's pawn;
Engage it to the trial, if thou dar'st. [horse? 40

Fitzw. How fondly dost thou spur a forward
If I dare eat, or drink, or breathe, or live,
I dare meet Surry in a wilderness,
And spit upon him, whilst I say, he lies,
And lies, and lies: there is my bond of faith,
To tie thee to my strong correction.—

As I intend to thrive in this new world²,
Aumerle is guilty of my true appeal:
Besides, I heard the banish'd Norfolk say,
That thou, Aumerle, didst send two of thy men 50
To execute the noble duke at Calais.

Aum. Some honest Christian trust me with a gage,
That Norfolk lies: here do I throw down this,
If he may be repeal'd to try his honour.

Boling. These differences shall all rest under gage, 55
Till Norfolk be repeal'd: repeal'd he shall be,
And, though mine enemy, restor'd again
To all his land and signories; when he's return'd,
Against Aumerle we will enforce his trial.

Car. That honourable day shall ne'er be seen.— 60
Many a time hath banis'd Norfolk fought
For Jesu Christ; in glorious Christian field

Streaming the ensign of the Christian cross,
Against black pagans, Turks, and Saracens:
And, toil'd with works of war, retir'd himself
To Italy; and there, at Venice, gave 5 His body to that pleasant country's earth,
And his pure soul unto his captain Christ,
Under whose colours he had fought so long.

Boling. Why, bishop, is Norfolk dead?

Carl. As sure as I live, my lord.

Boling. Sweet peace conduct his sweet soul to the bosom

Of good old Abraham!—Lords appellants,
Your differences shall all rest under gage,
Till we assign you to your days of trial.

15 Enter York, attended.

York. Great duke of Lancaster, I come to thee
From plume-pluck'd Richard; who with willing soul
Adopts thee heir, and his high scepter yields
To the possession of thy royal hand:

20 Ascend his throne, descending now from him,—
And long live Henry, of that name the fourth!

Boling. In God's name, I'll ascend the regal
Carl. Marry, God forbid!— [throne.

Worst in his royal presence may I speak,
Yet best beseeching me to speak the truth.
Would God, that any in this noble presence
Were enough noble to be upright judge
Of noble Richard; then true nobleness would Learn him forbearance from so foul a wrong.
What subject can give sentence on his king?
And who sits here, that is not Richard's subject?
Thieves are not judg'd, but they are by to hear,
Although apparent guilt be seen in them:
And shall the figure of God's majesty,

35 His captain, steward, deputy elect,
Anointed, crowned, planted many years,
Be judg'd by subject and inferior breath,
And he himself not present? O, forbid it, God,
That, in a Christian climate, souls refin'd
Should shew so heinous, black, obscene a deed! 40

I speak to subjects, and a subject speaks,
Stirr'd up by heaven thus boldly for his king.
My lord of Hereford here, whom you call king,
Is a foul traitor to proud Hereford's king:

45 And if you crown him, let me prophesy,—
The blood of English shall manure the ground,
And future ages groan for this foul act;
Peace shall go sleep with Turks and infidels,
And, in this seat of peace, tumultuous wars
50 Shall kin with kin, and kind with kind confound;
Disorder, horror, fear, and mutiny,
Shall here inhabit, and this land be call'd
The field of Golgotha and dead men's sculls.

O, if you rear this house against this house,
It will the wofullest division prove,
That ever fell upon this cursed earth:

Prevent, resist it, let it not be so,
Lest children's children cry against you—woe!

North. Well have you argu'd, sir; and, for your pains,

Of capital treason we arrest you here:—
My lord of Westminster, be it your charge

¹ Dr. Johnson supposes, that for the earth we should read thy oath. ² Meaning, in this world, where I have just begun to be an actor. Surry has just before called him boy.

To keep him safely 'till his day of trial.— [suit ?]
 May't please you, lords, to grant the commons'
Boling. Fetch hither Richard, that in common
 He may surrender; so we shall proceed [view
 Without suspicion.

York. I will be his conduct. [Exit.

Boling. Lords, you that here are under our arrest,

Procure your sureties for your days of answer:—
 Little are we beholden to your love, [To Carlisle.
 And little look'd for at your helping hands.

Re-enter York, with King Richard.

K. Rich. Alack, why am I sent for to a king.
 Before I have skook off the regal thoughts
 Wherewith I reign'd? I hardly yet have learn'd
 To insinuate, flatter, bow, and bend my knee:—
 Give sorrow leave a while to tutor me
 To this submission. Yet I well remember
 The favours¹ of these men: Were they not mine?
 Did they not sometime cry, All hail! to me?
 So Judas did to Christ: but, he in twelve,
 Found truth in all, but one; I, in twelve thousand, none.

God save the king!—Will no man say, Amen?
 Am I both priest and clerk? Well then, Amen.
 God save the king! although I be not he;
 And yet, Amen, if heaven do think him me.—
 To do what service, am I sent for hither?

York. To do that office, of thine own good will,
 Which tired majesty did make thee offer,—
 The resignation of thy state and crown
 To Henry Bolingbroke.

K. Rich. Give me the crown:—Here, cousin, seize the crown; [thine.

Here, cousin, on this side, my hand; on that side,
 Now is this golden crown like a deep well,
 That owes two buckets filling one another;
 The emptier ever dancing in the air,
 The other down, unseen, and full of water:
 The bucket down, and full of tears, am I,
 Drinking my griefs, whilst you mount up on high.

Boling. I thought you had been willing to resign.

K. Rich. My crown, I am; but still my griefs are mine:

You may my glories and my state dispose,
 But not my griefs; still am I king of those.

Boling. Part of your cares you give me with your crown.

K. Rich. Your cares set up, do not pluck my cares down.

My care is—loss of care, by old care done;
 Your care is—gain of care, by new care won:
 The cares I give, I have, though given away;
 They tend the crown, yet still with me they stay.

Boling. Are you contented to resign the crown?

K. Rich. Ay, no;—no, ay;—for I must nothing be;

Therefore, no, no, for I resign to thee.
 Now mark me how I will undo myself:—
 I give this heavy weight from off my head,
 And this unwieldy sceptre from my hand,
 The pride of kingly sway from out my heart;

With mine own tears I wash away my balm²,
 With mine own hands I give away my crown,
 With mine own tongue deny my sacred state,
 With mine own breath release all duteous oaths:
 5 All pomp and majesty I do forswear;

My manors, rents, revenues, I forego;

My acts, decrees, and statutes, I deny:

God pardon all oaths, that are broke to me!

God keep all vows unbroke, are made to thee!

10 Make me, that nothing have, with nothing griev'd;

And thou with all pleas'd, that hast all atchiev'd;

Long may'st thou live in Richard's seat to sit,

And soon lie Richard in an earthy pit! |

God save king Henry, unking'd Richard says,

15 And send him many years of sun-shine days!—

What more remains?

North. No more, but that you read

These accusations, and these grievous crimes,

Committed by your person and your followers,

20 Against the state and profit of this land;

That, by confessing them, the souls of men

May deem that you are worthily depos'd.

K. Rich. Must I do so? and must I ravel out
 My weav'd-up follies? Gentle Northumberland,

25 If thy offences were upon record,

Would it not shame thee, in so fair a troop,

To read a lecture of them? If thou would'st,

There should'st thou find an heinous article,—

Containing the deposing of a king,

30 And cracking the strong warrant of an oath,—

Mark'd with a blot, damn'd in the book of heaven:—

Nay, all of you, that stand and look upon me,

Whilst that my wretchedness doth bait myself,—

Though some of you, with Pilate, wash your hands,

35 Shewing an outward pity; yet you Pilates

Have here deliver'd me to my sour cross,

And water cannot wash away your sin. [ticles.

North. My lord, dispatch; read o'er these ar-

K. Rich. Mine eyes are full of tears, I cannot see:

40 And yet salt-water blinds them not so much,

But they can see a sort³ of traitors here.

Nay, if I turn mine eyes upon myself,

I find myself a traitor with the rest:

For I have given here my soul's consent,

45 To undeck the pompous body of a king;

Make glory base; a sovereign, a slave;

Proud majesty, a subject; state, a peasant.

North. My lord,—

K. Rich. No lord of thine, thou haught⁴, insulting man,

Nor no man's lord; I have no name, no title,—

No, not that name was given me at the font,—

But 'tis usurp'd:—Alack the heavy day,

That I have worn so many winters out,

55 And know not now what name to call myself!

Oh, that I were a mockery king of snow,

Standing before the sun of Bolingbroke,

To melt myself away in water-drops!—

Good king—great king—(and yet not greatly good)

60 An if my word be sterling yet in England.

[To Boling.

Let it command a mirror hither straight;

 haughty.

² The oil of consecration.

³ i. e. company.

⁴ i. e.

That it may shew me what a face I have,
Since it is bankrupt of his majesty.

Boling. Go some of you and fetch a looking-glass.

North. Read o'er this paper, while the glass doth come. [to hell.

K. Rich. Fiend! thou torment'st me ere I come.

Boling. Urge it no more, my lord Northumberland.

North. The commons will not then be satisfy'd.

K. Rich. They shall be satisfy'd; I'll read enough,
When I do see the very book indeed
Where all my sins are writ, and that's—myself.

Enter one, with a glass.

Give me that glass, and therein will I read.—
No deeper wrinkles yet? Hath sorrow struck
So many blows upon this face of mine,
And made no deeper wounds?—Oh, flattering glass,
Like to my followers in prosperity,
Thou dost beguile me!—Was this face the face
That every day under his household roof
Did keep ten thousand men? Was this the face,
That, like the sun, did make beholders wink?
Was this the face that fac'd so many follies,
And was at last out-fac'd by Bolingbroke?
A brittle glory shineth in this face:

[Dashes the glass against the ground.]

As brittle as the glory, is the face;
For there it is, crack'd in an hundred shivers.—
Mark, silent king, the moral of this sport,—
How soon my sorrow hath destroy'd my face.

Boling. The shadow of your sorrow hath destroy'd
The shadow of your face.

K. Rich. Say that again.

The shadow of my sorrow? Ha! let's see:—
'Tis very true, my grief lies all within;
And these external manners of lament,
Are merely shadows to the unseen grief,
That swells with silence in the tortur'd soul;

There lies the substance: and I thank thee, king,
For thy great bounty, that not only giv'st
Me cause to wail, but teachest me the way
How to lament the cause. I'll beg one boon,
And then be gone, and trouble you no more.
Shall I obtain it?

Boling. Name it, fair cousin. [a king:

K. Rich. Fair cousin? Why, I am greater than
For, when I was a king, my flatterers
Were then but subjects; being now a subject,
I have a king here to my flatterer.

Being so great, I have no need to beg.

Boling. Yet ask.

K. Rich. And shall I have?

15 Boling. You shall.

K. Rich. Then give me leave to go.

Boling. Whither? [sights.

K. Rich. Whither you will, so I were from your Boling. Go some of you, convey him to the Tower.

20 K. Rich. Oh, good! convey?—conveyors¹ are you all,

That rise thus nimbly by a true king's fall. [Exit.

Boling. On Wednesday next, we solemnly set
Our coronation: lords, prepare yourselves. [down

25 [Ex. all but the Abbot, Bishop of Carlisle, and Aumerle.

Abbot. A woeful pageant have we here beheld.

Carl. The woes to come; the children yet unborn
Shall feel this day as sharp to them as thorn.

30 Aum. You holy clergymen, is there no plot
To rid the realm of this pernicious blot?

Abbot. Before I freely speak my mind herein,
You shall not only take the sacrament
To bury² mine intents, but also to effect
Whatever I shall happen to devise:—

35 I see, your brows are full of discontent,
Your hearts of sorrow, and your eyes of tears;
Come home with me to supper, and I'll lay
A plot, shall shew us all a merry day. [Exeunt.

S C E N E I.

A Street in London.

Enter Queen, and Ladies.

Queen. THIS way the king will come; this is the way

To Julius Cæsar's ill-erected tower³,
To whose flint bosom my condemned lord
Is doom'd a prisoner by proud Bolingbroke:
Here let us rest, if this rebellious earth
Have any resting for her true king's queen.

Enter King Richard, and guards.

But soft, but see, or rather do not see,
My fair rose wither: Yet look up; behold;
That you in pity may dissolve to dew,
And wash him fresh again with true-love tears.—

Ah, thou the model where old Troy did stand;
[To K. Rich.

Thou map of honour; thou king Richard's tomb,
And not king Richard; thou most beauteous inn,
Why should hard favour'd grief be lodg'd in thee,
When triumph is become an ale-house guest?

50 K. Rich. Join not with grief, fair woman, do not so,
To make my end too sudden: learn, good soul,
To think our former state a happy dream;
From which awak'd, the truth of what we are
Shews us but this: I am sworn brother, sweet,
To grim necessity; and he and I
Will keep a league 'till death. Hie thee to France,
And cloister thee in some religious house:
60 Our holy lives must win a new world's crown,
Which our profane hours here have stricken down.

² i. e. to conceal.

³ The Tower of London is said to have been erected by Queen. What is my Richard both in shape and mind

Transform'd and weakened? Hath Bolingbroke
Depos'd thine intellect? hath he been in thy heart?
The lion, dying, thrustest forth his paw,
And wounds the earth, if nothing else, with rage
To be o'erpower'd; and wilt thou, pupil-like,
Take thy correction mildly? kiss the rod?

And fawn on rage with base humility,
Which art a lion, and a king of beasts? [beasts, 10

K. Rich. A king of beasts, indeed; if aught but I had been still a happy king of men.

Good sometime queen, prepare thee hence for France:

Think, I am dead; and that even here thou tak'st 15
As from my death-bed, my last living leave.

In winter's tedious nights, sit by the fire
With good old folks; and let them tell thee tales
Of woeful ages long ago betid:

And, ere thou bid good night, to quit their grief, 20
Tell thou the lamentable fall of me,

And send the hearers weeping to their beds.

For why, the senseless brands will sympathize

The heavy accent of thy moving tongue,

And, in compassion, weep the fire out: 25

And some will mourn in ashes, some coal-black,
For the deposing of a rightful king.

Enter Northumberland, attended.

North. My lord, the mind of Bolingbroke is chang'd; 30

You must to Pomfret, not unto the Tower.—

And, madam, there is order ta'en for you;

With all swift speed, you must away to France.

K. Rich. Northumberland, thou ladder wherewithal 35

The mounting Bolingbroke ascends my throne,—

The time shall not be many hours of age

More than it is, ere foul sin, gathering head,

Shall break into corruption: thou shalt think, 40

Though he divide the realm, and give thee half, [way

It is too little, helping him to all;

And he shall think, that thou, which know'st the

To plant unrightful kings, wilt know again,

Being ne'er so little urg'd, another way 45

To pluck him headlong from the usurped throne.

The love of wicked friends converts to fear:

That fear, to hate; and hate turns one, or both,

To worthy danger, and deserved death.

North. My guilt be on my head, and there an end.

Take leave, and part; for you must part forthwith. 50

K. Rich. Doubly divorc'd?—Bad men, ye violate

A two-fold marriage; 'twixt my crown and me;

And then betwixt me and my married wife.—

Let me unkiss the oath 'twixt thee and me: 55

[To the Queen.]

And yet not so, for with a kiss 'twas made.—

Part us, Northumberland; I towards the north,

Where shivering cold and sickness pine the clime.

My wife to France; from whence, set forth in pomp,

She came adorned hither like sweet May, 60

Sent back like Hollowmas², or short'st of day.

Queen. And must we be divided? must we part?

K. Rich. Ay, hand from hand, my love, and heart from heart.

Queen. Banish us both, and send the king with me.

North. That were some love, but little policy.

Queen. Then whither he goes, thither let me go.

K. Rich. So two, together weeping, make one woe,

Weep thou for me in France, I for thee here;

Better far off, than—near, be ne'er the near¹.

Go, count thy way with sighs; I, mine with groans.

Queen. So longest way shall have the longest moans.

K. Rich. Twice for one step I'll groan, the way being short,

And piece the way out with a heavy heart.

Come, come, in wooing sorrow let's be brief,

Since, wedding it, there is such length in grief.

One kiss shall stop our mouths, and dumbly part;—

Thus give I mine, and thus take I thy heart. 15

[They kiss.]

Queen. Give me mine own again; 'twere no good part,

To take on me to keep, and kill thy heart.

[Kiss again.]

So, now I have mine own again, be gone,

That I may strive to kill it with a groan. 25

K. Rich. We make woe wanton with this fond delay:

Once more adieu; the rest let sorrow say.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

The Duke of York's Palace.

Enter York, with his Dutchess.

Dutch. My lord, you told me, you would tell the rest, 35

When weeping made you break the story off

Of our two cousins coming into London.

York. Where did I leave?

Dutch. At that sad stop, my lord,

Where rude misgovern'd hands, from window tops,
Threw dust and rubbish on king Richard's head.

York. Then, as I said, the duke, great Boling-
Mounted upon a hot and fiery steed, [broke,—

Which his aspiring rider seem'd to know,—

With slow, but stately pace kept on his course,

While all tongues cry'd—God save thee, Boling-
broke! 45

You would have thought the very windows spake,

So many greedy looks of young and old

Through casements darted their desiring eyes

Upon his visage; and that all the walls,

With painted imag'ry, had said at once,—

Jesu preserve thee! welcome Bolingbroke!

Whilst he, from one side to the other turning, 55

Bare-headed, lower than his proud steed's neck,

Bespake them thus—I thank you, countrymen:

And thus still doing, thus he passed along.

Dutch. Alas, poor Richard! where rides he the while? 60

York. As, in a theatre, the eyes of men,

After a well grac'd actor leaves the stage,

Are idly bent¹ on him that enters next,
Thinking his prattle to be tedious :
Even so, or with much more contempt, men's eyes
Dids cowl on Richard; no man cry'd, God save him:
No joyful tongue gave him his welcome home:
But dust was thrown upon his sacred head;
Which with such gentle sorrow he shook off,—
His face still combating with tears and smiles,
The badges of his grief and patience,—
That had not God, for some strong purpose, steel'd
The hearts of men, they must perforce, have melted,
And barbarism itself have pitied him.
But heaven hath a hand in these events;
To whose high will we bound our calm contents.
To Bolingbroke are we sworn subjects now,
Whose state and honour I for aye allow.

Enter Aumerle.

Dutch. Here comes my son Aumerle.

York. Aumerle that was²;

But that is lost, for being Richard's friend,
And, madam, you must call him Rutland now:
I am in parliament pledge for his truth,
And lasting fealty to the new-made king. [now,

Dutch. Welcome, my son: Who are the violets
That strew the green-lap of the new-come spring?

Aum. Madam, I know not, nor I greatly care not;
God knows, I had as lief be none, as one. [time,

York. Well, bear you well³ in this new spring of Lest you be cropt before you come to prime.

What news from Oxford? Hold those justs and triumphs?

Aum. For aught I know, my lord, they do.

York. You will be there, I know.

Aum. If God prevent me not; I purpose so.

York. What seal is that, that hangs without thy bosom?

Yea, look'st thou pale? let me see the writing.

Aum. My lord, 'tis nothing.

York. No matter then who sees it:

I will be satisfy'd, let me see the writing.

Aum. I do beseech your grace to pardon me;
It is a matter of small consequence,

Which for some reasons I would not have seen.

York. Which for some reasons, sir, I mean to see.
I fear, I fear,—

Dutch. What should you fear?

'Tis nothing but some bond, that he is enter'd into
For gay apparel, against the triumph. [bond

York. Bound to himself? what doth he with a Boy, let me see the writing. [shew it.

Aum. I do beseech you, pardon me; I may not [Snatches it and reads.

Treason! foul treason!—villain! traitor! slave!

Dutch. What is the matter, my lord?

York. Ho! who is within there? saddle my horse.
Heaven, for his mercy! what treachery is here!

Dutch. Why, what is it, my lord?

York. Give me my boots, I say; saddle my horse:
Now by mine honour, by my life, my troth,

I will appeach the villain.

Dutch. What's the matter?

York. Peace, foolish woman. [son?

Dutch. I will not peace:—What is the matter,

Aum. Good mother, be content; it is no more
Than my poor life must answer.

Dutch. Thy life answer!

Enter Servant, with boots.

York. Bring me my boots, I will unto the king.

Dutch. Strike him, Aumerle.—Poor boy, thou art amaz'd:—

Hence, villain; never more come in my sight.—

[Speaking to the servant.

York. Give me my boots, I say.

Dutch. Why, York, what wilt thou do?

Wilt thou not hide the trespass of thine own?

Have we more sons? or are we like to have?

Is not my teeming date drunk up with time?

And wilt thou pluck my fair son from mine age,

And rob me of a happy mother's name?

Is he not like thee? is he not thine own?

York. Thou fond mad woman,

Wilt thou conceal this dark conspiracy?

A dozen of them here have ta'en the sacrament,

And interchangeably set down their hands,

To kill the king at Oxford.

Dutch. He shall be none;

We'll keep him here: Then what is that to him?

York. Away, fond woman! were he twenty

Dutch. Had'st thou groan'd for him,

As I have done, thou'dst be more pitiful.

But now I know thy mind; thou dost suspect,

That I have been disloyal to thy bed,

And that he is a bastard, not thy son:

Sweet York, sweet husband, be not of that mind:

He is as like thee as a man may be,

Not like to me, or any of my kin,

And yet I love him.

York. Make way, unruly woman. [Exit. [horse;

Dutch. After, Aumerle: mount thee upon his

Spur, post; and get before him to the king,

And beg thy pardon ere he do accuse thee.

I'll not be long behind; though I be old,

I doubt not but to ride as fast as York:

And never will I rise up from the ground,

'Till Bolingbroke have pardon'd thee: Away.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.

The Court at Windsor Castle.

Enter Bolingbroke, Percy, and other Lords.

Boling. Can no man tell of my unthrifty son?

'Tis full three months, since I did see him last:—

If any plague hang over us, 'tis he.

I would to heaven, my lords, he might be found:

Enquire at London, 'mongst the taverns there,

For there, they say, he daily doth frequent,

With unrestrained loose companions;

Even such, they say, as stand in narrow lanes,

And beat our watch, and rob our passengers;

¹ i. e. carelessly turned. ² From Holinshed we learn, that the dukes of Aumerle, Surry, and Exeter, were by an act of Henry's first parliament deprived of their dukedoms, but allowed to retain their earldoms of Rutland, Kent, and Huntingdon. ³ i. e. conduct yourself with prudence.

While he, young, wanton, and effeminate boy,
Takes on the point of honour, to support
So desolute a crew. [prince:]

Percy. My lord, some two days since I saw the
And told him of these triumphs held at Oxford.

Boling. And what said the gallant?

Percy. His answer was,—he would unto the stews;
And from the common'st creature pluck a glove,
And wear it as a favour; and with that

He would unhorse the lustiest challenger. [both]

Boling. As dissolute, as desperate: yet, through
I see some sparkles of a better hope,
Which elder days may happily bring forth.

But who comes here?

Enter Aumerle, amazed.

Aum. Where is the king?

Boling. What means
Our cousin, that he stares and looks so wildly?

Aum. God save your grace! I do beseech your majesty,

To have some conference with your grace alone.

Boling. Withdraw yourselves, and leave us here alone.—

What is the matter with our cousin now?

Aum. For ever may my knees grow to the earth,
[Kneels.]

My tongue cleave to my roof within my mouth,
Unless a pardon, ere I rise, or speak!

Boling. Intended, or committed, was this fault?
If but the first, how heinous ere it be,

To win thy after-love, I pardon thee. [key,

Aum. Then give me leave that I may turn the Boling. Have thy desire. [York within.]

York. My liege, beware; look to thyself;

Thou hast a traitor in thy presence there.

Boling. Villain, I'll make thee safe. [Drawing.]

Aum. Stay thy revengeful hand;

Thou hast no cause to fear.

York. Open the door, secure, fool-hardy king:

Shall I, for love, speak treason to thy face?

Open the door, or I will break it open.

The King opens the door, enter York.

Boling. What is the matter, uncle? speak;

Recover breath; tell us how near is danger,

That we may arm us to encounter it. [know

York. Peruse this writing here, and thou shalt

The treason that my haste forbids me show. [past:

Aum. Remember, as thou read'st, thy promise

I do repent me; read not my name there,

My heart is not confederate with my hand.

York. 'Twas, villain, ere thy hand did set it down.—

I tore it from the traitor's bosom, king;

Fear, and not love, begets his penitence:

Forget to pity him, lest thy pity prove

A serpent that will sting thee to the heart.

Boling. O heinous, strong, and bold conspiracy!—

O loyal father of a treacherous son!

Thou sheer¹, immaculate, and silver fountain,

From whence this stream through muddy passages

Hath held his current, and defil'd himself!

Thy overflow of good converts to bad²;
And thy abundant goodness shall excuse
This deadly blot in thy digressing³ son.

York. So shall my virtue be his vice's bawd;
And he shall spend mine honour with his shame,

As thriftless sons their scraping fathers' gold.

Mine honour lives when his dishonour dies,

Or my sham'd life in his dishonour lies:

Thou kill'st me in his life; giving him breath,

The traitor lives, the true man's put to death.

[Dutchess within:]

Dutch. What ho, my liege! for heaven's sake, let me in. [eager cry:]

Boling. What shrill-voic'd suppliant makes this

Dutch. A woman, and thine aunt, great king;
'tis I.

Speak with me, pity me, open the door;

A beggar begs, that never begg'd before.

Boling. Our scene is alter'd, from a serious thing,

And now chang'd to the Beggar and the King.⁴—

My dangerous cousin, let your mother in;

I know, she's come to pray for your foul sin.

York. If thou do pardon, whosoever pray,

More sins, for this forgiveness, prosper may.

This fester'd joint cut off, the rest rests sound;

This, let alone, will all the rest confound.

Enter Dutchess.

Dutch. O king, believe not this hard-hearted man;
Love, loving not itself, none other can. [here?

York. Thou frantic woman, what dost thou do
Shall thy old dugs once more a traitor rear?

Dutch. Sweet York, be patient: Hear me, gentle liege. [Kneels.]

Boling. Rise up, good aunt.

Dutch. Not yet, I thee beseech:

For ever will I kneel upon my knees,

And never see day that the happy sees,

'Till thou give joy; until thou bid me joy,

By pardoning Rutland, my transgressing boy.

Aum. Unto my mother's prayers, I bend my knee. [Kneels.]

York. Against them both, my true joints bended be. [Kneels.]

Ill may'st thou thrive, if thou grant any grace!

Dutch. Pleads he in earnest? look upon his face;

His eyes do drop no tears, his prayers are in jest;

His words come from his mouth, ours from our breast:

He prays but faintly, and would be deny'd;

We pray with heart, and soul, and all beside:

His weary joints would gladly rise, I know;

Our knees shall kneel 'till to the ground they grow:

His prayers are full of false hypocrisy;

Ours, of true zeal and deep integrity.

Boling. Our prayers do out-pray his; then let them have

That mercy, which true prayers ought to have.

Boling. Good aunt, stand up.

Dutch. Nay, do not say—stand up;

But, pardon, first; and afterwards, stand up;

And if I were thy nurse, thy tongue to teach,

Pardon—should be the first word of thy speech.

² That is, "The overflow of good in thee is turned to bad in thy son."

³ To digress is to deviate from what is right and regular.

⁴ Alluding to an interlude well known in our author's time.

I never long'd to hear a word 'till now:
Say—pardon, king; let pity teach thee how:
The word is short, but not so short as sweet;
No word like, pardon, for kings' mouths so meet.

York. Speak it in French, king; say, *pardonnez moy*¹.

Dutch. Dost thou teach pardon pardon to destroy?
Ah, my sour husband, my hard-hearted lord,
That set'st the word itself against the word!—
Speak, pardon, as 'tis current in our land;
The chopping French we do not understand.
Thine eye begins to speak, set thy tongue there:
Or, in thy piteous heart plant thou thine ear;
That, hearing how our plaints and prayers do pierce,
Pity may move thee pardon to rehearse.

Boling. Good aunt, stand up.

Dutch. I do not sue to stand,
Pardon is all the suit I have in hand.

Boling. I pardon him, as heaven shall pardon me.

Dutch. O happy vantage of a kneeling knee!
Yet am I sick for fear: speak it again;
Twice saying pardon, doth not pardon twain,
But makes one pardon strong.

Boling. With all my heart
I pardon him.

Dutch. A god on earth thou art. [the abbot²,

Boling. But for our trusty brother-in-law,—and
With all the rest of that consorted crew,—
Destruction straight shall dog them at the heels.—

Good uncle, help to order several powers

To Oxford, or where-e'er these traitors are:

They shall not live within this world, I swear,

But I will have them, if I once knew where.

Uncle, farewell;—and, cousin, too, adieu:

Your mother well hath pray'd, and prove you true.

Dutch. Come, my old son; I pray heaven make thee new. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.

Enter Exton, and a Servant.

Exton. Didst thou not mark the king, what words he spake?

Have I no friend will rid me of this living fear?
Was it not so?

Serv. Those were his very words. [twice,

Exton. Have I no friend? quoth he: he spake it
And urg'd it twice together; did he not?

Serv. He did.

Exton. And speaking it, he wistly look'd on me.
As who should say,—I would, thou wert the man
That would divorce this terror from my heart;
Meaning, the king at Pomfret. Come, let's go;
I am the king's friend, and will rid his foe. [Exe.

SCENE V.

The Prison at Pomfret Castle.

Enter King Richard.

K. Rich. I have been studying how to compare
This prison, where I live, unto the world;
And, for because the world is populous,

And here is not a creature but myself,
I cannot do it;—Yet I'll hammer it out.
My brain I'll prove the female to my soul;
My soul, the father: and these two beget
A generation of still-breeding thoughts,
And these same thoughts people this little world;
In humours, like the people of this world,
For no thought is contented. The better sort,—
As thoughts of things divine,—are intermix'd
With scruples, and do set the word itself
Against the word³:

As thus,—Come, little ones; and then again,—
It is as hard to come, as for a camel
To thread the postern of a needle's eye.

Thoughts tending to ambition, they do plot
Unlike y wonders; how these vain weak nails
May tear a passage through the flinty ribs
Of this hard world, my ragged prison walls;
And, for they cannot, die in their own pride.

Thoughts tending to content, flatter themselves,—
That they are not the first of fortune's slaves,
Nor shall not be the last: Like silly beggars,
Who, sitting in the stocks, refuge their shame,—
That many have, and others must sit there:

And in this thought they find a kind of ease,
Bearing their own misfortune on the back
Of such as have before endur'd the like.

Thus play I, in one person, many people,
And none contented: Sometimes am I king;

Then treason makes me wish myself a beggar,
And so I am: then crushing penury

Persuades me, I was better when a king;

Then am I king'd again: and, by-and-by,

Think, that I am unking'd by Bolingbroke,
And straight am nothing:—But what-e'er I am,

Nor I, nor any man, that but man is,
With nothing shall be pleas'd, 'till he be eas'd

With being nothing.—Music do I hear? [Music.
Ha, ha! keep time:—How sour sweet music is,

When time is broke, and no proportion kept?
So is it in the musick of men's lives.

And here have I the daintiness of ear,
To hear time broke in a disorder'd string;

But, for the concord of my state and time,
Had not an ear to hear my true time broke.

I wasted time, and now doth time waste me.

For now hath time made me his pumb'ring clock:

My thoughts are minutes; and, with sighs, they jar⁴,
Their watches to mine eyes, the outward watch⁵,

Whereto my finger, like a dial's point,
Is pointing still, in cleansing them from tears.

Now, sir, the sound, that tells what hour it is,

Are clamorous groans, that strike upon my heart,
Which is the bell: So sighs, and tears, and groans,

Shew minutes, times, and hours:—but my time
Runs posting on in Bolingbroke's proud joy,

While I stand fooling here, his jack o' the clock⁶.
This music mads me, let it sound no more;

For, though it hath help madmen to their wits,
In me, it seems, it will make wise men mad.

¹ That is, excuse me. ² The abbot of Westminster was an ecclesiastic; but the brother-in-law meant was John duke of Exeter and earl of Huntingdon (own brother to king Richard II.) and who had married with the lady Elizabeth, sister of Henry of Bolingbroke. ³ By the word I suppose is meant the Scriptures. ⁴ To jar probably here means, to make that noise which is called ticking. ⁵ Watch seems to be used in a double sense, for a quantity of time, and for the instrument which measures time. ⁶ i. e. I strike for him. Yet,

Yet, blessing on his heart that gives it me!
For 'tis a sign of love; love to Richard
Is a strange brooch¹ in this all-hating world.

Enter Groom.

Groom. Hail, royal prince!

K. Rich. Thanks, noble peer;
The cheapest of us is ten groats too dear.
What art thou? and how comest thou hither,
Where no man ever comes, but that sad dog²
That brings me food, to make misfortune live?

Groom. I was a poor groom of thy stable, king,
When thou wert king; who, travelling towards
York,

With much ado, at length have gotten leave
To look upon my sometime royal master's face.
O, how it yearn'd my heart, when I beheld,
In London streets, that coronation day,
When Bolingbroke rode on roan Barbary!
That horse, that thou so often hath bestrid;
That horse, that I so carefully have dress'd!

K. Rich. Rode he on Barbary? Tell me, gentle
friend,

How went he under him?

Groom. So proudly, as if he disdain'd the ground.

K. Rich. So proud, that Bolingbroke was on his back!

That jade hath eat bread from my royal hand;
This hand hath made him proud with clapping him;
Would he not stumble? Would he not fall down,
(Since pride must have a fall) and break the neck
Of that proud man, that did usurp his back?

Forgiveness, horse! why do I rail on thee,
Since thou, created to be aw'd by man,
Wast born to bear? I was not made a horse;

And yet I bear a burden like an ass,
Spur-gall'd, and tir'd, by jauncing³ Bolingbroke.

Enter Keeper with a dish.

Keep. Fellow, give place; here is no longer stay.

[To the Groom.

K. Rich. If thou love me, 'tis time thou wert away.

Groom. What my tongue dares not, that my heart shall say. [Exit.

Keep. My lord, will't please you to fall to?

K. Rich. Taste of it first, as thou wert wont to do.

Keep. My lord, I dare not; Sir Pierce of Exton, Who late came from the king, commands the contrary. [thee!

K. Rich. The devil take Henry of Lancaster, and Patience is stale, and I am weary of it.

[Beats the Keep.

Keep. Help, help, help!

Enter Exton, and Servants.

K. Rich. How now? what means death in this rude assault? [ment.

Villain, thine own hand yields thy death's instru-[Snatching a weapon, and killing one.

Gothou, and fill another room in hell. [Kills another [Exton strikes him down.

That hand shall burn in never-quenching fire,

That staggers thus my person.—Exton, thy fierce
hand

Hath with the king's blood stain'd the king's own
Mount, mount, my soul! thy seat is up on high;

5 Whilst my gross flesh sinks downward, here to die.

[Dies.

Exton. As full of valour as of royal blood:
Both have I spilt; Oh, would the deed were good!

For now the devil, that told me—I did well,
10 Says, that this deed is chronicled in hell.

This dead king to the living king I'll bear;—
Take hence the rest, and give them burial here.

[Exeunt.

S C E N E VI.

The Court at Windsor.

Flourish. Enter Bolingbroke, York, with other Lords and attendants.

20 Boling. Kind uncle York, the latest news we hear,
Is—that the rebels have consum'd with fire
Our town of Cicester in Glostershire;

But whether they be ta'en, or slain, we hear not.

Enter Northumberland.

Welcome, my lord: What is the news? [ness.

North. First to thy sacred state wish I all happi-
The next news is,—I have to London sent

The heads of Salisbury, Spencer, Blunt, and Kent:
30 The manner of their taking may appear
At large discoursed in this paper here.

[Presenting a paper.

Boling. We thank thee, gentle Percy, for thy pains;
And to thy worth will add right worthy gains.

Enter Fitzwater.

Fitz. My lord, I have from Oxford sent t⁹
London

The heads of Brocas, and Sir Bennet Seely;
Two of the dangerous consorted traitors,

40 That sought at Oxford thy dire overthrow.

Boling. Thy pains, Fitzwater, shall not be forgot;
Right noble is thy merit, well I wot.

Enter Percy, with the Bishop of Carlisle.

Percy. The grand conspirator, abbot of Westminster,

With clog of conscience, and sour melancholy,
Hath yielded up his body to the grave:

But here is Carlisle living, to abide

50 Thy kingly doom, and sentence of his pride.

Boling. Carlisle, this is your doom:

Chuse out some secret place, some reverend room,
More than thou hast, and with it joy thy life;

So, as thou liv'st in peace, die free from strife:

For tho' mine enemy thou hast ever been,
High sparks of honour in thee have I seen.

Exter Exton, with a coffin.

Exton. Great king, within this coffin I present

60 Thy bury'd fear: herein all breathless lies

¹ i. e. is as strange and uncommon as a brooch, which is now no longer worn.

² Meaning, that grave, gloomy villain, who brings, &c.

³ Jaunce and jaunt were synonymous words.

The mightiest of thy greatest enemies,
Richard of Bourdeaux, by me hither brought.

Boling. Exton, I thank thee not; for thou hast wrought

A deed of slander, with thy fatal hand,
Upon my head, and all this famous land. [deed.

Exton. From your own mouth, my lord, did I this Boling. They love not poison, that do poison need,

Nor do I thee: though I did wish him dead,
I hate the murderer, love him murdered.

The guilt of conscience take thou for thy labour,
But neither my good word, nor princely favour:

With Cain go wander through the shade of night,
And never shew thy head by day nor light.—

Lords, I protest, my soul is full of woe,

I hat blood should sprinkle me, to make me grow:

5 Come, mourn with me for what I do lament,

And put on sullen black incontinent;

I'll make a voyage to the Holy Land,

To wash this blood off from my guilty hand:—

March sadly after; grace my mournings here,

10 In weeping after this untimely bier.

[Exeunt omnes.]

 SCENE, England.

ACT I.

SCENE I.

The Court in London.

Enter King Henry, Earl of Westmoreland, Sir Walter Blunt, and others.

K. Hen. SO shaken as we are, so wan with care,
 Find we a time for frightened peace to pant,
 And breathe short-winded accents of new broils

To be commenc'd in stronds afar remote.
 No more the thirsty entrance of this soil
 Shall daub her lips with her own children's blood;
 No more shall trenching war channel her fields,
 5 Nor bruise her flowrets with the armed hoofs
 Of hostile paces: those opposed eyes,
 Which,—like the meteors of a troubled heaven,
 All of one nature, of one substance bred,—
 Did lately meet in the intestine shock

¹ The transactions contained in this historical drama are comprised within the period of about ten months: for the action commences with the news brought of Hotspur having defeated the Scots under Archibald earl Douglas at Holmedon, (or Halidown-hill), which battle was fought on Holyrood-day (the 14th of September) 1402; and it closes with the defeat and death of Hotspur at Shrewsbury; which engagement happened on Saturday the 21st of July (the eve of St. Mary Magdalen) in the year 1403. Dr. Johnson remarks, that "Shakspeare has apparently designed a regular connection of these dramatic histories from Richard the Second to Henry the Fifth. King Henry, at the end of Richard the Second, declares his purpose to visit the Holy Land, which he resumes in this speech. The complaint made by king Henry in the last act of Richard the Second, of the wildness of his son, prepares the reader for the frolics which are here to be recounted, and the characters which are now to be exhibited." ² Mr. Steevens says, it should be Prince John of Lancaster, and adds, that the persons of the drama were originally collected by Mr. Rowe, who has given the title of Duke of Lancaster to Prince John, a mistake which Shakspeare has been no where guilty of in the first part of this play, though in the second he has fallen into the same error. K. Henry IV. was himself the last person that ever bore the title of Duke of Lancaster. But all his sons (till they had peerages, as Clarence, Bedford, Gloucester) were distinguished by the name of the royal house, as John of Lancaster, Humphry of Lancaster, &c. and in that proper style, the present John (who became afterwards so illustrious by the title of Duke of Bedford) is always mentioned in the play before us.

And

And furious close of civil butchery.
 Shall now, in mutual, well-beseeming ranks,
 March all one way; and be no more oppos'd
 Against acquaintance, kindred, and allies:
 The edge of war, like an ill-sheathed knife,
 No more shall cut his master. Therefore, friends,
 As far as to the sepulchre of Christ,
 (Whose soldier now, under whose blessed cross
 We are impressed and engag'd to fight)
 Fortwith a power of English shall we levy¹;
 Whose arms were moulded in their mothers' wombs
 To chase these pagans, in those holy fields,
 Over whose acres walk'd those blessed feet,
 Which, fourteen hundred years ago, were nail'd,
 For our advantage, on the bitter cross.
 But this our purpose is a twelve-month old,
 And bootless 'tis to tell you—we will go,
 Therefore we meet not now:—Then let me hear
 Of you, my gentle cousin Westmoreland,
 What yesternight our council did decree,
 In forwarding this dear expedience².

West. My liege, this haste was hot in question,
 And many limits³ of the charge set down
 But yesternight: when, all athwart there came
 A post from Wales, loaden with heavy news;
 Whose worst was,—that the noble Mortimer,
 Leading the men of Herefordshire to fight
 Against the irregular and wild Glendower,
 Was by the rude hands of that Welchman taken,
 And a thousand of his people butchered:

Upon whose dead corps there was such misuse,
 Such beastly, shameless transformation,
 By those Welshwomen done, as may not be,
 Without much shame, retold or spoken of. [broil]

K. Henry. It seems then that the tiding of this Brake off our business for the Holy Land. [lord;

West. This, match'd with other, did, my gracious
 For more uneven and unwelcome news
 Came from the north, and thus it did import.
 On Holy-rood day, the gallant Hotspur⁴ there,
 Young Harry Percy, and brave Archibald⁵,
 That ever-valiant and approved Scot,
 At Holmedon met,
 Where they did spend a sad and bloody hour;
 As by discharge of their artillery,
 And shape of likelihood, the news was told;
 For he that brought it, in the very heat
 And pride of their contention did take horse,
 Uncertain of the issue any way. [friend,

K. Henry. Here is a dear and true-industrious
 Sir Walter Blunt, new-lighted from his horse,
 Stain'd with the variation of each soil
 Petwixt that Holmedon and this seat of ours;
 And he hath brought us smooth and welcome news.

The earl of Douglas is discomfited;
 Ten thousand bold Scots, two-and-twenty knights,
 Balk'd⁶ in their own blood, did Sir Walter see
 On Holmedon's plains: Of prisoners, Hotspur took 5 Mordake the earl of Fife, and eldest son
 To beate Douglas; and the earls
 Of Athol, Murray, Angus, and Monteith.
 And is not this an honourable spoil?

A gallant prize? ha, cousin, is it not? [of.

10 West. 'Faith, 'tis a conquest for a prince to boast

K. Henry. Yea, there thou mak'st me sad, and mak'st me sin

In envy that my lord Northumberland
 Should be the father of so blest a son:

15 A son, who is the theme of honour's tongue;
 Amongst a grove, the very straightest plant;
 Who is sweet fortune's minion, and her pride:
 Whilst I, by looking on the praise of him,
 See riot and dishonour stain the brow

20 Of my young Harry. O, that it could be prov'd,
 That some night-tripping fairy had exchang'd
 In cradle-cloths our children where they lay,
 And call'd mine—Percy, his—Plantagenet!
 Then would I have his Harry, and he mine.

25 But let him from my thoughts: What think you,
 coz',

Of this young Percy's pride? The prisoners,
 Which he in this adventure hath surpriz'd,
 To his own use he keeps⁷; and sends me word,
 30 I shall have none but Mordake earl of Fife⁸.

West. This is his uncle's teaching, this is Wor-
 Malevolent to you in all aspects; [cester,
 Which makes him prune⁹ himself, and bristle up
 The crest of youth against your dignity.

35 K. Henry. But I have sent for him to answer this;
 And, for this cause, awhile we must neglect
 Our holy purpose to Jerusalem.

Cousin, on Wednesday next our council we
 Will hold at Windsor, so inform the lords:

40 But come yourself with speed to us again;
 For more is to be said, and to be done,
 Than out of anger can be uttered.

West. I will, my liege. [Exeunt.

S C E N E II.

45 An apartment belonging to the Prince.

Enter Henry, Prince of Wales, and Sir John Falstaff.

Fal. Now, Hal, what time of day is it, lad?

P. Henry. Thou art so fat-witted, with drinking 50 of old sack, and unbuttoning thee after supper, and sleeping upon benches after noon, that thou hast forgotten to demand that truly which thou would'st truly know. What a devil hast thou to do with the time of the day? unless hours were cups of sack

¹ Mr. Steevens proposes to read lead for levy. ² i. e. expedition. ³ Limits for estimates. ⁴ Holinshed in his History of Scotland says, "This Harry Percy was surnamed, for his often pricking, Henry Hotspur, as one that seldom times rested, if there were anie service to be done abroad."

and minutes capons, and clocks the tongues of bawds, and dials the signs of leaping-houses, and the blessed sun himself a fair hot wench in flame-colour'd taffata; I see no reason, why thou should'st be so superfluous to demand the time of the day.

Fal. Indeed you come near me now, Hal: for we, that take purses, go by the moon and seven stars; and not by Phœbus,—he, that wand'ring knight so fair. And, I pray thee, sweet wag, when thou art king,—as, God save thy grace, (majesty, I should say; for grace thou wilt have none.)—

P. Henry. What! none?

Fal. No, by my troth; not so much as will serve to be prologue to an egg and butter.

P. Henry. Well, how then? come roundly, roundly.

Fal. Marry, then, sweat wag, when thou art king, let not us, that are squires of the night's body, be call'd thieves of the day's beauty¹; let us be—Diana's foresters, gentlemen of the shade, minions of the moon: And let men say, we be men of good government; being governed as the sea is, by our noble and chaste mistress the moon, under whose countenance we—steal.

P. Henry. Thou say'st well; and it holds well too: for the fortune of us, that are the moon's men, doth ebb and flow like the sea; being governed as the sea is, by the moon. As for proof, now: A purse of gold most resolutely snatch'd on Monday night, and most dissolutely spent on Tuesday morning; got with swearing—lay by²; and spent with crying—bring in: now, in as low an ebb as the foot of the ladder; and, by and by, in as high a flow as the ridge of the gallows.

Fal. By the Lord, thou say'st true, lad. And is not my hostess of the tavern a most sweet wench?

P. Henry. As the honey of Hybla, my old lad of the castle³. And is not a buff jerkin a most sweet robe of durance⁴?

Fal. How now, how now, mad wag? what, in thy quips, and thy quiddities? what a plague have I to do with a buff jerkin?

P. Henry. Why, what a pox have I to do with my hostess of the tavern?

Fal. Well, thou hast call'd her to a reckoning, many a time and oft.

P. Henry. Did I ever call thee to pay thy part?

Fal. No; I'll give thee thy due, thou hast paid all there.

P. Henry. Yea, and elsewhere, so far as my coin would stretch; and, where it would not, I have us'd my credit.

Fal. Yea, and so us'd it, that, were it not here apparent that thou art heir apparent,—But, I pr'ythee, sweet wag, shall there be gallows standing in England when thou art king? and resolution thus fobb'd as it is, with the rusty curb of old father antick the law? Do not thou, when thou art king, hang a thief.

P. Henry. No; thou shalt.

Fal. Shall I? O rare! By the Lord, I'll be a brave judge.

P. Henry. Thou judgest false already: I mean, thou shalt have the hanging of the thieves, and so become a rare hangman.

Fal. Well, Hal, well; and in some sort it jumps with my humour, as well as waiting in the court, I can tell you.

P. Henry. For obtaining of suits⁵?

Fal. Yea, for obtaining of suits⁶; whereof the hangman hath no lean wardrobe. 'Sblood, I am as melancholy as a gib⁶ cat, or a lugg'd bear.

P. Henry. Or an old lion; or a lover's lute.

Fal. Yea, or the drone of a Lincolnshire bagpipe.

P. Henry. What say'st thou to a hare⁷, or the melancholy of Moor-ditch⁸?

Fal. Thou hast the most unsavoury similies; and art, indeed, the most comparative⁹, rascalliest,—sweet young prince,—But, Hal, I pr'ythee, trouble me no more with vanity. I would to God, thou and I knew where a commodity of good names

¹ Mr. Steevens is of opinion, that our poet, by the expression thieves of the day's beauty, meant only "Let not us who are body squires to the night, i. e. adorn the night, be called a disgrace to the day." He afterwards adds, that a squire of the body signified originally, the attendant on a knight: the person who bore his head-piece, spear, and shield; and that it became afterwards the cant term for a pimp. ² i. e. swearing at the passengers they robbed, lay by your arms; or rather, lay by was a phrase that then signified stand still, addressed to those who were preparing to rush forward. ³ Warburton, in commenting upon this passage, says, "This alludes to the name Shakspeare first gave to this buffoon character, which was sir John Oldcastle; and when he changed the name he forgot to strike out this expression that alluded to it. The reason of the change was this: One sir John Oldcastle having suffered in the time of Henry the Fifth for the opinions of Wickliff, it gave offence, and therefore the poet altered it to Falstaff." Mr. Steevens, however, has, we think, very fully and satisfactorily proved that sir John Oldcastle was not a character ever introduced by Shakspeare, nor did he ever occupy the place of Falstaff. The play in which Oldcastle's name occurs, was not, according to Mr. Steevens, the work of our poet, but a despicable piece, prior to that of Shakspeare, full of ribaldry and impiety from the beginning to the end; and was probably the play sneeringly alluded to in the epilogue to the Second Part of Henry IV.—for Oldcastle died a martyr. ⁴ The sheriff's officers of those times were clad in buff. The meaning therefore of this answer of the Prince to Falstaff's question is, "whether it will not be a sweet thing to go to prison by running in debt to this sweet wench." ⁵ Shakspeare here quibbles upon the word suit. The prince uses it to mean a petition; Falstaff, to imply a suit of cloaths. The cloaths of the offender being a perquisite of the executioner. ⁶ i. e. an old he-cat, Gilbert, or Gib, being the name formerly appropriated to a cat of the male species. ⁷ Dr. Johnson says, that "a hare may be considered as melancholy, because she is upon her form always solitary: and according to the physick of the times, the flesh of it was supposed to generate melancholy." ⁸ Alluding, perhaps, to the melancholy appearance of its stagnant water. ⁹ i. e. the most quick at comparisons.

were to be bought: An old lord of the council rated me the other day in the street, about you, sir; but I mark'd him not: and yet he talk'd very wisely; but I regarded him not: and yet he talk'd wisely, and in the streets too.

P. Henry. Thou didst well; for wisdom cries out in the streets, and no man regards it.

Fal. O, thou hast damnable iteration¹; and art, indeed, able to corrupt a saint. Thou hast done much harm upon me, Hal,—God forgive thee for it! Before I knew thee, Hal, I knew nothing; and now am I, if a man should speak truly, little better than one of the wicked. I must give over this life, and I will give it over; by the Lord, an I do not, I am a villain; I'll be damn'd for never a king's son in Christendom.

P. Henry. Where shall we take a purse to-morrow, Jack?

Fal. Where thou wilt, lad, I'll make one; an I do not, call me villain, and baffle² me.

P. Henry. I see a good amendment of life in thee; from praying, to purse-taking.

Fal. Why, Hal, 'tis my vocation, Hal; 'tis no sin for a man to labour in his vocation. Poins!—Now shall we know, if Gadshill have set a match. O, if men were to be sav'd by merit, what hole in hell were hot enough for him?

Enter Poins.

This is the most omnipotent villain, that ever cry'd, Stand, to a true man.

P. Henry. Good morrow, Ned.

Poins. Good morrow, sweet Hal.—What says monsieur Remorse? What says Sir John Sack-and-Sugar? Jack, how agrees the devil and thee about thy soul, that thou soldest him on Good-Friday last, for a cup of Madeira, and a cold capon's leg?

P. Henry. Sir John stands to his work, the devil shall have his bargain; for he was never yet a breaker of proverbs, He will give the devil his due.

Poin. Then art thou damn'd, for keeping thy word with the devil.

P. Henry. Else he had been damn'd for cozening the devil.

Poins. But my lads, my lads, to-morrow morning, by four o'clock, early at Gads-hill: There are pilgrims going to Canterbury with rich offerings, and traders riding to London with fat purses: I have visors for you all, you have horses for yourselves: Gadshill lies to-night in Rochester; I have bespoke supper to-morrow night in East-cheap: we may do it as secure as sleep: If you will go, I will stuff your purses full of crowns; if you will not, tarry at home, and be hang'd.

Fal. Hear ye, Yedward; if I tarry at home, and go not, I'll hang you for going.

Poins. You will, chops?

Fal. Hal, wilt thou make one?

P. Henry. Who, I rob? I a thief? Not I, by my faith.

Fal. There's neither honesty, manhood, nor good fellowship in thee, nor thou cam'st not of the blood royal, if thou dar'st not stand for ten shillings.

P. Henry. Well then, once in my days I'll be a mad-cap.

Fal. Why, that's well said.

P. Henry. Well, come what will, I'll tarry at home.

Fal. By the Lord, I'll be a traitor then, when thou art king.

P. Henry. I care not.

Poins. Sir John, I pr'ythee, leave the prince and me alone; I will lay him down such reasons for this adventure, that he shall go.

Fal. Well, may'st thou have the spirit of persuasion, and he the ears of profiting, that what thou speak'st may move, and what he hears may be believed, that the true prince may (for recreation sake) prove a false thief; for the poor abuses of the time want countenance. Farewel: You shall find me in East-cheap.

P. Henry. Farewel, thou latter spring! farewel, All-hallow's summer! [Exit Falstaff.]

Poins. Now, my good sweet honey lord, ride with us to-morrow; I have a jest to execute, that I cannot manage alone. Falstaff, Bardolph, Peto, and Gadshill, shall rob those men that we have already way-laid; yourself and I will not be there: and when they have the booty, if you and I do not rob them, cut this head from my shoulders.

P. Henry. But how shall we part with them in setting forth?

Poins. Why, we will set forth before or after them, and appoint them a place of meeting, wherein it is at our pleasure to fail; and then will they adventure upon the exploit themselves: which they shall have no sooner atchieved, but we'll set upon them.

P. Henry. Ay, but, 'tis likely that they will know us, by our horses, by our habits, and by every other appointment, to be ourselves.

Poins. Tut! our horses they shall not see, I'll tie them in the wood; our visors we will change, after we leave them; and, sirrah, I have cases of buckram for the nonce³, to immask our noted outward garments.

P. Henry. But, I doubt, they will be too hard for us.

Poins. Well, for two of them, I know them to be as true-bred cowards as ever turn'd back; and for the third, if he fight longer than he sees reason, I'll forswear arms. The virtue of this jest will be, the incomprehensible lies that this same fat rogue will tell us, when we meet at supper: how thirty, at least, he fought with; what wards, what blows, what extremities he endured; and in the reproof of this lies the jest.

P. Henry. Well, I'll go with thee: provide us all things necessary, and meet me to-morrow night

¹ The meaning, according to Dr. Johnson, is, thou hast a wicked trick of repeating and applying holy text; alluding to the prince having said in the preceding speech, wisdom cries out, &c. ² See note 2, p. 415. ³ i. e. All-saints' day, which is the first of November. Shakspeare's allusion is designed to ridicule an old man with youthful passions. ⁴ i. e. for the occasion. ⁵ i. e. confutation.

in East-cheap, there I'll sup. Farewel.

Poins. Farewel, my lord. [Exit Poins.

P. Henry. I know you all, and will a while up-
The unyok'd humour of your idleness: [hold
Yet herein will I imitate the sun;
Who doth permit the base contagious clouds
To smother up his beauty from the world,
That when he please again to be himself
Being wanted, he may be more wonder'd at,
By breaking through the foul and ugly mists
Of vapours, that did seem to strangle him.
If all the year were playing holidays,
To sport would be as tedious as to work;
But when they seldom come, they wish'd-for come,
And nothing pleaseth but rare accidents.
So, when this loose behaviour I throw off,
And pay the debt I never promised,
By how much better than my word I am,
By so much shall I falsify men's hopes¹;
And, like bright metal on a sullen ground,
My reformation, glittering o'er my fault,
Shall shew more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no soil to set it off.
I'll so offend, to make offence a skill;
Redeeming time, when men think least I will.

[Exit.

SCENE III.

An Apartment in the Palace.

Enter King Henry, Northumberland, Worcester,
Hotspur, Sir Walter Blunt, and others.

K. Henry. My blood hath been too cold and temperate,
Unapt to stir at these indignities,
And you have found me; for, accordingly,
You tread upon my patience: but, be sure,
I will from henceforth rather be myself,
Mighty, and to be fear'd, than my condition²,
Which hath been smooth as oil, soft as young down,
And therefore lost that title of respect,
Which the proud soul ne'er pays but to the proud.
Wor. Our house, my sovereign liege, little deserves
The scourge of greatness to be us'd on it;
And that same greatness too which our own hands
Have help to make so portly.

North. My lord,—

K. Henry. Worcester, get thee gone, for I do see Danger and disobedience in thine eye:
O, sir, your presence is too bold and peremptory,
And majesty might never yet endure
The moody frontier³ of a servant brow.
You have good leave to leave us; when we need
Your use and counsel, we shall send for you.—

[Exit Worcester.

You were about to speak. [To Northumberland.

North. Yea, my good lord.
Those prisoners in your highness' name demanded,
Which Harry Percy here at Holmedon took,

Were, as he says, not with such strength deny'd,
As is deliver'd to your majesty:

Either envy, therefore, or misprision
Is guilty of this fault, and not my son.

5 Hot. My liege, I did deny no prisoners.
But, I remember, when the fight was done,
When I was dry with rage, and extreme toil,
Breathless and faint, leaning upon my sword,
10 Came there a certain lord, neat, and trimly dress'd,
Fresh as a bridegroom; and his chin new reap'd,
Shew'd like a stubble land at harvest-home:

He was perfum'd like a milliner;
And 'twixt his finger and his thumb he held
A pouncet-box⁴, which ever and anon
15 He gave his nose, and took't away again;—
Who, therewith angry, when it next came there,
Took it in snuff⁵:—and still he smil'd, and talk'd;
And, as the soldiers bore dead bodies by,
He call'd them—untaught knaves, unmannerly,
20 To bring a slovenly unhandsome corse
Betwixt the wind and his nobility.

With many holiday and lady terms
He question'd me; among the rest, demanded
My prisoners, in your majesty's behalf.

25 I then, all smarting, with my wounds being cold,
To be so pester'd with a popinjay⁶,
Out of my grief and my impatience,
Answer'd, neglectingly, I know not what;
He should, or he should not;—for he made me mad,
30 To see him shine so brisk, and smell so sweet,
And talk so like a waiting-gentlewoman, [mark !]
Of guns, and drums, and wounds, (God save the
And telling me the sovereign'st thing on earth
Was parmacity, for an inward bruise;

35 And that it was great pity, so it was,
That villainous salt-petre should be digg'd
Out of the bowels of the harmless earth,
Which many a good tall fellow had destroy'd
So cowardly; and, but for these vile guns,
40 He would himself have been a soldier.

This bald unjointed chat of his, my lord,
I answer'd indirectly, as I said:

And, I beseech you, let not his report
Come current for an accusation,

45 Betwixt my love and your high majesty. [lord,

Blunt. The circumstance consider'd, good my Whatever Harry Percy then had said,
To such a person, and in such a place,
At such a time, with all the rest retold,
50 May reasonably die, and never rise
To do him wrong, or any way impeach
What then he said, so he unsay it now.

K. Henry. Why, yet he doth deny his prisoners;
But with proviso, and exception,—

55 That we, at our own charge, shall ransom straight
His brother-in-law, the foolish Mortimer;
Who, on my soul, hath wilfully betray'd
The lives of those, that he did lead to fight

¹ i. e. exceed men's expectations. ² i. e. I will from henceforth rather put on the character that becomes me, and exert the resentment of an injured king, than still continue in the inactivity and mildness of my natural disposition. ³ Moody is angry. Frontier was anciently used for forehead.

⁴ A small box for musk and other perfumes then in fashion; the lid of which, being cut with open work, gave it its name; from po n cner, to prick, pierce, or engrave. ⁵ Snuff is equivocally used for anger, and a powder taken up the nose. ⁶ A popinjay is a parrot.

Against the great magician, damn'd Glendower;
Whose daughter, as we hear, the earl of March
Hath lately marry'd. Shall our coffers then
Be empty'd, to redeem a traitor home?
Shall we buy treason? and indent with fears¹,
When they have lost and forfeited themselves?
No, on the barren mountains let him starve;
For I shall never hold that man my friend,
Whose tongue shall ask me for one penny cost
To ransom home revolted Mortimer.

Hot. Revolted Mortimer!
He never did fall off, my sovereign liege,
But by the chance of war:—to prove that true,
Needs no more but one tongue, for all those wounds,
Those mouthed wounds, which valiantly he took,
When, on the gentle Severn's sedgy bank,
In single opposition, hand to hand,
He did confound the best part of an hour
In changing hardiment with great Glendower:
Three times they breath'd, and three times did they drink,

Upon agreement, of swift Severn's flood;
Who then, affrighted with their bloody looks,
Ran fearfully among the trembling reeds,
And hid his crisp² head in the hollow bank
Blood-stained with these valiant combatants.
Never did bare and rotten policy
Colour her working with such deadly wounds;
Nor never could the noble Mortimer
Receive so many, and all willingly:
Then let him not be slander'd with revolt.

K. Henry. Thou dost belie him, Percy, thou
dost belie him,

He never did encounter with Glendower;
I tell thee, he durst as well have met the devil alone,
As Owen Glendower for an enemy.
Art not ashamed? But, sirrah, henceforth
Let me not hear you speak of Mortimer:
Send me your prisoners with the speediest means,
Or you shall hear in such a kind from me
As will displease you.—My lord Northumberland,
We licence your departure with your son:—
Send us your prisoners, or you'll hear of it.

[Exit King Henry.]

Hot. And if the devil come and roar for them,
I will not send them:—I will after straight,
And tell him so; for I will ease my heart,
Although it be with hazard of my head.

North. What, drunk with choler? stay, and pause a while;
Here comes your uncle.

Re-enter Worcester.

Hot. Speak of Mortimer?
Yes, I will speak of him, and let my soul
Want mercy, if I do not join with him:
Yea, on his part, I'll empty all these veins,
And shed my dear blood drop by drop i' the dust,
But I will lift the down-trod Mortimer
As high i' the air as this unthankful king,
As this ingrate and canker'd Bolingbroke.

North. Brother, the king hath made your nephew mad. [To Worcester.]

Wor. Who struck this heat up after I was gone?

Hot. He will, forsooth, have all my prisoners:

5 And when I urg'd the ransom once again
Of my wife's brother, then his cheek look'd pale;
And on my face he turn'd an eye of death³,
Trembling even at the name of Mortimer.

Wor. I cannot blame him; Was he not proclaim'd,
10 By Richard that is dead, the next in blood?

North. He was; I heard the proclamation:
And then it was, when the unhappy king
(Whose wrongs in us God pardon!) did set forth
Upon his Irish expedition;

15 From whence he, intercepted, did return
To be depos'd, and, shortly, murdered.

Wor. And for whose death, we in the world's wide mouth

Live scandaliz'd, and foully spoken of. [then]

20 Hot. But, soft, I pray you; Did King Richard Proclaim my brother Edmund Mortimer
Heir to the crown?

North. He did; myself did hear it.

Hot. Nay, then I cannot blame his cousin king,
25 That wish'd him on the barren mountains starv'd.
But shall it be, that you,—that set the crown
Upon the head of this forgetful man;
And, for his sake, wear the detested blot
Of murd'rous subornation,—shall it be,

30 That you a world of curses undergo;
Being the agents, or base second means,
The cords, the ladder, or the hangman rather?—
O, pardon me, that I descend so low,
To shew the line, and the predicament,
Wherein you range under this subtle king.—
Shall it, for shame, be spoken in these days,
Or fill up chronicles in time to come,
That men of your nobility, and power,
Did 'gage them both in an unjust behalf,—

40 As both of you, God pardon it! have done,—
To put down Richard, that sweet lovely rose,
And plant this thorn, this canker⁴, Bolingbroke?
And shall it, in more shame, be further spoken,
That you are fool'd, discarded, and shook off

45 By him, for whom these shames ye underwent?
No; yet time serves, wherein you may redeem
Your banish'd honours, and restore yourselves
Into the good thoughts of the world again:

50 Revenge the jeering, and disdain'd contempt,
Of this proud king; who studies, day and night,
To answer all the debt he owes to you,
Even with the bloody payment of your deaths.
Therefore, I say,—

Wor. Peace, cousin, say no more:

55 And now I will unclasp a secret book,
And to your quick-conceiving discontents
I'll read you matter, deep, and dangerous;
As full of peril, and advent'rous spirit,
As to o'er-walk a current, roaring loud,
60 On the unsteadfast footing of a spear⁵.

¹ The reason why he says, bargain and article with fears, meaning with Mortimer, is, because he supposed Mortimer had wilfully betrayed his own forces to Glendower, out of fear, as appears from his next speech. ² i. e. curled. ³ i. e. an eye menacing death. ⁴ The canker-rose is the dog-rose. ⁵ i. e. disdainful. ⁶ i. e. of a spear laid across.

Hot. If he fall in, good night:—or sink or swim:—
Send danger from the east unto the west,
So honour cross it from the north to south,
And let them grapple;—O! the blood more stirs,
To rouse a lion, than to start a hare.

North. Imagination of some great exploit
Drives him beyond the bounds of patience.

Hot. By heaven, methinks, it were an easy leap,
To pluck bright honour from the pale-fac'd moon;
Or dive into the bottom of the deep,
Where fathom-line could never touch the ground,
And pluck up drowned honour by the locks;
So he, that doth redeem her thence, might wear,
Without corrival, all her dignities:
But out upon this half-fac'd fellowship!

Wor. He apprehends a world of figures here,
But not the form of what he should attend.—
Good cousin, give me audience for a while.

Hot. I cry you mercy.

Wor. Those same noble Scots,
That are your prisoners,—

Hot. I'll keep them all;
By heaven, he shall not have a Scot of them;
No, if a Scot would save his soul, he shall not:
I'll keep them, by this hand.

Wor. You start away,
And lend no ear unto my purposes.—
Those prisoners you shall keep.

Hot. Nay, I will; that's flat:—
He said, he would not ransom Mortimer;
Forbad my tongue to speak of Mortimer;
But I will find him when he lies asleep,
And in his ear I'll holla—Mortimer!
Nay, I'll have a starling shall be taught to speak
Nothing but Mortimer, and give it him,
To keep his anger still in motion.

Wor. Hear you, cousin; a word.

Hot. All studies here I solemnly defy²,
Save how to gall and pinch this Bolingbroke:
And that same sword-and-buckler prince of Wales³,—

But that I think his father loves him not,
And would be glad he met with some mischance,
I'd have him poison'd with a pot of ale⁴.

Wor. Farewel, kinsman! I will talk to you,
When you are better temper'd to attend.

North. Why, what a wasp-stung and impatient fool
Art thou, to break into this woman's mood;
Tying thine ear to no tongue but thine own?

Hot. Why, look you, I am whipp'd and scourg'd with rods,

Nettled, and stung with pismires, when I hear
Of this vile politician, Bolingbroke.

In Richard's time,—What do you call the place?—
A plague upon't!—it is in Glostershire;—

'Twas where the mad-cap duke his uncle kept
His uncle York; where I first bow'd my knee
Unto this king of smiles, this Bolingbroke,
When you and he came back from Ravenspurgh.

North. At Berkley castle.

Hot. You say true:—

Why, what a candy'd deal of courtesy
This fawning greyhound then did proffer me!
Look, when his infant fortune came to age,—
And,—gentle Harry Percy,—and, kind cousin,—
O, the devil take such cozeners!—God forgive
Good uncle, tell your tale, for I have done. [me!—

Wor. Nay, if you have not, to't again;

10 We'll stay your leisure.

Hot. I have done, i' faith.

Wor. Then once more to your Scottish prisoners.
Deliver them up without their ransom straight,
And make the Douglas' son your only mean 15 For powers in Scotland; which,—for divers reasons,

Which I shall send you written,—be assur'd,
Will easily be granted.—You, my lord,—[To North.
Your son in Scotland being thus employ'd,—
20 Shall secretly into the bosom creep
Of that same noble prelate, well belov'd,
The archbishop.

Hot. Of York, is't not?

Wor. True: who bears hard
25 His brother's death at Bristol, the lord Scroop,
I speak not this in estimation,
As what I think might be, but what I know
Is ruminated, plotted, and set down;
And only stays but to behold the face
30 Of that occasion that shall bring it on.

Hot. I smell it; upon my life, it will do well.

North. Before the game's afoot, thou still let'st slip⁵.

Hot. Why, it cannot chuse but be a noble plot:
35 And then the power of Scotland, and of York,
To join with Mortimer, ha?

Wor. And so they shall.

Hot. In faith, it is exceedingly well aim'd.

Wor. And 'tis not little reason bids us speed,
40 To save our heads by raising of a head:
For, bear ourselves as even as we can,

The king will always think him in our debt;
And think we think ourselves unsatisfy'd,
'Till he hath found a time to pay us home.

45 And see already, how he doth begin
To make us strangers to his looks of love.

Hot. He does, he does; we'll be reveng'd on him.

Wor. Cousin, farewell:—No further go in this,
Than I by letters shall direct your course.

50 When time is ripe, (which will be suddenly)

I'll steal to Glendower, and lord Mortimer;
Where you and Douglas, and our powers at once,
(As I will fashion it) shall happily meet,
To bear our fortunes in our own strong arms,
55 Which now we hold at much uncertainty.

North. Farewel, good brother: We shall thrive,
I trust.

Hot. Uncle, adieu:—O, let the hours be short, Till fields, and blows, and groans applaud our sport! [Exeunt.

An Inn Yard at Rochester.Enter a Carrier, with a lanthorn in his hand.

1 Car. HEIGH ho! An't be not four by the day, I'll be hang'd: Charles' wain is over the new chimney, and yet our horse not pack'd. What, ostler!

Ost. [Within.] Anon, anon.

1 Car. I pr'ythee, Tom, beat Cut's saddle, put a few flocks in the point; the poor jade is wrung in the withers out of all cess¹.

Enter another Carrier.

2 Car. Pease and beans are as dank² here as a dog, and that is the next way to give poor jades the bots³: this house is turn'd upside down, since Robin ostler dy'd.

1 Car. Poor fellow! never joy'd since the price of oats rose; it was the death of him.

2 Car. I think, this be the most villainous house in all London road for fleas: I am stung like a tench.

1 Car. Like a tench? by the mass, there is ne'er a king in Christendom could be better bit than I have been since the first cock.

2 Car. Why, they will allow us ne'er a jourden, and then we leak in your chimney; and your chamber-lie breeds fleas like a loach⁴.

1 Car. What, ostler! come away, and be hang'd, come away.

2 Car. I have a gammon of bacon, and two razes of ginger, to be deliver'd as far as Charing-cross.

1 Car. 'Odsbody! the turkies in my pannier are quite starv'd.—What, ostler!—A plague on thee! hast thou never an eye in thy head? canst not hear? An'twere not as good a deed as drink, to break the pate of thee, I am a very villain.—Come, and be hang'd:—Hast no faith in thee?

Enter Gadshill.

Gads. Good morrow, carriers. What's o'clock?

Car. I think, it be two o'clock.

Gads. I pr'ythee, lend me thy lanthorn, to see my gelding in the stable.

1 Car. Nay, soft, I pray ye; I know a trick worth two of that, i' faith.

Gads. I pr'ythee, lend me thine.

2 Car. Ay, when, canst tell?—Lend me thy lanthorn, quoth a?—marry, I'll see thee hang'd first.

Gads. Sirrah carrier, what time do you mean to come to London?

2 Car. Time enough to go to bed with a candle, I warrant thee.—Come, neighbour Mugges, we'll call up the gentlemen; they will along with company, for they have great charge. [Exeunt Car.]

Enter Chamberlain.

Gads. What, ho! chamberlain!

Cham. At hand, quoth pick-purse⁵.

Gads. That's even as fair as—at hand, quoth the chamberlain: for thou variest no more from picking of purses, than giving direction doth from labouring; thou lay'st the plot how.

Cham. Good morrow, Master Gadshill. It holds current, that I told you yesternight: There's a franklin⁶ in the wild of Kent, hath brought three hundred marks with him in gold: I heard him tell it to one of his company, last night at supper; a kind of auditor; one that hath abundance of charge too, God knows what. They are up already, and call for eggs and butter: They will away presently.

Gads. Sirrah, if they meet not with saint Nicholas' clerks⁷, I'll give thee this neck.

Cham. No, I'll none of it: I pr'ythee, keep that for the hangman; for, I know, thou worship'st saint Nicholas as truly as a man of falshood may.

Gads. What talk'st thou to me of the hangman? If I hang, I'll make a fat pair of gallows: for, if I hang, old sir John hangs with me; and, thou know'st, he's no starveling. Tut! there are other Trojans⁸ that thou dream'st not of, the which, for sport sake, are content to do the profession some grace; that would, if matters should be look'd into, for their own credit sake, make all whole. I am join'd with no foot land-rakers⁹, no long-staff, six-penny strikers; none of these mad, mustachio, purple-hu'd malt-worms: but with nobility, and tranquillity; burgomasters, and great oneyers¹⁰: such as can hold in; such as will strike sooner than speak, and speak sooner than burton explains this by a Scotch word loch, a lake; while Mr. Steevens thinks that the carrier means to say—fleas as big as a loach, i. e. resembling the fish so called, in size. ⁵ This is a proverbial expression often used in the writings of that time, where the cant of low conversation is preserved. ⁶ Franklin is a little gentleman. ⁷ St. Nicholas was the patron saint of scholars: and Nicholas, or Old Nick, is a cant name for the devil. Hence he equivocally calls robbers, St. Nicholas' clerks.

⁸ Trojan, in this and other passages of our author's plays, has a cant signification, and perhaps was only a more creditable term for a thief. ⁹ i. e. with no padders, no wanderers on foot. No long-staff, six-penny strikers,—no fellows that infest the roads with long staves, and knock men down for six-pence. ¹⁰ None of these mad, mustachio, purple-hu'd malt-worms,—none of those whose faces are red with drinking ale.

¹⁰ Mr. Theobald substituted for oneyers, moneyers, which he says might either allude to an officer of the mint, or to bankers, and his emendation was adopted by Warburton. Dr. Johnson thinks no change is necessary; "Gadshill tells the chamberlain that he is joined with Cham. What, the common-wealth their boots? will she hold out water in foul way?

Gads. She will, she will; justice hath liquor'd her. We steal as in a castle, cock-sure; we have the receipt of fern-seed¹, we walk invisible.

Cham. Nay, by my faith; I think, you are more beholden to the night, than to fern-seed, for your walking invisible.

Gads. Give me thy hand: thou shalt have a share in our purchase², as I am a true man.

Cham. Nay, rather let me have it, as you are a false thief.

Gads. Go to; Homo is a common name to all men.—Bid the ostler bring my gelding out of the stable. Farewel, you muddy knave. [Exeunt.]

S C E N E II.

The road by Gads-hill.

Enter Prince Henry, Poins, and Peto.

Poins. Come, shelter, shelter; I have remov'd Falstaff's horse, and he frets like a gumm'd velvet.

P. Henry. Stand close.

Enter Falstaff.

Fal. Poins! Poins, and be hang'd; Poins!

P. Henry. Peace, ye fat-kidney'd rascal; What a brawling dost thou keep!

Fal. What, Poins! Hal!

P. Henry. He is walk'd up to the top of the hill; I'll go seek him.

Fal. I am accurst to rob in that thief's company: the rascal hath remov'd my horse, and ty'd him I know not where. If I travel but four foot by the square³ further afoot, I shall break my wind. Well, I doubt not but to die a fair death for all this, if I scape hanging for killing that rogue. I have forsworn his company hourly any time this two-and-twenty year, and yet I am bewitch'd with the rogue's company. If the rascal have not given me medicines to make me love him, I'll be hang'd; it could not be else; I have drunk medicines.—Poins!—Hal!—a plague upon you both;—Bardolph!—Peto!—I'll starve ere I'll rob a foot further. An 'twere not as good a deed as drink, to turn true man, and to leave these rogues,

I am the veriest varlet that ever chew'd with a tooth. Eight yards of uneven ground is threescore and ten miles afoot with me; and the stony-hearted villains know it well enough: A plague upon't, when thieves cannot be true one to another! [they whistle.] Whew!—a plague upon you all! Give me my horse, you rogues; give me my horse, and be hang'd.

P. Hen. Peace, ye fat-guts! lye down; lay thine ear close to the ground, and list if thou canst hear the tread of travellers.

Fal. Have you any levers to lift me up again, being down? 'Sblood, I'll not bear mine own flesh so far afoot again, for all the coin in thy father's exchequer. What a plague mean ye, to colt⁴ me thus?

P. Hen. Thou liest, thou art not colted, thou art uncolted.

Fal. I pr'ythee, good prince Hal, help me to my horse; good king's son.

P. Hen. Out, you rogue! shall I be your ostler?

Fal. Go hang thyself in thy own heir-apparent garters! If I be ta'en, I'll peach for this. An I have not ballads made of you all, and sung to filthy tunes, let a cup of sack be my poison: When a jest is so forward, and afoot too!—I hate it.

Enter Gadshill.

Gads. Stand.

Fal. So I do, against my will.

Poins. O, 'tis our setter; I know his voice.

Bard. What news?—

Gads. Case ye, case ye; on with your visors; there's money of the king's coming down the hill, 'tis going to the king's exchequer.

Fal. You lie, you rogue; 'tis going to the king's tavern.

Gads. There's enough to make us all.

Fal. To be hang'd.

P. Hen. Sirs, you four shall front them in the narrow lane; Ned Poins, and I, will walk lower: if they scape from your encounter, then they light on us.

Peto. But how many be there of them?

Gads. Some eight, or ten.

Fal. Zounds! will they not rob us?

P. Hen. What, a coward, Sir John Paunch!

Fal. Indeed, I am not John of Gaunt, your grandfather; but yet no coward, Hal.

P. Hen. Well, we leave that to the proof.

Poins. Sirrah Jack, thy horse stands behind the with no mean wretches, but with burgomasters and great ones, or, as he terms them in merriment by a cant termination, great onyers, or great-one-eers, as we say privateer, auctioneer, circuiteer." Mr. Malone explains the word thus: "By onyers (for so I believe the word ought to be written) I understand public accountants; men possessed of large sums of money belonging to the state.—It is the course of the Court of Exchequer, when the sheriff makes up his accounts for issues, amerciaments, and mesne profits, to set upon his head o. ni. which denotes oneratur nisi habeat sufficientem exonerationem: he thereupon becomes the king's debtor, and the parties peravaille (as they are termed in law) for whom he answers, become his debtors, and are discharged as with respect to the king. To settle accounts in this manner, is still called in the Exchequer to ony; and from hence Shakspeare seems to have formed the word onyers."

¹ Alluding to some strange properties formerly ascribed to this plant. ² Purchase was anciently the cant term for stolen goods. ³ Four foot by the square is probably no more than four foot by a rule. ⁴ To colt, is to fool, to trick; but the Prince taking it in another sense, opposes it by uncolt, that is, unhorse.

hedge; when thou need'st him, there thou shalt find him. Farewel, and stand fast.

Fal. Now cannot I strike him, if I should be hang'd.

P. Hen. Ned, where are our disguises?

Poins. Here, hard by; stand close.

Fal. Now, my masters, happy man be his dole¹, say I; every man to his business.

Enter Travellers.

Trav. Come, neighbour; the boy shall lead our horses down the hill: we'll walk afoot a while, and ease our legs.

Thieves. Stand.

Trav. Jesu bless us!

Fal. Strike; down with them; cut the villains' throats: Ah! whoreson caterpillars! bacon-fed knaves! they hate us youth: down with them; fleece them.

Trav. O, we are undone, both we and ours, for ever.

Fal. Hang ye, gorbellied² knaves; are ye undone? No, ye fat chuffs; I would, your store were here! On, bacons, on! What, ye knaves? young men must live: You are grand-jurors, are ye? We'll jure ye, i'faith.

[Here they rob and bind them. [Exeunt.

Enter Prince Henry, and Poins.

P. Hen. The thieves have bound the true³ men: Now could thou and I rob the thieves, and go merrily to London, it would be argument⁴ for a week, laughter for a month, and a good jest for ever.

Poins. Stand close, I hear them coming.

Enter Thieves again.

Fal. Come, my masters, let us share, and then to horse before day. An the Prince and Poins be not two arrant cowards, there's no equity stirring: there's no more valour in that Poins, than in a wild duck.

P. Hen. Your money.

Poins. Villains!

[As they are sharing, the Prince and Poins set upon them. They all run away; and Falstaff, after a blow or two, runs away too, leaving the booty behind him.]

P. Hen. Got with much ease. Now merrily to horse:

The thieves are scatter'd, and possess'd with fear So strongly, that they dare not meet each other; Each takes his fellow for an officer.

Away, good Ned. Falstaff sweats to death, And lards the lean earth as he walks along: Wer't not for laughing, I should pity him.

Poins. How the rogue roar'd! [Exeunt.

S C E N E III.

Warkworth. A room in the Castle.

Enter Hotspur, reading a letter.

—But, for mine own part, my lord, I could be well contented to be there, in respect of the love I bear your house—He could be contented,—Why, is he not then? In respect of the love he bears our house:—he shews in this, he loves his own barn better than he loves our house. Let me see some more.

5 *The purpose you undertake, is dangerous,—*Why, that's certain; 'tis dangerous to take a cold, to sleep, to drink: but I tell you, my lord fool, out of this nettle, danger, we pluck this flower, safety. *The purpose you undertake, is dangerous; the friends you have named, uncertain; the time itself, unsorted; and your whole plot too light, for the counterpoize of so great an opposition—*Say you so, say you so? I say unto you again, you are a shallow cowardly hind, and you lie. What a lack-brain is this? By the Lord, our plot is a good plot, as ever was laid; our friends true and constant: a good plot, good friends, and full of expectation: an excellent plot, very good friends. What a frosty-spirited rogue is this? Why, my lord of 10 York⁵ commends the plot, and the general course of the action. By this hand, if I were now by this rascal, I could brain him with his lady's fan. Is there not my father, my uncle, and myself? lord Edmund Mortimer, my lord of York, and Owen 15 Glendower? Is there not, besides, the Douglas? Have I not all their letters, to meet me in arms by the ninth of the next month? and are they not, some of them, set forward already? What a pagan rascal is this? an infidel? Ha! you shall see now, in very sincerity of fear and cold heart, will he to 20 the king, and lay open all our proceedings. O, I could divide myself, and go to buffets, for moving such a dish of skimm'd milk with so honourable an action! Hang him! let him tell the king, we are 25 prepared: I will set forward to-night.

Enter Lady Percy.

How now, Kate? I must leave you within these two hours.

Lady. O my good lord, why are you thus alone? 30 For what offence have I, this fortnight, been A banish'd woman from my Harry's bed? Tell me, sweet lord, what is't that takes from thee Thy stomach, pleasure, and thy golden sleep? Why dost thou bend thine eyes upon the earth; 35 And start so often, when thou sit'st alone? Why hast thou lost the fresh blood in thy cheeks; And given my treasures, and my rights of thee, To thick-ey'd musing, and curs'd melancholy? In thy faint slumbers, I by thee have watch'd, 40 And heard thee murmur tales of iron wars: Speak terms of manage to thy bounding steed: Cry, Courage!—to the field! And thou hast talk'd Of sallies, and retires⁷; of trenches, tents, 45 Of palisadoes, frontiers⁸, parapets; Of basilisks⁹, of cannon, culverin; 50 Of prisoners' ransom, and of soldiers slain, And all the 'currents of a heady fight. Thy spirit within thee hath been so at war, And thus hath so bestir'd thee in thy sleep, 55 That beads of sweat have stood upon thy brow,

And in thy face strange motions have appear'd,
Such as we see when men restrain their breath
On some great sudden haste. O, what portents are these?

Some heavy business hath my lord in hand,
And I must know it, else he loves me not.

Hot. What, ho! is Gilliams with the packet gone?

Enter Servant.

Serv. He is, my lord, an hour ago.

Hot. Hath Butler brought those horses from the sheriff?

Serv. One horse, my lord, he brought even now.

Hot. What horse? a roan? a crop-ear, is it not?

Serv. It is, my lord.

Hot. That roan shall be my throne.

Well, I will back him straight: O esperance!—
Bid Butler lead him forth into the park. [Ex. Serv.]

Lady. But hear you, my lord.

Hot. What say'st thou, my lady?

Lady. What is it carries you away?

Hot. Why, my horse, my love, my horse.

Lady. Out, you mad-headed ape!

A weazle hath not such a deal of spleen,

As you are tost with.

[will.]

In sooth, I'll know your business, Harry, that I

I fear, my brother Mortimer doth stir

About his title: and hath sent for you,

To line his enterprize: But if you go—

Hot. So far afoot, I shall be weary, love.

Lady. Come, come, you paraquito, answer me
Directly to this question that I ask.

Infaith, I'll break thy little finger, Harry,

An if thou wilt not tell me all things true.

Hot. Away,

Away, you trifler! love? I love thee not,

I care not for thee, Kate; this is no world,

To play with mamnets¹, and to tilt with lips:

We must have bloody noses, and crack'd crowns²,

And pass them current too.—Gods me, my horse!—

What say'st thou, Kate? what would'st thou have with me?

Lady. Do you not love me? do you not, indeed?

Well, do not then; for, since you love me not,

It will not love myself. Do you not love me?

Nay, tell me if you speak in jest, or no.

Hot. Come, wilt thou see me ride?

And when I am o' horseback, I will swear

I love thee infinitely. But hark you, Kate:

I must not have you henceforth question me

Whither I must, I must; and, to conclude,

This evening must I leave you, gentle Kate.

I know you wise; but yet no further wise,

Than Harry Percy's wife: constant you are;

But yet a woman: and for secresy,

No lady closer; for I well believe,

Thou wilt not utter what thou dost not know;

And so far will I trust thee, gentle Kate.

Lady. How! so far?

Hot. Not an inch further. But hark you, Kate:

SCENE IV.

The Boar's-Head Tavern in East-Cheap.

Enter Prince Henry, and Poins.

P. Henry. Ned, pr'ythee, come out of that fat room, and lend me thy hand to laugh a little.

Poins. Where hast thou been, Hal?

P. Henry. With three or four loggerheads, amongst three or four score hogsheads. I have sounded the very base string of humility. Sirrah, I am sworn brother to a leash of drawers; and can call them all by their christian names, as Tom, Dick, and Francis. They take it already upon their salvation, that, though I be but prince of Wales, yet

I am the king of courtesy; and tell me flatly, I am no proud Jack, like Falstaff; but a Corin-thian³, a lad of mettle, a good boy,—by the Lord,

so they call me; and, when I am king of England,
I shall command all the good lads in East-Cheap,

They call—drinking deep, dying scarlet: and when you breathe in your watering, they cry—

Hem! and bid you play it off.—To conclude, I am so good a proficient in one quarter of an hour, that I can drink with any tinker in his own language during my life. I tell thee, Ned, thou hast lost much honour, that thou wert not with me in this action. But, sweet Ned,—to sweeten which name of Ned, I give you this pennyworth of sugar, clapt even now into my hand by an under-skrinker⁴; one that never spake other English in his life, than—eight shillings and sixpence, and—you are welcome; and with this shrill addition,—Anon, anon, sir! Score a pint of bastard in the Half-moon, or so. But, Ned, to drive away the time till Fal-staff come, I pr'ythee, do thou stand in some by-room, while I question my puny drawer, to what end he gave me the sugar; and do thou never leave calling—Francis, that his tale to me may be nothing but—anon. Step aside, and I'll shew thee a precedent. [Poins retires.]

Poins. Francis!

P. Henry. Thou art perfect.

Poins. Francis!

Enter Francis.

Fran. Anon, anon, sir.—Look down into the Pomgranate, Ralph.

P. Henry. Come hither, Francis.

Fran. My lord.

P. Hen. How long hast thou to serve, Francis?

Fran. Forsooth, five years, and as much as to—

Poins. Francis!

Fran. Anon, anon, sir.

P. Henry. Five years! by'r Lady, a long lease for the clinking of pewter. But, Francis, dar'st thou be so valiant, as to play the coward with thy indenture, and shew it a fair pair of heels, and run from it?

Fran. O lord, sir! I'll be sworn upon all the books in England, I could find in my heart—

Poins. Francis!

Fran. Anon, anon, sir.

P. Henry. How old art thou, Francis?

Fran. Let me see,—About Michaelmas next I shall be—

Poins. Francis!

Fran. Anon, sir.—Pray you, stay a little, my lord.

P. Henry. Nay, but hark you, Francis: For the sugar thou gav'st me,—'twas a pennyworth, was't not?

Fran. O lord, sir! I would it had been two.

P. Henry. I will give thee for it a thousand pound: ask me when thou wilt, and thou shalt have it.

Poins. Francis!

Fran. Anon, anon.

P. Henry. Anon, Francis? No, Francis: but to-morrow, Francis; or, Francis, on Thursday; or, indeed, Francis, when thou wilt. But, Francis,—

Fran. My lord?

P. Henry. Wilt thou rob this leathern-jerkin, crystal-button¹, nott-pated², agat-ring, poke-stock-ing³, caddice-garter⁴, smooth tongue, Spanish-pouch,— Fran. O lord, sir, what do you mean?

P. Henry. Why then, your brown bastard⁵ is your only drink: for, look you, Francis, your white canvas doublet will sully: in Barbary, sir, it cannot come to so much.

Fran. What, sir?

Poins. Francis!

P. Henry. Away, you rogue; Dost thou not hear them call?

[Here they both call him; the drawer stands amazed, not knowing which way to go.]

Enter Vintner.

Vint. What! stand'st thou still, and hear'st such a calling? look to the guests within. [Ex. drawer.] My lord, old Sir John, with half a dozen more, are at the door; Shall I let them in?

P. Hen. Let them alone a while, and then open the door. [Exit Vintner.] Poins!

Re-enter Poins.

Poins. Anon, anon, sir.

P. Henry. Sirrah, Falstaff and the rest of the thieves are at the door; Shall we be merry?

Poins. As merry as crickets, my lad. But hark ye; What cunning match have you made with this jest of the drawer? come, what's the issue?

P. Henry. I am now of all humours, that have shew'd themselves humours, since the old days of goodman Adam, to the pupil age of this present twelve o'clock at midnight. [Re-enter Francis.]

What's o'clock, Francis?

Fran. Anon, anon, sir.

P. Hen. That ever this fellow should have fewer words than a parrot, and yet the son of a woman!—His industry is—up-stairs and down-stairs; his eloquence, the parcel of a reckoning. I am not yet of Percy's mind, the Hot-spur of the north; he that kills me some six or seven dozen of Scots at a breakfast, washes his hands, and says to his wife,—Fie upon this quiet life! I want work. O, my sweet Harry, says she, how many hast thou kill'd to-day? Give my roan horse a drench, says he; and answers, Some fourteen, an hour after; a trifle; a trifle. I pr'ythee, call in Falstaff; I'll play Percy, and that damn'd brawn shall play dame Mortimer his wife. *Rivo*⁶, says the drunk-ark. Call in ribs, call in tallow.

Enter Falstaff, Gadshill, Bardolph, and Peto.

Poins. Welcome, Jack. Where hast thou been?

Fal. A plague of all cowards, I say, and a vengeance too! marry, and amen!—Give me a cup of sack, boy.—Ere I lead this life long, I'll sew nether stocks⁷, and mend them, and foot them too. A plague of all cowards!—Give me a cup of sack, rogue.—Is there no virtue extant? [He drinks.]

P. Henry. Didst thou never see Titan kiss a dish of butter? pitiful-hearted Titan, that melted at the sweet tale of the sun? if thou didst, then behold that compound.

Fal. You rogue, here's lime in this sack too: There is nothing but roguery to be found in villainous man: Yet a coward is worse than a cup of sack with lime in it; a villainous coward.—Go thy ways, old Jack; die when thou wilt, if manhood, good manhood, be not forgot upon the face of the earth, then I am a shotten herring. There live not three good men unhang'd in England; and one of them is fat, and grows old: God help the while! a bad world, I say! I would I were a weaver; I could sing all manner of songs⁸. A plague of all cowards, I say still!

P. Henry. How now, wool-sack? what mutter you?

Fal. A king's son! If I do not beat thee out of thy kingdom with a dagger of lath¹⁰, and drive all thy subjects afore thee like a flock of wild geese, I'll never wear hair on my face more.—You Prince of Wales!

P. Henry. Why, you whoreson round man! what's the matter?

Fal. Are you not a coward? answer me to that; and Poins there? [To Poins.]

¹ A leather jerkin with crystal buttons was the habit of a pawn-broker. ² A person was said to be nott-pated, when the hair was cut short and round. ³ Black-stocking. ⁴ Caddis was a sort of coarse ferret. The garters of Shakspeare's time were worn in sight, and consequently were expensive. He who would submit to wear a coarser sort, was probably called by this contemptuous distinction. ⁵ Bastard was a kind of sweet wine. The prince finding the waiter not able, and not willing, to understand his instigation, puzzles him with unconnected prattle, and drives him away. ⁶ A cant word of the English taverns of those times, expressive of no meaning. ⁷ Nether stocks are stockings. ⁸ See note¹, p. 49. ⁹ Warburton observes, that in the persecution of the protestants in Flanders under Philip II. those who came over into England on that occasion brought with them the woollen manufactory. These were Calvinists, who were always distinguished for their love of psalmody. ¹⁰ i. e. such a dagger as the Vice in the old moralities was arm'd with.

P. Henry. Ye fat paunch, an ye call me coward, I'll stab thee.

Fal. I call thee coward! I'll see thee damn'd ere I call thee coward: but I would give a thousand pound, I could run fast as thou canst. You are straight enough in the shoulders, you care not who sees your back: Call you that, backing of your friends? A plague upon such backing! give me them that will face me.—Give me a cup of sack:—I am a rogue, if I drunk to-day.

P. Henry. O villain! thy lips are scarce wip'd since thou drunk'st last.

Fal. All's one for that. A plague of all coward, still say I! [He drinks.]

P. Henry. What's the matter?

Fal. What's the matter? Here be four of us have ta'en a thousand pound this morning.

P. Henry. Where is it, Jack? where is it?

Fal. Where is it? taken from us it is: a hundred upon poor four of us.

P. Henry. What, a hundred, man?

Fal. I am a rogue, if I were not at half-sword with a dozen of them two hours together. I have 'scap'd by miracle. I am eight times thrust through the doublet; four through the hose; my buckler cut through and through; my sword hack'd like a hand-saw, ecce signum. I never dealt better since I was a man: all would not do. A plague of all cowards!—Let them speak: if they speak more or less than truth, they are villains, and the sons of darkness.

P. Henry. Speak, sirs; How was it?

Gads. We four set upon some dozen,——

Fal. Sixteen, at least, my lord.

Gads. And bound them.

Peto. No, no, they were not bound.

Fal. You rogue, they were bound, every man of them; or I am a Jew else, an Ebrew Jew.

Gads. As we were sharing, some six or seven fresh men set upon us,——

Fal. And unbound the rest, and then came in the other.

P. Henry. What, fought you with them all?

Fal. All? I know not what you call, all; but if I fought not with fifty of them, I am a bunch of radish: if there were not two or three and fifty upon poor old Jack, then I am no two-legg'd creature.

Poins. Pray heaven, you have not murder'd some of them.

Fal. Nay, that's past praying for; I have pepper'd two of them: two, I am sure, I have pay'd two rogues in buckram suits. I tell thee what, Hal,—if I tell thee a lie, spit in my face; call me horse. Thou know'st my old ward;—here I lay, and thus I bore my point. Four rogues in buckram let drive at me,——

P. Henry. What, four? thou saidst but two, even now.

Fal. Four, Hal; I told thee four.

Poins. Ay, ay, he said four.

Fal. These four came all a-front, and mainly thrust at me. I made no more ado, but took all their seven points in my target, thus.

P. Henry. Seven; why, there were but four, even now.

Fal. In buckram.

Poins. Ay, four, in buckram suits.

Fal. Seven, by these hilts, or I am a villain else.

P. Henry. Pi'ythee let him alone; we shall have more anon.

Fal. Dost thou hear me, Hal?

P. Henry. Ay, and mark thee too, Jack.

Fal. Do so, for it is worth the list'ning to. These nine in buckram, that I told thee of,——

P. Henry. So, two more already.

Fal. Their points being broken,——

Poins. Down fell their hose¹.

Fal. Began to give me ground: But I follow'd me close, came in foot and hand; and, with a thought, seven of the eleven I pay'd.

P. Henry. O monstrous! eleven buckram men grown out of two.

Fal. But, as the devil would have it, three misbegotten knaves, in Kendal green², came at my back, and let drive at me; for it was so dark, Hal, that thou couldst not see thy hand.

P. Henry. These lies are like the father that begets them; gross as a mountain, open, palpable. Why, thou clay-brain'd guts; thou knotty-pated fool; thou whoreson, obscene, greasy tallow-keech³,——

Fal. What, art thou mad? art thou mad? is not the truth, the truth?

P. Henry. Why, how couldst thou know these men in Kendal green, when it was so dark thou could'st not see thy hand? Come, tell us your reason; What say'st thou to this?

Poins. Come, your reason, Jack, your reason.

Fal. What, upon compulsion? No; were I at the strappado, or all the racks in the world, I would not tell you on compulsion. Give you a reason on compulsion! If reasons were as plenty as blackberries, I would give no man a reason upon compulsion, I.

P. Henry. I'll be no longer guilty of this sin; this sanguine coward, this bed-presser, this horse-back-breaker, this huge hill of flesh;——

Fal. Away, you starveling, you elf-skin⁴, you dry'd neat's-tongue, bull's pizzle, you stock-fish,——

¹ Our author here plays upon the double meaning of point, which signifies the sharp end of a weapon, and the lace of a garment. To untruss a point, is a phrase still in use for the operation of easing nature.

² Kendal green was the livery of Robert earl of Huntingdon and his followers while in a state of outlawry, and their leader assumed the title of Robin Hood. ³ A keech of tallow is the fat of an ox or cow rolled up by the butcher in a round lump, in order to be carried to the chandler. ⁴ For elf-skin Sir Thomas Hanmer and Dr. Warburton read eel-skin; and in our opinion justly; as Shakspeare, in this and his ensuing comparisons of the stock-fish and dry'd neat's-tongue, alludes to the leanness of the prince, for which he had historical authority: the prince of Wales being represented by Stowe to have "exceeded the mean stature of men, his neck long, body slender and lean, and bones small, &c."

O, for breath to utter what is like thee!—you taylor's yard, you sheath, you bow-case, you vile standing tuck;—

P. Henry. Well, breathe a while, and then to it again: and when thou hast tir'd thyself in base comparisons, hear me speak but this.

Poins. Mark, Jack.

P. Henry. We two saw you four set on four; you bound them, and were masters of their wealth. —Mark now, how a plain tale shall put you down. —Then did we two set on you four; and, with a word, out-fac'd you from your prize, and have it; yea, and can shew it you here in the house:—and, Falstaff, you carry'd your guts away as nimbly, with as quick dexterity, and roar'd for mercy, and still ran and roar'd, as ever I heard bull-calf. What a slave art thou, to hack thy sword as thou hast done; and then say, it was in fight? What trick, what device, what starting hole, canst thou now find out, to hide thee from this open and apparent shame?

Poins. Come, let's hear, Jack; What trick hast thou now?

Fal. By the Lord, I knew ye as well as he that made ye. Why, hear ye, my masters: Was it for me, to kill the heir apparent? should I turn upon the true prince? Why, thou know'st, I am as valiant as Hercules: but beware instinct; the lion will not touch the true prince. Instinct is a great matter; I was a coward on instinct. I shall think the better of myself and thee, during my life; I, for a valiant lion, and thou, for a true prince. But, lads, I am glad you have the money.—Hostess, clap to the doors; watch to-night, pray to-morrow.—Gallants, lads, boys, hearts of gold, all the titles of good fellowship come to you! What, shall we be merry? shall we have a play extempore?

P. Henry. Content;—and the argument shall be thy running away. [me.]

Fal. Ah! no more of that, Hal, an thou lov'st

Enter Hostess.

Host. My lord the prince,—

P. Henry. How now, my lady the hostess? what say'st thou to me?

Host. Marry, my lord, there is a nobleman¹ of the court at door, would speak with you: he says, he comes from your father.

P. Henry. Give him as much as will make him a royal² man, and send him back again to my mother.

Fal. What manner of man is he?

Host. An old man.

Fal. What doth gravity out of his bed at midnight?—Shall I give him his answer?

P. Henry. Pr'ythee, do, Jack.

Fal. Faith, and I'll send him packing. [Exit.]

P. Henry. Now, sirs; by'r-Lady, you fought fair;—so did you, Peto;—so did you, Bardolph: you are lions too; you ran away upon instinct, you will not touch the true prince; no,—fie!

Bard. Faith, I ran when I saw others run.

P. Henry. Tell me now in earnest, How came Falstaff's sword so hack'd?

Peto. Why, he hack'd it with his dagger; and said, he would swear truth out of England, but he would make you believe it was done in fight; and persuaded us to do the like.

Bard. Yea, and to tickle our noses with spear-grass, to make them bleed; and then to beslobber our garments with it, and swear it was the blood of true³ men. I did that I did not these seven years before, I blush'd to hear his monstrous devices.

P. Henry. O villain, thou stol'st a cup of sack eighteen years ago, and wert taken with the manner⁴, and ever since thou hast blush'd extempore: Thou hadst fire⁵ and sword on thy side, and yet thou ran'st away; What instinct hadst thou for it?

Bard. My lord, do you see these meteors? do you behold these exhalations?

P. Henry. I do.

Bard. What think you they portend?

P. Henry. Hot livers, and cold purses⁶.

Bard. Choler⁷, my lord, if rightly taken.

P. Henry. No, if rightly taken, halter.

Re-enter Falstaff.

Here comes lean Jack, here comes bare-bone. How now, my sweet creature of bombast⁸? How long is't ago, Jack, since thou saw'st thine own knee?

Fal. My own knee? When I was about thy years, Hal, I was not an eagle's talon in the waist; I could have crept into an alderman's thumb-ring⁹: A plague of sighing and grief! it blows a man up like a bladder. There's villainous news abroad: here was Sir John Braby from your father; you must to the court in the morning. That same mad fellow of the north, Percy; and he of Wales, that gave Amaimon the bastinado, and made Lucifer cuckold, and swore the devil his true liegeman upon the cross of a Welsh hook¹⁰,—What, a plague, call you him?—

Poins. O, Glendower.

Fal. Owen, Owen; the same;—and his son-in-law Mortimer; and old Northumberland; and that sprightly Scot of Scots, Douglas, that runs o' horseback up a hill perpendicular.

P. Henry. He that rides at high speed, and with his pistol kills a sparrow flying?

Fal. You have hit it.

P. Henry. So did he never the sparrow.

Fal. Well, that rascal hath good mettle in him; he will not run.

P. Henry. Why, what a rascal art thou then, to praise him so for running?

Fal. O' horseback, ye cuckow! but, a-foot, he will not budge a foot.

P. Henry. Yes, Jack, upon instinct.

Fal. I grant ye, upon instinct. Well, he is there too, and one Mordake, and a thousand bluecaps' more: Worcester is stolen away by night; thy father's beard is turn'd white with the news; you may buy land now as cheap as stinking mackerel.

P. Hen. Then, 'tis like, if there come a hot June, and this civil buffeting hold, we shall buy maidenheads as they buy hob-nails, by the hundreds.

Fal. By the mass, lad, thou say'st true; it is like we shall have good trading that way.—But, tell me, Hal, art thou not horribly afraid? Thou being heir apparent, could the world pick thee out three such enemies again, as that fiend Douglas, that spirit Percy, and that devil Glendower? Art thou not horribly afraid? doth not thy blood thrill at it?

P. Hen. Not a whit, i'faith; I lack some of thy instinct.

Fal. Well, thou wilt be horribly chid to-morrow, when thou comest to thy father: if thou love me, practise an answer.

P. Hen. Do thou stand for my father, and examine me on the particulars of my life.

Fal. Shall I? content:—This chair shall be my state, this dagger my sceptre, and this cushion my crown.

P. Hen. Thy state is taken for a joint-stool, thy golden sceptre for a leaden dagger, and thy precious rich crown for a pitiful bald crown!

Fal. Well, an the fire of grace be not quite out of thee, now shalt thou be moved.—Give me a cup of sack, to make mine eyes look red, that it may be thought I have wept; for I must speak in passion, and I will do it in king Cambyses' vein.

P. Hen. Well, here is my leg¹.

Fal. And here is my speech:—Stand aside, nobility.

Host. This is excellent sport, i'faith.

Fal. Weep not, sweet queen, for trickling tears are vain.

Host. O the father, how he holds his countenance!

Fal. For God's sake, lords, convey my tristful queen,

For tears do stop the flood-gates of her eyes.

Host. O rare! he doth it as like one of these harlotry players, as I ever see.

Fal. Peace, good pint-pot; peace, good tickle-brain².—Harry³, I do not only marvel where thou spendest thy time, but also how thou art accompanied: for though the camomile, the more it is trodden on, the faster it grows, yet youth, the more it is wasted, the sooner it wears. That thou art my son, I have partly thy mother's word, partly my own opinion; but chiefly, a villainous trick of thine eye, and a foolish hanging of thy nether lip, that doth warrant me. If then thou be son to me, here lies the point;—Why, being son to me, art thou so pointed at? Shall the blessed sun of heaven prove a micher⁴, and eat blackberries? a question not to be asked. Shall the son of England prove a thief, and take purses? a question to be ask'd. There is a thing, Harry, which thou hast often heard of, and it is known to many in our land by the name of pitch: this pitch, as ancient writers do report, doth defile; so doth the company thou keepest: for, Harry, now I do not speak to thee in drink, but in tears; not in pleasure, but in passion; not in words only, but in woes also:—And yet there is a virtuous man, whom I have often noted in thy company, but I know not his name.

P. Henry. What manner of man, an it like your majesty?

Fal. A goodly portly man, i'faith, and a corpulent; of a cheerful look, a pleasing eye, and a most noble carriage; and, as I think, his age some fifty, or, by'r-Lady, inclining to threescore; and now I remember me, his name is Falstaff: if that man should be lewdly given, he deceiveth me; for, Harry, I see virtue in his looks. If then the fruit may be known by the tree, as the tree by the fruit, then, peremptorily I speak it, there is virtue in that Falstaff: him keep with, the rest banish. And tell me now, thou naughty varlet, tell me, where hast thou been this month?

P. Hen. Dost thou speak like a king? Do thou stand for me, and I'll play my father.

Fal. Depose me? if thou dost it half so gravely, so majestically, both in word and matter, hang me up by the heels for a' rabbit-sucker, or a poulterer's hare.

P. Hen. Well, here I am set.

Fal. And here I stand:—judge, my masters.

P. Hen. Now, Harry? whence come you?

Fal. My noble lord, from East-cheap.

P. Henry. The complaints I hear of thee are grievous.

Fal. 'Sblood, my lord, they are false:—nay, I'll tickle ye for a young prince, i'faith.

P. Hen. Swearest thou, ungracious boy? henceforth ne'er look on me. Thou art violently carried away from grace: there is a devil haunts thee, in the likeness of a fat old man; a tun of man is thy companion. Why dost thou converse with that trunk of humours, that bolting-hutch⁵ of beastliness, that swoln parcel of dropsies, that huge bombard of sack, that stuff cloak-bag of guts, that roasted Manningtree ox with the pudding in his belly, that reverend Vice, that grey iniquity, that father ruffian, that vanity in years? Wherein is he good, but to taste sack and drink it? Wherein neat and cleanly, but to carve a capon meal is bolted.

and eat it? Wherein cunning¹, but in craft? Wherein crafty, but in villainy? Wherein villainous, but in all things? Wherein worthy, but in nothing?

Fal. I would your grace would take me with you²; whom means your grace?

P. Henry. That villainous abominable misleader of youth, Falstaff, that old white-bearded Satan.

Fal. My lord, the man I know.

P. Henry. I know thou dost.

Fal. But to say, I know more harm in him than in myself, were to say more than I know. That he is old, (the more the pity) his white hairs do witness it: but that he is (saving your reverence) a whoremaster, that I utterly deny. If sack and sugar³ be a fault, God help the wicked! If to be old and merry be a sin, then many an old host that I know is damn'd: if to be fat be to be hated, then Pharaoh's lean kine are to be loved: No, my good lord; banish Peto, banish Bardolph, banish Poins: but for sweet Jack Falstaff, kind Jack Falstaff, true Jack Falstaff, valiant Jack Falstaff, and therefore more valiant, being as he is, old Jack Falstaff, banish not him thy Harry's company, banish not him thy Harry's company; banish plump Jack, and banish all the world.

P. Henry. I do, I will.

[Knocking; and Hostess and Bardolph go out.]

Re-enter Bardolph, running.

Bar. O, my lord, my lord; the sheriff, with a most monstrous watch, is at the door.

Fal. Out, you rogue! play out the play: I have much to say in the behalf of that Falstaff.

Re-enter Hostess.

Host. O, my lord, my lord!—

Fal. Heigh, heigh! the devil rides upon a fiddlestick⁴: what's the matter?

Host. The sheriff and all the watch are at the door: they are come to search the house; shall I let them in?

Fal. Dost thou hear, Hal? never call a true piece of gold, a counterfeit: thou art essentially mad, without seeming so.

P. Henry. And thou a natural coward, without instinct.

Fal. I deny your major: if you will deny the sheriff, so; if not, let him enter: if I become no a cart as well as another man, a plague on my bringing up! I hope I shall as soon be strangled with a halter, as another.

P. Henry. Go, hide thee behind the arras⁵;—the rest walk up above. Now, my masters, for a true face, and a good conscience.

Fal. Both which I have had: but their date is out, and therefore I'll hide me.

[Exeunt Falstaff, Bardolph, Gadshill, and Peto: manent Prince and Poins.]

P. Henry. Call in the sheriff.—

Enter Sheriff, and Carrier.

Now, master sheriff; what's your will with me?

Sher. First, pardon me, my lord. A hue and hath follow'd certain men unto this house. [cry

P. Henry. What men? [lord;

Sher. One of them is well known, my gracious A gross fat man.

Car. As fat as butter.

P. Henry. The man, I do assure you, is not here; For I myself at this time have employ'd him.

And, sheriff, I engage my word to thee,

That I will, by to-morrow dinner-time,

Send him to answer thee, or any man,

For any thing he shall be charg'd withal:

And so let me intreat you leave the house.

Sher. I will, my lord: There are two gentlemen Have in this robbery lost three hundred marks.

P. Henry. It may be so; if he have robb'd these men,

He shall be answerable; and so, farewell.

Sher. Good night, my noble lord.

P. Henry. I think, it is good-morrow: Is it not?

Sher. Indeed, my lord, I think it be two o'clock.

[Exit.]
P. Henry. This oily rascal is known as well as Paul's: Go, call him forth.

Poins. Falstaff!—fast asleep behind the arras, and snorting like a horse.

P. Henry. Hark how hard he fetches breath:—
35 Search his pockets.

[He searches his pockets, and finds certain papers.]
What hast thou found?

Poins. Nothing but papers, my lord.

P. Henry. Let's see what they be: read them.

40 Poins. Item, a capon, 2s. 2d.

Item, Sauce, 4d.

Item, Sack, two gallons, 5s. 8d.

Item, Anchovies and sack after supper, 2s. 6d.

Item, Bread, a halfpenny.

45 P. Henry. O monstrous! but one halfpenny-worth of bread to this intolerable deal of sack!—What there is else, keep close; we'll read it at more advantage; there let him sleep till day. I'll to the court in the morning: we must all to the wars, and thy place shall be honourable. I'll procure this fat rogue a charge of foot; and, I know, his death will be a march of twelve score⁶. The money shall be paid back again, with advantage. Be with me betimes in the morning; and so good
55 morrow, Poins,

Poins. Good morrow, good my lord. [Exeunt.]

¹ Cunning here means knowing, or skilful. ² i. e. let me know your meaning. ³ Sack and sugar was a favourite liquor in Shakspeare's time. ⁴ A proverbial phrase. ⁵ In old houses there were always large spaces left between the arras and the walls. ⁶ i. e. it will kill him to march as far as twelvescore yards.

A C T III.

S C E N E I.

The Archdeacon of Bangor's house in Wales.

Enter Hotspur, Worcester, Lord Mortimer, and Owen Glendower.

Mor. THESE promises are fair, the parties sure,

And our induction¹ full of prosperous hope.

Hot. Lord Mortimer,—and cousin Glendower,—Will you sit down?—

And, uncle Worcester:—A plague upon it! I have forgot the map.

Glend. No, here it is.

Sit, cousin Percy; sit, good cousin Hotspur:

For by that name as oft as Lancaster

Doth speak of you, his cheek looks pale; and, with A rising sigh, he wisheth you in heaven.

Hot. And you in hell, as often as he hears Owen Glendower spoke of.

Glend. I cannot blame him: at my nativity, The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes, Of burning cressets²; and, at my birth, The frame and the foundation of the earth Shak'd like a coward.

Hot. Why, so it would have done, At the same season, if your mother's cat [born. Had but kitten'd, though yourself had ne'er been Glend. I say, the earth did shake when I was born.

Hot. And I say the earth was not of my mind, If you suppose, as fearing you it shook.

Glend. The heavens were all on fire, the earth did tremble. [on fire,

Hot. O, then the earth shook to see the heavens And not in fear of your nativity.

Diseased nature oftentimes breaks forth In strange eruptions: oft the teeming earth Is with a kind of colic pinch'd and vex'd

By the imprisoning of unruly wind [ing, Within her womb; which, for enlargement striv-

Shakes the old beldame³ earth, and topples down Steeples, and moss-grown towers. At your birth,

Our grandam earth, having this distemperature, In passion shook.

Glend. Cousin, of many men I do not bear these crossings. Give me leave

To tell you once again,—that, at my birth, The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes;

The goats ran from the mountains, and the herds Were strangely clamorous to the frightened fields.

These signs have mark'd me extraordinary; And all the courses of my life do shew,

I am not in the roll of common men. Where is he living,—clipp'd in with the sea,

Thatchidesthebanks of England, Scotland, Wales,— Which calls me pupil, or hath read to me?

And bring him out, that is but woman's son,

Can trace me in the tedious ways of art, Or hold me pace in deep experiments. [Welsh:—

Hot. I think there is no man speaks better I will to dinner. [mad.

Mort. Peace, cousin Percy; you will make him Glend. I can call spirits from the vasty deep.

Hot. Why, so can I; or so can any man: But will they come, when you do call for them?

Glend. Why, I can teach thee, cousin, to com- The devil. [mand

Hot. And I can teach thee, cousin, to shame the devil,

By telling truth; Tell truth, and shame the devil.— If thou have power to raise him, bring him hither,

15 And I'll be sworn, I have power to shame him hence.

O, while you live, tell truth, and shame the devil. Mort. Come, come,

No more of this unprofitable chat. [made head Glend. Three times hath Henry Bolingbroke

Against my power: thrice, from the banks of Wye, And sandy-bottom'd Severn, have I sent him,

Booteless home, and weather-beaten back. [too! Hot. Home without boots, and in foul weather

25 How 'scapes he agues, in the devil's name? Glend. Come, here's the map; Shall we divide our right, According to our three-fold order taken?

Mort. The archdeacon hath divided it Into three limits, very equally:

England, from Trent and Severn hitherto, By south and east, is to my part assign'd:

All westward, Wales beyond the Severn shore, And all the fertile land within that bound,

35 To Owen Glendower:—and, dear coz, to you The remnant northward, lying off from Trent. And our indentures tripartite are drawn:

Which being sealed interchangeably, (A business that this night may execute)

40 To-morrow, cousin Percy, you, and I, And my good lord of Worcester, will set forth,

To meet your father, and the Scottish power, As is appointed us, at Shrewsbury.

My father Glendower is not ready yet, Nor shall we need his help these fourteen days:—

Within that space you may have drawn together Your tenants, friends, and neighbouring gentlemen.

[To Glendower. Glend. A shorter time shall send me to your lords,

50 And in my conduct shall your ladies come, From whom you now must steal, and take no leave;

For there will be a world of water shed, Upon the parting of your wives and you. [here,

Hot. Methinks, my moiety, north from Burton In quantity equals not one of yours:

55 See, how this river comes me cranking⁴ in, And cuts me, from the best of all my land,

¹ That is, entrance, beginning. An induction, however, was anciently something introductory to a play. ² The cresset-lights were lights fixed on a moveable frame, or cross like a turnstile, and were carried on poles, in processions. ³ Beldame is used here simply in the sense of ancient mother.

⁴ Perhaps we should read crankling.

A huge half-moon, a monstrous cantle¹ out.
I'll have the current in this place damm'd up;
And here the smug and silver Trent shall run,
In a new channel, fair and evenly:
It shall not wind with such a deep indent,
To rob me of so rich a bottom here. [doth.]

Glend. Not wind? it shall, it must; you see it

Mort. Yea, but mark, how he bears his course, and runs me up

With like advantage on the other side;
Gelding the opposed continent as much,
As on the other side it takes from you. [here,

Wor. Yea, but a little charge will trench him
And on this north side win this cape of land;
And then he runs straight and even.

Hot. I'll have it so; a little charge will do it.

Glend. I will not have it alter'd.

Hot. Will not you?

Glend. No, nor you shall not.

Hot. Who shall say me nay?

Glend. Why, that will I.

Hot. Let me not understand you then,
Speak it in Welsh.

Glend. I can speak English, lord, as well as you;
For I was train'd up in the English court:²
Where, being but young, I framed to the harp
Many an English ditty, lovely well,
And gave the tongue³ a helpful ornament;
A virtue that was never seen in you.

Hot. Marry, and I'm glad on't with all my heart;
I had rather be a kitten and cry—mew,
Than one of these same metre ballad-mongers:
I had rather hear a brazen candlestick⁴ turn'd,
Or a dry wheel grate on the axle-tree;
And that would nothing set my teeth on edge,
Nothing so much as mincing poetry;
'Tis like the forc'd gait of a shuffling nag.

Glend. Come, you shall have Trent turn'd.

Hot. I do not care: I'll give thrice so much land
To any well-deserving friend;
But, in the way of bargain, mark ye me,
I'll cavil on the ninth part of a hair.

Are the indentures drawn? shall we be gone?

Glend. The moon shines fair, you may away
by night;

(I'll haste the writer⁵) and, withal,
Break with your wives of your departure hence:
I am afraid, my daughter will run mad,
So much she doteth on her Mortimer. [Exit.]

Mort. Fie, cousin Percy! how you cross my father!

Hot. I cannot chuse: sometimes he angers me
With telling me of the moldwarp and the ant⁶,
Of the dreamer Merlin, and his prophecies;
And of a dragon, and a finless fish,
A clip-wing'd griffin, and a moulten raven,
A couching lion, and a ramping cat,
And such a deal of skimble-skamble stuff

As puts me from my faith. I tell you what,—
He held me last night at the least nine hours,
In reckoning up the several devils' names,
That were his lacqueys: I cry'd, hum,—and well,
—go to,—

But mark'd him not a word. O, he's as tedious
As a tired horse, a railing wife;
Worse than a smoaky house:—I had rather live
With cheese and garlick, in a windmill, far;
Than feed on cates, and have him talk to me,
In any summer-house in Christendom.

Mort. In faith, he is a very worthy gentleman;
Exceeding well read, and profited
In strange concealments⁷; valiant as a lion,
And wondrous affable; and as bountiful
As mines of India. Shall I tell you, cousin?
He holds your temper in a high respect,
And curbs himself even of his natural scope,
When you do cross his humour; 'faith, he does:
I warrant you, that man is not alive,
Might so have tempted him, as you have done,
Without the taste of danger and reproof;
But do not use it oft, let me intreat you.

Wor. In faith, my lord, you are too wilful-blame;
And, since your coming hither, have done enough
To put him quite beside his patience.
You must needs learn, lord, to amend this fault;
Tho' sometimes it shew greatness, courage, blood,
(And that's the dearest grace it renders you,)
Yet oftentimes it doth present harsh rage,
Defect of manners, want of government,
Pride, haughtiness, opinion, and disdain:
The least of which, haunting a nobleman,
Loseth men's hearts; and leaves behind a stain
Upon the beauty of all parts besides,
Beguiling them of commendation.

Hot. Well, I am school'd; Good manners be your speed!

Here come our wives, and let us take our leave.

Re-enter Glendower, with the Ladies.

Mort. This is the deadly spight that angers me,
My wife can speak no English, I no Welsh.

Glend. My daughter weeps; she will not part
with you,

She'll be a soldier too, she'll to the wars.

Mort. Good father, tell her,—she, and my aunt
Percy,

Shall follow in your conduct speedily.

[Glendower speaks to her in Welsh, and she answers him in the same.]

Glend. She's desperate here; a peevish self-will'd harlotry, one

That no persuasion can do good upon.

[Lady speaks to Mortimer in Welsh.]

Mort. I understand thy looks: that pretty Welsh Which thou pourest down from these swelling
heavens,

I am too perfect in; and, but for shame,

¹ A cantle is a corner or piece of any thing. ² Mr. Steevens says that the real name of Owen Glendower was Vaughan, and that he was originally a barrister of the Middle Temple. ³ i. e. the English language. ⁴ The word is written—canstick in the quartos 1598, 1599, and 1608; and so it might have been pronounced. ⁵ He means the writer of the articles. ⁶ This alludes to an old prophecy, which is said to have induced Owen Glendower to take up arms against king Henry. The mould-warp is the mole, so called because it renders the surface of the earth unlevel by the hillocks which it raises. ⁷ i. e. skilled in wonderful secrets.

In such a parley should I answer thee.

[The lady again in Welsh.]

I understand thy kisses, and thou mine,
And that's a feeling disputation:
But I will never be a truant, love,
'Till I have learn'd thy language; for thy tongue
Makes Welsh as sweet as ditties highly penn'd,
Sung by a fair queen in a summer's bower,
With ravishing division, to her lute.

Glend. Nay, if you melt, then will she run mad.

[The lady speaks again in Welsh.]

Mort. O, I am ignorance itself in this.

Glend. She bids you,

Upon the wanton rushes¹ lay you down,
And rest your gentle head upon her lap,
And she will sing the song that pleaseth you,
And on your eye-lids crown the god of sleep²,
Charming your blood with pleasing heaviness;
Making such difference betwixt wake and sleep,
As is the difference betwixt day and night,
The hour before the heavenly-harness'd team
Begins his golden progress in the east. [sing:]

Mort. With all my heart I'll sit, and hear her
By that time will our book³, I think, be drawn.

Glend. Do so;

'And those musicians that shall play to you,
Hang in the air a thousand leagues from hence;
Yet straight they shall be here; sit, and attend.

Hot. Come, Kate, thou art perfect in lying down: Come, quick, quick; that I may lay my head in thy lap.

Lady. Go, ye giddy goose. [The music plays.]

Hot. Now, I perceive, the devil understands
And 'tis no marvel, he's so humorous. [Welsh;
By'r-Lady, he's a good musician.

Lady. I then should you be nothing but musical;
for you are altogether govern'd by humours. Lie still, ye thief, and hear the lady sing in Welsh.

Hot. I had rather hear Lady, my brach, howl in Irish.

Lady. Would'st have thy head broken?

Hot. No.

Lady. Then be still.

Hot. Neither; 'tis a woman's fault⁴.

Lady. Now God help thee!

Hot. To the Welsh lady's bed.

Lady. What's that?

Hot. Peace! she sings.

[Here the lady sings a Welsh song.]

Come, Kate, I'll have your song too.

5 Lady. Not mine, in good sooth.

Hot. Not yours, in good sooth! 'Heart, you swear like a comfit-maker's wife! Not you, in good sooth; and, As true as I live; and, As God shall mend me; and, As sure as day: and givest 10 such sarcenet surety for thy oaths, as if thou never walk'dst further than Finsbury⁵.

Swear me, Kate, like a lady, as thou art,
A good mouth-filling oath! and leave In sooth,
And such protests of pepper ginger-bread⁶,
15 To velvet guards⁷, and sunday-citizens.

Come, sing.

Lady. I will not sing.

Hot. 'Tis the next⁸ way to turn tailor¹⁰, or be Red-breast teacher¹¹. An the indentures be drawn, I'll away within these two hours; and so come in when you will. [Exit.]

Glend. Come, come, lord Mortimer; you are as slow,

As hot lord Percy is on fire to go.

25 By this, our book¹² is drawn; we will but seal,
And then to horse immediately.

Mort. With all my heart.

[Exeunt.]

S C E N E II.

The presence-chamber in Windsor.

Enter King Henry, Prince of Wales, Lords, and others.

K. Henry. Lords, give us leave; the Prince of Wales and I

35 Must have some private conference: But be near
At hand, for we shall presently have need of you.—
[Exeunt Lords.]

I know not whether God will have it so,
For some displeasing service¹³ I have done,
40 That, in his secret doom, out of my blood
He'll breed revengement and a scourge for me:
But thou dost, in thy passages of life¹⁴,
Make me believe,—that thou art only mark'd
For the hot vengeance and the rod of heaven,
45 To punish my mis-treadings. Tell me else,
Could such inordinate, and low desires,

¹ It was long the custom in this country, to strew the floors with rushes, as we now cover them with carpets. ² The expression is beautiful; intimating, that the god of sleep should not only sit on his eye-lids, but that he should sit crown'd, that is, pleased and delighted. ³ i. e. our papers of conditions, our articles. Every composition, whether play, ballad, or history, was anciently called a book.

⁴ And for an, which often signifies in our author if or tho', is frequently used by old writers. ⁵ A proverbial expression; meaning, that it is the usual fault of women never to do what they are bid or desired to do. ⁶ Open walks and fields near Chiswell-street, London-Wall, by Moorgate; and at that time the common resort of the citizens. ⁷ i. e. protestations as common as the letters which children learn from an alphabet of ginger-bread. What we now call spice, was then denominated pepper, gingerbread. ⁸ i. e. to such as have their cloaths adorned with shreds of velvet, which appear then to have been a city fashion. ⁹ The next way—is the nearest way. ¹⁰ Tailors seem to have been as remarkable for singing as weavers, of whose musical turn Shakspeare has before made mention in this play. ¹¹ The honourable Daines Barrington observes, that "a gold-finch still continues to be called a proud tailor, in some parts of England," which renders this passage intelligible, that otherwise seems to have no meaning whatsoever. Perhaps this bird is called proud tailor, because his plumage is varied like a suit of cloaths made out of remnants of different colours, such as a tailor might be supposed to wear. The sense then will be this:—The next thing to singing oneself, is to teach birds to sing, the gold-finch and the Robin. ¹² See note³ above. ¹³ Service for action, simply. ¹⁴ i. e. in the passages of thy life.

Such poor, such bare, such lewd, such mean attempts¹,

Such barren pleasures, rude society,
As thou art match'd withal, and grafted to,
Accompany the greatness of thy blood,
And hold their level with thy princely heart?

P. Henry. So please your majesty, I would, I Quit all offences with as clear excuse [could

As well as, I am doubtless, I can purge
Myself of many I am charg'd withal:
Yet such extenuation let me beg,
As, in reproof of many tales devis'd,—
Which oft the ear of greatness needs must hear,—
By smiling pick-thanks² and base news-mongers,
I may, for some things true, wherein my youth
Hath faulty wander'd and irregular,
Find pardon on my true submission.

K. Henry. Heaven pardon thee!—yet let me wonder, Harry,

At thy affections, which do hold a wing
Quite from the flight of all thy ancestors.
Thy place in council thou hast rudely lost,
Which by thy younger brother is supply'd;
And art almost an alien to the hearts
Of all the court and princes of my blood:
The hope and expectation of thy time
Is ruin'd; and the soul of every man
Prophetically does fore-think thy fall.
Had I so lavish of my presence been,
So common-hackney'd in the eyes of men,
So stale and cheap to vulgar company;
Opinion, that did help me to the crown,
Had still kept loyal to possession³;
And left me in reputeless banishment,
A fellow of no mark, nor likelihood.
By being seldom seen, I could not stir,
But, like a comet, I was wonder'd at:
That men would tell their children, 'This is he';
Others would say, 'Where? which is Bolingbroke?'
And then I stole all courtesy from heaven⁴,
And dress'd myself in such humility,
That I did pluck allegiance from men's hearts,
Loud shouts and salutations from their mouths,
Even in the presence of the crowned king.
Thus did I keep my person fresh, and new;
My presence, like a robe pontifical,
Ne'er seen but wonder'd at: and so my state,
Seldom, but sumptuous, shewed like a feast;
And won, by rareness, such solemnity.
The skipping king, he ambled up and down
With shallow jesters, and rash bavin⁵ wits,
Soon kindled, and soon burnt: carded⁶ his state;
Mingled his royalty with carping⁷ fools;

Had his great name profaned with their scorns;
And gave his countenance against his name⁸,
To laugh at gybing boys, and stand the push
Of every beardless vain comparative⁹:

5 Grew a companion to the common streets,
Enfeoff'd¹⁰ himself to popularity:

That being daily swallow'd by men's eyes,
They surfeited with honey; and began
To loath the taste of sweetness, whereof a little 10 More than a little is by much too much.

So when he had occasion to be seen,
He was but as the cuckow is in June,
Heard, not regarded; seen, but with such eyes,
As, sick and blunted with community,

15 Afford no extraordinary gaze,
Such as is bent on sun-like majesty
When it shines seldom with admiring eyes:
But rather drowz'd, and hung their eye-lids down,
Slept in his face, and render'd such aspect

20 As cloudy men use to their adversaries;
Being with his presence glutted, gorg'd, and full.
And in that very line, Harry, stand'st thou:
For thou hast lost thy princely privilege,
With vile participation; not an eye

25 But is a-weary of thy common sight,
Save mine, which hath desir'd to see thee more;
Which now doth what I would not have it do,
Make blind itself with foolish tenderness. [lord,

P. Henry. I shall hereafter, my thrice gracious
30 Be more myself.

K. Henry. For all the world,
As thou art to this hour, was Richard then
When I from France set foot at Ravenspurge;
And even as I was then, is Percy now.

35 Now by my sceptre, and my soul to boot,
He hath more worthy interest to the state,
Than thou, the shadow of succession:
For, of no right, nor colour like to right,
He doth fill fields with harness in the realm;

40 Turns head against the lion's armed jaws;
And, being no more in debt to years than thou,
Leads ancient lords and reverend bishops on,
To bloody battles, and to bruising arms.
What never-dying honour hath he got

45 Against renowned Douglas; whose high deeds,
Whose hot incursions, and great name in arms,
Holds from all soldiers chief majority,
And military title capital,

Through all the kingdoms that acknowledge Christ?
50 Thrice hath this Hotspur Mars in swathing cloaths,
This infant warrior, in his enterprizes
Discomfited great Douglas; ta'en him once,
Enlarged him, and made a friend of him,

¹ Mean attempts are unworthy undertakings. Lewd does not in this place barely signify wanton, but licentious. ² i. e. officious parasites. ³ i. e. True to him that had then possession of the crown.

⁴ This is an allusion to the story of Prometheus's theft, who stole fire from thence; and as with this he made a man, so with that Bolingbroke made a king. ⁵ Rash is heady, thoughtless: bavin is brush-wood, which, fired, burns fiercely, but is soon out. ⁶ The metaphor seems to be taken from mingling course wool with fine, and carding them together, whereby the value of the latter is diminished. The king means, that Richard mingled and carded together his royal state with carping fools, &c. To card is used by other writers for, to mix. ⁷ i. e. jesting, prating, &c. The quarto 1598, reads cap'ring fools. ⁸ i. e. made his presence injurious to his reputation. ⁹ Meaning, of every boy whose vanity incited him to try his wit against the king's. Comparative, means equal, or rival in any thing. ¹⁰ To enfeoff is a law term, signifying to invest with possessions.

To fill the mouth of deep defiance up,
And shake the peace and safety of our throne.
And what say you to this? Percy, Northumberland,
The archbishop's grace of York, Douglas, Mortimer,

Capitulate¹ against us, and are up.
But wherefore do I tell these news to thee?
Why, Harry, do I tell thee of my foes,
Which art my near'st and dearest² enemy?
Thou that art like enough,—through vassal fear,
Base inclination, and the start of spleen,—
To fight against me under Percy's pay,
To dog his heels, and curtsy at his frowns,
To shew how much thou art degenerate. [so:]

P. Henry. Do not think so, you shall not find it
And heaven forgive them, that so much have sway'd

Your majesty's good thoughts away from me!
I will redeem all this on Percy's head,
And, in the closing of some glorious day,
Be bold to tell you, that I am your son:
When I will wear a garment all of blood,
And stain my favours³ in a bloody mask,
Which, wash'd away, shall scour my shame with it.
And that shall be the day, whene'er it lights,
That this same child of honour and renown,
This gallant Hotspur, this all-praised knight,
And your unthought-of Harry, chance to meet:
For every honour sitting on his helm,
'Would they were multitudes; and on my head
My shames redoubled! for the time will come,
That I shall make this northern youth exchange
His glorious deeds for my indignities.
Percy is but my factor, good my lord,
To engross up glorious deeds on my behalf:
And I will call him to so strict account,
That he shall render every glory up,
Yea, even the slightest worship of his time,
Or I will tear the reckoning from his heart.
This, in the name of God, I promise here:
The which if he be pleas'd I shall perform,
I do beseech your majesty, may salve
The long-grown wounds of my intemperance:
If not, the end of life cancels all bands;
And I will die a hundred thousand deaths,
Ere break the smallest parcel of this vow.

K. Henry. A hundred thousand rebels die in this:—

Thou shalt have charge, and sovereign trust herein.

Enter Blunt.

How now, good Blunt? thy looks are full of speed.

Blunt. So is the business that I come to speak of.
Lord Mortimer of Scotland hath sent word,—
That Douglas, and the English rebels met,

The eleventh of this month, at Shrewsbury;
A mighty and a fearful head they are,
If promises be kept on every hand,
As ever offer'd foul play in a state. [to-day:]

5 K. Henry. The earl of Westmoreland set forth
With him my son, lord John of Lancaster;
For this advertisement is five days old:—
On Wednesday next, Harry, thou shalt set forward:
On Thursday, we ourselves will march:
10 Our meeting is Bridgnorth: and, Harry, you Shall march through Glostershire; by which account,

Our business valued, some twelve days hence
Our general forces at Bridgnorth shall meet.
15 Our hands are full of business: let's away;
Advantage feeds him fat, while men delay.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.

The Boar's-head Tavern in East-cheap.

Enter Falstaff and Bardolph.

Fal. Bardolph, am I not fallen away vilely since this last action? do I not bate? do I not dwindle? Why, my skin hangs about me like an old lady's loose gown; I am wither'd like an old apple-John. Well, I'll repent, and that suddenly, while I am in some liking; I shall be out of heart shortly, and then I shall have no strength to repent. An I have not forgotten what the inside of 25 a church is made of, I am a pepper-corn, a brew-er's horse⁴; the inside of a church:—Company, villainous company, hath been the spoil of me.

Bard. Sir John, you are so fretful, you cannot live long.

35 Fal. Why, there it is:—come, sing me a bawdy song; make me merry. I was as virtuously given as a gentleman need to be; virtuous enough:
swore little; dic'd, not above seven times a week;
went to a bawdy-house, not above once in a quar-40 ter—of an hour; paid money that I borrow'd, three or four times; liv'd well, and in good compass: and now I live out of all order, out of all compass.

Bard. Why, you are so fat, Sir John, that you must needs be out of all compass; out of all reasonable compass, Sir John.

Fal. Do thou amend thy face, and I'll amend my life: thou art our admiral, thou bearest the lanthorn in the poop,—but 'tis in the nose of thee;
50 thou art the knight of the burning lamp.

Bard. Why, sir John, my face does you no harm.

Fal. No, I'll be sworn; I make as good use of it as many a man doth of a death's head, or a me- mento mori: I never see thy face, but I think upon 55 hell-fire, and Dives that liv'd in purple; for

¹ i. e. make head. ² Dearest here means most fatal, most mischievous, and should be spelled dearest.
³ Favours mean some decoration usually worn by knights in their helmets, as a present from a mistress, or a trophy from an enemy. ⁴ Mr. Steevens conjectures, that a brewer's horse does not, perhaps, mean a dray-horse, but the cross-beam on which beer-barrels are carried into cellars, &c. and that the allusion may be to the taper form of this machine: while Mr. Tyrwhitt thinks, that "Falstaff does not mean to point out any similitude to his own condition, but, on the contrary, some striking dissimili- tude. He says here, I am a pepper-corn, a brewer's horse; just as in act II. sc. iv. he asserts the truth of several parts of his narrative, on pain of being considered as a rogue—a Jew—an Elvew Jew
—a bunch of radish—a horse."

there he is in his robes, burning, burning.—If thou wert any way given to virtue, I would swear by thy face; my oath should be, By this fire: but thou art altogether given over; and wert indeed, but for the light in thy face, the son of utter darkness. When thou ran'st up Gad's-hill in the night to catch my horse, if I did not think thou had'st been an ignis fatuus, or a ball of wild-fire, there's no purchase in money. O, thou art a perpetual triumph, an everlasting bonfire light! Thou hast saved me a thousand marks in links and torches¹, walking with thee in the night betwixt tavern and tavern: but the sack that thou hast drunk me, would have bought me lights as good cheap², at the dearest chandler's in Europe. I have maintained that salamander of yours with fire, any time this two-and-thirty years: Heaven reward me for it!

Bard. 'Sblood, I would my face were in your belly!

Fal. God-a-mercy! so should I be sure to be heart-burn'd.

Enter Hostess.

How now, dame Partlet the hen³? have you enquir'd yet who pick'd my pocket?

Host. Why, Sir John, what do you think, Sir John? Do you think I keep thieves in my house? I have search'd, have enquir'd, so has my husband, man by man, boy by boy, servant by servant: the tithe of a hair was never lost in my house before.

Fal. You lie, hostess; Bardolph was shav'd, and lost many a hair: and I'll be sworn, my pocket was pick'd: Go to, you are a woman, go.

Host. Who, I? I defy thee: I was never call'd so in mine own house before.

Fal. Go to, I know you well enough.

Host. No, Sir John; you do not know me, Sir John: I know you, Sir John: you owe me money, Sir John, and now you pick a quarrel to beguile me of it: I bought you a dozen of shirts to your back.

Fal. Dowlas, filthy dowlas: I have given them away to bakers' wives, and they have made bolters of them.

Host. Now, as I am a true woman, holland of eight shillings an ell. You owe money here besides, Sir John, for your diet, and by-drinkings; and money lent you, four-and-twenty pounds.

Fal. He had his part of it; let him pay.

Host. He? alas, he is poor; he hath nothing.

Fal. How! poor? look upon his face; what call you rich⁴? let them coin his nose, let them coin his cheeks; I'll not pay a denier. What, will you make a younker⁵ of me? shall I not take mine ease in mine inn⁶, but I shall have my pocket pick'd? I have lost a seal-ring of my grandfather's, worth forty mark.

Host. O, I have heard the prince tell him, I know not how oft, that the ring was copper.

Fal. How! the prince is a Jack, a sneak-cup; and, if he were here, I would cudgel him like a dog if he would say so.

Enter Prince Henry, and Poins, marching; and Falstaff meets them, playing on his truncheon, like a fife.

Fal. How now, lad? is the wind in that door, i'faith? must we all march?

Bard. Yea, two and two, Newgate-fashion⁷.

Host. My lord, I pray you, hear me.

P. Henry. What say'st thou, Mrs. Quickly? How does thy husband? I love him well, he is an honest man.

Host. Good my lord, hear me.

Fal. Pr'ythee, let her alone, and list to me.

P. Henry. What say'st thou, Jack?

Fal. The other night I fell asleep here behind the arras, and had my pocket pick'd: this house is turn'd bawdy-house, they pick pockets.

P. Henry. What didst thou lose, Jack?

Fal. Wilt thou believe me, Hal? three or four bonds of forty pound a-piece, and a seal-ring of my grandfather's.

P. Henry. A trifle, some eight-penny matter.

Host. So I told him, my lord; and I said, I heard your grace say so: And, my lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a foul-mouth'd man as he is; and said, he would cudgel you.

P. Henry. What! he did not?

Host. There's neither faith, truth, nor womanhood in me else.

Fal. There's no more faith in thee than in a stew'd prune⁸; nor no more truth in thee, than in a drawn fox⁹: and for womanhood, maid Marian¹⁰ may be the deputy's wife of the ward to thee. Go, you thing, go.

Host. Say, what thing? what thing?

Fal. What thing? why, a thing to thank God on.

Host. I am no thing to thank God on, I would thou should'st know it; I am an honest man's wife: and, setting thy knighthood aside, thou art a knave to call me so.

Fal. Setting thy womanhood aside, thou art a beast to say otherwise.

Host. Say, what beast, thou knave, thou?

Fal. What beast? why, an otter.

P. Henry. An otter, Sir John? why an otter?

Fal. Why? she's neither fish, nor flesh; a man knows not where to have her.

¹ Mr. Steevens remarks on this passage, that in Shakspeare's time, (long before the streets were illuminated with lamps) candles and lanthorns to let, were cried about London. ² Cheap is market, and good cheap therefore is a bon marché. From this word East-cheap, Chep-stow, Cheap-side, &c. are derived. ³ Dame Partlet is the name of the hen in the old story-book of Reynard the Fox.

⁴ A face set with carbuncles is called a rich face. ⁵ A younker is a novice, a young inexperienced man easily gull'd. ⁶ To take mine ease in mine inne, was an ancient proverb, not very different in its application from that maxim, "Every man's house is his castle;" for inne originally signified a house or habitation. ⁷ i. e. as prisoners are conveyed to Newgate, fastened two and two together. ⁸ Meaning a bawd; a dish of stew'd prunes being not only the ancient designation of a brothel, but a constant appendage to it, as has been before observed. ⁹ A drawn fox may perhaps mean, a fox drawn over the ground to exercise the hounds. ¹⁰ Maid Marian is either a man dressed like a woman, or the ady who attends the dances of the morris. Host.

Host. Thou art an unjust man in saying so; thou or any man knows where to have me, thou knave thou!

P. Henry. Thou say'st true, hostess; and he slanders thee most grossly.

Host. So he doth you, my lord; and said this other day, you ought him a thousand pound.

P. Henry. Sirrah, do I owe you a thousand pound?

Fal. A thousand pound, Hal? a million: thy love is worth a million; thou ow'st me thy love.

Host. Nay, my lord, he call'd you Jack, and said he would cudgel you.

Fal. Did I, Bardolph?

Bard. Indeed, sir John, you said so.

Fal. Yea, if he said, my ring was copper.

P. Henry. I say, 'tis copper: Dar'st thou be as good as thy word now?

Fal. Why, Hal, thou know'st, as thou art but man, I dare; but as thou art prince, I fear thee, as I fear the roaring of the lion's whelp.

P. Henry. And why not as the lion?

Fal. The king himself is to be fear'd as the lion: Dost thou think, I'll fear thee as I fear thy father? nay, an if I do, let my girdle break!

P. Henry. O, if it should, how would thy guts fall about thy knees! But, sirrah, there's no room for faith, truth, nor honesty, in this bosom of thine; it is all fill'd up with guts, and midriff.—Charge an honest woman with picking thy pocket! Why, thou whoreson, impudent, imboss'd¹ rascal, if there were any thing in thy pocket but tavern-reckonings, memorandums of bawdy-houses, and one poor penny-worth of sugar-candy to make thee long-winded: if thy pocket were enrich'd with any other injuries but these, I am a villain. And yet you will stand to it; you will not pocket up wrong: Art thou not asham'd?

Fal. Dost thou hear, Hal? thou know'st, in the state of innocency, Adam fell; and what should poor Jack Falstaff do, in the days of villainy? Thou seest, I have more flesh than any other man; and therefore more frailty.—You confess then, you pick'd my pocket?

P. Henry. It appears so by the story.

Fal. Hostess, I forgive thee: Go, make ready breakfast; love thy husband, look to thy servants, and cherish thy guests: thou shalt find me tractable to any honest reason: thou seest I am pacify'd.—Still?—Nay, I prythee, begone. [Exit Hostess. Now, Hal, to the news at court: for the robbery, lad,—How is that answer'd?

P. Henry. O my sweet beef, I must still be good angel to thee:—The money is paid back again.

Fal. O, I do not like that paying back, 'tis a double labour.

P. Henry. I am good friends with my father, and may do any thing.

Fal. Rob me the exchequer the first thing thou do'st, and do it with unwash'd hands too².

Bard. Do, my lord.

P. Henry. I have procur'd thee, Jack, a charge of foot.

Fal. I would it had been of horse. Where shall I find one that can steal well? O for a fine thief, of two and twenty, or thereabouts! I am heinously unprovided. Well, God be thanked for these rebels, they offend none but the virtuous; I laud them, I praise them.

P. Henry. Bardolph,—

Bard. My lord.

P. Henry. Go bear this letter to lord John of Lancaster, [land.—

My brother John; this to my lord of Westmore—Go, Poins, to horse, to horse; for thou and I Have thirty miles to ride ere dinner-time.—Jack,

Meet me to-morrow in the Temple-hall

At two o'clock i'the afternoon:

There shalt thou know thy charge; and there receive Money, and order for their furniture. [ceive

The land is burning; Percy stands on high; And either they, or we, must lower lie.

[Exeunt Prince, Poins, and Bard.

Fal. Rare words! brave world!—Hostess, my breakfast; come:—

O, I could wish this tavern were my drum. [Exit.

A C T IV.

S C E N E I.

The Camp near Shrewsbury.

Enter Hotspur, Worcester, and Douglas.

Hot. WELL said, my noble Scot; if speaking truth,

In this fine age, were not thought flattery,
Such attribution should the Douglas have,
As not a soldier of this season's stamp
Should go so general current through the world.
By heaven, I cannot flatter; I defy

The tongues of soothers; but a braver place
In my heart's love, hath no man than yourself:
Nay, task me to my word; approve me, lord.

Doug. Thou art the king of honour:
No man so potent breathes upon the ground,
But I will beard³ him.

Hot. Do so, and 'tis well:—

Enter a Messenger.

What letters hast thou there?—I can but thank you.

Mess. These letters come from your father.

¹ i. e. swol'n, puffy. ² i. e. do it immediately, or the first thing in the morning. ³ To beard is to oppose face to face in a hostile or daring manner.

Hot. Letters from him! why comes he not himself?

Mess. He cannot come, my lord; he's grievous

Hot. 'Zounds! how has he the leisure to be sick, In such a justling time? Who leads his power?

Under whose government come they along?

Mess. His letters bear his mind, not I.

Hot. His mind!

Wor. I pr'ythee, tell me, doth he keep his bed?

Mess. He did, my lord, four days ere I set forth; And, at the time of my departure thence, He was much fear'd by his physicians.

Wor. I would, the state of time had first been whole,

Ere he by sickness had been visited;

His health was never better worth than now.

Hot. Sick now! droop now! this sickness doth infect

The very life-blood of our enterprize;

'Tis catching hither, even to our camp.—

He writes me here,—that inward sickness—

And that his friends by deputation could not

So soon be drawn; nor did he think it meet,

To lay so dangerous and dear a trust

On any soul remov'd, but on his own¹.

Yet doth he give us bold advertisement,—

That with our small conjunction, we should on,

To see how fortune is dispos'd to us:

For, as he writes, there is no quailing² now;

Because the king is certainly possess'd

Of all our purposes. What say you to it?

Wor. Your father's sickness is a maim to us.

Hot. A perilous gash, a very limb lopt off:—

And yet, in faith, 'tis not; his present want

Seems more than we shall find it:—Were it good,

To set the exact wealth of all our states

All at one cast? to set so rich a main

On the nice hazard of one doubtful hour?

It were not good: for therein should we read

The very bottom and the soul of hope;

The very list³, the very utmost bound

Of all our fortunes.

Doug. Faith, and so we should;

Where now remains a sweet reversion:

We may boldly spend upon the hope of what

Is to come in:

A comfort of retirement⁴ lives in this.

Hot. A rendezvous, a home to fly unto,

If that the devil and mischance look big

Upon the maidenhead of our affairs.

Wor. But yet, I would your father had been here.

The quality and air⁵ of our attempt

Brooks no division: It will be thought

By some, that know not why he is away,

That wisdom, loyalty, and mere dislike

Of our proceedings, kept the earl from hence;

And think, how such an apprehension

5 May turn the tide of fearful faction,

And breed a kind of question in our cause:

For, well you know, we of the offering side⁶

Must keep aloof from strict arbitrement;

And stop all sight-holes, every loop, from whence

10 The eye of reason may pry in upon us:

This absence of your father's draws a curtain

That shews the ignorant a kind of fear

Before not dreamt of.

Hot. You strain too far.

15 I rather of his absence make this use;—

It lends a lustre, and more great opinion,

A larger dare to our great enterprize,

Than if the earl were here: for men must think,

If we, without his help, can make a head

20 To push against the kingdom; with his help,

We shall o'erturn it topsy-turvy down.—

Yet all goes well, yet all our joints are whole.

Doug. As heart can think: there is not such a word

25 Spoke of in Scotland, as this term of fear.

Enter Sir Richard Vernon.

Hot. My cousin Vernon! welcome, by my soul.

Ver. Pray God, my news may be worth a welcome, lord.

30 The earl of Westmoreland, seven thousand strong,

Is marching hitherwards: with him prince John.

Hot. No harm: What more?

Ver. And further, I have learn'd,—

The king himself in person is set forth,

35 Or hitherwards intended speedily,

With strong and mighty preparation.

Hot. He shall be welcome too. Where is his son,

The nimble-footed⁷ mad-cap prince of Wales,

And his comrades, that daff'd the world aside,

40 And bid it pass?

Ver. All furnish'd, all in arms,

All plum'd like estridges, that with the wind

Bated like eagles having lately bath'd⁸:

Glittering in golden coats, like images⁹:

45 As full of spirit as the month of May,

And gorgeous as the sun at midsummer;

Wanton as youthful goats, wild as young bulls.

I saw young Harry,—with his beaver on,

His cuisses¹⁰ on his thighs, gallantly arm'd,—

50 Rise from the ground like feather'd Mercury,

And vaulted with such ease into his seat,

As if an angel dropt down from the clouds,

To turn and wind a fiery Pegasus,

¹ i. e. on any less near to himself.

² To quail is to languish, to sink into dejection.

³ The list is the seluage; figuratively, the utmost line of circumference, the utmost extent.

⁴ i. e. a support to which we may have recourse.

⁵ i. e. the complexion, the character.

⁶ i. e. of the assailing side. Some latter editions read, offending.

⁷ Stowe says of the Prince, "He was passing swift in running, insomuch that he with two other of his lords, without hounds, bow, or other engine, would take a wild-buck, or doe, in a large park."

⁸ Mr. Steevens observes, that all birds, after bathing

(which almost all birds are fond of), spread out their wings to catch the wind, and flutter violently with them in order to dry themselves. This in the falconer's language is called bating, and by Shakspeare, bating with the wind. It may be observed, that birds never appear so lively and full of spirits, as immediately after bathing.

⁹ Alluding to the manner of dressing up images in the Romish churches on holy-days, when they are bedecked in robes very richly laced and embroidered.

¹⁰ Cuisses, French, armour for the thighs.

And witch¹ the world with noble horsemanship.

Hot. No more, no more; worse than the sun in March,

This praise doth nourish agues. Let them come:

They come like sacrifices in their trim,

And to the fire-ey'd maid of smoky war,

All hot, and bleeding, will we offer them:

The mailed Mars shall on his altar sit,

Up to the ears in blood. I am on fire,

To hear this rich reprisal is so nigh,

And yet not ours:—Come, let me take my horse,

Who is to bear me, like a thunderbolt,

Against the bosom of the prince of Wales:

Harry to Harry shall, hot horse to horse——

Meet, and ne'er part, 'till one drop down a corse.

O, that Glendower were come!

Ver. There is more news:

I learn'd in Worcester, as I rode along,

He cannot draw his power this fourteen days.

Doug. That's the worst tidings that I hear of yet.

Wor. Ay, by my faith, that bears a frosty sound.

Hot. What may the king's whole battle reach

Ver. To thirty thousand. [unto?

Hot. Forty let it be;

My father and Glendower being both away,

The powers of us may serve so great a day.

Come, let us take a muster speedily:

Doomsday is near; die all, die merrily.

Doug. Talk not of dying; I am out of fear
Of death, or death's hand, for this one half year.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.

A public road near Coventry.

Enter Falstaff, and Bardolph.

Fal. Bardolph, get thee before to Coventry; fill me a bottle of sack: our soldiers shall march through; we'll to Sutton-Colfield to-night.

Bard. Will you give me money, captain?

Fal. Lay out, lay out.

Bard. This bottle makes an angel.

Fal. An it do, take it for thy labour; and if it make twenty, take them all, I'll answer the coinage. Bid my lieutenant Peto meet me at the town's end.

Bard. I will, captain: farewell. [Exit.

Fal. If I be not asham'd of my soldiers, I am a souc'd gurnet². I have mis-us'd the king's press damnably. I have got, in exchange of a hundred and fifty soldiers, three hundred and odd pounds. I press me none but good householders, yeomen's sons: enquire me out contracted bachelors, such as had been ask'd twice on the bans; such a commodity of warm slaves, as had as lief hear the devil as a drum; such as fear the report of a caliver, worse than a struck fowl, or a hurt wild-duck.—
I prest me none but such toasts and butter³, with hearts in their bellies no bigger than pins' heads, and they have bought out their services; and now my whole charge consists of ancients, corporals, lieutenants, gentlemen of companies, slaves as ragged as Lazarus in the painted cloth, where the glutton's dogs lick'd his sores: and such as, indeed, were never soldiers; but discarded unjust serving-men, younger sons to younger brothers⁴, revolted tapsters, and ostlers trade-fallen; the cankers of a calm world, and a long peace; ten times more dishonourably ragged, than an old fac'd ancient⁵;

and such have I to fill up the rooms of them that have bought out their services; that you would think, I had a hundred and fifty tatter'd prodigals, lately come from swine-keeping, from eating draff and husks. A mad fellow met me on the way, and told me, I had unloaded all the gibbets, and press'd the dead bodies. No eye hath seen such scarecrows. I'll not march though Coventry with them, that's flat:—Nay, and the villains march wide betwixt the legs, as if they had gyves⁶ on; for, indeed, I had the most of them out of prison.—
There's but a shirt and a half in all my company;
and the half-shirt is two napkins, tack'd together,
and thrown over the shoulders like a herald's coat without sleeves; and the shirt, to say the truth, stolen from my host at Saint Alban's, or the red-nose inn-keeper of Daintry. But that's all one;
they'll find linen enough on every hedge.

Enter Prince Henry, and Westmoreland.

P. Henry. How now, blown Jack? how now, quilt?

Fal. What, Hal? how now, mad wag? what a devil dost thou in Warwickshire?—My good lord of Westmoreland, I cry you mercy; I thought your honour had already been at Shrewsbury.

West. 'Faith, Sir John, 'tis more than time that I were there, and you too; but my powers are there already: The king, I can tell you, looks for us all; we must away all night.

Fal. Tut, never fear me; I am as vigilant, as a cat to steal cream.

P. Henry. I think, to steal cream indeed; for thy theft hath already made thee butter. But tell me, Jack; Whose fellows are these that come after?

Fal. Mine, Hal, mine.

P. Henry. I did never see such pitiful rascals:

Fal. Tut, tut; good enough to toss⁷; food for powder, food for powder; they'll fill a pit, as well as better; tush, man, mortal men, mortal men.

West. Ay, but, Sir John, methinks, they are exceeding poor and bare; too beggarly.

Fal. 'Faith, for their poverty,—I know not where they had that: and for their bareness,—I am sure they never learn'd that of me.

¹ Witch for bewitch, charm. ² Souc'd gurnet is an appellation of contempt very frequently employed in the old comedies. ³ Another term of contempt. ⁴ Meaning, men of desperate fortune and wild adventure. ⁵ Mr. Steevens has happily, we think, explained this passage: "An old fac'd ancient, is an old standard mended with a different colour. It should not be written in one word, as old and fac'd are distinct epithets. To face a gown is to trim it; an expression at present in use. In our author's time the facings of gowns were always of a different colour from the stuff itself."
⁶ i. e. shackles. ⁷ That is, to toss upon a pike.

P. Henry. No, I'll be sworn; unless you call three fingers on the ribs, bare. But, sirrah, make haste; Percy is already in the field.

Fal. What, is the king encamp'd?

West. He is, Sir John; I fear, we shall stay too long.

Fal. Well, [feast,
To the latter end of a fray, and the beginning of a
Fits a dull fighter, and a keen guest. [Exeunt.

S C E N E III.

Shrewsbury.

Enter Hotspur, Worcester, Douglas, and Vernon.

Hot. We'll fight with him to-night.

Wor. It may not be.

Doug. You give him then advantage.

Ver. Not a whit.

Hot. Why say you so? looks he not for supply?

Ver. So do we.

Hot. His is certain, ours is doubtful.

Wor. Good cousin, be advis'd; stir not to-night.

Ver. Do not, my lord.

Doug. You do not counsel well;
You speak it out of fear, and cold heart.

Ver. Do me no slander, Douglas: by my life,
(And I dare well maintain it with my life)

If well-respected honour bid me on,

I hold as little counsel with weak fear,

As you, my lord, or any Scot that this day lives:

Let it be seen to-morrow in the battle,

Which of us fears.

Doug. Yea, or to-night.

Ver. Content.

Hot. To-night, say I. [much,

Ver. Come, come, it may not be. I wonder

Being men of such great leading¹ as you are,

That you foresee not what impediments

Drag back our expedition: Certain horse

Of my cousin Vernon's are not yet come up:

Your uncle Worcester's horse came but to-day;

And now their pride and mettle is asleep,

Their courage with hard labour tame and dull,

That not a horse is half the half of himself.

Hot. So are the horses of the enemy

In general, journey-bated, and brought low;

The better part of ours are full of rest.

Wor. The number of the king exceedeth ours:
For God's sake, cousin, stay 'till all come in.

[The trumpet sounds a parley.

Enter Sir Walter Blunt.

Blunt. I come with gracious offers from the king,
If you vouchsafe my hearing, and respect.

Hot. Welcome, Sir Walter Blunt; And would
to God,

You were of our determination!

Some of us love you well: and even those some

Envy your great deservings, and good name;

Because you are not of our quality,

But stand against us like an enemy.

Blunt. And heaven defend, but still I should stand so,

So long as, out of limit, and true rule,
You stand against anointed majesty!
But, to my charge.—The king hath sent to know
The nature of your griefs; and whereupon
You conjure from the breast of civil peace
Such bold hostility, teaching his duteous land
Audacious cruelty: If that the king
Have any way your good deserts forgot,—
Which he confesseth to be manifold,—
10 He bids you name your griefs; and, with all speed,
You shall have your desires, with interest;
And pardon absolute for yourself, and these,
Herein mis-led by your suggestion.

Hot. The king is kind; and, well we know,
15 the king

Knows at what time to promise, when to pay.

My father, and my uncle, and myself,

Did give him that same royalty he wears:

And,—when he was not six and twenty strong,

20 Sick in the world's regard, wretched and low,
A poor unminded out-law sneaking home,—
My father gave him welcome to the shore:

And,—when he heard him swear, and vow to God,

He came but to be duke of Lancaster,

25 To sue his livery², and beg his peace;

With tears of innocency, and terms of zeal,—

My father, in kind heart and pity mov'd,

Swore him assistance, and perform'd it too.

Now, when the iords and barons of the realm

30 Perceiv'd Northumberland did lean to him,

The more³ and less came in with cap and knee;

Met him in boroughs, cities, villages;

Attended him on bridges, stood in lanes,

Laid gifts before him, proffer'd him their oaths,

35 Gave him their heirs; as pages follow'd him,

Even at the heels, in golden multitudes.

He presently,—as greatness knows itself,—

Steps me a little higher than his vow

Made to my father, while his blood was poor,

40 Upon the naked shore at Ravenspur;

And now, forsooth, takes on him to reform

Some certain edicts, and some straight decrees,

That lie too heavy on the commonwealth:

Cries out upon abuses, seems to weep

45 Over his country's wrongs; and, by this face,

This seeming brow of justice, did he win

The hearts of all that he did angle for.

Proceeded further; cut me off the heads

Of all the favourites, that the absent king

50 In deputation left behind him here,

When he was personal in the Irish war.

Blunt. Tut, I came not to hear this.

Hot. Then to the point.—

In short time after, he depos'd the king;

55 Soon after that, depriv'd him of his life;

And, in the neck of that, task'd⁴ the whole state:

To make that worse, suffer'd his kinsman March

(Who is, if every owner were well plac'd,

Indeed his king) to be incag'd in Wales,

60 There without ransom to lie forfeited;

Disgrac'd me in my happy victories;

¹ i. e. such experience in martial business.

² This is a law-phrase; meaning, to sue out the delivery or possession of his lands from the Court of Wards, which, on the death of any of the tenants of the crown, seized their lands, 'till the heir sued out his livery. ³ i. e. the greater and the less. ⁴ Task'd is here used for taxed; it was once common to employ these words indiscriminately.

Sought to entrap me by intelligence ;
 Rated my uncle from the council-board ;
 In rage dismiss'd my father from the court ;
 Broke oath on oath, committed wrong on wrong :
 And, in conclusion, drove us to seek out
 This head of safety¹ ; and, withal, to pry
 Into his title, the which we find
 Too indirect for long continuance.

Blunt. Shall I return this answer to the king ?

Hot. Not so, sir Walter ; we'll withdraw a while.
 Go to the king ; and let there be impawn'd
 Some surety for a safe return again,
 And in the morning early shall my uncle
 Bring him our purposes : and so farewell. [love.]

Blunt. I would, you would accept of grace and

Hot. And, may be, so we shall.

Blunt. Pray heaven, you do ! [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.

York. The Archbishop's Palace.

Enter the Archbishop of York, and Sir Michael.

York. Hie, good Sir Michael ; bear this sealed
 With winged haste, to the lord marshal ; [*brief*²,
 This to my cousin Scroop ; and all the rest
 To whom they are directed : if you knew
 How much they do import, you would make haste.

Sir Mich. My good lord,
 I guess their tenor.

York. Like enough, you do.
 To-morrow, good Sir Michael, is a day,
 Wherein the fortune of ten thousand men
 Must bide the touch : For, sir, at Shrewsbury,
 As I am truly given to understand,

The king, with mighty and quick-raised power,
 Meets with lord Harry : and I fear, Sir Michael,
 What with the sickness of Northumberland,
 (Whose power was in the first proportion)
 And what with Owen Glendower's absence thence,
 (Who with them was a rated sinew³ too,
 And comes not in, o'er-rul'd by prophecies)—
 I fear, the power of Percy is too weak
 To wage an instant trial with the king. [fear;

Sir Mich. Why, my good lord, you need not There's Douglas and lord Mortimer.

York. No, Mortimer is not there.

Sir Mich. But there is Mordake, Vernon, lor
 Harry Percy,

And there's my lord of Worcester, and a head
 Of gallant warriors, noble gentlemen. [drawn

York. And so there is : but yet the king hath
 The special head of all the land together ;—

The prince of Wales, lord John of Lancaster,
 The noble Westmoreland, and warlike Blunt ;
 And many more corrivals, and dear men
 Of estimation and command in arms.

Sir Mich. Doubt not, my lord, they shall be well oppos'd.

York. I hope no less, yet needful 'tis to fear ;
 And, to prevent the worst, Sir Michael, speed :
 For, if lord Percy thrive not, ere the king
 Dismiss his power, he means to visit us,—
 For he hath heard of our confederacy,—

And 'tis but wisdom to make strong against him ;
 Therefore, make haste : I must go write again
 To other friends ; and so farewell, Sir Michael.

[Exeunt.]

A C T V.

SCENE I.

The Camp at Shrewsbury.

Enter King Henry, Prince of Wales, Lord John of Lancaster, Earl of Westmoreland, Sir Walter Blunt, and Sir John Falstaff.

K. Henry. HOW bloodily the sun begins to peer Above yon busky⁴ hill ! the day looks pale

At his distemperature.

P. Henry. The southern wind
 Doth play the trumpet to his purposes ;
 And, by his hollow whistling in the leaves,
 Foretells a tempest, and a blustering day.

K. Henry. Then with the losers let it sympathize ;
 For nothing can seem foul to those that win.—

Trumpet. Enter Worcester, and Vernon.
 How now, my lord of Worcester ? 'tis not well,
 That you and I should meet upon such terms
 As now we meet : You have deceiv'd our trust ;
 And made us doff our easy robes of peace,

To crush our old limbs in ungentle steel :

This is not well, my lord, this is not well.
 What say you to't ? Will you again unknit
 This churlish knot of all-abhorred war ?

And move in that obedient orb again,
 Where you did give a fair and natural light ;
 And be no more an exhal'd meteor,
 A prodigy of fear, and a portent

Of broached mischief to the unborn times ?

Wor. Hear me, my liege :

For mine own part, I could be well content
 To entertain the lag-end of my life
 With quiet hours ; for, I do protest,
 I have not sought the day of this dislike.

K. Henry. You have not sought it ! how comes it then ?

Fal. Rebellion lay in his way, and he found it.

P. Henry. Peace, chewet⁵, peace.

Wor. It pleas'd your majesty, to turn your looks
 Of favour from myself, and all our house ;

¹ Meaning, this army, from which I hope for protection.
 accounted a strong aid.

² A brief is simply a letter. ³ i. e.
⁴ i. e. woody, from bosquet, Fr. ⁵ Theobald explains chewet, or chuet, to mean, a noisy chattering bird, a pie ; while Mr. Steevens thinks it alludes to a kind of fat greasy puddings called chewets.

And yet I must remember you, my lord,
 We were the first and dearest of your friends.
 For you, my staff of office did I break
 In Richard's time; and posted day and night
 To meet you on the way, and kiss your hand,
 When yet you were in place and in account
 Nothing so strong and fortunate as I.
 It was myself, my brother, and his son,
 That brought you home, and boldly did outdare
 The dangers of the time: You swore to us,—
 And you did swear that oath at Doncaster,—
 That you did nothing purpose 'gainst the state;
 Nor claim no further than your new-fall'n right,
 The seat of Gaunt, dukedom of Lancaster:
 To this we swore our aid. But, in short space,
 It rain'd down fortune showering on your head;
 And such a flood of greatness fell on you,
 What with our help; what with the absent king;
 What with the injuries of a wanton time¹;
 The seeming sufferances that you had bore;
 And the contrarious winds, that held the king
 So long in his unlucky Irish wars,
 That all in England did repute him dead;—
 And, from this swarm of fair advantages,
 You took occasion to be quickly woo'd
 To gripe the general sway into your hand:
 Forgot your oath to us at Doncaster;
 And, being fed by us, you us'd us so
 As that ungentle gull, the cuckow's bird,
 Useth the sparrow²: did oppress our nest;
 Grew by our feeding to so great a bulk,
 That even our love durst not come near your sight,
 For fear of swallowing; but with nimble wing
 We were enforc'd, for safety sake, to fly
 Out of your sight, and raise this present head:
 Whereby we stand oppos'd³ by such means
 As you yourself have forg'd against yourself;
 By unkind usage, dangerous countenance,
 And violation of all faith and troth
 Sworn to us in your younger enterprise. [lated⁴,

K. Henry. These things, indeed, you have articu-
 Proclaim'd at market-crosses, read in churches;
 To face the garment of rebellion
 With some fine colour, that may please the eye
 Of fickle changelings, and poor discontents,
 Which gape, and rub the elbow, at the news
 Of hurly-burly innovation:

And never yet did insurrection want
 Such water-colours to impaint his cause;
 Nor moody beggars, starving for a time
 Of pell-mell havock and confusion. [soul

P. Henry. In both our armies, there is many a
 Shall pay full dearly for this encounter,
 If once they join in trial. Tell your nephew,
 'The prince of Wales doth join with all the world
 In praise of Henry Percy: by my hopes,—
 This present enterprize set off his head,—
 I do not think, a braver gentleman,
 More active-valiant, or more valiant-young,
 More daring, or more bold, is now alive,
 To grace this latter age with noble deeds.

For my part, I may speak it to my shame,
 I have a truant been to chivalry;
 And so, I hear, he doth account me too:
 Yet this before my father's majesty,—
 5 I am content, that he shall take the odds
 Of his great name and estimation;
 And will, to save the blood on either side,
 Try fortune with him in a single fight.

K. Henry. And, prince of Wales, so dare we 10 venture thee,

Albeit, considerations infinite
 Do make against it:—No, good Worcester, no,
 We love our people well; even those we love,
 That are mis-led upon your cousin's part:
 15 And, will they take the offer of our grace,
 Both he, and they, and you, yea, every man
 Shall be my friend again, and I'll be his:
 So tell your cousin, and bring me word
 What he will do:—But if he will not yield,
 20 Rebuke and dread correction wait on us,
 And they shall do their office. So, be gone;
 We will not now be troubled with reply:
 We offer fair, take it advisedly.

[Exe. Worcester and Vernon.

25 P. Henry. It will not be accepted, on my life:
 The Douglas and the Hotspur both together
 Are confident against the world in arms.

K. Henry. Hence, therefore, every leader to his charge;

30 For, on their answer, we will set on them:
 And God besfriend us, as our cause is just!

[Exe. King, Blunt, and Prince John.

Fal. Hal, if thou see me down in the battle, and bestride me, so; 'tis a point of friendship.

35 P. Henry. Nothing but a colossus can do thee that friendship. Say thy prayers, and farewell.

Fal. I would it were bed-time, Hal, and all well.

P. Henry. Why, thou owest heaven a death.

[Exit Prince Henry.

40 Fal. 'Tis not due yet; I would be loth to pay him before his day. What need I be so forward with him that calls not on me? Well, 'tis no matter: honour pricks me on. Yea, but how if honour prick me off when I come on? how then?
 45 Can honour set to a leg? No. Or an arm? No.
 Or take away the grief of a wound? No. Honour hath no skill in surgery then? No. What is honour?
 A word. What is that word, honour? Air. A trim reckoning!—Who hath it? He that dy'd o'
 50 Wednesday. Doth he feel it? No. Doth he hear it?
 No. Is it insensible then? Yea, to the dead. But will it not live with the living? No. Why? Detraction will not suffer it:—therefore I'll none of it: Honour is a mere scutcheon, and so ends my 55 catechism. [Exit.

S C E N E II.

Hotspur's Camp.

Enter Worcester and Vernon.

60 Wor. O, no, my nephew must not know, Sir
 Richard,

¹ i. e. the injuries done by king Richard in the wantonness of prosperity. ² The cuckow's chicken, who, being hatched and fed by the sparrow, in whose nest the cuckow's egg was laid, grows in time able to devour her nurse. ³ i. e. we stand in opposition to you. ⁴ i. e. exhibited in articles.

The liberal kind offer of the king.

Ver. 'Twere best, he did.

Wor. Then we are all undone.

It is not possible, it cannot be,
The king should keep his word in loving us;
He will suspect us still, and find a time
To punish this offence in other faults:
Suspicion, all our lives, shall be stuck full of eyes:
For treason is but trusted like the fox;
Who, ne'er so tame, so cherish'd, and lock'd up,
Will have a wild trick of his ancestors.
Look how we can, or sad, or merrily,
Interpretation will misquote our looks;
And we shall feed like oxen at a stall,
The better cherish'd, still the nearer death.
My nephew's trespass may be well forgot,
It hath the excuse of youth, and heat of blood;
And an adopted name of privilege,—
A hair-brain'd Hotspur, govern'd by a spleen:
All his offences live upon my head,
And on his father's;—we did train him on;
And, his corruption being ta'en from us,
We, as the spring of all, shall pay for all.
Therefore, good cousin, let not Harry know,
In any case, the offer of the king.

Ver. Deliver what you will, I'll say, 'tis so.
Here comes your cousin.

Enter Hotspur, and Douglas.

Hot. My uncle is return'd,—Deliver up
My lord of Westmoreland.—Uncle, what news?

Wor. The king will bid you battle presently.

Doug. Defy him by the lord of Westmoreland.

Hot. Lord Douglas, go you and tell him so.

Doug. Marry, and shall, and very willingly.

[Exit Douglas.]

Wor. There is no seeming mercy in the king.

Hot. Did you beg any? God forbid!

Wor. I told him gently of our grievances,
Of his oath-breaking; which he mended thus,—
By now forswearing that he is forsworn.
He calls us, rebels, traitors; and will scourge
With haughty arms this hateful name in us.

Re-enter Douglas.

Doug. Arm, gentlemen, to arms! for I have thrown

A brave defiance in king Henry's teeth,
And Westmoreland, that was engag'd¹, did bear it,
Which cannot chuse but bring him quickly on.

Wor. The prince of Wales stept forth before the king,

And, nephew, challeng'd you to single fight.

Hot. O, would the quarrel lay upon our heads;
And that no man might draw short breath to-day,
But I and Harry Monmouth! Tell me, tell me,
How shew'd his tasking? seem'd it in contempt?

Ver. No, by my soul; I never in my life
Did hear a challenge urg'd more modestly,
Unless a brother should a brother dare
To gentle exercise and proof of arms.
He gave you all the duties of a man;

Trimm'd up your praises with a princely tongue;
Spoke your deservings like a chronicle;
Making you ever better than his praise,
By still dispraising praise, valu'd with you:

5 And, which became him like a prince indeed,
He made a blushing cital² of himself;
And chid his truant youth with such a grace,
As if he master'd³ there a double spirit,
Of teaching, and of learning, instantly.
10 There did he pause: But let me tell the world,—
If he out-live the envy of this day,
England did never owe so sweet a hope,
So much misconstrued in his wantonness.

Hot. Cousin, I think, thou art enamoured.
15 Upon his follies; never did I hear
Of any prince so wild, at liberty⁴:—
But, be he as he will, yet once ere night
I will embrace him with a soldier's arm,
That he shall shrink under my courtesy.—
20 Arm, arm, with speed:—And, fellows, soldiers,
friends,

Better consider what you have to do,
Than I, that have not well the gift of tongue,
Can lift your blood up with persuasion.

25 Enter a Messenger.

Mes. My lord, here are letters for you.

Hot. I cannot read them now.—

O gentlemen, the time of life is short;
To spend that shortness basely, were too long,
30 If life did ride upon a dial's point,
Still ending at the arrival of an hour.

An if we live, we live to tread on kings;
If die, brave death, when princes die with us!
Now for our consciences,—the arms are fair, 35 When the intent for bearing them is just.

Enter another Messenger.

Mes. My lord, prepare; the king comes on apace.

Hot. I thank him, that he cuts me from my tale,
40 For I profess not talking; Only this—
Let each man do his best: and here draw I
A sword, whose temper I intend to stain
With the best blood that I can meet withal
In the adventure of this perilous day.
45 Now,—*Esperance*⁵!—Percy!—and set on.—
Sound all the lofty instruments of war,
And by that music let us all embrace:
For, heaven to earth⁶, some of us never shall
A second time do such a courtesy.

50 [The trumpet sounds. They embrace, then exc.]

SCENE III.

Plain near Shrewsbury.

The King entereth with his power. Alarum to the battle. Then enter Douglas and Blunt.

Blunt. What is thy name, that in the battle thus Thou crossest me? what honour dost thou seek Upon my head?

Doug. Know then, my name is Douglas;
60 And I do haunt thee in the battle thus,

¹ Engag'd is deliver'd as an hostage. ² i. e. recital. ³ i. e. was master of. ⁴ i. e. of any prince who played such pranks, and was not confined as a madman. ⁵ This was the word of battle on Percy's side, and has always been the motto of the Percy family. Esperance en Dieu is the present motto of the duke of Northumberland, and has been long used by his predecessors. ⁶ i. e. one might wager heaven to earth.

Because some tell me that thou art a king.

Blunt. They tell thee true. [bought]

Doug. The lord of Stafford dear to-day hath Thy likeness; for, instead of thee, king Harry,
This sword hath ended him: so shall it thee,
Unless thou yield thee as my prisoner.

Blunt. I was not born a yielder, thou proud Scot:
And thou shall find a king that will revenge
Lord Stafford's death.

Fight, Blunt is slain. Enter Hotspur.

Hot. O Douglas, hadst thou fought at Holmedon
I never had triumph'd upon a Scot. [thus,

Doug. All's done, all's won; here breathless lies

Hot. Where? [the king.

Doug. Here. [well:

Hot. This, Douglas? no, I know his face full
A gallant knight he was, his name was Blunt;
Semblably¹ furnish'd like the king himself.

Doug. A fool go with thy soul, whither it goes!
A borrow'd title hast thou bought too dear.

Why didst thou tell me that thou wert a king?

Hot. The king hath many marching in his coats.

Doug. Now by my sword I will kill all his coats.
I'll murder all his wardrobe, piece by piece,
Until I meet the king.

Hot. Up, and away:

Our soldiers stand full fairly for the day. [Exe.

Other alarums. Enter Falstaff.

Fal. Though I could 'scape shot-free² at London,
I fear the shot here; here's no scoring, but upon the pate.—Soft! who art thou? Sir Walter Blunt;—there's honour for you: Here's no vanity!
—I am as hot as molten lead, and as heavy too: Heaven keep lead out of me! I need no more weight than my own bowels.—I have led my raggamuffins where they are pepper'd: there's not three of my hundred and fifty left alive; and they are for the town's end, to beg during life.
But who comes here?

Enter Prince Henry.

P. Henry. What, stand'st thou idle here? lend me thy sword:

Many a nobleman lies stark and stiff
Under the hoofs of vaunting enemies,
Whose deaths are unreveng'd: lend me thy sword.

Fal. O Hal, I pr'ythee give me leave to breathe awhile.—Turk Gregory⁴ never did such deeds in arms, as I have done this day. I have paid Percy,
I have made him sure⁵.

P. Henry. He is, indeed; and living to kill thee.
I pr'ythee, lend me thy sword.

Fal. Nay, Hal, if Percy be alive, thou get'st not my sword; but take my pistol, if thou wilt.

P. Henry. Give it me: What, is it in the case?

Fal. Ay, Hal; 'tis hot, 'tis hot: there's that will sack a city. [The Prince draws out a bottle of sack.]

P. Henry. What, is it time to jest and dally now?

[Throws it at him, and exit.

Fal. If Percy be alive, I'll pierce him. If he do come in my way, so: if he do not,—if I come in his, willingly, let him make a carbonado⁷ of me.
I like not such grinning honours as Sir Walter hath:
Give me life: which if I can save, so; if not, honour comes unlook'd for, and there's an end. [Exit.

SCENE IV.

Another part of the Field.

Alarums. Excursions. Enter the King, the Prince, Lord John of Lancaster, and the Earl of Westmoreland.

K. Henry. Harry, withdraw thyself; thou bleed'st⁸ too much:—

Lord John of Lancaster, go you with him.

Lan. Not I, my lord, unless I did bleed too.

P. Henry. I beseech your majesty, make up,
Lest your retirement do amaze your friends.

K. Henry. I will do so:—

My lord of Westmoreland, lead him to his tent.

West. Come, my lord, I will lead you to your tent.

P. Henry. Lead me, my lord? I do not need your help:

And heaven forbid, a shallow scratch should drive
The prince of Wales from such a field as this;
Where stain'd nobility lies trodden on,
And rebels' arms triumph in massacres!

Lan. We breathe too long:—Come, cousin
Westmoreland,

Our duty this way lies; for heaven's sake, come.
[Exeunt P. John and West.

P. Henry. By heaven, thou hast deceiv'd me,
Lancaster,

I did not think thee lord of such a spirit:

Before, I lov'd thee as a brother, John;

But now, I do respect thee as my soul.

K. Henry. I saw him hold lord Percy at the point,
With lustier maintenance than I did look for
Of such an ungrown warrior.

P. Henry. O, this boy
Lends mettle to us all! [Exit.

Enter Douglas.

Doug. Another king! they grow like Hydra's heads:

I am the Douglas, fatal to all those
That wear those colours on them.—What art thou,
That counterfeit'st the person of a king?

K. Henry. The king himself: who, Douglas,
grieves at heart,

So many of his shadows thou hast met,
And not the very king. I have two boys seek Percy, and thyself, about the field:

But, seeing thou fall'st on me so luckily,
I will assay thee; so defend thyself.

¹ i. e. in resemblance, alike. ² A play upon shot, as it means the part of a reckoning, and a missive weapon discharged from artillery. ³ In our author's time, the negative, in common speech, was used to design, ironically, the excess of a thing. ⁴ Meaning Gregory the Seventh, called Hildebrand. This furious friar surmounted almost invincible obstacles to deprive the emperor of his right of investiture of bishops, which his predecessors had long attempted in vain. Fox, in his History, hath made this Gregory so odious, that I don't doubt but the good Protestants of that time were well pleased to hear him thus characterized, as uniting the attributes of their two great enemies, the Turk and Pope, in one. ⁵ Sure has two significations—certainly disposed of, and safe. Falstaff uses it in the former sense; the prince replies to it in the latter. ⁶ A quibble on the word sack. ⁷ A carbonado is a piece of meat cut cross-wise for the gridiron. ⁸ History says, the prince was wounded in the eye by an arrow.

Doug. I fear thou art another counterfeit;
And yet, in faith, thou bear'st thee like a king:
But mine, I am sure thou art, whoe'er thou be,
And thus I win thee.

[They fight; the King being in danger, enter Prince Henry.]

P. Henry. Hold up thy head, vile Scot, or thou art like

Never to hold it up again! The spirits
Of valiant Snirley, Stafford, Blunt, are in my arms: 10
It is the prince of Wales that threatens thee;
Who never promiseth but he means to pay.—

[They fight; Douglas flieth.]

Cheerly, my lord; how fares your grace?—
Sir Nicholas Gawsey hath for succour sent,
And so hath Clifton; I'll to Clifton straight.

K. Henry. Stay, and breathe a-while:—
Thou hast redeem'd thy lost opinion:
And shew'd, thou makest some tender of my life,
In this fair rescue thou hast brought to me.

P. Henry. O heaven; they did me too much injury,

That ever said, I hearken'd for your death.
If it were so, I might have let alone
The insulting hand of Douglas over you;
Which would have been as speedy in your end,
As all the poisonous potions in the world,
And sav'd the treacherous labour of your sort:

K. Henry. Make up to Clifton, I'll to Nicholas Gawsey. [Exit.]

Enter Hotspur.

Hot. If I mistake not, thou art Harry Monmouth.

P. Henry. Thou speak'st as if I would deny my name.

Hot. My name is Harry Percy.

P. Henry. Why, then I see
A very valiant rebel of that name.
I am the prince of Wales; and think not, Percy,
To share with me in glory any more:
Two stars keep not their motion in one sphere;
Nor can one England brook a double reign,
Of Harry Percy, and the prince of Wales.

Hot. Nor shall it, Harry, for the hour is come
To end the one of us; And would to heaven,
Thy name in arms were now as great as mine!

P. Henry. I'll make it greater, ere I part from thee;

And all the budding honours on thy crest
I'll crop, to make a garland for my head.

Hot. I can no longer brook thy vanities. [Fight.]

Enter Falstaff.

Fal. Well said, Hal! to it, Hal!—Nay, you shall find no boy's play here, I can tell you.

Enter Douglas; he fights with Falstaff, who falls down as if he were dead. Percy is wounded, and falls.

Hot. O, Harry, thou hast robb'd me of my youth:
I better brook the loss of brittle life,
Than those proud titles thou hast won of me;

They wound my thoughts, worse than thy sword
my flesh:—

But thought's the slave of life, and life time's fool;
And time, that takes survey of all the world,
Must have a stop¹. O, I could prophesy,
But that the earthy and cold hand of death
Lies on my tongue:—No, Percy, thou art dust,
And food for— [Dies.]

P. Henry. For worms, brave Percy: Fare thee well, great heart!—

I'll-weav'd ambition, how much art thou shrunk!
When that this body did contain a spirit,
A kingdom for it was too small a bound;
But now two paces of the vilest earth 15
Is room enough:—This earth, that bears thee dead,
Bears not alive so stout a gentleman.

If thou wert sensible of courtesy,
I should not make so great a show of zeal:—
But let my favours² hide thy mangled face;
And, even in thy behalf, I'll thank myself
For doing these fair rights of tenderness.
Adieu, and take thy praise with thee to heaven!
Thy ignomy sleep with thee in the grave,
But not remember'd in thy epitaph!

[He sees Falstaff on the ground.]

What! old acquaintance! could not all this flesh
Keep in a little life? Poor Jack, farewell!
I could have better spar'd a better man.

O, I should have a heavy miss of thee,

If I were much in love with vanity.

Death hath not struck so fat a deer to-day,
Though many dearer, in this bloody fray:—

Imbowell'd will I see thee by and by;

'Till then, in blood by noble Percy lie. [Exit.]

Falstaff, rising slowly.

Fal. Imbowell'd! if thou imbowel me to-day,
I'll give you leave to powder me³, and eat me too, to-morrow. 'Sblood, 'twas time to counterfeit, or that hot termagant Scot had paid me scot and lot too. Counterfeit! I lie, I am no counterfeit: To die, is to be a counterfeit; for he is but the counterfeit of a man, who hath not the life of a man; but to counterfeit dying, when a man thereby liveth, is to be no counterfeit, but the true and perfect image of life indeed. The better part of valour is—discretion; in the which better part,
I have sav'd my life. I am afraid of this gunpowder Percy, though he be dead: How if he should counterfeit too, and rise? I am afraid, he would prove the better counterfeit. Therefore I'll make him sure; yea, and I'll swear I kill'd him.—
Why may he not rise, as well as I? Nothing confutes me but eyes, and nobody sees me.—
Therefore, sirrah, with a new wound in your thigh, come you along with me.

[Takes Hotspur on his back.]

Re-enter Prince Henry, and John of Lancaster.

P. Henry. Come, brother John, full bravely hast thou flesh'd

¹ Dr. Johnson comments on this passage thus: "Hotspur in his last moments endeavours to console himself. The glory of the prince wounds his thoughts; but thought, being dependent on life, must cease with it, and will soon be at an end. Life, on which thought depends, is itself of no great value, being the fool and sport of time; of time, which, with all its dominion over sublunary things, must itself at last be stopped." ² See note³, p. 461. ³ To powder is to salt.

Thy maiden sword.

Lan. But, soft! who have we here?

Did you not tell me, this fat man was dead?

P. Henry. I did; I saw him dead, breathless and bleeding

Upon the ground.—

Art thou alive? or is it fantasy

That plays upon our eye-sight? I pr'ythee, speak;

We will not trust our eyes, without our ears:

Thou art not what thou seem'st.

Fal. No, that's certain; I am not a double man: but if I be not Jack Falstaff, then am I a Jack. There is Percy: [throwing the body down] if your father will do me any honour, so; if not, let him kill the next Percy himself. I look to be either earl or duke, I can assure you.

P. Henry. Why, Percy I kill'd myself, and saw thee dead.

Fal. Didst thou?—Lord, lord, how this world is given to lying!—I grant you, I was down, and out of breath; and so was he: but we rose both at an instant, and fought a long hour by Shrewsbury clock. If I may be believ'd, so: if not, let them, that should reward valour, bear the sin upon their own heads. I'll take it upon my death.
I gave him this wound in the thigh; if the man were alive, and would deny it, I would make him eat a piece of my sword.

Lan. This is the strangest tale that e'er I heard.

P. Henry. This is the strangest fellow, brother John.—

Come, bring your luggage nobly on your back:
For my part, if a lie may do thee grace,
I'll gild it with the happiest terms I have.

[A retreat is sounded.]

The trumpet sounds retreat, the day is ours.

Come, brother, let's to the highest of the field,

To see what friends are living, who are dead.

[Exeunt.]

Fal. I'll follow, as they say, for reward. He that rewards me, heaven reward him! If I do grow great, I'll grow less; for I'll purge, and leave sack, and live cleanly, as a nobleman should do.

[Exit, bearing off the body.]

SCENE V.

Another part of the Field.

The trumpets sound. Enter King Henry, Prince of Wales, Lord John of Lancaster, Earl of Westmoreland, with Worcester, and Vernon, prisoners.

K. Henry. Thus ever did rebellion find rebuke.—

Ill-spirited Worcester! did we not send grace,
5 Pardon, and terms of love to all of you?

And would'st thou turn our offers contrary?

Misuse the tenor of thy kinsman's trust?

Three knights upon our party slain to-day,

A noble earl, and many a creature else,

10 Had been alive this hour,

If, like a christian, thou hadst truly borne
Betwixt our armies true intelligence.

Wor. What I have done, my safety urg'd me to;
And I embrace this fortune patiently,

15 Since not to be avoided it falls on me. [Non too;]

K. Henry. Bear Worcester to the death, and Ver-
Other offenders we will pause upon.—

[Exeunt Worcester and Vernon, guarded.]
How goes the field? [he saw]

20 P. Henry. The noble Scot, lord Douglas, when

The fortune of the day quite turn'd from him,

The noble Percy slain, and all his men

Upon the foot of fear,—fled with the rest;

And, falling from a hill, he was so bruis'd,

25 That the pursuers took him. At my tent

The Douglas is; and I beseech your grace,
I may dispose of him.

K. Henry. With all my heart. [you]

P. Henry. Then, brother John of Lancaster, to 30 This honourable bounty shall belong:

Go to the Douglas, and deliver him

Up to his pleasure, ransomless, and free:

His valour, shewn upon our crests to-day,

Hath taught us how to cherish such high deeds,

35 Even in the bosom of our adversaries.

K. Henry. Then this remains,—that we divide our power.—

You, son John, and my cousin Westmoreland, Towards York shall bend you, with your dearest
speed,

40 To meet Northumberland, and the prelate Scroop,

Who, as we hear, are busily in arms:

Myself,—and you, son Harry, will towards Wales,

To fight with Glendower, and the earl of March.

45 Rebellion in this land shall lose his sway,

Meeting the check of such another day:

And since this business so fair is done,

Let us not leave 'till all our own be won. [Exeunt.]

SECOND PART¹ OF KING HENRY IV.

INDUCTION.

Enter Rumour, painted full of tongues.
Rum. OPEN your ears; For which of you will stop
 The vent of hearing, when loud Rumour speaks?
 I, from the orient to the drooping west,
 Making the wind my post-horse, still unfold
 The acts commenced on this ball of earth:
 Upon my tongues continual slanders ride;
 The which in every language I pronounce,
 Stuffing the ears of men with false reports.
 I speak of peace, while covert enmity,
 Under the smile of safety, wounds the world:
 And who but Rumour, who but only I,
 Make fearful musters, and prepar'd defence;
 Whilst the big year, swoln with some other grief,
 Is thought with child by the stern tyrant war,
 And no such matter? Rumour is a pipe
 Blown by surmises, jealousies, conjectures;
 And of so easy and so plain a stop,
 That the blunt monster with uncounted heads,
 The still-discordant wavering multitude,
 Can play upon it. But what need I thus

My well-known body to anatomize
 Among my household? Why is Rumour here?
 I run before king Harry's victory;
 Who, in a bloody field by Shrewsbury,
 5 Hath beaten down young Hotspur and his troops,
 Quenching the flame of bold rebellion
 Even with the rebels' blood. But what mean I
 To speak so true at first? My office is
 To noise abroad,—that Harry Monmouth fell
 10 Under the wrath of noble Hotspur's sword;
 And that the king before the Douglas' rage
 Stoop'd his anointed head as low as death.
 This have I rumour'd through the peasant towns
 Between that royal field of Shrewsbury
 15 And this worm-eaten hold of ragged stone,
 Where Hotspur's father, old Northumberland,
 Lies crafty-sick: the posts come tiring on,
 And not a man of them brings other news
 Than they have learn'd of me; From Rumour's
 20 tongues
 They bring smooth comforts false, worse than true wrongs. [Exit.]

ACT I.

SCENE I.

Northumberland's Castle at Warkworth.

The Porter at the Gate; Enter Lord Bardolph.

Bard. WHO keeps the gate here, ho?—

Where is the earl?

Port. What shall I say you are?

Bard. Tell thou the earl,

That the lord Bardolph doth attend him here.

Port. His lordship is walk'd forth into the orchard;

5 Please it your honour, knock but at the gate,
 And he himself will answer.

¹The transactions comprized in this History take up about nine years. The action commences with the account of Hotspur's being defeated and killed; and closes with the death of king Henry IV. and the coronation of king Henry V.

Enter

Enter Northumberland.

Bard. Here comes the earl.

North. What news, Lord Bardolph? Every minute now

Should be the father of some stratagem:

The times are wild; contention, like a horse
Full of high feeding, madly hath broke loose,
And bears down all before him.

Bard. Noble earl,

I bring you certain news from Shrewsbury.

North. Good, an heaven will!

Bard. As good as heart can wish:

The king is almost wounded to the death;
And, in the fortune of my lord your son,
Prince Harry slain outright: and both the Blunts Kill'd by the hand of Douglas: young prince John,
And Westmoreland, and Stafford, fled the field;
And Harry Monmouth's brawn, the hulk sir John,
Is prisoner to your son: O such a day,
So fought, so follow'd, and so fairly won,
Came not, 'till now, to dignify the times,
Since Cæsar's fortunes.

North. How is this deriv'd?

Saw you the field? came you from Shrewsbury?

Bard. I spake with one, my lord, that came from thence;

A gentleman well bred, and of good name,
That freely rendered me these news for true.

North. Here comes my servant Travers, whom
I sent

On Tuesday last to listen after news.

Bard. My lord, I over-rode him on the way;

And he is furnish'd with no certainties,
More than he haply may retail from me.

Enter Travers.

North. Now, Travers, what good tidings come
with you?

Tra. My lord, Sir John Umfrevile turn'd me back
With joyful tidings; and, being better hors'd,
Out-rode me. After him, came, spurring hard,
A gentleman almost forspent¹ with speed,
That stopp'd by me to breathe his bloody'd horse:
He ask'd the way to Chester; and of him
I did demand, what news from Shrewsbury.
He told me, that rebellion had bad luck,
And that young Harry Percy's spur was cold:
With that, he gave his able horse the head,
And, bending forward, struck his armed heels
Against the panting sides of his poor jade²
Up to the rowel-head; and, starting so,
He seem'd in running to devour the way,
Staying no longer question.

North. Ha!—Again,

Said he, young Harry Percy's spur was cold?
Of Hotspur, coldspur? that rebellion
Had met ill luck?

Bard. My lord, I'll tell you what;—

If my young lord your son have not the day,
Upon mine honour, for a silken point³

I'll give my barony: never talk of it.

North. Why should the gentleman, that rode by Travers,

Give then such instances of loss?

Bard. Who, he?

He was some hilding⁴ fellow, that had stol'n
The horse he rode on; and, upon my life,
Spoke at adventure. Look, here comes more news.

Enter Morton.

North. Yea, this man's brow, like to a title-leaf,
Foretells the nature of a tragick volume:

So looks the strond, whereon the imperious flood
Hath left a witness'd usurpation.—

Say, Morton, did'st thou come from Shrewsbury?

Mort. I ran from Shrewsbury, my noble lord;
Where hateful death put on his ugliest mask,
To fright our party.

North. How doth my son and brother?

Thou tremblest; and the whiteness in thy cheek,
Is apter than thy tongue to tell thy errand.

North. Even such a man, so faint, so spiritless,
So dull, so dead in look, so woe-begone⁵,

Drew Priam's curtain in the dead of night,
And would have told him, half his Troy was burn'd:

But Priam found the fire, ere he his tongue,
And I my Percy's death, ere thou report'st it.

This would'st thou say, — Your son did thus, and thus;
Your brother, thus; so fought the noble Douglas;

Stopping my greedy ear with their bold deeds:
But in the end, to stop mine ear indeed,

Thou hast a sigh to blow away this praise,
Ending with—brother, son, and all are dead.

Mort. Douglas is living, and your brother, yet:

But for my lord your son, —

North. Why, he is dead.

See, what a ready tongue suspicion hath!

He, that but fears the thing he would not know,
Hath, by instinct, knowledge from other's eyes,

That, what he fear'd is chanc'd. Yet speak, Morton;
Tell thou thy earl, his divination lies;

And I will take it as a sweet disgrace,
And make thee rich for doing me such wrong.

Mort. You are too great to be by me gainsaid:

Your spirit is too true, your fears too certain.

North. Yet, for all this, say not that Percy's dead.
I see a strange confession in thine eye:

Thou shak'st thy head; and hold'st it fear⁶, or sin,
To speak the truth. If he be slain, say so:

The tongue offends not, that reports his death;
And he doth sin, that doth belie the dead;

Not he, which says the dead is not alive.
Yet the first bringer of unwelcome news

Hath but a losing office; and his tongue
Sounds ever after as a sullen bell,

Remember'd knolling a departing friend.

Bard. I cannot think, my lord, your son is dead.

Mort. I am sorry, I should force you to believe That, which I would to heaven I had not seen:

But these mine eyes saw him in bloody state,

¹ To for spend is to waste, to exhaust. ² Jade seems anciently to have signified that we now call a hackney; a beast employed in drudgery, opposed to a horse kept for show, or to be rid by its master. Poor jade here means the horse wearied with his journey. ³ A point is a string tagged, or lace.

⁴ For hilderling, i. e. base, degenerate. ⁵ Mr. Steevens observes, that in the time of our poet, the title-page to King Henry IV. as well as every intermediate leaf, was totally blank. ⁶ i. e. so far gone in woe.

⁷ Fear for

Render

Rend'ring faint quittance¹, wearied and outbreath'd, [down

To Harry Monmouth; whose swift wrath beat
The never-daunted Percy to the earth,
From whence with life he never more sprung up.
In few, his death (whose spirit lent a fire
Even to the dullest peasant in his camp)
Being bruited once, took fire and heat away
From the best temper'd courage in his troops:
For from his metal was his party steel'd;
Which once in him abated², all the rest
Turn'd on themselves, like dull and heavy lead.
And as the thing that's heavy in itself,
Upon enforcement, flies with greatest speed;
So did our men, heavy in Hotspur's loss,
Lend to this weight such lightness with their fear,
That arrows fled not swifter toward their aim,
Than did our soldiers, aiming at their safety,
Fly from the field: then was that noble Worcester
Too soon ta'en prisoner: and that furious Scot,
The bloody Douglas, whose well-labouring sword,
Had three times slain the appearance of the king:
'Gan vail his stomach³, and did grace the shame
Of those that turn'd their backs; and, in his flight,
Stumbling in fear, was took. The sum of all
Is,—that the king hath won; and hath sent out
A speedy power, to encounter you, my lord,
Under the conduct of young Lancaster,
And Westmoreland: this is the news at full.

North. For this I shall have time enough to mourn.
In poison there is physick; and these news
Having been well, that would have made me sick,
Being sick, have in some measure made me well:
And as the wretch, whose fever-weaken'd joints,
Like strengthless hinges, buckle⁴ under life,
Impatient of his fit, breaks like a fire
Out of his keeper's arms; even so my limbs,
Weaken'd with grief, being now enrag'd with grief,
Are thrice themselves: hence therefore, thou nice crutch;

A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand: and hence, thou sickly quiff;
Thou art a guard too wanton for the head,
Which princes, flush'd with conquest, aim to hit.
Now bind my brows with iron: And approach
The rugged'st hour that time and spight dare bring,
To frown upon the enrag'd Northumberland!
Let heaven kiss earth! Now let not nature's hand
Keep the wild flood confin'd! let order die!
And let this world no longer be a stage,
To feed contention in a lingering act;
But let one spirit of the first-born Cain
Reign in all bosoms, that, each heart being set
On bloody courses, the rude scene may end,
And darkness be the burier of the dead! [my lord: 55

Bard. This strained passion doth you wrong,
Sweet earl, divorce not wisdom from your honour.

Mort. The lives of all your loving complices
Lean on your health; the which, if you give o'er

To stormy passion, must perforce decay.
You cast the event of war, my noble lord,
And summ'd the account of chance, before you said,—
Let us make head. It was your pre-surmise,
That, in the dole of blows⁵ your son might drop:
You knew, he walk'd o'er perils, on an edge
More likely to fall in, than to get o'er:
You were advis'd his flesh was capable
Of wounds, and scars; and that his forward spirit
Would lift him where most trade of danger rang'd;
Yet did you say,—Go forth; and none of this,
Though strongly apprehended, could restrain
The stiff-born action: What hath then befallen,
Or what hath this bold enterprize brought forth,
More than that being which was like to be?

Bard. We all, that are engaged to this loss,
Knew that we ventur'd on such dangerous seas,
That, if we wrought out life, 'twas ten to one:
And yet we ventur'd, for the gain propos'd
Choak'd the respect of likely peril fear'd;
And, since we are o'erset, venture again.
Come, we will all put forth; body, and goods.

Mort. 'Tis more than time: And, my most noble lord,

I hear for certain, and do speak the truth,—
The gentle archbishop of York is up,
With well appointed powers; he is a man,
Who with a double surety binds his followers.
My lord your son had only but the corps,
But shadows, and the shews of men, to fight;
For that same word, rebellion, did divide
The action of their bodies from their souls;
And they did fight with queasiness, constrain'd,
As men drink potions; that their weapons only
Seem'd on our side, but for their spirits and souls,
This word, rebellion, it had froze them up,
As fish are in a pond: But now the bishop
Turns insurrection to religion:
Suppos'd sincere and holy in his thoughts,
He's follow'd both with body and with mind;
And doth enlarge his rising with the blood
Of fair king Richard, scrap'd from Pomfret stones:
Derives from heaven his quarrel, and his cause;
Tells them, he doth bestride a bleeding land,
Gasping for life under great Bolingbroke;
And more and less⁶ do flock to follow him.

North. I knew of this before; but, to speak truth,

This present grief had wip'd it from my mind.
Go in with me; and counsel every man
The aptest way for safety, and revenge:
Get posts, and letters, and make friends with speed;
Never so few, and never yet more need. [Exe.

S C E N E II.

A street in London.

Enter Sir John Falstaff, with his page bearing his sword and buckler.

Fal. Sirrah, you giant! what says the doctor to my water?

¹ Quittance is return. By faint quittance is meant a faint return of blows. ² i. e. reduced to a lower temper, or, as it is usually called, let down. ³ i. e. began to fall his courage, to let his spirits sink under his fortune. ⁴ i. e. bend, yield to pressure. ⁵ The dole of blows is the distribution of blows; dole originally signifying the portion of alms (consisting either of meat or money) given away at the door of a nobleman. ⁶ That is, stands over his country to defend her as she lies bleeding on the ground. ⁷ i. e. greater and less.

Page. He said, sir, the water itself was a good healthy water: but, for the party that owed it, he might have more diseases than he knew for.

Fal. Men of all sorts take a pride to gird¹ at me: The brain of this foolish-compounded clay, 5 man, is not able to invent any thing that tends to laughter, more than I invent, or is invented on me: I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. I do here walk before thee, like a sow, that hath overwhelmed all her litter but one. If the prince put thee into my service for any other reason than to set me off, why then I have no judgment. Thou whoreson² mandrake, thou art fitter to be worn in my cap, than to wait at my heels. I was never mann'd³ with an agate 15 'till now: but I will neither set you in gold nor silver, but in vile apparel, and send you back again to your master, for a jewel; the juvenal,⁴ the prince your master, whose chin is not yet fledg'd. I will sooner have a beard grow in the palm of my hand, than he shall get one on his cheek; yet he will not stick to say, his face is a face-royal. Heaven may finish it when he will, it is not a hair amiss yet: he may keep it still as a face-royal, for a barber shall never earn sixpence out of it⁵; and yet he will be crowing, as if he had writ man ever since his father was a batchelor. He may keep his own grace, but he is almost out of mine, I can assure him.——What said master Dombledon about the sattin for my short cloak, and slops? 25

Page. He said, sir, you should procure him better assurance than Bardolph: he would not take his bond and yours; he lik'd not the security.

Fal. Let him be damn'd like the glutton: may his tongue be hotter!—A whoreson Achitophel! 35 a rascally yea-forsooth knave! to bear a gentleman in hand⁶, and then stand upon security!—The whoreson smooth-pates do now wear nothing but high shoes, and bunches of keys at their girdles; and if a man is thorough with them⁷ in honest taking up, then they must stand upon—security. I had as lief they would put ratsbane in my mouth, as offer to stop it with security. I look'd he should have sent me two-and-twenty yards of sattin, as I am a true knight, and he sends me security. Well, 45 he may sleep in security; for he hath the horn of abundance, and the lightness of his wife shines through it: and yet cannot he see, though he have his own lanthorn to light him.——Where's Bardolph? 50

Page. He's gone into Smithfield to buy your worship a horse.

Fal. I bought him in Paul's⁸, and he'll buy me a horse in Smithfield: If I could get me but a wife in the stews, I were mann'd, hors'd, and wiv'd.

Enter the Lord Chief Justice,⁹ and Servants.

Page. Sir, here comes the nobleman that committed the prince for striking him about Bardolph.

Fal. Wait close, I will not see him.

Ch. Just. What's he that goes there?

Serv. Falstaff, an't please your lordship.

Ch. Just. He that was in question for the robbery?

Serv. He, my lord: but he hath since done good service at Shrewsbury; and, as I hear, is now going with some charge to the lord John of Lancaster.

Ch. Just. What, to York? Call him back again.

Serv. Sir John Falstaff!

Fal. Boy, tell him I am deaf.

Page. You must speak louder, my master is deaf.

Ch. Just. I am sure he is, to the hearing of any thing good.—Go, pluck him by the elbow; I must speak with him.

Serv. Sir John,——

Fal. What! a young knave, and beg! Is there not wars? is there not employment? Doth not the king lack subjects? do not the rebels want soldiers? Though it be a shame to be on any side but one, it is a worse shame to beg than to be on the worst side, were it worse than the name of rebellion can tell how to make it.

Serv. You mistake me, sir.

Fal. Why, sir, did I say you were an honest man? Setting my knighthood and my soldiership aside, I had lied in my throat if I had said so.

Serv. I pray you, sir, then set your knighthood and your soldiership aside; and give me leave to tell you, you lie in your throat, if you say I am any other than an honest man.

Fal. I give thee leave to tell me so! I lay aside that which grows to me! If thou get'st any leave of me, hang me; if thou tak'st leave, thou wert better be hang'd: You hunt-counter¹⁰, hence! 45 avaunt!

Serv. Sir, my lord would speak with you.

Ch. Just. Sir John Falstaff, a word with you.

Fal. My good lord!—God give your lordship good time of day. I am glad to see your lordship abroad: I heard say your lordship was sick: I hope, your lordship goes abroad by advice. Your lordship, though not clean past your youth, hath yet some smack of age in you, some relish of the

¹ i. e. to gibe. ² Mandrake is a root supposed to have the shape of a man. ³ That is, I never before had an agate for my man. Our author alludes to the little figures cut in *agate*s and other hard stones, for seals; and therefore Falstaff says, I will set you neither in gold nor silver. ⁴ i. e. the young man. ⁵ Mr. Steevens thinks, "this quibbling allusion is to the English real, rial, or royal; and that the poet seems to mean, that a barber can no more earn sixpence by his face-royal, than by the face stamped on the coin called a royal; the one requiring as little shaving as the other." ⁶ That is, to keep a gentleman in expectation. ⁷ To be thorough seems to be the same with the present phrase to be in with (in debt) a tradesman. ⁸ At that time the resort of idle people, cheats, and knights of the post. ⁹ This judge was Sir William Gascoigne, chief justice of the king's-bench. He died December, 17, 1413, and was buried in Harwood church, in Yorkshire. ¹⁰ That is, blunderer.

saltness of time; and I most humbly beseech your lordship, to have a reverent care of your health.

Ch. Just. Sir John, I sent for you before your expedition to Shrewsbury.

Fal. If it please your lordship, I hear his majesty is return'd with some discomfort from Wales.

Ch. Just. I talk not of his majesty:—You would not come when I sent for you.

Fal. And I hear moreover, his highness is fallen into this same whoreson apoplexy.

Ch. Just. Well, heaven mend him! I pray, let me speak with you.

Fal. This apoplexy is, as I take it, a kind of lethargy, an't please your lordship; a kind of sleeping in the blood, a whoreson tingling.

Ch. Just. What tell you me of it? be it as it is.

Fal. It hath its original from much grief; from study, and perturbation of the brain: I have read the cause of his effects in Galen; it is a kind of deafness.

Ch. Just. I think you are fallen into the disease; for you hear not what I say to you.

Fal. Very well, my lord, very well: rather, an't please you, it is the disease of not listening, the malady of not marking, that I am troubled withal.

Ch. Just. To punish you by the heels, would amend the attention of your ears; and I care not if I do become your physician.

Fal. I am as poor as Job, my lord; but not so patient: your lordship may minister the potion of imprisonment to me, in respect of poverty; but how I should be your patient to follow your prescriptions, the wise may make some dram of a scruple, or, indeed, a scruple itself.

Ch. Just. I sent for you, when there were matters against you for your life, to come speak with me.

Fal. As I was then advised by my learned counsel in the laws of this land-service, I did not come.

Ch. Just. Well, the truth is, Sir John, you live in great infamy.

Fal. He that buckles him in my belt, cannot live in less.

Ch. Just. Your means are very slender, and your waste great.

Fal. I would it were otherwise; I would my means were greater, and my waist slenderer.

Ch. Just. You have mis-led the youthful prince.

Fal. The young prince hath mis-led me: I am the fellow with the great belly, and he my dog¹.

Ch. Just. Well, I am loth to gall a new-heal'd wound; your day's service at Shrewsbury hath a little gilded over your night's exploit on Gads-hill: you may thank the unquiet time for your quiet o'er-posting that action.

Fal. My lord?

Ch. Just. But since all is well, keep it so: wake not a sleeping wolf.

Fal. To wake a wolf, is as bad as to smell a fox.

Ch. Just. What! you are as a candle, the better part burnt out.

Fal. A wassel² candle, my lord; all tallow: but if I did say of wax, my growth would approve the truth.

Ch. Just. There is not a white hair on your face, but should have his effect of gravity.

Fal. His effect of gravy, gravy, gravy.

Ch. Just. You follow the young prince up and down, like his ill angel.

Fal. Not so, my lord; your ill angel is light; but, I hope, he that looks upon me, will take me without weighing: and yet, in some respects, I grant, I cannot go, I cannot tell³: Virtue is of so little regard in these coster-monger times⁴, that true valour is turn'd bear-herd: Pregnancy⁵ is made a tapster, and hath his quick wit wasted in giving reckonings: all the other gifts appertinent to man, as the malice of this age shapes them, are not worth a gooseberry. You, that are old, consider not the capacities of us that are young; you measure the heat of our livers with the bitterness of your galls: and we that are in the vaward of our youth, I must confess, are wags too.

Ch. Just. Do you set down your name in the scrawl of youth, that are written down old with all the characters of age? Have you not a moist eye? a dry hand? a yellow cheek? a white beard? a decreasing leg? an increasing belly? Is not your voice broken? your wind short? your chin double? your wit single? and every part about you blasted with antiquity⁶? and will you yet call yourself young? Fie, fie, fie, Sir John!

Fal. My lord, I was born about three of the clock in the afternoon, with a white head, and something a round belly. For my voice,—I have lost it with hallowing and singing of anthems. To approve my youth further, I will not: the truth is, I am only old in judgment and understanding; and he that will caper with me for a thousand marks, let him lend me the money, and have at him. For the box o' the ear that the prince gave you,—he gave it like a rude prince, and you took it like a sensible lord. I have check'd him for it; and the young lion repents: marry, not in ashes, and sack-cloth; but in new silk, and old sack.

Ch. Just. Well, heaven send the prince a better companion!

Fal. Heaven send the companion a better prince! I cannot rid my hands of him.

Ch. Just. Well, the king hath sever'd you and prince Harry: I hear, you are going with lord John of Lancaster, against the archbishop, and the earl of Northumberland,

Fal. Yea; I thank your pretty sweet wit for it. But look you, pray, all you that kiss my lady peace at home, that our armies join not in a hot day; for, by the Lord, I take but two shirts out with me, and I mean not to sweat extraordinarily: if it be a hot day, an I brandish any thing but my bottle, I would I might never spit white again¹. There is not a dangerous action can peep out his head, but I am thrust upon it: Well, I cannot last ever: But it was always yet the trick of our English nation, if they have a good thing, to make it too common. If you will needs say, I am an old man, you should give me rest. I would to God, my name were not so terrible to the enemy as it is. I were better to be eaten to death with a rust, than to be scour'd to nothing with perpetual motion.

¹ Dr. Johnson says, he does not understand this joke; that dogs lead the blind, but why does a dog lead the fat? To which Dr. Farmerr replies, "If the Fellow's great Belly prevented him from seeing his way, he would want a dog, as well as a blind man." ² A wassel candle is a large candle lighted up at a feast. ³ Meaning, I cannot pass current.

Ch. Just. Well, be honest, be honest; And heaven bless your expedition!

Fal. Will your lordship lend me a thousand pound to furnish me forth?

Ch. Just. Not a penny, not a penny; you are too impatient to bear crosses². Fare you well: Commend me to my cousin Westmoreland. [Exit.]

Fal. If I do, fillip me with a three-man beetle³.—A man can no more separate age and covetousness, than he can part young limbs and lechery: but the gout galls the one, and the pox pinches the other; and so both the degrees prevent⁴ my curses.—Boy!—

Page. Sir?

Fal. What money is in my purse?

Page. Seven groats and two-pence.

Fal. I can get no remedy against this consumption of the purse: borrowing only lingers and lingers it out, but the disease is incurable.—Go bear this letter to my lord of Lancaster; this to the prince; this to the earl of Westmoreland; and this to old mistress Ursula, whom I have weekly sworn to marry since I perceiv'd the first white hair on my chin: About it; you know where to find me. [Exit Page.] A pox of this gout! or, a gout to this pox! for the one, or the other, plays the rogue with my great toe. It is no matter, if I do halt; I have the wars for my colour, and my pension shall seem the more reasonable: A good wit will make use of any thing; I will turn diseases to commodity⁵. [Exit.]

S C E N E III.

The Archbishop of York's Palace.

Enter the Archbishop of York, Lord Hastings, Thomas Mowbray, (Earl Marshal) and Lord Bardolph.

York. Thus have you heard our cause, and know our means;

And, my most noble friends, I pray you all, Speak plainly your opinions of our hopes:— And first, lord marshal, what say you to it?

Mowb. I well allow the occasion of our arms; But gladly would be better satisfied, How, in our means, we should advance ourselves To look with forehead bold and big enough

Upon the power and puissance of the king.

Hast. Our present musters grow upon the file To five and twenty thousand men of choice; And our supplies live largely in the hope Of great Northumberland, whose bosom burns With an incensed fire of injuries.

Bard. The question then, lord Hastings, standeth thus;—

Whether our present five and twenty thousand May hold up head without Northumberland.

Hast. With him, we may.

Bard. Ay, marry, there's the point; But if without him we be thought too feeble, My judgment is, we should not step too far Till we had his assistance by the hand:

For, in a theme so bloody-fac'd as this, Conjecture, expectation, and surmise Of aids uncertain, should not be admitted.

York. 'Tis very true, lord Bardolph; for, indeed, It was young Hotspur's case at Shrewsbury.

Bard. It was, my lord; who lin'd himself with hope,

Eating the air on promise of supply, Flattering himself with project of a power Much smaller than the smallest of his thoughts: And so, with great imagination, Proper to madmen, led his powers to death, And, winking, leap'd into destruction.

Hast. But, by your leave, it never yet did hurt, To lay down likelihoods, and forms of hope.

Bard. Yes, in this present quality of war, Indeed of instant action: A cause on foot Lives so in hope, as in an early spring We see the appearing buds; which, to prove fruit, Hope gives not so much warrant, as despair, That frosts will bite them. When we mean to build, We first survey the plot, then draw the model; And when we see the figure of the house, Then must we rate the cost of the erection:

Which if we find outweighs ability, What do we then, but draw anew the model In fewer offices; or, at least, desist To build at all? Much more in this great work, (Which is, almost, to pluck a kingdom down, And set another up) should we survey

The plot of situation, and the model; Consent upon a sure foundation; Question surveyors; know our own estate, How able such a work to undergo, To weigh against his opposite; or else, We fortify in paper, and in figures, Using the names of men instead of men: Like one that draws the model of a house Beyond his power to build it; who, half through, Gives o'er, and leaves his part-created cost A naked subject to the weeping clouds, And waste for churlish winter's tyranny.

Hast. Grant, that our hopes (yet likely of fair birth) Should be still-born, and that we now possess'd The very utmost man of expectation:

¹ i. e. May I never have my stomach inflamed again with liquor; to spit white, being the consequence of inward heat. ² A quibble was probably here intended on the word cross, which meant a coin so called, because stamped with a cross, as well as a disappointment or trouble. ³ A beetle wielded by three men. ⁴ i. e. anticipate my curses. ⁵ i. e. profit, self-interest.

I think, we are a body strong enough,
Even as we are, to equal with the king.

Bard. What! is the king but five and twenty thousand? [Bardolph.

Hast. To us, no more; nay, not so much, lord 5
For his divisions, as the times do brawl,
Are in three heads: one power against the French,
And one against Glendower; perforce, a third
Must take up us: so is the unfirm king
In three divided; and his coffers sound

With hollow poverty and emptiness. [together,
York. That he should draw his several strengths
And come against us in full puissance,
Need not be dreaded.

Hast. If he should do so,
He leaves his back unarm'd, the French and Welsh
Baying him at the heels: never fear that. [ther?

Bard. Who, is it like, should lead his forces hi-

Hast. The duke of Lancaster, and Westmoreland:
Against the Welsh, himself and Harry Monmouth: 20
But who is substituted 'gainst the French,
I have no certain notice.

York. Let us on;
And publish the occasion of our arms.
The commonwealth is sick of their own choice, 25

Their over-greedy love hath surfeited:—

An habitation giddy and unsure

Hath he that buildeth on the vulgar heart.

O thou fond many! with what loud applause

Didst thou beat heaven with blessing Bolingbroke,
Before he was what thou would'st have him be?

And being now trimm'd up in thine own desires,
Thou, beastly feeder, art so full of him,

That thou provok'st thyself to cast him up.

10 So, so, thou common dog, didst thou disgorge

Thy glutton bosom of the royal Richard;

And now thou would'st eat thy dead vomit up,

And howl'st to find it. What trust is in these times?

They that, when Richard liv'd, would have him die,

15 Are now become enamour'd on his grave:

Thou, that threw'st dust upon his goodly head,

When through proud London he came sighing on

After the admired heels of Bolingbroke,

Cry'st now, O earth, give us that king again,

20 And take thou this! O thoughts of men accurst!

Past, and to come, seem best; things present, worst.

Mowb. Shall we go draw our numbers, and set on?

Hast. We are time's subjects, and time bids be gone. [Exeunt.

A C T II.

S C E N E I.

A Street in London.

Enter Hostess; Phang, and his boy, with her; 35
and Snare following.

Host. MASTER Phang, have you enter'd the action?

Phang. It is enter'd.

Host. Where is your yeoman? Is it a lusty yeo- 40 man? will a' stand to it?

Phang. Sirrah, where's Snare?

Host. O Lord, ay; good master Snare.

Snare. Here, here.

Phang. Snare, we must arrest sir John Falstaff. 45

Host. Ay, good master Snare; I have enter'd him and all.

Snare. It may chance cost some of us our lives,
for he will stab.

Host. Alas the day! take heed of him: he stabb'd 50 me in mine own house, and that most beastly: he cares not what mischief he doth, if his weapon be out: he will foil like any devil; he will spare neither man, woman, nor child.

Phang. If I can close with him, I care not for 55 his thrust.

Host. No, nor I neither; I'll be at your elbow.

Phang. An I but fist him once; an he come but within my vice¹;—

Host. I am undone by his going; I warrant you, 60 he's an infinitive thing upon my score:—Good master Phang, hold him sure;—good master Snare, let him not 'scape. He comes continually to Pye-corner, (saving your manhoods) to buy a saddle; and he's indited to dinner to the lubbar's² head in Lumbart-street, to master Smooth's the silkman:

I pray ye, since my exion is enter'd, and my case so openly known to the world, let him be brought in to his answer. A hundred mark is a long loan for a poor lone woman³ to bear: and I have borne, and borne, and borne; and have been fub'd off, and fub'd off, from this day to that day, that it is a shame to be thought on. There is no honesty in such dealing; unless a woman should be made an ass, and a beast, to bear every knave's wrong.—

Enter Sir John Falstaff, Bardolph, and the Page.
Yonder he comes; and that arrant malmsey-nose⁴ knave, Bardolph, with him. Do your offices, do your offices, master Phang, and master Snare;
do me, do me, do me your offices.

Fal. How now? who's mare's dead? what's the matter?

Phang. Sir John, I arrest you at the suit of mistress Quickly.

Fal. Away, varlets!—Draw, Bardolph; cut me off the villain's head; throw the quean in the kennel.

Host. Throw me in the kennel? I'll throw thee in the kennel. Wilt thou? wilt thou? thou bas-

Malmsey wine.

² Perhaps a corruption of the Libbard's-
⁴ That is, red nose, from the effect of tardly rogue!—Murder, murder! O thou honey-suckle¹ villain: wilt thou kill God's officers, and the king's? O thou honey-seed¹ rogue! thou art a honey-seed; a man-queller, and a woman-queller.

Fal. Keep them off, Bardolph.

Phang. A rescue! a rescue!

Host. Good people, bring a rescue or two.—Thou wo't, wo't thou? thou wo't, wo't thou? do, do, thou rogue! thou hemp-seed!

Fal. Away, you scullion! you rampallian²! you fustilarian³! I'll tickle your catastrophe.

Enter the Chief Justice, attended.

Ch. Just. What's the matter? keep the peace here, ho!

Host. Good my lord, be good to me! I beseech you, stand to me!

Ch. Just. How now, Sir John? what are you brawling here?

Doth this become your place, your time, and business?

You should have been well on your way to York.—Stand from him, fellow: Wherefore hang'st thou on him?

Host. O my most worshipfullord, an' please your grace, I am a poor widow of East-cheap, and he is arrested at my suit.

Ch. Just. For what sum?

Host. It is more than for some, my lord; it is for all, all I have: he hath eaten me out of house and home; he hath put all my substance into that fat belly of his:—but I will have some of it out again, or I'll ride thee o' nights, like the mare.

Fal. I think, I am as like to ride the mare, if I have any vantage of ground to get up.

Ch. Just. How comes this, Sir John? Fie! what man of good temper would endure this tempest of exclamation? Are you not ashamed to enforce a poor widow to so rough a course to come by her own?

Fal. What is the gross sum that I owe thee?

Host. Marry, if thou wert an honest man, thyself, and the money too. Thou didst swear to me upon a parcel-gilt goblet⁴, sitting in my Dolphin-chamber, at the round table, by a sea-coal fire, on Wednesday in Whitsun-week, when the prince broke thy head for likening his father to a singing-man of Windsor; thou didst swear to me then, as I was washing thy wound, to marry me, and make me my lady thy wife. Canst thou deny it? Did not goodwife Keech, the butcher's wife, come in then, and call me gossip Quickly? coming in to borrow a mess⁵ of vinegar; telling us, she had a good dish of prawns; whereby thou didst desire to eat some: whereby I told thee, they were ill for a green wound? And didst thou not, when she was gone down stairs, desire me to be no more so familiarly with such poor people; saying, that ere long they should call me madam? And didst thou not kiss me, and bid me fetch thee thirty shillings? I put thee now to thy book-oath; deny it, if thou canst.

Fal. My lord, this is a poor mad soul; and she says, up and down the town, that her eldest son is like you: she hath been in good case, and, the truth is, poverty hath distracted her. But for these foolish officers, I beseech you, I may have redress against them.

Ch. Just. Sir John, Sir John, I am well acquainted with your manner of wrenching the true cause the false way. It is not a confident brow, nor the throng of words that come with such more than impudent sawciness from you, can thrust me from a level consideration; I know you have practis'd upon the easy-yielding spirit of this woman, and made her serve your uses both in purse and person.

Host. Yes, in troth, my lord.

Ch. Just. Pr'ythee peace:—Pay her the debt you owe her, and unpay the villainy you have done her; the one you may do with sterling money, and the other with current repentance.

Fal. My lord, I will not undergo this sneap⁶ without reply. You call honourable boldness, impudent sawciness: if a man will make curt'sy, and say nothing, he is virtuous: No, my lord, my humble duty remember'd, I will not be your suitor; I say to you, I do desire deliverance from these officers, being upon hasty employment in the king's affairs.

Ch. Just. You speak as having power to do wrong: but answer in the effect of your reputation⁷, and satisfy the poor woman.

Fal. Come hither, hostess. [Taking her aside.]

Enter a Messenger.

Ch. Just. Now, master Gower; What news?

Gower. The king, my lord, and Henry prince of Wales are near at hand: the rest the paper tells. [Wales]

Fal. As I am a gentleman,—

Host. Nay, you said so before.

Fal. As I am a gentleman;—Come, no more words of it.

Host. By this heavenly ground I tread on, I must be fain to pawn both my plate; and the tapestry of my dining-chambers.

Fal. Glasses, glasses, is the only drinking: and for thy walls,—a pretty slight drollery, or the story of the prodigal, or the German hunting in water-work⁸, is worth a thousand of these bed-hangings, and these fly-bitten tapestries. Let it be ten pound if thou canst. Come, if it were not for thy humours, there is not a better wench in England. Go, wash thy face, and draw thy action: come, thou must not be in this humour with me; do'st not know me? Come, come, I know thou wast set on to this.

¹ The landlady's corruption of homicidal and homicide. ² Meaning perhaps, you ramping riotous strumpet, speaking to the hostess. ³ Addressing himself to the officer, whose weapon of defence is a cudgel (from fustis, a club), not being entitled to wear a sword. ⁴ parcel-gilt goblet is a goblet only gilt over, not of solid gold. ⁵ A mess seems in those days to have been a common term for a small proportion of any thing belonging to the kitchen. ⁶ Sneap signifies check. ⁷ That is, in a manner suitable to your character. ⁸ i. e. in water colours.

Host. Pray thee, Sir John, let it be but twenty nobles; I am loth to pawn my plate, in good earnest, la.

Fal. Let it alone; I'll make other shift; you'll be a fool still.

Host. Well, you shall have it, though I pawn my gown. I hope, you'll come to supper: You'll pay me all together?

Fal. Will I live?—Go, with her, with her; hook on, hook on. [To the Officers.

Host. Will you have Doll Tear-sheet meet you at supper?

Fal. No more words; let's have her.

[Exeunt Hostess, Bardolph, Officers, &c.

Ch. Just. I have heard better news.

Fal. What's the news, my good lord?

Ch. Just. Where lay the king last night?

Gower. At Basingstoke, my lord.

Fal. I hope, my lord, all's well: What's the news, my lord?

Ch. Just. Come all his forces back?

Gower. No; fifteen hundred foot, five hundred horse,

Are march'd up to my lord of Lancaster,
Against Northumberland and the archbishop.

Fal. Comes the king back from Wales, my noble lord?

Ch. Just. You shall have letters of me presently: Come, go along with me, good master Gower.

Fal. My lord!

Ch. Just. What's the matter?

Fal. Master Gower, shall I entreat you with me to dinner?

Gower. I must wait upon my good lord here: I thank you, good Sir John.

Ch. Just. Sir John, you loiter here too long, being you are to take soldiers up in counties as you go.

Fal. Will you sup with me, master Gower?

Ch. Just. What foolish master taught you these manners, Sir John?

Fal. Master Gower, if they become me not, he was a fool that taught them me.—This is the right fencing grace, my lord; tap for tap, and so part fair.

Ch. Just. Now the Lord lighten thee! thou art a great fool. [Exeunt

SCENE II.

Continues in London.

Enter Prince Henry and Poins.

P. Henry. Trust me, I am exceeding weary.

Poins. Is it come to that? I had thought, weariness durst not have attach'd one of so high blood.

P. Henry. 'Faith, it does me; though it discolors the complexion of my greatness to acknowledge it. Doth it not shew vilely in me, to desire small-beer?

Poins. Why, a prince should not be so loosely studied, as to remember so weak a composition.

P. Henry. Belike then, my appetite was not princely got; for, in troth, I do now remember the poor creature, small-beer. But, indeed, these humble considerations make me out of love with my greatness. What a disgrace is it to me, to remember thy name? or to know thy face to-morrow? or to take note how many pair of silk stockings thou hast; viz. these, and those that were the peach-colour'd ones? or to bear the inventory of thy shirts; as, one for superfluity, and one other for use?—But that, the tennis-court-keeper knows better than I; for it is a low ebb of linen with thee, when thou keepest not racket there; as thou hast not done a great while, because the rest of thy low-countries have made a shift to eat up thy holland: and God knows, whether those that bawl out the ruins of thy linen, shall inherit his kingdom: but the midwives say, the children are not in the fault; whereupon the world encreases, and kindreds are mightily strengthen'd.

Poins. How ill it follows, after you have labour'd so hard, you should talk so idly! Tell me, how many good young princes would do so, their fathers being so sick as yours at this time is?

P. Henry. Shall I tell thee one thing, Poins?

Poins. Yes; and let it be an excellent good thing.

P. Henry. It shall serve among wits of no higher breeding than thine.

Poins. Goto; I stand the push of your one thing that you will tell.

P. Henry. Why, I tell thee,—it is not meet that I should be sad, now my father is sick: albeit I could tell to thee, (as to one it pleases me, for fault of a better, to call my friend) I could be sad, and sad indeed too.

Poins. Very hardly, upon such a subject.

P. Henry. By this hand, thou think'st me as far in the devil's book, as thou, and Falstaff, for obduracy, and presistency: Let the end try the man. But I tell thee,—my heart bleeds inwardly, that my father is so sick: and keeping such vile company as thou art, hath in reason taken from me all ostentation¹ of sorrow.

Poins. The reason?

P. Henry. What would thou think of me, if I should weep?

Poins. I would think thee a most princely hypocrite.

P. Henry. It would be every man's thought: and thou art a blessed fellow, to think as every man thinks: never a man's thought in the world keeps the road-way better than thine: every man would think me an hypocrite indeed. And what accites your most worshipful thought to think so?

Poins. Why, because you have been so lewd, and so much engrafted to Falstaff.

P. Henry. And to thee.

Poins. Nay, by this light, I am well spoken of, I can hear it with my own ears: the worst that they can say of me is, that I am a second brother, and that I am a proper² fellow of my hands; and those two things, I confess, I cannot help. Look, look, here comes Bardolph.

P. Henry. And the boy that I gave Falstaff: he had him from me christian; and see, if the fat villain have not transform'd him ape.

Enter Bardolph, and Page.

Bard. 'Save your grace!

² A tall or proper fellow of his hands was a stout fighting man.

P. Henry.

P. Henry. And yours, most noble Bardolph!

Bard. [to the Page.] Come, you virtuous ass, you bashful fool, must you be blushing? Wherefore blush you now? What a maidenly man at arms are you become? Is it such a matter, to get a pottle-pot's maiden-head?

Page. He call'd me even now, my lord, through a red lattice, and I could discern no part of his face from the window: at last, I spy'd his eyes; and methought he had made two holes in the alewife's new petticoat, and peep'd through.

P. Henry. Hath not the boy profited?

Bard. Away, you whoreson upright rabbet, away!

Page. Away, you rascally Althea's dream, away!

P. Henry. Instruct us, boy: What dream, boy?

Page. Marry, my lord, Althea dream'd she was deliver'd of a firebrand; and therefore I call him her dream.

P. Henry. A crown's worth of good interpretation.—There it is, boy. [Gives him money.]

Poins. O, that this good blossom could be kept from cankers!—Well, there is six-pence to preserve thee.

Bard. An you do not make him be hang'd among you, the gallows shall have wrong.

P. Henry. And how doth thy master, Bardolph?

Bard. Well, my good lord. He heard of your grace's coming to town; there's a letter for you.

P. Henry. Deliver'd with good respect.—And how doth the martlemas' your master?

Bard. In bodily health, sir.

Poins. Marry, the immortal part needs a physician: but that moves not him; though that be sick, it dies not.

P. Henry. I do allow this wen² to be as familiar with me as my dog: and he holds his place; for, look you, how he writes.

Poins reads. John Falstaff, knight,—Every man must know that, as oft as he hath occasion to name himself. Even like those that are kin to the king; for they never prick their finger, but they say, There is some of the king's blood spilt.—How comes that? says he, that takes upon him not to conceive: the answer is as ready as a borrower's cap³; I am the king's poor cousin, sir.

P. Henry. Nay, they will be kin to us, or they will fetch it from Japhet. But to the letter:—

Poins. Sir John Falstaff, knight, to the son of the king, nearest his father, Harry prince of Wales, greeting.—Why, this is a certificate.

P. Henry. Peace!

Poins. I will imitate the honourable Roman⁴ in brevity:—sure he means brevity in breath; short-winded.—I commend me to thee, I commend thee, and I leave thee. Be not too familiar with Poins;

for he misuses thy favours so much, that he swears, thou art to marry his sister Nell. Repent at idle times as thou may'st, and so farewell. Thin, by yea and no, (which is as much as to say, as thou usest him) Jack Falstaff, with my familiars; John with my brothers and sisters; and Sir John, with all Europe. My lord, I will steep this letter in sack, and make him eat it.

P. Henry. That's to make him eat twenty of his words. But do you use me thus, Ned? must I marry your sister?

Poins. May the wench have no worse fortune! but I never said so.

P. Henry. Well, thus we play the fool with the time; and the spirits of the wise sit in the clouds, and mock us.—Is your master here in London?

Bard. Yes, my lord.

P. Henry. Where sups he? doth the old boar feed in the old frank?⁵ [cheap.]

Bard. At the old place, my lord; in East-

P. Henry. What company?

Page. Ephesians⁶, my lord; of the old church.

P. Henry. Sup any women with him?

Page. None, my lord, but old mistress Quickly, and mistress Doll Tear-sheet.

P. Henry. What pagan⁷ may that be?

Page. A proper gentlewoman, sir, and a kinswoman of my master's.

P. Henry. Even such kin, as the parish heifers are to the town bull.—Shall we steal upon them, Ned, at supper? [you.]

Poins. I am your shadow, my lord; I'll follow

P. Henry. Sirrah, you boy,—and Bardolph;—no word to your master, that I am yet come to town: There's for your silence.

Bard. I have no tongue, sir.

Page. And for mine, sir,—I will govern it.

P. Henry. Fare ye well; go.—This Doll Tear-sheet should be some road.

Poins. I warrant you, as common as the way between St. Alban's and London.

P. Henry. How might we see Falstaff bestow himself to-night in his true colours, and not ourselves be seen?

Poins. Put on two leather jerkins, and aprons, and wait upon him at his table as drawers.

P. Henry. From a god to a bull? a heavy descension! it was Jove's case. From a prince to a prentice? a low transformation! that shall be mine: for, in every thing, the purpose must weigh with the folly. Follow me, Ned. [Exeunt.]

S C E N E III.

Warkworth Castle.

Enter Northumberland, Lady Northumberland, and Lady Percy.

North. I pray thee, loving wife, and gentle daughter,

¹ That is, the autumn, or rather the latter spring; meaning, the old fellow with juvenile passions. Martlemas is corrupted from Martinmas, the feast of St. Martin, the eleventh of November. ² i. e. this tumid excrescence of a man. ³ Warburton explains this allusion by observing, that a man who goes to borrow money, is of all others the most complaisant; his cap is always at hand. ⁴ By the honourable Roman is probably intended Julius Cæsar, whose veni, vidi, vici, seems to be alluded to in the beginning of the letter. ⁵ Frank is sty. ⁶ Probably the cant word in those times for topers. ⁷ The cant word perhaps for prostitute.

Give even way unto my rough affairs :
Put not you on the visage of the times,
And be, like them, to Percy troublesome.

L. North. I have given over, I will speak no more:

Do what you will; your wisdom be your guide.

North. Alas, sweet wife, my honour is at pawn ;
And, but my going, nothing can redeem it.

L. Percy. Oh, yet, for heaven's sake, go not to these wars !

The time was, father, that you broke your word
When you were more endear'd to it than now ;
When your own Percy, when my heart's dear Harry,
Threw many a northward look, to see his father
Bring up his powers ; but he did long' in vain.
Who then persuaded you to stay at home ?

There were two honours lost ; yours, and your son's.
For yours,—may heavenly glory brighten it !

For his,—it stuck upon him, as the sun
In the grey vault of heaven : and, by his light,

Did all the chivalry of England move
To do brave acts : he was, indeed, the glass
Wherein the noble youth did dress themselves.

He had no legs, that practis'd not his gait :
And speaking thick, which nature made his blemish,

Became the accents of the valiant ;
For those that could speak low, and tardily,

Would turn their own perfection to abuse,
To seem like him : So that, in speech, in gait,

In diet, in affections of delight,
In military rules, humours of blood,

He was the mark and glass, copy and book,
That fashion'd others. And him,—O wondrous him !

O miracle of men !—him did you leave,
(Second to none, unseconded by you)

To look upon the hideous god of war
In disadvantage ; to abide a field,

Where nothing but the sound of Hotspur's name
Did seem defensible :—so you left him :

Never, O never, do his ghost the wrong,
To hold your honour more precise and nice

With others, than with him ; let them alone ;
The marshal, and the archbishop, are strong :

Had my sweet Harry had but half their numbers,
To-day might I, hanging on Hotspur's neck,

Have talk'd of Monmouth's grave.

North. Beshrew your heart,
Fair daughter ! you do draw my spirits from me,

With new lamenting ancient oversights.
But I must go, and meet with danger there ;

Or it will seek me in another place,
And find me worse provided.

L. North. O, fly to Scotland,
'Till that the nobles, and the armed commons,

Have of their puissance made a little taste.

L. Percy. If they get ground and vantage of
the king,

Then join you with them, like a rib of steel,
To make strength stronger ; but, for all our loves,
First let them try themselves : So did your son ;
He was so suffer'd ; so came I a widow ;

5 And never shall have length of life enough,
' To rain upon remembrance with mine eyes,
That it may grow and sprout as high as heaven,
For recordation to my noble husband. [mind

North. Come, come, go in with me : 'tis with my 10 As with the tide swell'd up unto its height,
That makes a still stand, running neither way.
Fain would I go to meet the archbishop,
But many thousand reasons hold me back :—

I will resolve for Scotland ; there am I,
15 'Till time and vantage crave my company. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.

London.

The Boar's Head Tavern in East-cheap.

Enter two Drawers.

1 Draw. What the devil hast thou brought there? apple-Johns? Thou know'st, Sir John cannot endure an apple-John¹.

2 Draw. Mass, thou say'st true : The prince once set a dish of apple-Johns before him, and told him, there were five more Sir Johns ; and, putting off his hat, said, I will now take my leave of these six dry, round, old, wither'd knights. It anger'd him to the heart ; but he hath forgot that.

30 1 Draw. Why, then, cover, and set them down :
And see if thou can'st find out Sneak's⁴ noise ;
mistress Tear-sheet would fain hear some music.
Dispatch :—The room where they supp'd is too hot ; they'll come in straight.

35 2 Draw. Sirrah, here will be the prince and master Poin⁵ anon : and they will put on two of our jerkins, and aprons ; and Sir John must not know it : Bardolph hath brought word.

1 Draw. Then here will be old utis⁶ : It will 40 be an excellent stratagem.

2 Draw. I'll see, if I can find out Sneak. [Exit.
Enter Hostess and Doll Tear-sheet.

Host. Sweet-heart, methinks you are now in an excellent good temperality : your pulside beats as 45 extraordinarily as heart would desire ; and your colour, I warrant you, is as red as any rose : But,
' faith, you have drank too much canaries ; and that's a marvellous searching wine, and it perfumes the blood ere we can say,—What's this?
50 How do you now ?

Dol. Better than I was. Hem.

Host. Why, that was well said ; A good heart's worth gold. Look, here comes Sir John.

Enter Falstaff.

55 Fal. When Arthur first in court—Empty the jordan—and was a worthy king : How now, mistress Doll ? [Exit Drawer.

¹ Theobald conjectures that the poet wrote look in vain. ² Alluding to the plant, rosemary, so called, and used in funerals. ³ This apple will keep two years, but becomes very wrinkled and shrivelled. ⁴ Dr. Johnson says, Sneak was a street minstrel, and therefore the drawer goes out to listen if he can hear him in the neighbourhood. A noise of musicians anciently signified a concert or company of them. Falstaff addresses them as a company in another scene of this play. ⁵ Utis, a word yet in use in some counties, signifying a merry festival, from the French huit, octo, ab A. S. Cahta, octava festi alicujus. Old utis signifies festivity in a great degree.

Host. Sick of a calm¹: yea, good sooth.

Fal. So is all her sect²; if they be once in a calm, they are sick.

Dol. You muddy rascal, is that all the comfort you give me?

Fal. You make fat rascals³, mistress Doll.

Dol. I make them! gluttony and diseases make them; I make them not.

Fal. If the cook help to make the gluttony, you help to make the diseases, Doll: we catch of you, Doll, we catch of you; grant that, my poor virtue, grant that.

Dol. Ay, marry; our chains, and our jewels.

Fal. Your brooches, pearls, and owches⁴;—for to serve bravely, is to come halting off, you know: To come off the breach with his pike bent bravely, and to surgery bravely; to venture upon the charg'd chambers⁵ bravely:—

Dol. Hang yourself, you muddy conger, hang yourself!

Host. Why, this is the old fashion; you two never meet, but you fall to some discord: you are both, in good troth, as rheumatic⁶ as two dry toasts⁷; you cannot one bear with another's confirmities. What the good-jere! one must bear, and that must be you: you are the weaker vessel, as they say, the emptier vessel. [To Doll.]

Dol. Can a weak empty vessel bear such a huge full hogshead? There's a whole merchant's venture of Bourdeaux stuff in him; you have not seen a hulk better stuff'd in the hold.—Come, I'll be friends with thee, Jack: thou art a going to the wars; and whether I shall ever see thee again, or no, there is nobody cares.

Re-enter Drawer.

Draw. Sir, ancient⁸ Pistol's below, and would speak with you.

Dol. Hang him, swaggering rascal! let him not come hither: it is the foul-mouth'dst rogue in England.

Host. If he swagger, let him not come here: no, by my faith; I must live amongst my neighbours; I'll no swaggerers: I am in good name and fame with the very best:—Shut the door;—there comes no swaggerers here; I have not liv'd all this while, to have swaggering now;—shut the door, I pray you.

Fal. Dost thou hear, hostess?—

Host. Pray you, pacify yourself, Sir John: there comes no swaggerers here.

Fal. Dost thou hear? it is mine ancient.

Host. Tilly-fally, Sir John, never tell me; your ancient swaggerer comes not in my doors. I was before master Tisick, the deputy, the other day: and, as he said to me,—it was no longer ago than 5 Wednesday last,—Neighbour Quickly, says he;—master Dumb, our minister, was by then;—Neighbour Quickly, says he, receive those that are civil; for, saith he, you are in an ill name;—now he said so, I can tell whereupon; for, says he, you are an honest woman, and well thought on; therefore take heed what guests you receive: Receive, says he, no swaggering companions.—There comes none here:—you would bless you to hear what he said:—no, I'll no swaggerers.

Fal. He's no swaggerer, hostess; a tame cheater⁹, he; you may stroak him as gently as a puppy-greyhound: he will not swagger with a Barbary hen, if her feathers turn back in any shew of resistance.—Call him up, drawer.

Host. Cheater, call you him? I will bar no honest man my house, nor no cheater¹⁰: But I do not love swaggering, by my troth; I am the worse, when one says—swagger; feel, masters how I shake; look you, I warrant you.

Dol. So you do, hostess.

Host. Do I? yea, in very truth, do I, an 'twere an aspen leaf: I cannot abide swaggerers.

Enter Pistol, Bardolph, and Page.

Pist. 'Save you, Sir John!

Fal. Welcome, ancient Pistol. Here, Pistol. I charge you with a cup of sack: do you discharge upon mine hostess.

Pist. I will discharge upon her, Sir John, with two bullets.

Fal. She is pistol-proof, sir; you shall hardly offend her.

Host. Come, I'll drink no proofs, nor no bullets: I'll drink no more than will do me good, for no man's pleasure, I¹¹.

Pist. Then to you, mistress Dorothy; I will charge you.

Dol. Charge me; I scorn you, scurvy companion! What! you poor, base, rascally, cheating, lack-linen mate! Away, you mouldy rogue, away! I am meat for your master.

Pist. I know you, mistress Dorothy.

Dol. Away, you cut-purse rascal! you filthy bung¹², away; by this wine, I'll thrust my knife in your mouldy chaps, an you play the saucy cuttle¹³ with me. Away! you bottle-ale rascal! you basket-bilt stale juggler, you!—Since when, I

² That is, her profession; or perhaps sex may be meant.

³ Falstaff alludes to a phrase of the forest. Lean deer are called rascal deer. He tell her she calls him wrong, for being fat, he cannot be a rascal.

⁴ This is a line in an old song. Brooches were chains of gold that women wore formerly about their necks. Owches were bosses of gold set with diamonds.

Instead of gold and diamonds Falstaff intends to describe the several stages of the venereal disease.

⁵ To understand this quibble, it is necessary to observe, that a chamber signifies not only an apartment, but a piece of ordnance. A chamber is likewise that part of a mine where the powder is lodged.

⁶ Rheumatic, in the cant language of those times, signified capricious, humoursome. ⁷ Which cannot meet but they grate one another. ⁸ Ancient Pistol is the same as Ensign Pistol. ⁹ Gamester and cheater were, in Shakspeare's age, synonymous terms.

¹⁰ The humour of this consists in the woman's mistaking the title of cheater (or gamester) for that officer of the exchequer called an escheator, well known to the common people of that time; and named, either corruptly or satirically, a cheater.

¹¹ The duplication of the pronoun was very common. The French still use this idiom—Je suis Parisien, moi.

¹² In the cant of thievery, to nip a bung was to cut a purse. ¹³ Cuttle and cuttle-boung were the cant terms for the knife used by the sharpers of that age to cut the bottoms of purses, which were then worn hanging at the girdle.

pray you, sir?—What, with two points¹ on your shoulder? much²!

Pist. I will murder your ruff for this.

Fal. No more, Pistol; I would not have you go off here: discharge yourself of our company, Pistol.

Host. No, good captain Pistol; not here, sweet captain.

Dol. Captain! thou abominable damn'd cheater, art thou not asham'd to be call'd—captain? If captains were of my mind, they would truncheon you out, for taking their names upon you before you have earn'd them. You a captain, you slave! for what? for tearing a poor whore's ruff in a bawdy-house?—He a captain! Hang him, rogue! He lives upon mouldy stew'd prunes, and dry'd cakes³. A captain! these villains will make the word captain as odious as the word occupy⁴; which was an excellent good word before it was ill sorted: therefore captains had need look to it.

Bard. Pray thee, go down, good ancient.

Fal. Hark thee hither, mistress Doll.

Pist. Not I: I tell thee what, corporal Bardolph;—I could tear her:—I'll be reveng'd on her.

Page. Pray thee, go down.

Pist. I'll see her damn'd first;—To Pluto's damned lake, to the infernal deep, where Erebus and torturers vile also. Hold hook and line⁵, say I. Down! down, dogs! down, fators⁶! Have we not Hiren⁷ here?

Host. Good captain Peesel, be quiet; it is very late: I beseech you now, aggravate your choler.

Pist. These be good humours, indeed! Shall pack-horses,

And hollow-pamper'd jades of Asia⁸,
Which cannot go but thirty miles a day,
Compare with Cæsars, and with Cannibals⁹,
And Trojan Greeks? nay, rather damn them with King Cerberus; and let the welkin roar.

Shall we fall foul for toys?

Host. By my troth, captain, these are very bitter words.

Bard. Be gone, good ancient: this will grow to a brawl anon.

Pist. Die men, like dogs; give crowns like pins; Have we not Hiren here¹⁰?

Host. O' my word, captain, there's none such here. What the good-jere! do you think I would deny her? I pray, be quiet.

Pist. Then Feed, and be fat, my fair Calipolis¹¹: Come, give's some sack.

—Si fortuna me tormenta, sperato me contenta.—

Fear we broadsides? no, let the fiend give fire:

Give me some sack;—and, sweetheart, lye thou there. [Laying down his sword.]

Come we to full points¹² here; and are et ceteras nothing?

Fal. Pistol, I would be quiet.

Pist. Sweet knight, I kiss thy neif¹³: What! we have seen the seven stars.

Dol. Thrust him down stairs; I cannot endure such a fustian rascal.

Pist. Thrust him down stairs! know we not Galloway nags¹⁴?

Fal. Quoit him down, Bardolph, like a shoye-groat shilling¹⁵: nay, if he do nothing but speak nothing, he shall be nothing here.

Bard. Come, get you down stairs.

Pist. What! shall we have incision? shall we imbrow?—Then death

Rock me asleep¹⁶, abridge my doleful days!

Why then, let grievous, ghastly, gaping wounds Untwine the sisters three! Come, Atropos, I say!

[Snatching up his sword.]

Host. Here's goodly stuff toward!

Fal. Give me my rapier, boy.

Dol. I pray thee, Jack, I pray thee, do not draw.

Fal. Get thee down stairs.

[Drawing, and driving Pistol out.]

Host. Here's a goodly tumult! I'll forswear keeping house, before I'll be in these tirrits and frights. So; murther, I warrant now.—Alas, alas! put up your naked weapons, put up your naked weapons.

Dol. I pray thee, Jack, be quiet; the rascal is gone. Ah, you whoreson little valiant villain, you!

Host. Are you not hurt i' the groin? methought he made a shrewd thrust at your belly.

[Re-enter Bardolph.]

¹ As a mark of his commission. ² Much was a common expression of disdain at that time, of the same sense with that more modern one, Marry come up. ³ Meaning, that he liv'd on the refuse provisions of bawdy-houses and pastry-cooks' shops. The allusion to stew'd prunes, and all that is necessary to be known on that subject, has been already explained in our notes on other passages of these Plays.

⁴ Occupant seems to have been formerly a term for a woman of the town, as occupier was for a wench.

⁸ These lines are in part a quotation out of an old absurd fustian play, entitled, Tamburlain's Conquests; or, The Scythian Shepherd. ⁹ Cannibal is used by a blunder for Hannibal. ¹⁰ Mr. Steevens observes, that as Hiren was sometimes used to denote a mistress or harlot, Pistol may be supposed to give it on this occasion, as an endearing name, to his sword, in the same spirit of fondness that he presently calls it—sweet-heart. Pistol delights in bestowing titles on his weapon. In this scene he also calls it—Atropos. ¹¹ A burlesque on a line in an old play, called The Battle of Alcazar, &c. ¹² That is, shall we stop here? ¹³ i. e. I kiss thy fist. ¹⁴ That is, common hackneys. ¹⁵ Mr. Steevens supposes this expression to mean a piece of polished metal made use of in the play of shovel-board. ¹⁶ This is a fragment of an ancient song, supposed to have been written by Anne Boleyn; for which see Sir John Hawkins's General History of Music, vol. III. p. 31.

Fal. Have you turn'd him out of doors?

Bard. Yes, sir, the rascal's drunk: you have hurt him, sir, in the shoulder.

Fal. A rascal! to brave me!

Dol. Ah, you sweet little rogue, you! Alas, 5 poor ape, how thou sweat'st? Come, let me wipe thy face;—come on, you whoreson chops:—Ah, rogue! I love thee.—Thou art as valorous as Hector of Troy, worth five of Agamemnon, and ten times better than the nine worthies: Ah, villain!

Fal. A rascally slave! I will toss the rogue in a blanket.

Dol. Do, if thou dar'st for thy heart: if thou do'st, I'll canvass thee between a pair of sheets. 15

Enter Musick.

Page. The musick is come, sir.

Fal. Let them play;—Play, sirs.—Sit on my knee, Doll. A rascal bragging slave! the rogue fled from me, like quicksilver. 20

Dol. P'faith, and thou followd'st him like a church. Thou whoreson little tidy Bartholomew boar-pig¹, when wilt thou leave fighting o'days, and foining of nights, and begin to patch up thine old body for heaven?

Enter, behind, Prince Henry and Poins, disguised like drawers.

Fal. Peace, good Doll! do not speak like a death's head²; do not bid me remember mine end.

Dol. Sirrah, what humour is the prince of? 30

Fal. A good shallow young fellow: he would have made a good pantler, he would have chipp'd bread well.

Dol. They say, Poins had a good wit.

Fal. He a good wit? hang him, baboon!—his wit is as thick as Tewksbury³ mustard; there is no more conceit in him, than is in a mallet.

Dol. Why doth the prince love him so then?

Fal. Because their legs are both of a bigness; and he plays at quoits well; and eats conger and fennel⁴; and drinks off candles' ends for flap-dragons⁵; and rides the wild mare with the boys; and jumps upon joint-stools; and swears with a good grace: and wears his boot very smooth, like unto the sign of the leg; and breeds no bate with 45 telling of⁶ discreet stories: and such other gambol faculties he hath, that shew a weak mind and an able body, for the which the prince admits him: for the prince himself is such another; the weight of a hair will turn the scale between their averdupois.

P. Henry. Would not this nave of a wheel⁷ have his ears cut off?

Poins. Let's beat him before his whore.

P. Henry. Look, if the wither'd elder hath not his poll claw'd like a parrot.

Poins. Is it not strange, that desire should so many years out-live performance?

Fal. Kiss me, Doll.

P. Henry. Saturn and Venus this year in conjunction⁸! what says the almanack to that?

Poins. And, look, whether the fiery Trigon⁹, his man, be not lipping to his master's old tables¹⁰; his note book, his counsel-keeper.

Fal. Thou dost give me flattering busses.

Dol. Nay, truly; I kiss thee with a most constant heart.

Fal. I am old, I am old.

Dol. I love thee better than I love e'er a scurvy young boy of them all.

Fal. What stuff wilt have a kirtle¹¹ of? I shall receive money on Thursday: thou shalt have a cap to-morrow. A merry song, come: it grows late, we'll to bed. Thou'lt forget me, when I am gone.

Dol. By my troth, thou'lt set me a weeping, an thou say'st so: prove that ever I dress myself handsome 'till thy return.—Well, hearken the end.

Fal. Some sack, Francis.

P. Henry. Poins. Anon, anon, sir.

Fal. Ha! a bastard son of the king's?—and art not thou Poins, his brother? 35

P. Henry. Why, thou globe of sinful continents, what a life dost thou lead?

Fal. A better than thou; I am a gentleman, thou art a drawer.

P. Henry. Very true, sir; and I come to draw you out by the ears.

Host. O, the Lord preserve thy good grace! welcome to London.—Now heaven bless that sweet face of thine! what, are you come from Wales? 45

Fal. Thou whoreson mad compound of ma-

¹ For tidy Sir Thomas Hanmer reads tiny; but they are both words of endearment, and equally proper. Bartholomew boar-pig is a little pig made of paste, sold at Bartholomew-fair, and given to children for a fairing. ² Mr. Steevens says it was the custom for the bawds of that age to wear a death's head in a ring, upon their middle finger. ³ Tewksbury, a market-town in Gloucestershire, was formerly noted for mustard-balls made there, and sent into other parts. ⁴ Conger with fennel was formerly regarded as a provocative. ⁵ A flap-dragon is some small combustible body, fired at one end, and put afloat in a glass of liquor. It is an act of a toper's dexterity to toss off the glass in such a manner as to prevent the flap-dragon from doing mischief. Ben Jonson speaks of those who eat candles' ends, as an act of love and gallantry. But perhaps our author, by Poins swallowing candles' ends by way of flap-dragons, meant to indicate no more than that the prince loved him because he was always ready to do any thing for his amusement, however absurd or unnatural. ⁶ This expression may not perhaps be improperly elucidated by a passage in The Merry Wives of Windsor, where Mrs. Quickly, enumerating the virtues of John Rugby, adds, that "he is no tell-tale, no breed-bate." ⁷ Alluding to the roundness of Falstaff, who was called round man in contempt before. ⁸ Meaning, that this was indeed a prodigy; astrologers having remarked, that Saturn and Venus are never conjoined. ⁹ Trigonum igneum is the astronomical term when the upper planets meet in a fiery sign. ¹⁰ Dr. Warburton thinks, we should read, clasping too his master's old tables, i. e. embracing his master's cast-off whore, and now his bawd [his note-book, his counsel-keeper]. ¹¹ Mr. Steevens conjectures, that kirtle here means a petticoat.
jesty,— jesty,—by this light flesh and corrupt blood, thou art welcome. [Leaning his hand upon Doll.]

Dol. How! you fat fool, I scorn you.

Poins. My lord, he will drive you out of your revenge, and turn all to a merriment, if you take not the heat.

P. Henry. You whoreson candle-mine¹, you how vilely did you speak of me even now, before this honest, virtuous, civil gentlewoman?

Host. 'Blessing o' your good heart! and so she is, by my troth.

Fal. Didst thou hear me?

P. Henry. Yes; and you knew me, as you did when you ran away by Gads-hill: you knew, I was at your back: and spoke it on purpose, to try my patience.

Fal. No, no, no; not so: I did not think thou wast within hearing.

P. Henry. I shall drive you then to confess the wilful abuse; and then I know how to handle you.

Fal. No abuse, Hal, on mine honour; no abuse.

P. Henry. No! to dispraise me; and call me—pantler, and bread-chipper, and I know not what?

Fal. No abuse, Hal.

Poins. No abuse!

Fal. No abuse, Ned, in the world; honest Ned, none. I disprais'd him before the wicked, that the wicked might not fall in love with him:—in which doing, I have done the part of a careful friend, and a true subject, and thy father is to give me thanks for it. No abuse, Hal;—none, Ned. none;—no, boys, none.

P. Henry. See now, whether pure fear, and entire cowardice, doth not make thee wrong this virtuous gentlewoman to close with us? Is she of the wicked? Is thine hostess here of the wicked? Or is the boy of the wicked? or honest Bardolph, whose zeal burns in his nose, of the wicked?

Poins. Answer, thou dead elm, answer.

Fal. The fiend hath prick'd down Bardolph irrecoverable; and his face is Lucifer's privy kitchen, where he doth nothing but roast malt-worms. For the boy,—there is a good angel about him; but the devil out-bids him too.

P. Henry. For the women,—

Fal. For one of them,—she is in hell already, and burns, poor soul! For the other,—I owe her money; and whether she be damn'd for that, I know not.

Host. No, I warrant you.

Fal. No, I think thou art not; I think, thou art quit for that: Marry, there is another indictment upon thee, for suffering flesh to be eaten in thy house, contrary to the law; for the which, I think, thou wilt howl.

Host. All victuallers do so: What's a joint of mutton or two, in a whole Lent?

P. Henry. You, gentlewoman,—

Dol. What says your grace?

Fal. His grace says that which his flesh rebels against.

Host. Who knocks so loud at door? look to the door there, Francis.

Enter Peto.

P. Henry. Peto, how now? what news?

Peto. The king your father is at Westminster; And there are twenty weak and wearied posts Come from the north: and, as I came along, I met, and overtook, a dozen captains, Bare-headed, sweating, knocking at the taverns, And asking every one for Sir John Falstaff.

P. Henry. By heaven, Poins, I feel me much to blame,

So idly to protane the precious time;
When tempest of commotion, like the south
Borne with black vapour, doth begin to melt,
And drop upon our bare unarmed heads. [night.
Give me my sword and cloak:—Falstaff, good

[Exeunt Prince and Poins.]

Fal. Now comes in the sweetest morsel of the night, and we must hence, and leave it unpick'd. More knocking at the door?—How now? what's the matter?

Bard. You must away to court, sir, presently; A dozen captains stay at door for you.

Fal. Pay the musicians, sirrah [To the Page.]—Farewel, hostess;—farewel, Doll.—You see, my good wenches, how men of merit are sought after: the undeserver may sleep, when the man of action is call'd on.—Farewel, good wenches:—If I be not sent away post, I will see you again ere I go.

Dol. I cannot speak;—if my heart be not ready to burst:—Well, sweet Jack, have a care of thyself.

Fal. Farewel, farewell. [Exeunt Fal. and Bard.]

Host. Well, fare thee well: I have known thee these twenty-nine years, come pescod-time; but in honest and truer-hearted man,—Well, fare hee well.

Bard. [within.] Mistress Tear-sheet,—

Host. What's the matter? [ter.

Bard. Bid mistress Tear-sheet come to my mas-

Host. O run, Doll, run; run, good Doll. [Exeunt.]

A C T III.

S C E N E I.

The Palace.

Enter King Henry, in his night-gown, with a Page.

K. Henry. GO, call the earls of Surrey, and of Warwick; [ters,

But, ere they come, bid them o'er-read these let-

And well consider of them: Make good speed.— [Exit Page.]

60 How many thousand of my poorest subjects
Are at this hour asleep!—O sleep, O gentle sleep,
Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee,
That thou no more wilt weigh my eye-lids down,
And steep my senses in forgetfulness?

¹ Meaning, thou inexhaustible magazine of tallow.

Why, rather, sleep, ly'st thou in smoky cribs,
 Upon uneasy pallets stretching thee,
 And hush'd with buzzing night-flies to thy slumber;
 Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great,
 Under the canopies of costly state,
 And lull'd with sounds of sweetest melody?
 O thou dull god, why ly'st thou with the vile,
 In loathsome beds; and leav'st the kingly couch
 'A watch-case, or a common larum bell?
 Wilt thou upon the high and giddy mast
 Seal up the ship-boy's eyes, and rock his brains
 In cradle of the rude imperious surge;
 And in the visitation of the winds,
 Who take the ruffian billows by the top,
 Curling their monstrous heads, and hanging them
 With deaf'ning clamours in the slippery clouds,
 That, with the hurly², death itself awakes?
 Can'st thou, O partial sleep! give thy repose
 To the wet sea-boy in an hour so rude;
 And, in the calmest and most stillest night,
 With all appliances and means to boot,
 Deny it to a king? Then, happy low, lie down!
 Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown.

Enter Warwick and Surrey.

War. Many good-morrows to your majesty!

K. Henry. Is it good-morrow, lords?

War. 'Tis one o'clock, and past.

K. Henry. Why then, good morrow to you.

Well, my lords,

Have you read o'er the letters that I sent you?

War. We have, my liege. [kingdom]

K. Henry. Then you perceive, the body of our
 How foul it is; what rank diseases grow,
 And with what danger, near the heart of it.

War. It is but as a body, yet distemper'd⁴;
 Which to its former strength may be restor'd,
 With good advice, and little medicine:—
 My lord Northumberland will soon be cool'd.

K. Henry. O heaven! that one might read the book of fate;

And see the revolution of the times
 Make mountains level, and the continent
 (Weary of solid firmness) melt itself
 Into the sea! and, other times, to see
 The beachy girdle of the ocean
 Too wide for Neptune's ships; how chances mock,
 And changes fill the cup of alteration
 With divers liquors! O, if this were seen,
 The happiest youth,--viewing his progress through
 What perils past, what crosses to ensue,—

Would shut the book, and sit him down and die.
 'Tis not ten years gone,
 Since Richard and Northumberland, great friends,
 Did feast together, and, in two years after,
 5 Were they at wars: It is but eight years, since
 This Percy was the man nearest my soul;
 Who like a brother toil'd in my affairs,
 And laid his love and life under my foot;
 Yea, for my sake, even to the eyes of Richard,
 10 Gave him defiance. But which of you was by,
 (You, cousin Nevil, as I may remember)

[To Warwick.]

When Richard⁶,—with his eye brim-full of tears,
 Then check'd and rated by Northumberland,—
 15 Did speak these words, now prov'd a prophecy?
Northumberland, thou ladder, by the which
My cousin Bolingbroke ascends my throne;
 Though then, heaven knows, I had no such intent;
 But that necessity so bow'd the state,
 20 That I and greatness were compell'd to kiss:—
The time shall come, thus did he follow it,
The time will come, that foul sin, gathering head,
Shall break into corruption:—so went on,
 Foretelling this same time's condition,
 25 And the division of our amity.

War. There is a history in all men's lives,
 Figuring the nature of the times deceas'd:
 The which observ'd, a man may prophesy,
 With a near aim, of the main chance of things
 30 As yet not come to life; which in their seeds,
 And weak beginnings, lie entreaured.
 Such things become the hatch and brood of time;
 And, by the necessary form of this,
 King Richard might create a perfect guess,
 35 That great Northumberland, then false to him,
 Would, of that seed, grow to a greater falseness;
 Which should not find a ground to root upon,
 Unless on you.

K. Henry. Are these things then necessities?—
 40 Then let us meet them like necessities:—
 And that same word' even now cries out on us;
 They say, the bishop and Northumberland
 Are fifty thousand strong.

War. It cannot be, my lord;
 45 Rumour doth double, like the voice and echo,
 The numbers of the fear'd:—Please it your grace,
 To go to bed; upon my life, my lord,
 The powers that you already have sent forth,
 Shall bring this prize in very easily.
 50 To comfort you the more, I have receiv'd

¹ This alludes to the watchman set in garrison-towns upon some eminence attending upon an alarm-bell, which he was to ring out in case of fire, or any approaching danger. He had a case or box to shelter him from the weather, but at his utmost peril he was not to sleep whilst he was upon duty. These alarm-bells are mentioned in several other places of Shakspeare. ² Hurly means noise, from the French hurler, to howl. ³ Warburton thinks this passage to be evidently corrupted from happy lowly clown; these two lines making the just conclusion from what preceded: "If sleep will fly a king and consort itself with beggars, then happy the lowly clown, and uneasy the crown'd head." ⁴ Dr. Johnson observes, that distemper (which, according to the old physic, is a disproportionate mixture of humours, or inequality of innate heat and radical humidity) is less than actual disease, being only the state which foreruns or produces diseases; and that the difference between distemper and disease seems to be much the same as between disposition and habit. ⁵ Mr. Steevens observes, that Shakspeare has mistaken the name of this nobleman. The earldom of Warwick was at this time in the family of Beauchamp, and did not come into that of the Nevils till the latter end of the reign of king Henry VI. when it descended to Anne Beauchamp, (the daughter of the earl here introduced), who was married to Richard Nevil, earl of Salisbury. ⁶ He refers to King Richard, Act V. Scene II.; but Warwick was not present at that conversation. ⁷ Meaning, necessity. A cer-

A certain instance, that Glendower is dead.
Your majesty hath been this fortnight ill;
And these unseasoned hours, perforce, must add
Unto your sickness.

K. Henry. I will take your counsel:
And, were these inward wars once out of hand,
We would, dear lords, unto the Holy Land. [Exe.

S C E N E II.

Justice Shallow's Seat in Gloucestershire.

Enter Shallow meeting Silence. Mouldy, Shadow, Wart, Feeble, and Bull-calf, Servants, &c. behind.

Shal. Come on, come on, come on; give me your hand, sir, give me your hand, sir: an early stirrer, by the rood¹. And how doth my good cousin Silence?

Sil. Good-morrow, good cousin Shallow.

Shal. And how doth my cousin, your bed-fellow? and your fairest daughter, and mine, my god-daughter Ellen?

Sil. Alas, a black ouzel, cousin Shallow.

Shal. By yea and nay, sir, I dare say, my cousin William is become a good scholar: He is at Oxford still, is he not?

Sil. Indeed, sir; to my cost.

Shal. He must then to the inns of court shortly: I was once of Clement's-inn; where, I think, they will talk of mad Shallow yet.

Sil. You were call'd—lusty Shallow, then, cousin.

Shal. I was call'd any thing; and I would have done any thing, indeed, and roundly too. There was I, and little John Doit of Staffordshire, and black George Bare, and Francis Pickbone, and Will Squele, a Cotswold² man,—you had not four such swinge-bucklers³ in all the inns of court again: and, I may say to you, we knew where the bonarobas⁴ were; and had the best of them all at commandment. Then was Jack Falstaff, now Sir John, a boy; and page to Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk.

Sil. This Sir John, cousin, that comes hither anon about soldiers?

Shal. The same Sir John, the very same. I saw him break Skogan's⁵ head at the court gate, when he was a crack⁶, not thus high: and the very same day I did fight with one Sampson Stockfish, a fruiterer, behind Gray's-inn. O, the mad days that I have spent! and to see how many of mine old acquaintances are dead!

Sil. We shall all follow, cousin.

Shal. Certain, 'tis certain; very sure, very sure; death, as the Psalmist saith, is certain to all; all shall die. How a good yoke of bullocks at Stamford fair?

Sil. Truly, cousin, I was not there.

Shal. Death is certain,—Is old Double of your town living yet?

Sil. Dead, sir.

Shal. Dead!—See, see!—he drew a good bow:—And dead!—he shot a fine shoot:—John of Gaunt lov'd him well, and betted much money on his head. Dead!—he would have clapp'd i' the clout⁷ at twelve score; and carry'd you a fore-hand shaft a fourteen and fourteen and a half⁸, that it would have done a man's heart good to see.—How a score of ewes now?

Sil. Thereafter as they be: a score of good ewes may be worth ten pounds.

Shal. And is old Double dead?

Enter Bardolph and his Boy.

Sil. Here come two of Sir John Falstaff's men, as I think.

Bard. Good-morrow, honest gentlemen: I beseech you, which is Justice Shallow?

Shal. I am Robert Shallow, sir; a poor esquire of this county, and one of the king's justices of the peace: What is your good pleasure with me?

Bard. My captain, sir, commends him to you; my captain, Sir John Falstaff: a tall gentleman, by heaven, and a most gallant leader.

Shal. He greets me well, sir: I knew him a good back-sword man: How doth the good knight? may I ask, how my lady his wife doth?

Bard. Sir, pardon; a soldier is better accommodated, than with a wife.

Shal. It is well said, sir; and it is well said indeed, too. Better accommodated!—it is good; yea, indeed, is it: good phrases are surely, and ever were, very commendable. Accommodated!—it comes of accommodo: very good; a good phrase?

Bard. Pardon, sir; I have heard the word. Phrase, call you it! By this day, I know not the phrase: but I will maintain the word with my sword, to be a soldier-like word, and a word of exceeding good command. Accommodated; that is, when a man is, as they say, accommodated: or, when a man is,—being,—whereby,—he may be thought to be accommodated; which is an excellent thing.

Enter Falstaff.

Shal. It is very just:—Look, here comes good Sir John.—Give me your good hand, give me your worship's good hand: By my troth, you look well, and bear your years very well: welcome, good Sir John.

Fal. I am glad to see you well, good master Robert Shallow;—Master Sure-card, as I think.

Shal. No, Sir John; it is my cousin Silence, in commission with me.

Fal. Good master Silence, it well befits you should be of the peace.

Sil. Your good worship is welcome.

Fal. Fie! this is hot weather.—Gentlemen,

¹ i. e. the cross. ² For an account of the Cotswold games, so famous in Shakspeare's time, see note², p. 46. ³ Swinge-bucklers and swash-bucklers were words implying rakes or rioters, in the time of Shakspeare. ⁴ i. e. ladies of pleasure, or harlots. ⁵ We learn from a masque of Ben Jonson's, that Scogan was "a fine gentleman, and a master of arts of Henry the fourth's times, that made disguises for the king's sons, and writ in ballad royal daintily well." ⁶ This is an old Islandic word signifying a boy or child. ⁷ i. e. hit the white mark. ⁸ i. e. fourteen score of yards. ⁹ Accommodate was a modish term of that time, as Ben Jonson informs us.

have you provided me here half a dozen sufficient men?

Shal. Marry, have we, sir. Will you sit?

Fal. Let me see them, I beseech you.

Shal. Where's the roll? where's the roll? 5 where's the roll?—Let me see, let me see, let me see. So, so, so, so: Yea, marry, sir:—Ralph Mouldy:—let them appear as I call; let them do so.—Let me see; Where is Mouldy?

Moul. Here, an't please you.

Shal. What think you, Sir John? a good-limb'd fellow: young, strong, and of good friends.

Fal. Is thy name Mouldy?

Moul. Yea, an't please you.

Fal. 'Tis the more time thou wert us'd.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha! most excellent, i' faith! things, that are mouldy, lack use: Very singular good!—Well said, Sir John; very well said.

Fal. Prick him.

Moul. I was prick'd well enough before, an 20
you could have let me alone: my old dame will be undone now, for one to do her husbandry, and her drudgery: you need not to have prick'd me; there are other men fitter to go out than I.

Fal. Go to; peace, Mouldy, you shall go. 25
Mouldy, it is time you were spent.

Moul. Spent!

Shal. Peace, fellow, peace; stand aside; Know you where you are?—For the other, Sir John:—let me see:—Simon Shadow!

Fal. Ay marry, let me have him to sit under: he's like to be a cold soldier.

Shal. Where's Shadow?

Shad. Here, sir.

Fal. Shadow, whose son art thou?

Shad. My mother's son, sir.

Fal. Thy mother's son! like enough; and thy father's shadow: so the son of the female is the shadow of the male: It is often so, indeed; but not much of the father's substance.

Shal. Do you like him, Sir John?

Fal. Shadow will serve for summer,—prick him;—for we have a number of shadows to fill up the muster-book¹.

Shal. Thomas Wart!

Fal. Where's he?

Wart. Here, sir.

Fal. Is thy name Wart?

Wart. Yea, sir.

Fal. Thou art a very ragged wart.

Shal. Shall I prick him, Sir John?

Fal. It were superfluous; for his apparel is built upon his back, and the whole frame stands upon pins: prick him no more.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha!—you can do it, sir: you can 35 do it. I commend you well.—Francis Feeble!

Feeble. Here, sir.

Fal. What trade art thou, Feeble?

Feeble. A woman's taylor, sir.

Shal. Shall I prick him, sir?

Fal. You may: but if he had been a man's taylor, he would have prick'd you.—Wilt thou 60 make as many holes in an enemy's battle, as thou hast done in a woman's petticoat?

Feeble. I will do my good will, sir; you can have no more.

Fal. Well said, good woman's taylor! well said, courageous Feeble! Thou wilt be as valiant as the wrathful dove, or most magnanimous mouse.—Prick the woman's taylor well, master Shallow: deep, master Shallow.

Feeble. I would, Wart might have gone, sir.

Fal. I would, thou wert a man's taylor; that thou might'st mend him, and make him fit to go. I cannot put him to a private soldier, that is the leader of so many thousands: Let that suffice, most forcible Feeble.

Feeble. It shall suffice, sir.

Fal. I am bound to thee, reverend Feeble.—Who is next?

Shal. Peter Bull-calf of the green!

Fal. Yea, marry, let us see Bull-calf.

Bull. Here, sir.

Fal. Trust me, a likely fellow!—Come, prick me Bull-calf, till he roar again.

Bull. Oh! good my lord captain,—

Fal. What dost thou roar before thou art prick'd?

Bull. O lord, sir! I am a diseas'd man.

Fal. What disease hast thou?

Bull. A whoreson cold, sir; a cold, sir; which I caught with ringing in the king's affairs, upon his coronation day, sir.

Fal. Come, thou shalt go to the wars in a gown; we will have away thy cold; and I will take such order, that thy friends shall ring for thee.—Is here all?

Shal. There is two more call'd than your number, you must have but four here, sir;—and so, I pray you, go in with me to dinner.

Fal. Come, I will go drink with you, but I cannot tarry dinner. I am glad to see you, in good troth, master Shallow.

Shal. O, Sir John, do you remember since we lay all night in the wind-mill in St. George's-fields?

Fal. No more of that, good master Shallow, no more of that.

Shal. Ha, it was a merry night. And is Jane Night-work alive?

Fal. She lives, master Shallow.

Shal. She could never away² with me.

Fal. Never, never: she would always say, she could not abide master Shallow.

Shal. By the mass, I could anger her to the heart. She was then a bona-roba. Doth she hold her own well?

Fal. Old, old, master Shallow.

Shal. Nay, she must be old; she cannot chuse but be old; certain, she's old; and had Robin Night-work by Old Night-work, before I came to Clement's-inn.

Sil. That fifty-five years ago.

Shal. Ha, cousin Silence, that thou hadst seen that that this knight and I have seen!—Ha, Sir John, said I well?

¹ That is, we have in the muster-book many names for which we receive pay, though we have not the men. ² This is an expression of dislike.

Fal. We have heard the chimes at midnight, master Shallow.

Shal. That we have, that we have, that we have; in faith, Sir John, we have; our watch-word was, Hem, boys!—Come, let's to dinner; come, let's to dinner:—O, the days that we have seen!—Come, come. [Exeunt Falstaff, and Justices.]

Bull. Good master corporate Bardolph, stand my friend; and here is four Harry ten shillings in French crowns for you. In very truth, sir, I had as lief be hang'd, sir, as go: and yet for mine own part, sir, I do not care: but, rather, because I am unwilling, and, for mine own part, have a desire to stay with my friends; else, sir, I did not care, for mine own part, so much.

Bard. Go to; stand aside.

Moul. And, good master corporal captain, for my old dame's sake, stand my friend: she has nobody to do any thing about her, when I am gone; and she is old, and cannot help herself: you shall have forty, sir.

Bard. Go to; stand aside.

Feeble. I care not;—a man can die but once;—we owe God a death;—Pll ne'er bear a base mind;—an't be my destiny, so: an't be not, so: No man's too good to serve his prince: and let it go which way it will, he that dies this year, is quit for the next.

Bard. Well said; thou'rt a good fellow.

Feeble. Faith, I'll bear no base mind.

[Re-enter Falstaff, and Justices.]

Fal. Come, sir, which men shall I have?

Shal. Four of which you please.

Bard. Sir, a word with you:—I have three pound to free Mouldy and Bull-calf.

Fal. Go to; well.

Shal. Come, Sir John which four will you have?

Fal. Do you chuse for me.

Shal. Marry then,—Mouldy, Bull-calf, Feeble, and Shadow.

Fal. Mouldy, and Bull-calf: For you, Mouldy, stay at home till you are past service:—and, for your part, Bull-calf,—grow 'till you come unto it; I will none of you.

Shal. Sir John, Sir John, do not yourself wrong; they are your likeliest men, and I would have you serv'd with the best.

Fal. Will you tell me, master Shallow, how to chuse a man? Care I for the limb, the thewes¹, the stature, bulk, and big assemblance of a man?—give me the spirit, master Shallow.—Here's Wart;—you see what a ragged appearance it is: he shall charge you, and discharge you, with the motion of a pewterer's hammer; come off, and on, swifter than he that gibbets on the brewer's bucket².

And this same half-fac'd fellow Shadow,—give me this man; he presents no mark to the enemy; the fore-man may with as great aim level at the edge of a pen-knife: And, for a retreat,—how swiftly will this Feeble, the woman's taylor, run off? O, give me the spare men, and spare me the great ones.—Put me a caliver into Wart's hand, Bardolph.

Bard. Hold, Wart, traverse; thus, thus, thus.

Fal. Come, manage me your caliver. So:—very well:—go to:—very good:—exceeding good:—O, give me always a little, lean, old, chopp'd, bald shot³.—Well said, Wart; thou'rt a good scab: hold, there's a tester for thee.

Shal. He is not his craft's master, he doth not do it right. I remember at Mile-end green, when I lay at Clement's-inn, (I was then Sir Dagonet⁴ in Arthur's show) there was a little quiver fellow, and 'a would manage you his piece thus: and 'a would about, and about, and come you in, and come you in: rah, tah, tah, would 'a say; bounce, would 'a say; and away again would 'a go, and again would 'a come;—I shall never see such a fellow.

Fal. These fellows will do well, master Shallow.—God keep you, master Silence; I will not use many words with you:—Fare you well, gentlemen both: I thank you: I must a dozen mile to-night.—Bardolph, give the soldiers coats.

Shal. Sir John, heaven bless you, and prosper your affairs, and send us peace! As you return, visit my house; let our old acquaintance be renew'd: peradventure I will with you to the court.

Fal. I would you would, master Shallow.

Shal. Go to; I have spoke, at a word. Fare you well. [Exeunt Shallow and Silence.]

Fal. Fare you well, gentle gentlemen.—On, Bardolph; lead the men away.—[Exeunt Bardolph, Recruits, &c.]

—As I return, I will fetch off these justices; I do see the bottom of justice Shallow. Lord, lord, how subject we old men are to this vice of lying! This same starved justice hath done nothing but prate to me of the wildness of his youth, and the feats he hath done about Turnbull-street⁵; and every third word a lie, duer paid to the hearer than the Turk's tribute. I do remember him at Clement's-inn, like a man made after supper of a cheese-paring; when he was naked, he was, for all the world, like a fork'd radish, with a head fantastically carv'd upon it with a knife: he was so forlorn, that his dimensions to any thick sight were invisible: he was the very Genius of famine; yet lecherous as a monkey, and the whores call'd him —mandrake: he came ever in the rear-ward of the fashion; and sung those tunes to the over-scutcht¹ huswives, that he heard the carmen whistle, and sware—they were his fancies, or his good-nights². And now is this vice's³ dagger become a squire; and talks as familiarly of John of Gaunt, as if he had been sworn brother to him: and I'll be sworn he never saw him but once in the Tilt-yard; and then he burst⁴ his head, for crouding among the marshal's men. I saw it; and told John of Gaunt, he beat his own name⁵: for you might have truss'd him, and all his apparel, into an eel-skin: the case of a treble hautboy was a mansion for him, a court: and now he hath land and beeves. Well; I will be acquainted with him, if I return: and it shall go hard, but I will make him a philosopher's⁶ two stones to me: If the young dace be a bait for the old pike, I see no reason, in the law of nature, but I may snap at him⁷. Let time shape, and there an end. [Exeunt,

S C E N E I.

A Forest in Yorkshire.

Enter the Archbishop of York, Mowbray, Hastings, and others.

York. WHAT is this forest call'd?

Hast. 'Tis Gualtree forest, an't shall please your grace. [forth,

York. Herestand, my lords; and send discoverers To know the numbers of our enemies.

Hast. We have sent forth already.

York. 'Tis well done.

My friends and brethren in these great affairs, I must acquaint you, that I have receiv'd New-dated letters from Northumberland; Their cold intent, tenour, and substance, thus:— Here doth he wish his person, with such powers As might hold sortance with his quality, The which he could not levy; whereupon He is retir'd, to ripe his growing fortunes, To Scotland; and concludes in hearty prayers, That your attempts may over-live the hazard, And fearful meeting of their opposite. [ground,

Mowb. Thus do the hopes we had in him touch And dash themselves to pieces.

Enter a Messenger,

Hast. Now, what news?

20 Mess. West of this forest, scarcely off a mile, In goodly form comes on the enemy:

And, by the ground they hide, I judge their number Upon, or near, the rate of thirty thousand. [out, 25 Mowb. The just proportion that we gave them Let us sway⁸ on, and face them in the field.

Enter Westmoreland.

York. What well-appointed⁹ leader fronts us here?

Mowb. I think, it is my lord of Westmoreland,

West. Health and fair greeting from our general,

30 The prince, lord John, and duke of Lancaster.

York. Say on, my lord of Westmoreland, in peace;

What doth concern your coming?

West. Then, my lord,

Unto your grace do I in chief address

35 The substance of my speech. If that rebellion

Came like itself, in base and abject routs,

Led on by bloody youth¹⁰, guarded¹¹ with rage,

And countenanc'd by boys, and beggary;

I say, if damn'd commotion so appear'd,

40 In his true, native, and most proper shape,

You, reverend father, and these noble lords,

Had not been here, to dress the ugly form

Of base and bloody insurrection

With your fair honours. You, lord archbishop,—

45 Whose see is by a civil peace maintain'd;

Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd;

¹ i. e. according to Mr. Pope, whipt, carted; though Dr. Johnson rather thinks that the word means dirty or grimed; and that the word huswives agrees better with this sense. Ray, however, among his north-country words, confirms Pope's meaning, by saying that an overswitch'd huswife is a strumpet.

² Fancies and Goodnights were the titles of little poems. ³ Vice was the name given to a droll figure, heretofore much shewn upon our stage, and brought in to play the fool and make sport for the populace. His dress was always a long jerkin, a fool's cap with asses' ears, and a thin wooden dagger, such as is still retained in the modern figures of Harlequin and Scaramouch. The word is an abbreviation of device; for in our old dramatic shows, where he was first exhibited, he was nothing more than an artificial figure, a puppet moved by machinery, and then originally called device or vice. The smith's machine called a vice, is an abbreviation of the same sort. It was very satirical in Falstaff to compare Shallow's activity and impertinence to such a machine as a wooden dagger in the hands and management of a buffoon. ⁴ To break and to burst were, in our poet's time, synonymously used. To brast had the same meaning. ⁵ That is, beat gaunt, a fellow so slender, that his name might have been Gaunt. ⁶ One of which was an universal medicine, and the other a transmuter of base metals into gold. ⁷ That is, if it be the law of nature that the stronger may seize upon the weaker, Falstaff may, with great propriety, devour Shallow. ⁸ Dr. Johnson thinks this word, which is used in Holinshed, was intended to express the uniform and forcible motion of a compact body. ⁹ Well-appointed is completely accoutred. ¹⁰ Bloody youth means only sanguine youth, or youth full of blood, and of those passions which blood is supposed to incite or nourish. ¹¹ Guarded is an expression taken from dress and means the same as faced, turned up.

Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutor'd;
 Whose white investments¹ figure innocence,
 The dove and very blessed spirit of peace,—
 Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself
 Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
 Into the harsh and boist'rous tongue of war?
 Turning your books to graves², your ink to blood,
 Your pens to lances; and your tongue divine
 To a loud trumpet, and a point of war?

York. Wherefore do I this?—so the question stands.

Briefly, to this end:—We are all diseas'd;
 And, with our surfeiting, and wanton hours,
 Have brought ourselves into a burning fever,
 And we must bleed for it: of which disease
 Our late king, Richard, being infected, dy'd.
 But, my most noble lord of Westmoreland,
 I take not on me here as a physician:
 Nor do I, as an enemy to peace,
 Troop in the throngs of military men:
 But, rather, shew a while like fearful war,
 To diet rank minds, sick of happiness;
 And purge the obstructions, which begin to stop
 Our very veins of life. Hear me more plainly.
 I have in equal balance justly weigh'd
 What wrongs our arms may do, what wrongs we suffer,
 And find our griefs heavier than our offences.
 We see which way the stream of time doth run,
 And are enforc'd from our most quiet sphere
 By the rough torrent of occasion;
 And have the summary of all our griefs,
 When time shall serve, to shew in articles;
 Which, long ere this, we offer'd to the king,
 And might by no suit gain our audience:
 When we are wrong'd, and would unfold our griefs,
 We are deny'd access unto his person
 Even by those men that most have done us wrong.
 The danger of the days but newly gone,
 (Whose memory is written on the earth
 With yet appearing blood), and the examples
 Of every minute's instance, (present now)
 Have put us in these ill-beseeming arms;
 Not to break peace, or any branch of it;
 But to establish here a peace indeed,
 Concurring both in name and quality.

West. When ever yet was your appeal deny'd?
 Wherein have you been galled by the king?
 What peer hath been suborn'd to grate on you?
 That you should seal this lawless bloody book
 Of forg'd rebellion with a seal divine,
 And consecrate commotion's civil edge?

York. My brother-general, the common-wealth,
 To brother born an household cruelty,
 I make my quarrel in particular⁴.

West. There is no need of any such redress;
 Or, if there were, it not belongs to you.

Mowb. Why not to him, in part; and to us all,
 That feel the bruises of the days before;
 And suffer the condition of these times
 To lay a heavy and unequal hand
 Upon our honours?

West. O my good lord Mowbray,
 Construe the times to their necessities,
 And you shall say indeed,—it is the time,
 And not the king, that doth you injuries.
 Yet, for your part, it not appears to me,
 Either from the king, or in the present time,
 That you shall have an inch of any ground
 To build a grief on: Were you not restor'd
 To all the duke of Norfolk's seigniories,
 Your noble and right-well-remember'd father's?

Mowb. What thing, in honour, had my father lost,
 That need to be reviv'd, and breath'd in me?
 The king, that lov'd him as the state stood then,
 Was, force perforce, compell'd to banish him:
 And then, when Harry Bolingbroke, and he,—
 Being mounted, and both roused in their seats,
 Their neighing coursers daring of the spur,
 Their armed staves in charge⁵, their beavers down,
 Their eyes of fire sparkling through sights⁶ of steel,
 And the loud trumpet blowing them together;
 Then, then, when there was nothing could have staid
 My father from the breast of Bolingbroke,
 O, when the king did throw his warder down,
 His own life hung upon the staff he threw:
 Then threw he down himself, and all their lives,
 That, by indictment, and by dint of sword,
 Have since miscarried under Bolingbroke.

⁴ Dr. Warburton explains this passage thus: "My brother general the commonwealth, which ought to distribute its benefits equally, is become an enemy to those of his own house, to brothers born, by giving some all, and others none; and this (says he) I make my quarrel or grievance, that honours are unequally distributed;" the constant birth of male-content, and source of civil commotions. Dr. Johnson, however, believes there is an error in the first line, which perhaps may be rectified thus: "My quarrel general, the common-wealth, &c. That is, my general cause of discontent is public mismanagement; my particular cause a domestic injury done to my natural brother, who had been beheaded by the king's order;" a circumstance mentioned in the First Part of the Play. ⁵ An armed staff is a lance. To be in charge, is to be fixed in the rest for the encounter. ⁶ Or, the visiers, i. e. the perforated part of their helmets, through which they could see to direct their aim.

West. You speak, lord Mowbray, now you know not what :

The earl of Hereford was reputed then
In England the most valiant gentleman :
Who knows, on whom fortune would then have smil'd ?

But, if your father had been victor there,
He ne'er had borne it out of Coventry :
For all the country, in a general voice,
Cry'd hate upon him; and all their prayers, and love,
Were set on Hereford, whom they doated on,
And bless'd, and grac'd indeed, more than the king.
But this is mere digression from my purpose.—
Here come I from our princely general,
To know your griefs; to tell you from his grace,
That he will give you audience : and wherein
It shall appear, that your demands are just,
You shall enjoy them; every thing set off,
That might so much as think you enemies.

Mowb. But he hath forc'd us to compel this offer;
And it proceeds from policy, not love.

West. Mowbray, you over-ween, to take it so;
This offer comes from mercy, not from fear :
For, lo! within a ken, our army lies;
Upon mine honour, all too confident
To give admittance to a thought of fear.

Our battle is more full of names than yours,
Our men more perfect in the use of arms,
Our armour all as strong, our cause the best;
Then reason wills, our hearts should be as good :
Say you not then, our offer is compell'd.

Mowb. Well, by my will, we shall admit no parley.

West. That argues but the shame of your offence:
A rotten case abides no handling.

Hast. Hath the prince John a full commission,
In very ample virtue of his father,
To hear, and absolutely to determine
Of what conditions we shall stand upon ?

West. That is intended¹ in the general's name :
I muse, you make so slight a question.

York. Then take, my lord of Westmoreland,
this schedule ;

For this contains our general grievances :—
Each several article herein redress'd ;
All members of our cause, both here and hence,
That are insinew'd to this action,
Acquitted by a true substantial form² ;
And present execution of our wills
To us, and to our purposes, confin'd³ ;
We come within our awful banks⁴ again,
And knit our powers to the arm of peace.

West. This will I shew the general. Please you, lords,

In sight of both our battles we may meet ;
And either end in peace, which heaven so frame!
Or to the place of difference call the swords
Which must decide it.

York. My lord, we will do so. [Exit West.

Mowb. There is a thing within my bosom tells me,

That no conditions of our peace can stand.

Hast. Fear you not that: if we can make our peace
Upon such large terms, and so absolute,
As our conditions shall insist upon,
Our peace shall stand as firm as rocky mountains.

Mowb. Ay, but our valuation shall be such,
That every slight and false-derived cause,
Yea, every idle, nice, and wanton reason,
Shall, to the king, taste of this action:

That, were our loyal faiths martyrs in love,
We shall be winnow'd with so rough a wind,
That even our corn shall seem as light as chaff,
And good from bad find no partition.

York. No, no, my lord; Note this,—the king is weary

Of dainty and such picking⁵ grievances :
For he hath found,—to end one doubt by death,
Revives two greater in the heirs of life,
And therefore will he wipe his tables⁶ clean ;

And keep no tell-tale to his memory,
That may repeat and history his loss
To new remembrance: For full well he knows,
He cannot so precisely weed this land,
As his misdoubts present occasion:

His foes are so enrooted with his friends,
That, plucking to unfix an enemy,
He doth unfasten so, and shake a friend:
So that this land, like an offensive wife,
That hath enrag'd him on to offer strokes ;
As he is striking, holds his infant up,
And hangs resolv'd correction in the arm
That was uprear'd to execution.

Hast. Besides, the king hath wasted all his rods
On late offenders, that he now doth lack
The very instruments of chastisement :
So that his power, like to a fangless lion,
May offer, but not hold.

York. 'Tis very true;—
And therefore be assured, my good lord marshal,
If we do now make our atonement well,
Our peace will, like a broken limb united,
Grow stronger for the breaking.

Mowb. Be it so.
Here is return'd my lord of Westmoreland,

Re-enter Westmoreland.
West. The prince is here at hand: Pleaseth your lordship,

To meet his grace just distance 'tween our armies?

Mowb. Your grace of York, in heaven's name then set forward.

York. Before, and greet his grace :—my lord, we come.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.

Another part of the forest.

Enter on one side Mowbray, the Archbishop, Hastings, and others: from the other side, Prince John of Lancaster, Westmoreland, Officers, &c.

Lan. You are well encounter'd here, my cousin
Mowbray:—

¹ Meaning, included in the office of a general. ² That is, by a pardon of due form and legal validity.
³ For confined, Mr. Steevens proposes to read confirm'd. ⁴ Awful banks are the proper limits of reverence. Perhaps we might read—lawful. ⁵ i. e. piddling, insignificant grievances. ⁶ Alluding to a table-book of slate, ivory, &c.

Good day to you, gentle lord archbishop;—
 And so to you, lord Hastings,—and to all.—
 My lord of York, it better shew'd with you,
 When that your flock, assembled by the bell,
 Encircled you, to hear with reverence
 Your exposition on the holy text;
 Than now to see you here an iron man,
 Chearing a rout of rebels with your drum,
 Turning the word to sword, and life to death.
 That man, that sits within a monarch's heart,
 And ripens in the sun-shine of his favour,
 Would he abuse the countenance of the king,
 Alack, what mischiefs might be set abroad,
 In shadow of such greatness! With you, lord bishop,
 It is even so!—Who hath not heard it spoken,
 How deep you were within the books of God?
 To us, the speaker in his parliament;
 To us, the imagin'd voice of heaven itself;
 The very opener, and intelligencer,
 Between the grace, the sanctities of heaven,
 And our dull workings: O, who shall believe,
 But you misuse the reverence of your place;
 Employ the countenance and grace of heaven,
 As a false favourite doth his prince's name,
 In deeds dishonourable? You have taken up¹,
 Under the counterfeited zeal of God,
 The subjects of his substitute, my father;
 And, both against the peace of heaven and him,
 Have here up-swarm'd them.

York. Good my lord of Lancaster,
 I am not here against your father's peace:
 But, as I told my lord of Westmoreland,
 The time misorder'd doth, in common sense,
 Crowd us, and crush us, to this monstrous form,
 To hold our safety up. I sent your grace
 The parcels and particulars of our grief;
 The which hath been with scorn shov'd from the court,

Whereon this Hydra son of war is born:
 Whose dangerous eyes may well be charm'd as sleep,
 With grant of our most just and right desires;
 And true obedience, of this madness cur'd,
 Stoop tamely to the foot of majesty.

Mowb. If not, we ready are to try our fortunes
 To the last man.

Hast. And though we here fall down,
 We have supplies to second our attempt;
 If they miscarry, theirs shall second them:
 And so, success² of mischief shall be born;
 And heir from heir shall hold this quarrel up,
 Whiles England shall have generation.

Lan. You are too shallow, Hastings, much too shallow,

To sound the bottom of the after-times.

West. Pleaseth your grace, to answer them directly,

How far-forth you do like their articles?

Lan. I like them all, and do allow them well:
 And swear here by the honour of my blood,
 My father's purposes have been mistook;
 And some about him have too lavishly
 Wrested his meaning, and authority.—

My lord, these griefs shall be with speed redress'd;
 Upon my life, they shall. If this may please you,
 Discharge your powers unto their several counties,
 As we will ours: and here, between the armies,
 5 Let's drink together friendly, and embrace;
 That all their eyes may bear those tokens home,
 Of our restored love, and amity. [dresses.

York. I take your princely word for these re-

Lan. I give it you, and will maintain my word:

10 And thereupon I drink unto your grace.

Hast. Go, captain, and deliver to the army
 This news of peace; let them have pay, and part;
 I know, it will well please them: Hie thee, captain. [Exit Captain.

15 York. To you, my noble lord of Westmoreland.

West. I pledge your grace: And, if you knew what pains

I have bestowed, to breed this present peace,
 You would drink freely: but my love to you
 20 Shall shew itself more openly hereafter.

York. I do not doubt you.

West. I am glad of it.—

Health to my lord, and gentle cousin, Mowbray.

Mowb. You wish me health in very happy season;

25 For I am, on the sudden, something ill.

York. Against ill chances, men are ever merry;
 But heaviness fore-runs the good event.

West. Therefore, be merry, coz; since sudden sorrow [morrow.

30 Serves to say thus,—Some good thing comes to—

York. Believe me, I am passing light in spirit.

Mowb. So much the worse, if your own rule be true. [Shout.

35 Lan. The word of peace is render'd: Hark,
 how they shout!

Mowb. This had been chearful, after victory.

York. A peace is of the nature of a conquest;
 For then both parties nobly are subdu'd,
 40 And neither party loser.

Lan. Go, my lord,

And let our army be discharged too.—[Exit West.
 And, good my lord, so please you, let our trains
 March by us; that we may peruse the men
 45 We should have cop'd withal.

York. Go, good lord Hastings,

And, ere they be dismiss'd, let them march by.
 [Exit Hastings.

Lan. I trust, lords, we shall lie to-night together.—

Re-enter Westmoreland.

Now, cousin, wherefore stands our army still?

West. The leaders, having charge from you to stand,

55 Will not go off until they hear you speak.

Lan. They know their duties.

Re-enter Hastings.

Hast. My lord, our army is dispers'd already:
 Like youthful steers unyok'd, they take their course, 60 East, west, north, south; or, like a school broke up, [place.

Each hurries towards his home, and sporting

¹ To take up is to levy, to raise in arms.

² Success for succession.

West.

West. Good tidings, my lord Hastings; for the which
I do arrest thee, traitor, of high treason:—
And you, lord archbishop,—and you, lord Mowbray,—
Of capital treason I attach you both.
Mowb. Is this proceeding just and honourable?
West. Is your assembly so?
York. Will you thus break your faith?
Lan. I pawn'd thee none:
I promis'd you redress of these same grievances,
Whereof you did complain; which, by mine honour,
I will perform with a most christian care.
But for you, rebels,—look to taste the due
Meet for rebellion, and such acts as yours.
Most shallowly did you these arms commence,
Fondly¹ brought here, and foolishly sent hence.—
Strike up your drums, pursue the scatter'd stray;
Heaven, and not we, hath safely fought to-day.—
Some guard these traitors to the block of death;
Treason's true bed, and yielder up of breath.

[Exeunt. Alarum. Excursions.]

SCENE III.

Another part of the Forest.

Enter Falstaff, and Colevile, meeting.

Fal. What's your name, sir? of what condition are you? and of what place, I pray?

Cole. I am a knight, sir; and my name is—Colevile of the dale.

Fal. Well then, Colevile is your name; a knight is your degree; and your place, the dale: Colevile shall still be your name; a traitor your degree; and the dungeon your place,—a place deep enough; so shall you still be Colevile of the dale².

Cole. Are you not Sir John Falstaff?

Fal. As good a man as he, sir, whoe'er I am. Do ye yield, sir? or shall I sweat for you? If I do sweat, they are drops of thy lovers, and they weep for thy death: therefore rouse up fear and trembling, and do observance to my mercy.

Cole. I think you are Sir John Falstaff; and, in that thought, yield me.

Fal. I have a whole school of tongues in this belly of mine, and not a tongue of them all speaks any other word but my name. An I had but a belly of any indifferency, I were simply the most active fellow in Europe; My womb, my womb, my womb undoes me.—Here comes our general.
Enter Prince John of Lancaster, and Westmoreland.

Lan. The heat³ is past, follow no farther now; Call in the powers, good cousin Westmoreland.—

[Exit West.]

Now, Falstaff, where have you been all this while? When every thing is ended, then you come:—These tardy tricks of your's will, on my life, One time or other break some gallows' back.

Fal. I would be sorry, my lord, but it should be thus: I never knew yet, but rebuke and check was the reward of valour. Do you think me a swallow, an arrow, or a bullet? Have I, in my poor and old motion, the expedition of thought? I have speeded hither with the very extremest inch of possibility; I have founder'd nine-score and odd posts: and here, travel-tainted as I am, have, in my pure and immaculate valour, taken Sir John Colevile of the dale, a most furious knight, and valorous enemy: But what of that? he saw me, and yielded; that I may justly say with the hook-nos'd fellow of Rome⁴,—I came, saw, and overcame.

Lan. It was more his courtesy than your deserving.

Fal. I know not; here he is, and here I yield him: and I beseech your grace, let it be book'd with the rest of this day's deeds; or, by the Lord, I will have it in a particular ballad else, with mine own picture on the top of it, Colevile kissing my foot: To the which course if I be enforced, if you do not all shew like gilt two-pences to me; and I, in the clear sky of fame, o'ershine you as much as the full moon doth the cinders of the element, which shew like pin's heads to her; believe not the word of the noble: Therefore let me have right, and let desert mount.

Lan. Thine's too heavy to mount.

Fal. Let it shine then.

Lan. Thine's too thick to shine.

Fal. Let it do something, my good lord, that may do me good, and call it what you will.

Lan. Is thy name Colevile?

Cole. It is, my lord.

Lan. A famous rebel art thou, Colevile.

Fal. And a famous true subject took him.

Cole. I am, my lord, but as my betters are, That led me hither: had they been rul'd by me, You should have won them dearer than you have.
Fal. I know not how they sold themselves: but thou, like a kind fellow, gav'st thyself away; and I thank thee for thee.

Re-enter Westmoreland.

Lan. Have you left pursuit?

West. Retreat is made, and execution stay'd.

Lan. Send Colevile, with his confederates,

To York, to present execution.—

Blunt, lead him hence; and see you guard him sure.

[Exeunt some with Colevile.]

And now dispatch we toward the court, my lords;

I hear, the king my father is sore sick:

Our news shall go before us to his majesty,—

Which, cousin, you shall bear,—to comfort him;

And we with sober speed will follow you.

Fal. My lord, I beseech you, give me leave to go through Glostershire; and, when you come to court, stand my good lord's pray in your good report.

¹ i. e. foolishly. ² The sense of dale is included in deep; a dale is a deep place; a dungeon is a deep place; he that is in a dungeon may be therefore said to be in a dale. ³ That is, the eagerness of revenge. ⁴ Cæsar. ⁵ i. e. stand my good friend in your favourable report of me.

Lan. Fare you well, Falstaff; I, in my condition¹,

Shall better speak of you than you deserve. [Ex.

Fal. I would, you had but the wit; 'twere better than your dukedom.—Good faith, this same young sober-blooded boy doth not love me; nor a man cannot make him laugh:—but that's no marvel, he drinks no wine. There's never any of these demure boys come to any proof: for thin drink doth so over-cool their blood, and making many fish-meals, that they fall into a kind of male green-sickness; and then, when they marry, they get wenches: they are generally fools and cowards;—which some of us should be too, but for inflammation. A good sherris-sack hath a two-fold operation in it. It ascends me into the brain; dries me there all the foolish, and dull, and crudy vapours which environ it: makes it apprehensive², quick, forgetive³, full of nimble, fiery, and delectable shapes; which deliver'd o'er to the voice, (the tongue) which is the birth, becomes excellent wit. The second property of your excellent sherris is,—the warming of the blood; which, before cold and settled, left the liver white and pale, which is the badge of pusillanimity and cowardice: but the sherris warms it, and makes it course from the inwards to the parts extreme. It illumineth the face; which, as a beacon, gives warning to all the rest of this little kingdom, man, to arm: and then the vital commoners, and inland petty spirits, muster me all to their captain, the heart; who, great, and puff'd up with this retinue, doth any deed of courage; and this valour comes of sherris: So that skill in the weapon is nothing, without sack; for that sets it a-work: and learning, a mere hoard of gold kept by a devil; till sack commences it, and sets it in act and use.—Hereof comes it, that prince Harry is valiant: for the cold blood he did naturally inherit of his father, he hath, like lean, sterile, and bare land, manured, husbanded, and tilled, with excellent endeavour of drinking good, and good store of fertile sherris; that he is become very hot and valiant. If I had a thousand sons, the first human principle I would teach them, should be,—to forswear thin potations, and to addict themselves to sack.

Enter Bardolph.

How now, Bardolph?

Bard. The army is discharged all, and gone.

Fal. Let them go. I'll through Gloucestershire; and there will I visit master Robert Shallow, esquire: I have him already tempering⁴ between my finger and my thumb, and shortly will I seal with him. Come away. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.

The Palace at Westminster.

Enter King Henry, Warwick, Clarence, and Gloster, &c.

K. Henry. Now, lords, if heaven doth give successful end

To this debate that bleedeth at our doors,
We will our youth lead on to higher fields,
And draw no swords but what are sanctify'd.
Our navy is address'd⁵, our power collected,
Our substitutes in absence well invested,
And every thing lies level to our wish:
Only we want a little personal strength;
And pause us, 'till these rebels, now aloof,
Come underneath the yoke of government.

War. Both which, we doubt not but your Shall soon enjoy. [majesty

K. Henry. Humphrey, my son of Gloster,
Where is the prince your brother? [Windsor.

Glo. I think, he's gone to hunt, my lord, at K. Henry. And how accompanied?

Glo. I do not know, my lord.

K. Henry. Is not his brother, Thomas of Clarence, with him?

Glo. No, my good lord; he is in presence here.

Cl. What would my lord and father?

K. Henry. Nothing but well to thee, Thomas of Clarence. [ther?

How chance, thou art not with the prince thy brother? He loves thee, and thou dost neglect him, Thomas;

Thou hast a better place in his affection,

Than all thy brothers: cherish it, my boy;

And noble offices thou may'st effect

Of mediation, after I am dead,

Between his greatness and thy other brethren:—

Therefore, omit him not, blunt not his love;

Nor lose the good advantage of his grace,

By seeming cold, or careless of his will.

For he is gracious, if he be observ'd;

He hath a tear for pity, and a hand

Open as day for melting charity:

Yet notwithstanding, being incens'd he's flint;

As humorous as winter⁶, and as sudden

As flaws congeal'd⁷ in the spring of day.

His temper, therefore, must be well observ'd:—

Chide him for faults, and do it reverently,

When you perceive his blood inclin'd to mirth:

But, being moody, give him line and scope;

'Till that his passions, like a whale on ground,

Confound themselves with working. Learn this,

Thomas,

And thou shalt prove a shelter to thy friends;

A hoop of gold to bind thy brothers in;

That the united vessel of their blood,

¹ i. e. in my good nature (or condition may perhaps here, as in The Tempest, mean, in my place as commanding officer) I shall speak better of you than you merit. ² i. e. quick to understand. ³ i. e. inventive, imaginative. ⁴ A very pleasant allusion to the old use of sealing with soft wax. ⁵ i. e. our navy is ready, prepared. ⁶ i. e. changeable as the weather of a winter's day. ⁷ Alluding to the opinion of some philosophers, that the vapours being congealed in the air by cold (which is most intense towards the morning), and being afterwards rarified and let loose by the warmth of the sun, occasion those sudden and impetuous gusts of wind which are called flaws.

Mingled with venom of suggestion,
(As, force perforce, the age will pour it in)
Shall never leak, though it do work as strong
As aconitum, or rash¹ gunpowder.

Cla. I shall observe him with all care and love.

K. Henry. Why art thou not at Windsor with him, Thomas?

Cla. He is not there to-day; he dines in London.

K. Henry. And how accompanied? can'st thou tell that? [lowers.]

Cla. With Poins, and other his continual fol-

K. Henry. Most subject is the fattest soil to weeds;
And he, the noble image of my youth,

Is overspread with them: Therefore my grief
Stretches itself beyond the hour of death;

The blood weeps from my heart, when I do shape,
In forms imaginary, the unguided days,

And rotten times, that you shall look upon
When I am sleeping with my ancestors.

For when his headstrong riot hath no curb,
When rage and hot blood are his counsellors,

When means and lavish manners meet together,
O, with what wings shall his affections fly

Towards fronting peril and oppos'd decay!

War. My gracious lord, you look beyond him quite:—

The prince but studies his companions, [guage,
Like a strange tongue: wherein to gain the lan-

'Tis needful, that the most immodest word
Be look'd upon, and learn'd; which once attain'd,

Your highness knows, comes to no further use,
But to be known, and hated. So, like gross terms,

The prince will, in the perfectness of time,
Cast off his followers: and their memory

Shall as a pattern or a measure live,
By which his grace must mete the lives of others;

Turning past evils to advantages. [her comb

K. Henry. 'Tis seldom, when the bee doth leave
In the dead carrion.—Who's here? Westmoreland?

Enter Westmoreland.

West. Health to my sovereign! and new happi-
Added to that which I am to deliver! [ness

Prince John, your son, doth kiss your grace's hand:
Mowbray, the bishop Scroop, Hastings, and all,

Are brought to the correction of your law;
There is not now a rebel's sword unsheath'd,

But peace puts forth her olive every where.
The manner how this action has been borne,

Here, at more leisure, may your highness read;
With every course, in his² particular. [bird,

K. Henry. O Westmoreland, thou art a summer
Which ever in the haunch of winter sings

The lifting up of day. Look! here's more news.

Enter Harcourt.

Har. From enemies heaven keep your majesty;
And when they stand against you, may they fall

As those that I am come to tell you of!
The earl Northumberland, and the lord Bardolph,

With a great power of English and of Scots,
Are by the sheriff of Yorkshire overthrown:

The manner and true order of the fight,
This packet, please it you, contains at large.

K. Henry. And wherefore should these good news make me sick?

Will fortune never come with both hands full,
But write her fair words still in foulest letters?

She either gives a stomach, and no food,—
Such are the poor, in health; or else a feast,

And takes away the stomach,—such are the rich,
That have abundance, and enjoy it not.

I should rejoice now at this happy news;
And now my sight fails, and my brain is giddy:—

O me! come near me, now I am much ill.

[Sinks down.]

15 Glo. Comfort your majesty!

Cla. O my royal father! [look up!

West. My sovereign lord, cheer up yourself,

War. Be patient, princes; you do know these

Are with his highness very ordinary. [fits

20 Stand from him, give him air; he'll straight be well.

Cla. No, no; he cannot long hold out these pangs:

The incessant care and labour of his mind

Hath wrought the mure³, that should confine it in,

So thin, that life looks through, and will break out.

25 Glo. The people fear me⁴; for they do observe

'Unfather'd heirs, and loathly births of nature:

The seasons change their manners; as the year

Had found some months asleep, and leap'd them over.

Cla. The river hath thrice flow'd,⁵ no ebb between:

And the old folk, time's doating chronicles,
Say, it did so a little time before

That our great grandsire, Edward, sick'd and dy'd.

War. Speak lower, princes, for the king recovers.

35 Glo. This apoplexy will, certain, be his end.

K. Henry. I pray you take me up, and bear me

Into some other chamber: softly, pray. [hence

Let there be no noise made, my gentle friends;

Unless some dull⁶ and favourable hand

40 Will whisper music to my weary spirit.

War. Call for the music in the other room.

K. Henry. Set me the crown upon my pillow here⁷.

Cla. His eye is hollow, and he changes much.

War. Less noise, less noise.

45 [They convey the king to an inner part of the room.]

Enter Prince Henry.

P. Henry. Who saw the duke of Clarence?

Cla. I am here, brother, full of heaviness.

P. Henry. How now! rain within doors, and 50 How doth the king? [none abroad!

Glo. Exceeding ill.

P. Henry. Heard he the good news yet?

Tell it him.

Glo. He alter'd much upon the hearing it.

P. Henry. If he be sick

55 With joy, he will recover without physic.

War. Not so much noise, my lords:—sweet prince, speak low;

The king your father is dispos'd to sleep.

60 Cla. Let us withdraw into the other room.

¹ Rash, is quick, violent, sudden. ² i. e. his passions. ³ His is used for its, very frequently in the old plays. ⁴ i. e. the wall. ⁵ i. e. make me afraid. ⁶ That is, equivocal births; productions not brought forth according to the stated laws of generation. ⁷ This is historically true. It happened on the 12th of October, 1411. ⁸ Dull signifies melancholy, gentle, soothing. ⁹ It is still the custom in France to place the crown on the king's pillow when he is dying.

War. Will't please your grace to go along with us?

P. Henry. No; I will sit and watch here by the king. [Exeunt all but Prince Henry.]

Why doth the crown lie there upon his pillow,
Being so troublesome a bed-fellow?

O polish'd perturbation! golden care!

That keep'st the ports¹ of slumber open wide

To many a watchful night!—sleep with it now!—

Yet not so sound, and half so deeply sweet,

As he, whose brow, with homely biggen² bound,

Snores out the watch of night. O majesty!

When thou dost pinch thy bearer, thou dost sit

Like a rich armour worn in heat of day,

That scalds with safety. By his gates of breath

There lies a downy feather, which stirs not:

Did he suspire, that light and weightless down

Perforce must move.—My gracious lord! my father!

This sleep is sound, indeed; this is a sleep,

That from this golden rigol³ hath divorc'd

So many English kings. Thy due, from me,

Is tears, and heavy sorrows of the blood;

Which nature, love, and filial tenderness

Shall, O dear father, pay thee plenteously:

My due, from thee, is this imperial crown;

Which, as immediate from thy place and blood,

Derives itself to me. Lo, here it sits,—

[Putting it on his head.]

Which heaven shall guard: and put the world's whole strength

Into one giant arm, it shall not force

This lineal honour from me: this from thee

Will I to mine leave, as 'tis left to me. [Exit.]

K. Henry. Warwick! Gloster! Clarence!

Re-enter Warwick and the rest.

Cla. Doth the king call? [your grace?]

War. What would your majesty? How fares

K. Henry. Why did you leave me here alone, my lords? [liege,]

Cla. We left the prince my brother here, my
Who undertook to sit and watch by you.

K. Henry. The prince of Wales! Where is he?
let me see him:

He is not here.

War. This door is open; he is gone this way.

Glo. He came not through the chamber where we stay'd. [my pillow?]

K. Hen. Where is the crown? who took it from War. When we withdrew, my liege, we left it here. [seek him out.]

K. Henry. The prince hath ta'en it hence:—go, is he so hasty, that he doth suppose

My sleep my death? — [hither.—

Find him, my lord of Warwick; chide him

This part of his conjoins with my decease, [are!]

And helps to end me.—See, sons, what things you

How quickly nature falls into revolt,

When gold becomes her object!

For this the foolish over-careful fathers

Have broke their sleeps with thought, their brains with care,

Their bones with industry;

For this they have engrossed and pil'd up

The canker'd heaps of strange-achieved gold;

For this they have been thoughtful to invest

5 Their sons with arts and martial exercises:

When, like the bee, tolling⁴ from every flower

The virtuous sweets; [honey,]

Our thighs pack'd with wax, our mouths with

We bring it to the hive; and, like the bees,

10 Are murder'd for our pains. This bitter taste

Yield his engrossments⁵ to the ending father.—

Re-enter Warwick.

Now, where is he that will not stay so long,

Till his friend sickness hath determin'd me? [room,]

15 War. My lord, I found the prince in the next

Washing with kindly tears his gentle cheeks;

With such a deep demeanour in great sorrow,

That tyranny, which never quail'd but blood,

Would, by beholding him, have wash'd his knife

20 With gentle eye-drops. He is coming hither.

K. Henry. But wherefore did he take away the crown?

Re-enter Prince Henry.

Lo, where he comes.—Come hither to me, Harry:—

25 Depart the chamber, leave us here alone.

[Exeunt Lords, &c.]

P. Henry. I never thought to hear you speak again.

K. Henry. Thy wish was father, Harry, to that

I stay too long by thee, I weary thee. [thought:]

30 Dost thou so hunger for my empty chair,

That thou wilt needs invest thee with mine honours

Before thy hour be ripe? O foolish youth!

I house seek'st the greatness that will overwhelm thee.

Stay but a little; for my cloud of dignity

35 Is held from falling with so weak a wind,

That it will quickly drop: my day is dim.

Thou hast stol'n that, which, after some few hours,

Were thine without offence; and, at my death,

Thou hast seal'd up my expectation⁶:

40 Thy life did manifest thou lov'dst me not,

And thou wilt have me die assured of it.

Thou hid'st a thousand daggers in thy thoughts;

Which thou hast whetted on thy stony heart,

To stab at half an hour of my life.

45 What! can'st thou not forbear me half an hour?

Then get thee gone, and dig my grave thyself;

And bid the merry bells ring to thine ear,

That thou art crowned, not that I am dead.

Let all the tears that should bedew my hearse,

50 Be drops of balm, to sanctify thy head:

Only compound me with forgotten dust;

Give that, which gave thee life, unto the worms.

Pluck down my officers, break my decrees;

For now a time is come to mock at form,

55 Harry the Fifth is crown'd:—Up, vanity!

Down, royal state! all you sage counsellors, hence!

And to the English court assemble now,

From every region, apes of idleness!

Now, neighbour confines, purge you of your scum:

60 Have you a ruffian, that will swear, drink, dance,

Revel the night; rob, murder, and commit

¹ i. e. the gates of slumber. ² A kind of cap, at present worn only by children; but so called from the cap worn by the Beguines, an order of nuns. ³ Rigol means a circle. ⁴ Tolling is taking toll.

⁵ His accumulations.

⁶ i. e. thou hast confirmed my opinion.

The oldest sins the newest kind of ways?
 Be happy, he will trouble you no more:
 England shall double gild his treble guilt;
 England shall give him office, honour, might:
 For the fifth Harry from curb'd licence plucks
 The muzzle of restraint, and the wild dog
 Shall flesh his tooth in every innocent.
 O my poor kingdom, sick with civil blows!
 When that my care could not withhold thy riots,
 What wilt thou do when riot is thy care?
 O, thou wilt be a wilderness again,
 Peopled with wolves, thy old inhabitants!

P. Henry. O, pardon me, my liege! but for my tears,

[Kneeling.]

The moist impediments unto my speech,
 I had fore-stall'd this dear and deep rebuke,
 Ere you with grief had spoke, and I had heard
 The course of it so far. There is your crown;
 And He that wears the crown immortally,
 Long guard it yours! If I affect it more,
 Than as your honour, and as your renown,
 Let me no more from this obedience rise,
 Which my most true² and inward-duteous spirit
 Teacheth, this prostrate and exterior bending!
 Heaven witness with me, when I here came in,
 And found no course of breath within your majesty,
 How cold it struck my heart! If I do feign,
 O, let me in my present wildness die;
 And never live to shew the incredulous world
 The noble change that I have purposed!
 Coming to look on you, thinking you dead,
 (And dead almost, my liege, to think you were)
 I spake unto the crown, as having sense,
 And thus upbraided it. *The care on thee depending,
 Hath fed upon the body of my father;
 Therefore, thou, best of gold, art worst of gold.
 Other, less fine in carrat, is more precious,
 Preserving life in med'cine potable³:
 But thou, most fine, most honour'd, most renown'd,
 Hast eat thy bearer up.* Thus my most royal liege,
 Accusing it, I put it on my head;
 To try with it,—as with an enemy,
 That had before my face murder'd my father,—
 The quarrel of a true inheritor.
 But if it did infect my blood with joy,
 Or swell my thoughts to any strain of pride;
 If any rebel or vain spirit of mine
 Did, with the least affection of a welcome,
 Give entertainment to the might of it,
 Let heaven for ever keep it from my head!
 And make me as the poorest vassal is,
 That doth with awe and terror kneel to it!

K. Henry. O my son!

Heaven put it in thy mind to take it hence,
 That thou might'st win the more thy father's love,
 Pleading so wisely in excuse of it.
 Come hither, Harry, sit thou by my bed;
 And hear, I think, the very latest counsel
 That ever I shall breathe. Heaven knows, my son,
 By what by-paths, and indirect crook'd ways,
 I met this crown; and I myself know well,

How troublesome it sat upon my head:
 To thee it shall descend with better quiet,
 Better opinion, better confirmation;
 For all the⁴ soil of the atchievement goes
 With me into the earth. It seem'd in me,
 But as an honour snatch'd with boisterous hand;
 And I had many living, to upbraid
 My gain of it by their assistances;
 Which daily drew to quarrel, and to blood-shed,
 Wounding supposed⁵ peace: all these bold fears,
 Thou see'st, with peril I have answered:—
 For all my reign hath been but as a scene
 Acting that argument; and now my death
 Changes the mode: for what in me was purchas'd,
 Falls upon thee in a more fairer sort,
 So thou the garland wear'st⁶ successively. [do,
 Yet, though thou stand'st more sure than I could
 Thou art not firm enough, since griefs are green;
 And all thy⁸ friends, which thou must make thy
 friends,

Have but their stings and teeth newly ta'en out;
 By whose fell working I was first advanc'd,
 And by whose power I well might lodge a fear
 To be again displac'd: which to avoid,
 I cut them off; and had a purpose now
 To lead out many to the Holy Land;
 Lest rest, and lying still, might make them look Too near into my state. Therefore, my Harry,
 Be it thy course, to busy giddy minds [out,
 With foreign quarrels; that action, hence borne
 May waste the memory of the former days.
 More would I, but my lungs are wasted so,
 That strength of speech is utterly deny'd me.
 How I came by the crown, O God, forgive!
 And grant it may with thee in true peace live.

P. Henry. My gracious liege,

You won it, wore it, kept it, gave it me;
 Then plain, and right, must my possession be:
 Which I, with more than with a common pain,
 'Gainst all the world will rightfully maintain.

Enter Lord John of Lancaster, Warwick, &c.

K. Henry. Look, look, here comes my John of Lancaster. [father!

Lan. Health, peace, and happiness to my royal
K. Henry. Thou bring'st me happiness, and peace, son John;

But health, alack, with youthful wings is flown
 From this bare, wither'd trunk: upon thy sight,
 My worldly business makes a period.—

Where is my lord of Warwick?

P. Henry. My lord of Warwick!

K. Henry. Doth any name particular belong
 Unto the lodging where I first did swoon?

War. 'Tis called Jerusalem, my noble lord.

K. Henry. Laud be to God!—even there my life must end.

It hath been prophes'd to me many years,
 I should not die but in Jerusalem;

Which vainly I suppos'd the Holy Land:—

But, bear me to that chamber; there I'll lie;

In that Jerusalem shall Harry die. [Exit.

Shallow's Seat in Glostershire.Enter Shallow, Falstaff, Bardolph, and Page.

Shal. BY cock and pye¹, sir, you shall not away to-night.—What, Davy, I say!

Fal. You must excuse me, master Robert Shallow.

Shal. I will not excuse you; you shall not be excus'd; excuses shall not be admitted: there is no excuse shall serve; you shall not be excus'd.—Why, Davy!

Enter Davy.

Davy. Here, sir.

Shal. Davy, Davy, Davy,—let me see, Davy; let me see:—yea, marry, William cook², bid him come hither.—Sir John, you shall not be excus'd.

Davy. Marry, sir, thus;—those precepts³ cannot be serv'd: and, again, sir,—Shall we sow the head-land with wheat?

Shal. With red wheat, Davy. But for William cook;—are there no young pigeons?

Davy. Yes, sir.—Here is now the smith's note, for shoeing, and plough-irons.

Shal. Let it be cast, and paid:—Sir John, you shall not be excus'd.

Davy. Now, sir, a new link to the bucket must needs be had:—And, sir, do you mean to stop any of William's wages, about the sack he lost the other day at Hinckley fair?

Shal. He shall answer it:—Some pigeons, Davy; a couple of short-legg'd hens; a joint of mutton; and any pretty little tiny kickshaws, tell William cook.

Davy. Doth the man of war stay all night, sir?

Shal. Yes, Davy. I will use him well; A friend i' the court is better than a penny in purse. Use his men well, Davy; for they are arrant knaves, and will backbite.

Davy. No worse than they are back-bitten, sir; for they have marvellous foul linen.

Shal. Well conceited, Davy. About thy business, Davy.

Davy. I beseech you, sir, to countenance William Visor of Woncot, against Clement Perkes of the hill.

Shal. There are many complaints, Davy, against that Visor; that Visor is an arrant knave, on my knowledge.

Davy. I grant your worship that he is a knave, sir: but yet, God forbid, sir, but a knave should have some countenance at his friend's request. An honest man, sir, is able to speak for himself, when a knave is not. I have serv'd your worship truly, sir, these eight years; and if I cannot once or twice in a quarter bear out a knave against an honest man, I have but very little credit with your worship. The knave is mine honest friend, sir; therefore, I beseech your worship, let him be countenanc'd.

Shal. Go to; I say, he shall have no wrong. Look about, Davy. Where are you, Sir John? Come, off with your boots.—Give me your hand, master Bardolph.

Bard. I am glad to see your worship.

Shal. I thank thee with all my heart, kind master Bardolph:—and welcome, my tall fellow. [to the page.] Come, Sir John.

Fal. I'll follow you, good master Robert Shallow. Bardolph, look to our horses. [Exeunt Shallow, Bardolph, &c.]—If I were saw'd into quantities, I should make four dozen of such bearded hermit's staves as master Shallow. It is a wonderful thing, to see the semblable coherence of his men's spirits and his: They, by observing of him, do bear themselves like foolish justices; he, by conversing with them, is turned into a justice-like serving-man: their spirits are so married in conjunction with the participation of society, that they flock together in consent, like so many wild-geese. If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men, with the imputation of being near their master: if to his men, I would curry with master Shallow, that no man could better command his servants. It is certain, that either wise bearing, or ignorant carriage, is caught, as men take diseases, one of another: therefore, let men take heed of their company. I will devise matter enough out of this Shallow, to keep prince Harry in continual laughter, the wearing-out of six fashions (which is four terms, or two actions), and he shall laugh without intervallums. O, it is much, that a lie, with a slight oath, and a jest with a sad brow, will do with a fellow that never had the ache in his shoulders! O, you shall see him laugh 'till his face be like a wet cloak ill laid up.

Shal. [within] Sir John!

Fal. I come, master Shallow; I come, master Shallow. [Exit Falstaff.]

S C E N E II.

The Court, in London.Enter the Earl of Warwick, and the Lord Chief Justice.

War. How now, my lord chief justice; whither away?

Ch. Just. How doth the king? [ended.]

War. Exceeding well; his cares are now all

Ch. Just. I hope, not dead.

War. He's walk'd the way of nature;

And, to our purposes, he lives no more.

Ch. Just. I would his majesty had call'd me with him:

¹ See note¹, p. 48.² Anciently, the lower orders of people had no surnames, but in their stead were content to adopt the titles of their several professions.³ Precept is a justice's warrant.

The service that I truly did his life,
Hath left me open to all injuries.

War. Indeed, I think, the young king loves you not.

Ch. Just. I know, he doth not; and do arm myself,

To welcome the condition of the time;
Which cannot look more hideously upon me
Than I have drawn it in my fantasy.

Enter Lord John of Lancaster, Gloster, and Clarence, &c.

War. Here come the heavy issue of dead
Harry:—

O, that the living Harry had the temper
Of him, the worst of these three gentlemen!
How many nobles then should hold their places,
That must strike sail to spirits of vile sort!

Ch. Just. Alas, I fear, all will be overturn'd.

Lan. Good morrow, cousin Warwick.

Glo. Cla. Good morrow, cousin.

Lan. We meet like men that had forgot to speak.

War. We do remember; but our argument
Is all too heavy to admit much talk.

Lan. Well, peace be with him that hath made us heavy!

Ch. Just. Peace be with us, lest we be heavier!

Glo. O, good my lord, you have lost a friend
indeed:

And I dare swear, you borrow not that face
Of seeming sorrow; it is, sure, your own. [find,

Lan. Though no man be assur'd what grace to
You stand in coldest expectation:

I am the sorrier; 'would, 'twere otherwise.

Cla. Well, you must now speak Sir John Fal-staff fair;

Which swims against your stream of quality.

Ch. Just. Sweet princes, what I did, I did in honour,

Led by the impartial conduct of my soul;

And never shall you see, that I will beg

A ragged and forestall'd remission¹.—

If truth and upright innocency fail me,

I'll to the king my master that is dead,

And tell him who hath sent me after him,

War. Here comes the prince.

Enter King Henry.

Ch. Just. Good morrow; and heaven save your majesty!

K. Henry. This new and gorgeous garment,
majesty,

Sits not so easy on me as you think.—

Brothers, you mix your sadness with some fear;

This is the English, not the Turkish court;

Not Amurath an Amurath succeeds,

But Harry, Harry:—Yet be sad, good brothers,

For, to speak truth, it very well becomes you;

Sorrow so royally in you appears,

That I will deeply put the fashion on,

15 And wear it in my heart. Why then, be sad:

But entertain no more of it, good brothers,

Than a joint burthen laid upon us all.

For me, by heaven, I bid you be assur'd,

I'll be your father and your brother too;

20 Let me but bear your love, I'll bear your cares.

Yet weep that Harry's dead; and so will I:

But Harry lives, that shall convert those tears,

By number, into hours of happiness.

Lan. &c. We hope no other from your majesty.

25 K. Henry. You all look strangely on me:—and you most; [To the Ch. Just.

You are, I think, assur'd I love you not.

Ch. Just. I am assur'd, if I be measur'd rightly,
Your majesty hath no just cause to hate me.

30 K. Henry. No! How might a prince of my great hopes forget

So great indignities you laid upon me?

What! rate, rebuke, and roughly send to prison

The immediate heir of England! Was this easy?

35 May this be wash'd in Lethe, and forgotten?

Ch. Just. I then did use the person of your father;

The image of his power lay then in me:

And, in the administration of his law,

40 Whiles I was busy for the commonwealth,

Your highness pleased to forget my place,

The majesty and power of law and justice,

The image of the king whom I presented,

And struck me in my very seat of judgment²;

Whereon,

¹ Meaning, a base, ignominious pardon, begged by a voluntary concession of offence, and anticipation of the charge.

² The chief justice, in this play, was Sir William Gascoigne, of whom the following memoir is given by Sir John Hawkins: "While at the bar, Henry of Bolingbroke had been his client; and upon the decease of John of Gaunt, by the above Henry, his heir, then in banishment, he was appointed his attorney, to sue in the court of Wards the livery of the estates descended to him. Richard II. revoked the letters patent for this purpose, and defeated the intent of them, and thereby furnished a ground for the invasion of his kingdom by the heir of Gaunt; who becoming afterwards Henry IV. appointed Gascoigne chief justice of the King's Bench in the first year of his reign. In that station Gascoigne acquired the character of a learned, an upright, a wise, and an intrepid judge. The story so frequently alluded to of his committing the prince for an insult on his person, and the court wherein he presided, is thus related by Sir Thomas Elyot, in his book entitled, The Governour: "The moste renowned prince king Henry the fyfte, late kynge of Englande, duryng the lyfe of his father, was noted to be fiers and of wanton courage: it hapned, that one of his seruantes, whom he well fauoured, was for felony by him committed, arraigned at the kynges benche: whereof the prince being aduertised, and incensed by lyghte persones aboute him, in furious rage came hastily to the barre, where his seruant stode as a prisoner, and commaunded hym to be vngyued and set at libertie: wherat all men were abashed, reserued the chiefe justice, who humbly exhorted the prince, to be contented, that his seruaunt mought be ordred, accordyng to the pynciente lawes of this realme: or if he wolde haue hym saued from the rigour of the lawes, that he

Whereon, as an offender to your father,
 I gave bold way to my authority,
 And did commit you. If the deed were ill,
 Be you contented, wearing now the garland,
 To have a son set your decrees at nought;
 To pluck down justice from your awful bench;
 To trip the course of law¹, and blunt the sword
 That guards the peace and safety of your person:
 Nay, more; to spurn at your most royal image,
 And mock your workings in a second body².
 Question your royal thoughts, make the case yours;
 Be now the father, and propose a son³:
 Hear your own dignity so much profan'd,
 See your most dreadful laws so loosely slighted,
 Behold yourself so by a son disdained;
 And then imagine me taking your part,
 And, in your power, so silencing your son:—
 After this cold considerance, sentence me;
 And, as you are a king, speak in your state,—
 What I have done, that misbecame my place,
 My person, or my liege's sovereignty.

K. Henry. You are right, justice, and you weigh this well;

Therefore still bear the balance, and the sword:
 And I do wish your honours may increase,
 'Till you do live to see a son of mine
 Offend you, and obey you, as I did.
 So shall I live to speak my father's words;—
*Happy am I, that have a man so bold,
 That dares do justice on my proper son:
 And not less happy, having such a son,
 That would deliver up his greatness so*

Into the hands of justice.—You did commit me:
 For which, I do commit into your hand
 The unstained sword that you have us'd to bear;
 With this⁴ remembrance,—That you use the same
 5 With the like bold, just, and impartial spirit,
 As you have done 'gainst me. There is my hand;
 You shall be as a father to my youth:
 My voice shall sound as you do prompt mine ear;
 And I will stoop and humble my intents
 10 To your well practis'd, wise directions.—
 And, princes all, believe me, I beseech you;—
 My father is gone wild into his grave,
 For in his tomb lie my affections⁵;
 And with his spirit sadly⁶ I survive,
 15 To mock the expectations of the world;
 To frustrate prophecies; and to raze out
 Rotten opinion, who hath writ me down
 After my seeming. The tide of blood in me
 Hath proudly flow'd in vanity, 'till now:
 20 Now doth it turn, and ebb back to the sea;
 Where it shall mingle with the state of floods⁷,
 And flow henceforth in formal majesty.
 Now call we our high court of parliament:
 And let us chuse such limbs of noble counsel,
 25 That the great body of our state may go
 In equal rank with the best-govern'd nation;
 That war, or peace, or both at once, may be
 As things acquainted and familiar to us;—
 In which you, father, shall have foremost hand.—
 30 [To the Lord Chief Justice.
 Our coronation done, we will accite,
 As I before remember'd, all our state:

he shulde opteyne, if he moughte, of the kynge his father, his gracious pardon, wherby no lawe or iustyce shulde be derogate. With whiche answer the prince nothyng appeased, but rather more inflamed, endeavored him selfe to take away his seruant. The iudge considering the perillous example, and inconuenience that mought therby insue, with a valyant spirite and courage, commanded the prince upon his alegeance, to leaue the prisoner, and depart his way. With which commandment the prince being set all in a fury, all chafed and in a terrible maner, came vp to the place of iugement, men thynking that he wold haue slayne the iuge, or haue done to hym some damage: but the iuge sittynge styll without mouing, declaring the maiestie of the kynges place of iugement, and with an assured and bolde countenance, had to the prince, these wordes followyng, 'Syr, remembre your selfe, I kepe here the place of the kyng your soueraine lorde and father, to whom ye owe double obedience, wherfore estesoones in his name, I charge you desyste of your wylfulnes and vnlauffull enterprise, & from hensforth giue good example to those, whyche hereafter shall be your propre subiectes. And now, for your contempte and disobedience, goo you to the prysone of the kynges benche, wherevnto I commyttee you, and remayne ye there prisoner vntyll the pleasure of the kyng your father be further knowen.' With whiche wordes beinge abashed, and also wondrynge at the meruaylous grauitie of that worshypfulle iustyce, the noble prince layinge his weapon aparte, doynge reuerence, departed, and wente to the kynges benche, as he was commanded. Whereat his seruantes disdaynyng, came and shewed to the kyng all the hole affaire. Whereat he awhyles studyenge, after as a man all rauyshed with gladnesse, holdynge his eien and handes vp towarde heuen, abraided, saying with a loude voice, 'O mercyfull God, howe moche am I, aboue all other men, bounde to your infinite goodnes, specially for that ye haue gyuen me a iuge, who feareth nat to minister iustyce, and also a sonne, who can suffre semblably, and obeye iustyce?' And here it may be noted, that Shakspeare has deviated from history in bringing the chief justice and Henry V. together; for it is expressly said by Fuller, in his Worthies in Yorkshire, and that on the best authority, that Gascoigne died in the life-time of his father, viz. on the first day of November, 14 Henry IV. See Dugd. Origines Juridic. in the Chronica Series, fol. 54. 56. Mr. Malone adds, that in the foregoing account of this transaction, there is no mention of the prince's having struck Gascoigne, the chief justice.—Speed, however, who quotes Elyot, says, on I know not what authority, that the prince gave the judge a blow on the face. ¹ To defeat the process of justice. ² i. e. to treat with contempt your acts executed by a representative. ³ i. e. image to yourself a son. ⁴ i. e. admonition, 'The meaning seems to be—My wild dispositions having ceased on my father's death, and being now as it were buried in his tomb, he and wildness are interred in the same grave. ⁵ i. e. seriously, gravely. ⁶ Sad is opposed to wild. ⁷ i. e. the assembly, or general meeting of the floods; for all rivers, running into the sea, are there represented as holding their sessions.

And (heaven consigning to my good intents)
No prince, nor peer, shall have just cause to say,—
Heavens shorten Harry's happy life one day! [Exe.]

Shallow's Seat in Glostershire.

Enter Falstaff, Shallow, Silence, Bardolph, the Page, and Davy.

Shal. Nay, you shall see mine orchard: where, in an arbour, we will eat a last year's pippin of my own grafting, with a dish of carraways¹, and so forth;—come, cousin Silence;—and then to bed.

Fal. You have here a goodly dwelling, and a rich.

Shal. Barren, barren, barren; beggars all, beggars all; Sir John:—marry, good air.—Spread, Davy, spread, Davy: well said, Davy.

Fal. This Davy serves you for good uses: he is your serving-man, and your husband-man.

Shal. A good varlet, a good varlet, a very good varlet, Sir John.—By the mass, I have drank too much sack at supper:—a good varlet. Now sit down, now sit down:—come, cousin.

Sil. Ah, sirrah! quoth-a,—

We shal. do nothing but eat, and make good chear, 25

And praise heaven for the merry year;

When flesh is cheap and females dear²,

And lusty lads roam here and there;

So merrily, and ever among so merrily, &c. 30

Fal. 'Here's a merry heart!—Good master Silence, I'll give you a health for that anon.

Shal. Give master Bardolph some wine, Davy.

Davy. Sweet sir, sit:—I'll be with you anon;—most sweet sir, sit.—Master page, good master 35 page, sit: ³ Proface! What you want in meat, we'll have in drink. But you must bear; The heart's⁴ all. [Exit.]

Shal. Be merry, master Bardolph;—and my little soldier there, be merry.

Sil. [Singing] Be merry, be merry, my wife has all;

For women are shews, both short and tall:

'Tis merry in hall, when beards wag all,

And welcome merry shrove-tide.

Be merry, be merry, &c. 45

Fal. I did not think, master Silence had been a man of this mettle.

Sil. Who, I? I have been merry twice and once, ere now.

Re-enter Davy.

Davy. There is a dish of leather-coats for you.
[Setting them before Bardolph.]

Shal. Davy,—

Davy. Your worship?—I'll be with you straight.—A cup of wine, sir?

Sil. [Singing] A cup of wine, that's brisk and fine,
And drink unto the leman mine;—

And a merry heart lives long-a.

Fal. Well said, master Silence.

Sil. An we shall be merry, now comes in the sweet of the night.

Fal. Health and long life to you, master Silence!

Sil. Fill the cup, and let it come;

I'll pledge you a mile to the bottom.

Shal. Honest Bardolph, welcome: If thou want'st any thing, and wilt not call, beshrew thy heart.—Welcome, my little tiny thief; [to the page] and welcome, indeed, too.—I'll drink to master Bardolph, and to all the 'cavaleroes about London.

Davy. I hope to see London once ere I die.

Bard. An I might see you there, Davy,—

Shal. You'll crack a quart together. Ha! will you not, master Bardolph?

Bard. Yes, sir, in a pottle pot.

Shal. I thank thee:—The knave will stick by thee, I can assure thee that: he will not out; he is true bred.

Bard. And I'll stick by him, sir.

[One knocks at the door.]

Shal. Why, there spoke a king. Lack nothing: be merry. Look who's at door there: Ho! who knocks?

Fal. Why, now you have done me right.

[To Silence, who drinks a bumper.]

Sil. [Singing] Do me right⁵, and dub me knight:
Samingo⁶.—Is't not so?

Fal. 'Tis so.

Sil. Is't so? Why, then say, an old man can do somewhat. 40
[Re-enter Davy.]

Davy. An it please your worship, there's one Pistol come from the court with news.

Fal. From the court? let him come in.—

Enter Pistol.

How now, Pistol?

Pist. Sir John, 'save you, sir!

Fal. What wind blew you hither, Pistol?

Pist. Not the ill wind which blows no man

¹ A comfit or confection so called in our author's time, according to Dr. Warburton; but a dish of apples of that name, according to Dr. Goldsmith; and Mr. Steevens says, there is a pear called a carraway, which may be corrupted from caillouel, Fr. ² Here the double sense of the word dear must be remembered. ³ Italian, from profaccia; that is, much good may it do you. ⁴ That is, the intention with which the entertainment is given. ⁵ This was the term by which an airy, splendid, irregular fellow was distinguished. ⁶ To do a man right and to do him reason, were formerly the usual expressions in pledging healths. He who drank a bumper expected a bumper should be drank to his toast. It was the custom of the good fellows in Shakspeare's days to drink a very large draught of wine, and sometimes a less palatable potation, on their knees, to the health of their mistress. He who performed this exploit was dubb'd a knight for the evening. ⁷ Samingo, that is, San Domingo, as Sir T. Hanmer has rightly observed. But what is the meaning and propriety of the name here, has not been shewn. Justice Silence is here introduced as in the midst of his cups: and Mr. Warton says, he remembers a black-letter ballad, in which either a San Domingo or a signior Domingo, is celebrated for his miraculous feats in drinking. Silence, in the abundance of his festivity, touches upon some old song, in which this convivial saint or signior was the burden. Perhaps too the pronunciation is here suited to the character.
good.—

good.—Sweet knight, thou art now one of the greatest men in the realm.

Sil. Indeed I think 'a be; but goodman Puff of Barson.

Pist. Puff?
Puff in thy teeth, most recreant coward base!—
Sir John, I am thy Pistol, and thy friend,
And helter-skelter have I rode to thee;
And tidings do I bring, and lucky joys,
And golden times, and happy news of price.

Fal. I prythee now, deliver them like a man of this world. [base]

Pist. A foutra for the world, and worldlings I speak of Africa, and golden joys.

Fal. O base Assyrian knight, what is thy news? 15
¹Let king Cophetua know the truth thereof.

Sil. And Robin Hood, Scarlet, and John. [Sings.]

Pist. Shall dunghill curs confront the Helicons?
And shall good news be baffled?

Then, Pistol, lay thy head in Furies' lap. [ing.] 20

Shal. Honest gentleman, I know not your breed.

Pist. Why then, lament therefore.

Shal. Give me pardon, sir.—If, sir, you come with news from the court, I take it, there is but two ways; either to utter them, or to conceal 25 them. I am, sir, under the king, in some authority.

Pist. Under which king, ²Bezonian? speak, or die.

Shal. Under king Harry.

Pist. Harry the fourth? or fifth?

Shal. Harry the fourth.

Pist. A foutra for thine office!—

Sir John, thy tender lambkin now is king;
Harry the fifth's the man. I speak the truth:
When Pistol lies, do this; and fig me³, like
The bragging Spaniard.

Fal. What! is the old king dead?

Pist. As nail in door: the things I speak, are just.

Fal. Away, Bardolph; saddle my horse.—Master Robert Shallow, chuse what office thou wilt in the land, 'tis thine.—Pistol, I will double-charge thee with dignities.

Bard. O joyful day!—I would not take a knighthood for my fortune.

Pist. What? I do bring good news?

Fal. Carry master Silence to bed.—Master Shallow, my lord Shallow, be what thou wilt, I am fortune's steward. Get on thy boots; we'll ride all night:—Oh, sweet Pistol!—Away, Bardolph.—Come, Pistol, utter more to me; and, withal, devise something to do thyself good.—

Boot, boot, master Shallow; I know, the young king is sick for me. Let us take any man's horses; the laws of England are at my commandment. Happy are they which have been my friends; and woe to my lord chief justice!

Pist. Let vultures vile seize on his lungs also!
Where is the life that late I led⁴, say they:
Why, here it is; Welcome these pleasant days.
[Exeunt.]

S C E N E IV.

A street in London.

Enter Hostess Quickly, Doll Tear-sheet, & Beadles.

Host. No, thou arrant knave; I would I might die, that I might have thee hang'd: thou hast drawn my shoulder out of joint.

Bead. The constables have deliver'd her over to me; and she shall have whipping-cheer enough, I warrant her: There hath been a man or two, lately, kill'd about her.

Dol. Nut-hook, nut-hook⁵, you lie. Come on; I'll tell thee what, thou damn'd tripe-visag'd rascal; if the child I now go with, do miscarry, thou hadst better thou hadst struck thy mother, thou paper-fac'd villain.

Host. O the Lord, that Sir John were come! he would make this a bloody day to somebody. But I pray God, the fruit of her womb miscarry! 30

Bead. If it do, you shall have a dozen of cushions⁶ again; you have but eleven now. Come, I charge you both go with me; for the man is dead, that you and Pistol beat among you.

Dol. I'll tell thee what, thou thin man in a censor⁷! I will have you as soundly swing'd for this, you⁸ blue-bottle rogue! you filthy famish'd correctioner! if you be not swing'd, I'll forswear half-kirtles⁹. 35

Bead. Come, come, you she knight-errant; come.

Host. O, that right should thus overcome might! Well; of sufferance comes ease.

Dol. Come, you rogue, come; bring me to a justice.

Host. Ay; come, you starv'd blood-hound. 45

Dol. Goodman death! goodman bones!

Host. Thou atomy¹⁰, thou!

Dol. Come, you thin thing; come, you rascal¹¹!

Bead. Very well. [Exeunt.]

¹ Lines taken from an old bombast play of King Cophetua; of whom, we learn from Shakspeare, there were ballads too. See Love's Labour's Lost.

² This is a term of reproach, frequent in the writers contemporary with our poet. Bisognoso, a needy person; thence, metaphorically, a base scoundrel.

³ To fig, in Spanish higas dar, is to insult by putting the thumb between the fore and middle finger. From this Spanish custom we yet say in contempt, "a fig for you."

⁴ Words of an old ballad. ⁵ It has been already observed on the Merry Wives of Windsor, that nut-hook seems to have been in those times a name of reproach for a catchpole; or nut-hook might probably have been as common a term of reproach as rogue is at present.

⁶ That is, to stuff her out that she might counterfeit pregnancy. ⁷ These old censers of thin metal had generally at the bottom the figure of some saint raised up with a hammer, in a barbarous kind of imbossed or chased work. The hunger-starved beadle is compared, in substance, to one of these thin raised figures, by the same kind of humour that Pistol, in the Merry Wives, calls Slender a laten bilboe.

⁸ A name probably given to the beadle, from the colour of his livery; or perhaps the allusion may be to the great flesh-fly, commonly called a blue-bottle.

⁹ A half-kirtle was the same kind of thing as we call at present a short-gown, or a bed-gown: and was the dress of the courtezans of the time.

¹⁰ Atomy for anatomy. ¹¹ Lean deer were called rascal deer.

S C E N E V.

A public place near Westminster Abbey.

Enter two Grooms, strewing rushes.¹

1 Groom. More rushes, more rushes.

2 Groom. The trumpets have sounded twice.

1 Groom. It will be two o'clock ere they come from the coronation: Dispatch, dispatch.

[Exeunt Grooms.]

Enter Fal. Shallow, Pistol, Bardolph, and the Boy.

Fal. Stand here by me, master Robert Shallow; I will make the king do you grace: I will leer upon him as a' comes by; and do but mark the countenance that he will give me.

Pist. Bless thy lungs, good knight!

Fal. Come here, Pistol; stand behind me.—O, if I had time to have made new liveries, I would have bestow'd the thousand pound I borrow'd of you. [To Shallow.] But 'tis no matter; this poor show doth better: this doth infer the zeal I had to see him.

Shal. It doth so.

Fal. It shews my earnestness of affection.

Pist. It doth so.

Fal. My devotion.

Shal. It doth, it doth, it doth.

Fal. As it were, to ride day and night; and not to deliberate, not to remember, not to have patience to shift me.

Shal. It is most certain.

Fal. But to stand stained with travel, and sweating with desire to see him: thinking of nothing else; putting all affairs else in oblivion; as if there were nothing else to be done, but to see him.

Pist. 'Tis semper idem, for absque hoc nihil est: 'Tis all in every part.

Shal. 'Tis so, indeed.

Pist. My knight, I will enflame thy noble liver, And make thee rage.

Thy Doll, and Helen of thy noble thoughts, Is in base durance, and contagious prison; Haul'd thither

By most mechanical and dirty hand:— [snake, Rouze up reve, ge from ebon den with fell Alecto's For Doll is in; Pistol speaks nought but truth.]

Fal. I will deliver her. [sounds.]

Pist. There roar'd the sea, and trumpet-clangor The trumpets sound. Enter the King, and his train.

Fal. God save thy grace, king Hal! my royal Hal!

Pist. The heavens thee guard and keep, most royal imp² of fame!

Fal. God save thee, my sweet boy! [man.]

King. My lord chief justice, speak to that vain

Ch. Just. Have you your wits? know you what 'tis you speak? [heart!]

Fal. My king! my Jove! I speak to thee, my King. I know thee not, old man: Fall to thy prayers;

How ill white hairs become a fool, and jester!

I have long dream'd of such a kind of man, So surfeit-swell'd, so old, and so profane³; But, being awake, I do despise my dream. Make less thy body, hence, and more thy grace; Leave gormandizing; know, the grave doth gape For thee thrice wider than for other men:— Reply not to me with a fool-born jest; Presume not, that I am the thing I was: For heaven doth know, so shall the world perceive, That I have turn'd away my former self; So will I those that kept me company. When thou dost hear I am as I have been, Approach me; and thou shalt be as thou wast, The tutor and the feeder of my riots:— Till then, I banish thee on pain of death,— As I have done the rest of my misleaders,— Not to come near our person by ten miles. For competence of life, I will allow you; That lack of means enforce you not to evil: And, as we hear you do reform yourselves, [ties,] We will, according to your strength and quality, Give you advancement.—Be it your charge, my lord,

To see perform'd the tenor of our word.—

25 Set on. [Exit King, &c.]

Fal. Master Shallow, I owe you a thousand pound.

Shal. Ay, marry, Sir John; which I beseech you to let me have home with me.

30 Fal. That can hardly be, master Shallow. Do not you grieve at this; I shall be sent for in private to him: look you, he must seem thus to the world. Fear not your advancement; I will be the man yet, that shall make you great.

35 Shal. I cannot perceive how: unless you give me your doublet, and stuff me out with straw. I beseech you, good Sir John, let me have five hundred of my thousand.

Fal. Sir, I will be as good as my word: this that you heard, was but a colour.

Shal. A colour, I fear, that you will die in, Sir John.

40 Fal. Fear no colours; go with me to dinner. Come, lieutenant Pistol; come, Bardolph:—I shall be sent for soon at night.

Re-enter the Chief Justice, Prince John, &c.

Ch. Just. Go, carry Sir John Falstaff to the Fleet; Take all his company along with him.

Fal. My lord, my lord,—

50 Ch. Just. I cannot now speak; I will hear you soon. Take them away.

Pist. Si fortunamet tormenta, spero me contenta. [Exeunt.]

Manent Lancaster, and Chief Justice.

Lan. I like this fair proceeding of the king's; He hath intent, his wonted followers Shall all be very well provided for; But all are banish'd, till their conversations 60 Appear more wise and modest to the world.

¹ At ceremonial entertainments, it was the custom to strew the floor with rushes. ² Imp means progeny; and is probably derived from imp-yn, a Welch word, which primitively signifies a sprout, a sucker. ³ Profane, in our author, often signifies love of talk, without the particular idea now given it.

Ch. Just. And so they are.

[lord.

Lan. The king hath call'd his parliament, my

Ch. Just. He hath.

Lan. I will lay odds,—that ere this year expire,
We bear our civil swords, and native fire,

As far as France: I heard a bird so sing,
Whose music, to my thinking, pleas'd the king.
Come, will you hence?

[Exeunt.

E P I L O G U E¹.

SPOKEN BY A DANCER.

FIRST, my fear; then, my court'sy; last, my speech. My fear is, your displeasure; my court'sy, my duty; and my speech, to beg your pardons. If you look for a good speech now, you undo me: for what I have to say, is of mine own making: and what, indeed, I should say, will, I doubt, prove mine own marring. But to the purpose, and so to the venture.—Be it known to you (as it is very well) I was lately here in the end of a displeasing play, to pray your patience for it, and to promise you a better. I did mean, indeed, to pay you with this; which if, like an ill venture, it come unluckily home, I break, and you, my gentle creditors, lose. Here, I promised you, I would be, and here I commit my body to your mercies: bate me some, and I will pay you some, and, as most debtors do, promise you infinitely.

If my tongue cannot entreat you to acquit me, will you command me to use my legs? and yet that were but light payment,—to dance out of your debt. But a good conscience will make any possible satisfaction, and so will I. All the gentlewomen here have forgiven me; if the gentlemen will not, then the gentlemen do not agree with the gentlewomen, which was never seen before in such an assembly.

One word more, I beseech you. If you be not too much cloy'd with fat meat, our humble author will continue the story, with Sir John in it, and make you merry with fair Katharine of France: where, for any thing I know, Falstaff shall die of a sweat, unless already he be killed with your hard opinions; for Oldcastle died a martyr, and this is not the man. My tongue is weary; when my legs are too, I will bid you good night: and so kneel down before you;—but, indeed, to pray for the queen².

¹ This epilogue was merely occasional, and alludes to some theatrical transaction. ² It was the custom of the old players, at the end of their performance, to pray for their patrons. Almost all the ancient interludes conclude with some solemn prayer for the king or queen, house of commons, &c. Hence, perhaps, the Vivant Rex et Regina, at the bottom of our modern play-bills.

[Enter King Henry IV, Prince Hal, and Poins.]
King Henry IV: Now, Hal, what news?
Prince Hal: None that I care to tell you.
Poins: None that I care to tell you.
King Henry IV: What news?
Prince Hal: None that I care to tell you.
Poins: None that I care to tell you.

Sir THOMAS ERPINGHAM, GOWER, FLUELLIN, MACKMORRIS, JAMY, Officers in King Henry's army.		QUICKLY, Pistol's Wife, an Hostess. [rime. Chorus.

Lords, Messengers, French and English Soldiers, with other Attendants.

The SCENE, at the Beginning of the Play, lies in England; but afterwards, wholly in France.

CHORUS.

O, For a muse of fire¹, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention!
A kingdom for a stage, princes to act,
And monarchs to behold the swelling scene!
Then should the warlike Harry, like himself,
Assume the port of Mars; and, at his heels, Leash'd in like hounds, should famine, sword, and fire, [all,
Crouch for employment. But pardon, gentles
The flat unraised spirit, that hath dar'd,
On this unworthy scaffold, to bring forth
So great an object: Can this cockpit hold
The vasty field of France? or may we cram,
Within this wooden O², the very casques³
That did affright the air at Agincourt?
O, pardon! since a crooked figure may
Attest, in little place, a million;
And let us, cyphers to this great accompt,

On your imaginary forces⁴ work:
Suppose, within the girdle of these walls
Are now confin'd two mighty monarchies,
Whose high upreared and abutting fronts
5 The perilous narrow⁵ ocean parts asunder.
Piece out our imperfections with your thoughts;
Into a thousand parts divide one man,
And make imaginary puissance:
Think, when we talk of horses, that you see them
10 Printing their proud hoofs i' the receiving earth:
For 'tis your thoughts that now must deck our kings,
Carry them here and there; jumping o'er times;
Turning the accomplishment of many years
15 Into an hour-glass; For the which supply,
Admit me chorus to this history;
Who, prologue-like, your humble patience pray,
Gently to hear, kindly to judge, our play.

¹ The transactions comprised in this historical play commence about the latter end of the first, and terminate in the eighth year of this king's reign; when he married Katharine princess of France, and closed up the differences betwixt England and that crown. It was writ (as appears from a passage in the chorus of the fifth act) at the time of the earl of Essex's commanding the forces in Ireland in the reign of queen Elizabeth, and not 'till after Henry the VIth had been played, as may be seen by the conclusion of this play. ² This goes upon the notion of the Peripatetic system, which imagines several heavens one above another; the last and highest of which was one of fire. ³ i. e. this wooden circle. ⁴ The helmets. ⁵ i. e. your powers of fancy. ⁶ Perilous narrow, in burlesque and common language, meant no more than very narrow. In old books this mode of expression occurs perpetually.

A C T I.

S C E N E I.

An Antichamber in the English Court, at Kenelworth.

Enter the Archbishop of Canterbury, and Bishop of Ely.

Cant. MY lord, I'll tell you,—that self bill is urg'd,

Which, in the eleventh year o' the last king's reign, Was like, and had indeed against us past, But that the scrambling¹ and unquiet time Did push it out of further question.

Ely. But how, my lord, shall we resist it now?

Cant. It must be thought on. If it pass against us, We lose the better half of our possession:

For all the temporal lands, which men devout By testament have given to the church,

Would they strip from us; being valued thus,— As much as would maintain to the king's honour,

Full fifteen earls, and fifteen hundred knights;

Six thousand and two hundred good esquires;

And, to relief of lazars, and weak age,

Of indigent and faint souls, past corporal toil,

A hundred alms-houses, right well supply'd;

And to the coffers of the king, beside,

A thousand pounds by the year: Thus runs the bill.

Ely. This would drink deep.

Cant. 'Twould drink the cup and all.

Ely. But what prevention?

Cant. The king is full of grace, and fair regard.

Ely. And a true lover of the holy church.

Cant. The courses of his youth promis'd it not.

The breath no sooner left his father's body,

But that his wildness, mortify'd in him,

Seem'd to die too: yea, at that very moment,

Consideration like an angel came,

And whipp'd the offending Adam out of him;

Leaving his body as a paradise,

To envelop and contain celestial spirits.

Never was such a sudden scholar made:

Never came reformation in a flood²,

With such a heady current, scouring faults;

Nor never Hydra-headed wilfulness

So soon did lose his seat, and all at once,

As in this king.

Ely. We are blessed in the change.

Cant. Hear him but reason in divinity,

And, all-admiring, with an inward wish

You would desire, the king were made a prelate:

Hear him debate of common-wealth affairs,

You would say,—it hath been all-and-all his study:

List his discourse in war, and you shall hear

A fearful battle render'd you in music:

Turn him to any cause of policy,

The Gordian knot of it he will unloose,

Familiar as his garter; that, when he speaks,

5 The air, a charter'd libertine, is still,

And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,

To steal his sweet and honey'd sentences;

So that the art, and practic part of life

Must be the mistress to this theorique³:

10 Which is a wonder, how his grace should glean it,

Since his addiction was to courses vain;

His companies unletter'd, rude, and shallow;

His hours fill'd up with riots, banquets, sports;

And never noted in him any study,

15 Any retirement, any sequestration

From open haunts and popularity.

Ely. The strawberry⁴ grows underneath the nettle;

And wholesome berries thrive, and ripen best,

20 Neighbour'd by fruit of baser quality:

And so the prince obscur'd his contemplation

Under the veil of wildness; which, no doubt,

Grew like the summer grass, fastest by night,

Unseen, yet crecive in his faculty⁵.

25 Cant. It must be so: for miracles are ceas'd;

And therefore we must needs admit the means,

How things are perfected.

Ely. But, my good lord,

How now for mitigation of this bill

30 Urg'd by the commons? Doth his majesty

Incline to it, or no?

Cant. He seems indifferent;

Or, rather, swaying more upon our part,

Than cherishing the exhibitors against us:

35 For I have made an offer to his majesty,—

Upon our spiritual convocation;

And in regard of causes now in hand,

Which I have open'd to his grace at large,

As touching France,—to give a greater sum

40 Than ever at one time the clergy yet

Did to his predecessors part withal.

Ely. How did this offer seem receiv'd, my lord?

Cant. With good acceptance of his majesty:

Save, that there was not time enough to hear

45 (As, I perceiv'd, his grace would fain have done)

The severals, and unhidden passages,

Of his true titles⁶ to some certain dukedoms;

And, generally, to the crown and seat of France,

Deriv'd from Edward, his great grandfather.

50 Ely. What was the impediment that broke this off?

¹ Meaning, when every one scrambled, i. e. scrambled and shifted for himself as well as he could.

² Alluding to the method by which Hercules cleansed the Augean stables when he turned a river through them.

³ That is, his theory must have been taught by art and practice. Theoric or theorique is what terminates in speculation.

⁴ i. e. The wild fruit so called, which grows in the woods. ⁵ i. e. Increasing in its proper power. ⁶ The passages of his titles are the lines of succession by which his claims descend. Unhidden is open, clear.

Cant. The French ambassador, upon that instant,
Crav'd audience: and the hour, I think, is come,
To give him hearing; Is it four o'clock?

Ely. It is.

Cant. Then go we in, to know his embassy;
Which I could, with a ready guess, declare,
Before the Frenchman speaks a word of it.

Ely. I'll wait upon you; and I long to hear it.

[Exeunt.]

S C E N E II.

Opens to the presence.

Enter King Henry, Gloster, Bedford, Warwick, Westmoreland, and Exeter.

K. Henry. Where is my gracious lord of Canterbury?

Exe. Not here in presence.

K. Henry. Send for him, good uncle¹.

West. Shall we call in the ambassador, my liege?

K. Henry. Not yet, my cousin; we would be resolv'd,

Before we hear him, of some things of weight,
That task our thoughts², concerning us and France.

Enter the Archbishop of Canterbury, and Bishop of Ely.

Cant. God, and his angels, guard your sacred throne,

And make you long become it!

K. Henry. Sure, we thank you.

My learned lord, we pray you to proceed;

And justly and religiously unfold,

Why the law Salique, that they have in France,

Or should, or should not, bar us in our claim.

And God forbid, my dear and faithful lord,

That you should fashion, wrest, or bow your
reading,

Or nicely charge your understanding soul

With opening titles³ miscreate, whose right

Suits not in native colours with the truth;

For God doth know, how many, now in health,

Shall drop their blood in approbation⁴

Of what your reverence shall incite us to:

Therefore take heed how you impawn our person,

How you awake the sleeping sword of war;

We charge you in the name of God, take heed:

For never two such kingdoms did contend,

Without much fall of blood; whose guiltless drops

Are every one a woe, a sore complaint,

'Gainst him, whose wrong gives edge unto the sword

That makes such waste in brief mortality.

Under this conjuration, speak, my lord;

For we will hear, note, and believe in heart,

That what you speak is in your conscience wash'd

As pure as sin with baptism.

Cant. Then hear me, gracious sovereign,—and you peers,

That owe your lives, your faith, and services,

To this imperial throne;—⁵ There is no bar

To make against your highness' claim to France,

But this, which they produce from Pharamond,—

In terram Salicam mulieres ne succedant,

No woman shall succeed in Salique land.

Which Salique land the French unjustly gloze

To be the realm of France, and Pharamond

The founder of this law and female bar.

Yet their own authors faithfully affirm,

5 That the land Salique lies in Germany,

Between the floods of Sala and of Elbe:

Where Charles the great, having subdu'd the Saxons,

There left behind and settled certain French;

10 Who, holding in disdain the German women,

For some dishonest manners of their life,

Establish'd there this law, to wit, no female

Should be inheritrix in Salique land;

Which Salique, as I said, 'twixt Elbe and Sala,

15 Is at this day in Germany call'd—Meisen.

Thus doth it well appear, the Salique law

Was not devised for the realm of France:

Nor did the French possess the Salique land

Until four hundred one and twenty years

20 After defunction of king Pharamond,

Idly suppos'd the founder of this law;

Who died within the year of our redemption

Four hundred twenty-six; and Charles the great

Subdu'd the Saxons, and did seat the French

25 Beyond the river Sala, in the year

Eight hundred five. Besides, their writers say,

King Pepin, which deposed Childerick,

Did, as heir general, being descended

Of Blithild, which was daughter to king Clothair,

30 Make claim and title to the crown of France.

Hugh Capet also,—that usurp'd the crown

Of Charles the duke of Lorain, sole heir male

Of the true line and stock of Charles the great,—

To fine⁶ his title with some shew of truth,

35 (Though, in pure truth, it was corrupt and naught)

Convey'd himself as heir to the lady Lingare,

Daughter to Charlemain, who was the son

To Lewis the emperor, and Lewis the son

Of Charles the great. Also king Lewis the ninth,

40 Who was sole heir to the usurper Capet,

Could not keep quiet in his conscience,

Wearing the crown of France, 'till satisfy'd

That fair queen Isabel, his grandmother,

Was lineal of the lady Ermengare,

45 Daughter to Charles the foresaid duke of Lorain:

By the which marriage, the line of Charles the great

Was re-united to the crown of France.

So that, as clear as is the summer's sun,

King Pepin's title, and Hugh Capet's claim,

50 King Lewis his satisfaction, all appear

To hold in right and title of the female:

So do the kings of France unto this day;

Howbeit they would hold up this Salique law,

To bar your highness claiming from the female;

55 And rather chuse to hide them in a net,

Than amply to imbare⁷ their crook'd titles,

Usurp'd from you and your progenitors.

K. Henry. May I, with right and conscience, make this claim?

60 Cant. The sin upon my head, dread sovereign!

For in the book of Numbers it is writ—

When the son dies, let the inheritance

Descend unto the daughter. Gracious lord,
Stand for your own; unwind your bloody flag;
Look back unto your mighty ancestors:
Go, my dread lord, to your great grandsire's tomb,
From whom you claim; invoke his warlike spirit,
And your great uncle's, Edward the black prince;
Who on the French ground play'd a tragedy,
Making defeat on the full power of France;
Whiles his most mighty father on a hill
Stood smiling, to behold his lion's whelp
Forage in blood of French nobility.—
O noble English, that could entertain
With half their forces the full pride of France;
And let another half stand laughing by,
All out of work, and cold for action!

Ely. Awake remembrance of these valiant dead,
And with your puissant arm renew their feats:
You are their heir, you sit upon their throne;
The blood and courage that renowned them,
Runs in your veins; and my thrice-puissant liege
Is in the very May-morn of his youth,
Ripe for exploits and mighty enterprizes.

Exe. Your brother kings and monarchs of the earth
Do all expect that you should rouse yourself,
As did the former lions of your blood.

West. They know, your grace hath cause, and means and might;
So hath your highness; never king of England
Had nobles richer, and more loyal subjects;
Whose hearts have left their bodies here in England,
And lie pavilion'd in the fields of France.

Cant. O, let their bodies follow, my dear liege,
With blood, and sword, and fire, to win your right:
In aid whereof, we of the spirituality
Will raise your highness such a mighty sum,
As never did the clergy at one time
Bring in to any of your ancestors. [French;

K. Henry. We must not only arm to invade the
But lay down our proportions to defend Against the Scot, who will make road upon us
With all advantages. [reign,

Cant. They of those marches¹, gracious sove-
Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our inland from the pilfering borderers. [only,

K. Henry. We do not mean the coursing snatchers
But fear the main intendment of the Scot,
Who hath been still a² giddy neighbour to us:
For you shall read that my great grandfather
Never went with his forces into France,
But that the Scot on his unfurnish'd kingdom
Came pouring, like the tide into a breach,
With ample and brim fulness of his force;
Galling the gleaned land with hot assays;
Girding with grievous siege castles and towns;
That England, being empty of defence,
Hath shook, and trembled at the ill neighbourhood.

Cant. She hath been then more fear'd than harm'd, my liege:
For hear her but exempl'd by herself,—

When all her chivalry hath been in France,
And she a mourning widow of her nobles,
She hath herself not only well defended,
But taken, and impounded as a stray,
The king of Scots; whom she did send to France,
To fill king Edward's fame with prisoner kings;
And make your chronicle as rich with praise,
As is the ouze and bottom of the sea
With sunken wreck and sumless treasures.

10 Exe. But there's a saying very old and true,—
*If that you will France win,
Then with Scotland first begin:*

For once the eagle England being in prey,
To her unguarded nest the weasel Scot
15 Comes sneaking, and so sucks her princely eggs;
Playing the mouse, in absence of the cat,
To taint and havock more than she can eat.

Ely. It follows then, the cat must stay at home:
Yet ~~that~~ is but a curs'd³ necessity;

20 Since we have locks to safeguard necessities,
And pretty traps to catch the petty thieves.
While that the armed hand doth fight abroad,
The advised head defends itself at home:
For government, though high, and low, and lower,
25 Put into parts, doth keep in one consent⁴;
Congruing in a full and natural close,
Like musick.

Cant. True: therefore doth heaven divide
The state of man in divers functions,
30 Setting endeavour in continual motion;
To which is fixed, as an aim or butt,
Obedience⁵: for so work the honey bees;
Creatures, that, by a rule in nature, teach
The art of order to a peopled kingdom.

35 They have a king, and officers of sorts:
Where some, like magistrates, correct at home;
Others, like merchants, venture trade abroad;
Others, like soldiers, armed in their stings,
Make boot upon the summer's velvet buds;
40 Which pillage they with merry march bring home
To the tent royal of their emperor:
Who, busy'd in his majesty, surveys
The singing masons building roofs of gold;
The civil citizens kneading up the honey;

45 The poor mehanick porters crowding in
Their heavy burdens at his narrow gate;
The sad-ey'd justice, with his surly hum,
Delivering o'er to executors pale
The lazy yawning drone. I this infer,—

50 That many things, having full reference
To one consent, may work contrariously;
As many arrows, loosed several ways,
Fly to one mark;

As many several ways meet in one town;
55 As many fresh streams run in one self sea;
As many lines close in the dial's centre;
So may a thousand actions, once afoot,
End in one purpose, and be all well borne
Without defeat. Therefore to France, my liege.

60 Divide your happy England into four;

¹ The marches are the borders, the limits, the confines. Hence the Lords Marchers, i. e. the lords presidents of the marches, &c. ² i. e. inconstant, changeable. ³ i. e. an unfortunate necessity, or a necessity to be execrated. ⁴ Consent is unison. ⁵ The sense is, that all endeavour is to terminate in obedience, to be subordinate to the public good and general design of government.

We will, in France, by God's grace, play a set,
Shall strike his father's crown into the hazard:

[Exeunt.

ACT

A C T II.

Enter Chorus.

Cho. NOW all the youth of England are on fire,

And silken dalliance in the wardrobe lies;
Now thrive the armourers, and honour's thought
Reigns solely in the breast of every man:
They sell the pasture now, to buy the horse;
Following the mirror of all Christian kings,
With winged heels, as English Mercuries.

¹For now sits Expectation in the air;
And hides a sword, from hilts unto the point,
With crowns, imperial crowns, and coronets,
Promis'd to Harry, and his followers.
The French, advis'd by good intelligence
Of this most dreadful preparation,
Shake in their fear; and with pale policy
Seek to divert the English purposes.

O England!—model to thy inward greatness,
Like little body with a mighty heart,—

What might'st thou do, that honour would thee do,
Were all thy children kind and natural!

But see thy fault! France hath in thee found out
A nest of hollow bosoms, which she fills [men,—
With treacherous crowns: and three corrupted

One, Richard earl of Cambridge; and the second,
Henry lord Scroop of Masham; and the third,

Sir Thomas Grey, knight of Northumberland,—
Have for the gilt² of France (O guilt, indeed!)

Confirm'd conspiracy with fearful France;
And by their hands this³ grace of kings must die,

(If hell and treason hold their promises)
Ere he take ship for France, and in Southampton.

Linger your patience on; and well digest
The abuse of distance, while we force a play⁴.

The sum is paid; the traitors are agreed;
The king is set from London; and the scene

Is now transported, gentles, to Southampton:
There is the play-house now, there must you sit:

And thence to France shall we convey you safe,
And bring you back, charming the narrow seas

To give you gentle pass; for, if we may,
⁵We'll not offend one stomach with our play.

But 'till the king come forth, and not 'till then,
Unto Southampton do we shift our scene. [Exit.

S C E N E I.

Before Quickly's house in East-cheap.Enter Corporal Nym, and Lieutenant Bardolph.

Bard. Well met, corporal.

Nym. Good morrow⁶, lieutenant Bardolph.

Bard. What, are ancient Pistol and you friends yet?

Nym. For my part, I care not: I say little: but when time shall serve, there shall be smiles;—but that shall be as it may. I dare not fight; but I will wink, and hold out mine iron: It is a simple one; but what though? it will toast cheese; and it will endure cold as another man's sword will: and there's the humour of it.

Bard. I will bestow a breakfast, to make you friends; and we'll be all three sworn brothers to France⁷: let it be so, good corporal Nym.

Nym. Faith, I will live so long as I may, that's the certain of it; and, when I cannot live any longer, I will do as I may: that is my rest, that is the rendezvous of it.

Bard. It is certain, corporal, that he is married to Nell Quickly: and, certainly, she did you wrong; for you were troth-plight to her.

Nym. I cannot tell; things must be as they may: Men may sleep, and they may have their throats about them at that time; and, some say, knives have edges. It must be as it may: though patience be a fir'd mare, yet she will plod. There must be conclusions. Well, I cannot tell.

Enter Pistol and Quickly.

Bard. Here comes ancient Pistol, and his wife:—good corporal, be patient here.—How now, mine host Pistol?

Pist. Base tyke⁸, call'st thou me—host? Now, by this hand I swear, I scorn the term; Nor shall my Nell keep lodgers.

Quick. No, by my troth, not long: for we cannot lodge and board a dozen or fourteen gentlewomen, that live honestly by the prick of their needles, but it will be thought we keep a bawdy-house straight.—O well-a-day, lady, if he be not drawn now! We shall see wilful adultery and murder committed.

Bard. Good lieutenant⁹, good corporal, offer nothing here.

Nym. Pish!

Pist. Pish for thee, Iceland dog! thou prick-ear'd cur of Iceland!

Quick. Good corporal Nym, shew the valour of a man, and put up thy sword.

Nym. Will you shog¹⁰ off? I would have you solus.

Pist. Solus, egregious dog! O viper vile!
The solus in thy most marvellous face;

¹ Mr. Tollet says, that in the horse armoury in the Tower of London, Edward III. is represented with two crowns on his sword, alluding to the two kingdoms, France and England, of both which he was crowned heir. Perhaps the poet took the thought from this representation.

² Gilt, which in our author generally signifies a display of gold, in the present instance means golden money.

³ i. e. he who does great honour to the title. By the same kind of phraseology the usurper in Hamlet is called the Vice of kings, i. e. the opprobrium of them.

⁴ To force a play, is to produce a play by compelling many circumstances into a narrow compass.

⁵ That is, you shall pass the sea without the qualms of sea-sickness.

⁶ At this scene begins the connection of this play with the latter part of King Henry IV.

⁷ Dr. Johnson thinks we should read, We'll all go sworn brothers to France, or, we'll all be sworn brothers in France.

⁸ Tike is a small kind of dog.

⁹ We should read Good ancient, for it is Pistol to whom he addresses himself.

¹⁰ Meaning, will you march, or go off?

The solus in thy teeth, and in thy throat,
And in thy hateful lungs, yea, in thy maw, perdy;
And, which is worse, within thy nasty mouth!
I do retort the solus in thy bowels:
For I can talk; and Pistol's cock is up,
And flashing fire will follow.

Nym. I am not Barbason¹; you cannot conjure me. I have an humour to knock you indifferently well: If you grow foul with me, Pistol, I will scour you with my rapier, as I may, in fair terms: 10 If you would walk off, I would prick your guts a little, in good terms, as I may; and that's the humour of it.

Pist. Obraggard vile, and damned furious wight! The grave doth gape, and doating death is near; 15 Therefore exhale.

Bard. Hear me, hear me what I say:—he that strikes the first stroke, I'll run him up to the hilts, as I am a soldier.

Pist. An oath of mickle might; and fury shall 20 abate.

Give me thy fist, thy fore-foot to me give;
Thy spirits are most tall.

Nym. I will cut thy throat, one time or other, in fair terms; that is the humour of it.

Pist. Coupe le gorge, that is the word—I defy thee again.

O hound of Crete, think'st thou my spouse to get? No; to the spital go,

And from the powdering tub of infamy 30 Fetch forth the lazar kite of Cressid's kind,

Doll Tear-sheet she by name, and her espouse: I have, and I will hold, the quondam Quickly [to.

For the only she; and—Pauca, there's enough; go 35 Enter the Boy.

Boy. Mine host Pistol, you must come to my master,—and you hostess;—he is very sick, and would to bed.—Good Bardolph, put thy nose between his sheets, and do the office of a warming-pan: faith, he's very ill.

Bard. Away, you rogue.

Quick. By my troth, he'll yield the crow a pudding one of these days: the king has killed his heart.—Good husband, come home presently.

[Exit Quickly, 45

Bard. Come, shall I make you two friends? We must to France together; Why, the devil, should we keep knives to cut one another's throats?

Pist. Let floods o'erswell, and fiends for food 50 howl on!

Nym. You'll pay me the eight shillings I won of you at betting?

Pist. Base is the slave that pays.

Nym. That now I will have: that's the hu- 55 mour of it.

Pist. As manhood shall compound; Push home. [Draw.

Bard. By this sword, he that makes the first thrust, I'll kill him; by this sword, I will. 60

Pist. Sword is an oath, and oaths must have their course.

Bard. Corporal Nym, an thou wilt be friends, be friends: an thou wilt not, why then be ene- 5 mies with me too. Pry'thee put up.

Nym. I shall have my eight shillings, I won of you at betting?

Pist. A noble shalt thou have, and present pay; And liquor likewise will I give to thee,

And friendship shall combine, and brotherhood: 10 I'll live by Nym, and Nym shall live by me;—

Is not this just?—for I shall sutler be Unto the camp, and profits will accrue.

Give me thy hand.

Nym. I shall have my noble?

Pist. In cash most justly paid.

Nym. Well then, that's the humour of it.

Re-enter Quickly.

Quick. As ever you came of women, come in quickly to sir John: Ah, poor heart! he is so shak'd of a burning quotidian tertian, that it is most lamentable to behold. Sweet men, come to him.

Nym. The king hath run bad humours on the knight, that's the even of it.

Pist. Nym, thou hast spoke the right; His heart is fractured, and corroborate.

Nym. The king is a good king: but it must be as it may; he passes some humours and careers.

Pist. Let us condole the knight; for, lambkins, 30 we will live. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.

Southampton.

Enter Exeter, Bedford, and Westmoreland.

Bed. 'Fore God, his grace is bold, to trust these traitors!

Exe. They shall be apprehended by and by.

West. How smooth and even they do bear themselves!

40 As if allegiance in their bosoms sat,
Crowned with faith and constant loyalty.

Bed. The king hath note of all that they intend, By interception which they dream not of.

Exe. Nay, but the man that was his bedfellow², 45 Whom he hath cloy'd and grac'd with princely favours,—

That he should, for a foreign purse, so sell His sovereign's life to death and treachery!

[Trumpets sound.

Enter the King, Scroop, Cambridge, Grey, and Attendants.

K. Henry. Now sits the wind fair, and we will abroad.

My lord of Cambridge,—and my kind lord of Masham, [thoughts:

And you, my gentle knight,—give me your Think you not, that the powers we bear with us, Will cut their passage through the force of France; Doing the execution, and the act,

60 For which we have in head³ assembled them?

¹ Barbason is the name of a daemon mentioned in the Merry Wives of Windsor. ² The familiar appellation of bedfellow, which appears strange to us, was common among the ancient nobility. ³ A head means an army formed.

Scroop. No doubt, my liege, if each man do his best.

K. Henry. I doubt not that: since we are well persuaded,

We carry not a heart with us from hence,
That grows not in a fair consent with ours;
Nor leave not one behind, that doth not wish
Success and conquest to attend on us. [lov'd,

Cam. Never was monarch better fear'd and Than is your majesty; there's not, I think, a subject,

That sits in heart-grief and uneasiness
Under the sweet shade of your government.

Grey. Even those, that were your father's enemies,

Have steep'd their galls in honey; and do serve you
With hearts create¹ of duty and of zeal.

K. Henry. We therefore have great cause of thankfulness;

And shall forget the office of our hand,
Sooner than quittance of desert and merit,
According to the weight and worthiness.

Scroop. So service shall with steeled sinews toil;
And labour shall refresh itself with hope,
To do your grace incessant services.

K. Henry. We judge no less.—Uncle of Exeter,
Enlarge the man committed yesterday,
That rail'd against our person: we consider,
It was excess of wine that set him on;
And, on his more advice², we pardon him.

Scroop. That's mercy, but too much security:
Let him be punish'd, sovereign; lest example
Breed, by his sufferance, more of such a kind.

K. Henry. O, let us yet be merciful.

Cam. So may your highness, and yet punish too.

Grey. Sir, you shew great mercy, if you give him life,

After the taste of much correction.

K. Henry. Alas, your too much love and care of me

Are heavy orisons 'gainst this poor wretch.
If little faults, proceeding on distemper³, [eye,
Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our When capital crimes, chew'd, swallow'd, and digested,

Appear before us?—We'll yet enlarge that man, Though Cambridge, Scroop, and Grey,—in their
dear care

And tender preservation of our person,—
Would have him punish'd. And now to our French causes;—

Who are the late commissioners?

Cam. I one, my lord;

Your highness bade me ask for it to-day.

Scroop. So did you me, my liege.

Grey. And me, my royal sovereign.

K. Henry. Then, Richard, earl of Cambridge,
there is yours;—

There yours, lord Scroop of Masham;—and, sir knight,

Grey of Northumberland, this same is yours:—

Read them; and know, I know your worthiness.—
My lord of Westmoreland,—and uncle Exeter,—
We will aboard to-night.—Why, how now, gentlemen?

5 What see you in those papers, that you lose so much complexion?—Look ye, how they change!
Their cheeks are paper.—Why, what read you
there,

That hath so cowarded and chas'd your blood
Out of appearance?

Cam. I do confess my fault;
And do submit me to your highness' mercy.

Grey. Scroop. To which we all appeal.

K. Henry. The mercy, that was quick in us but late,

15 By your own counsel is suppress'd and kill'd:
You must not dare, for shame, to talk of mercy;
For your own reasons turn into your bosoms,
As dogs upon their masters, worrying them.—

20 See you, my princes, and my noble peers,
These English monsters! My lord Cambridge here,
You know, how apt our love was, to accord
To furnish him with all appertinents

25 Belonging to his honour; and this man
Hath, for a few light crowns, lightly conspir'd,
And sworn unto the practices of France,
To kill us here in Hampton: to the which,
This knight,—no less for bounty bound to us
Than Cambridge is,—hath likewise sworn.—

30 But O!

What shall I say to thee, lord Scroop; thou cruel,
Ingrateful, savage, and inhuman creature!

Thou, that didst bear the key of all my counsels,
That knew'st the very bottom of my soul,
35 That almost might'st have coin'd me into gold,
Would'st thou have practis'd on me for thy use,
May it be possible, that foreign hire

Could out of thee extract one spark of evil,
That might annoy my finger? 'Tis so strange,

40 That, though the truth of it stands off⁴ as gross
As black from white, my eye will scarcely see it.
Treason, and murder, ever kept together,
As two yoke-devils sworn to either's purpose,
Working so grossly⁵ in a natural cause,

45 That admiration did not whoop at them:
But thou, 'gainst all proportion, didst bring in Wonder, to wait on treason, and on murder:
And whatsoever cunning fiend it was,

That wrought upon thee so preposterously,
He hath got the voice in hell for excellence:

50 And other devils, that suggest by treasons,
Do botch and bungle up damnation [fetch'd
With patches, colours, and with forms being
From glistening semblances of piety;

55 But he, that temper'd thee, bade thee stand up,
Gave thee no instance why thou shouldst do treason,
Unless to dub thee with the name of traitor.

If that same daemon, that hath gull'd thee thus,
Should with his lion gait walk the whole world,

60 He might return to vasty Tartar⁶ back,
And tell the legions,—I can never win

¹ i. e. made up of duty and zeal. ² On his return to more coolness of mind. ³ i. e. from intoxication. ⁴ i. e. living. ⁵ To stand off is être relevé, to be prominent to the eye, as the strong parts of a picture. ⁶ i. e. palpably. ⁷ i. e. Tartarus, the fabled place of future punishment.

A soul so easy as that Englishman's.
 Oh, how hast thou with jealousy infected
 The sweetness of affiance! Shew men dutiful?
 Why, so didst thou: Seem they grave and learned?
 Why, so didst thou: Come they of noble family?
 Why, so didst thou: Seem they religious?
 Why, so didst thou: Or are they spare in diet;
 Free from gross passion, or of mirth, or anger;
 Constant in spirit, not swerving with the blood;
 Garnish'd and deck'd in modest complement;
 Not working with the eye, without the ear,
 And, but in purged judgment, trusting neither?
 Such, and so finely boulded³, didst thou seem:
 And thus thy fall hath left a kind of blot,
 To mark⁴ the full-fraught man, the best endu'd,
 With some suspicion. I will weep for thee;
 For this revolt of thine, methinks, is like
 Another fall of man.—Their faults are open,
 Arrest them to the answer of the law;—
 And God acquit them of their practices!
Ere. I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Richard earl of Cambridge.
 I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Henry lord Scroop of Masham.
 I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Thomas Grey, knight of Northumberland.
Scroop. Our purposes God justly hath discover'd;
 And I repent my fault, more than my death;
 Which I beseech your highness to forgive,
 Although my body pay the price of it. [duce:
Cam. For me,—the gold of France did not se-
 Although I did admit it as a motive,
 The sooner to effect what I intended:
 But God be thanked for prevention;
 Which I in sufferance heartily will rejoice,
 Beseeching God, and you, to pardon me.
Grey. Never did faithful subjects more rejoice
 At the discovery of most dangerous treason,
 Than I do at this hour joy o'er myself,
 Prevented from a damned enterprize:
 My fault, but not my body, pardon, sovereign.
K. Henry. God quit you in his mercy! Hear your sentence.
 You have conspir'd against our royal person,
 Join'd with an enemy proclaim'd, and from his coffers
 Receiv'd the golden earnest of our death; [ter,
 Wherein you would have sold your king to slaugh-
 His princes and his peers to servitude,
 His subjects to oppression and contempt,
 And his whole kingdom unto desolation.
 Touching our person, seek we no revenge;
 But we our kingdom's safety must so tender,
 Whose ruin you three sought, that to her laws
 We do deliver you. Get you therefore hence,

Poor miserable wretches, to your death:
 The taste whereof, God, of his mercy, give you
 Patience to endure, and true repentance
 Of all your dear offences!—Bear them hence.

[Exeunt.]

Now, lords, for France; the enterprize whereof
 Shall be to you, as us, like glorious.
 We doubt not of a fair and lucky war;
 Since God so graciously hath brought to light
 This dangerous treason, lurking in our way,
 To hinder our beginnings, we doubt not now,
 But every rub is smoothed in our way.
 Then, forth, dear countrymen; let us deliver
 Our puissance into the hand of God,
 Putting it straight in expedition.
 Chearly to sea, the signs of war advance:
 No king of England, if not king of France.

[Exeunt.]

S C E N E III.

Quickly's House in Eastcheap.Enter Pistol, Nym, Bardolph, Boy, and Quickly.Quickly. Prythee, honey-sweet husband, let me bring thee to Staines.
Pist. No: for my manly heart doth yearn.—
 Bardolph, be blith;—Nym, rouse thy vaulting veins; [dead,
Boy, bristle thy courage up; for Falstaff he is
 And we must yearn therefore.
Bard. Would, I were with him, wheresome'er he is, either in heaven, or in hell!

Quick. Nay, sure, he's not in hell; he's in Arthur's bosom, if ever man went to Arthur's bosom. 'A made a finer end, and went away, an it had been any chrisom⁵ child: 'a parted even just between twelve and one, e'en at turning o' the tide⁶:
 for after I saw him fumble with the sheets⁷, and play with flowers, and smile upon his fingers' ends,
 I knew there was but one way; for his nose was as sharp as a pen, and 'a babbled of green fields.—
 How, now, Sir John? quoth I: what, man! be of good cheer. So 'a cried out—God, God, God!
 three or four times: now I, to comfort him, bid him 'a should not think of God; I hop'd, there was no need to trouble himself with such thoughts yet: So 'a bade me lay more cloaths on his feet:
 I put my hand into the bed, and felt them, and they were as cold as any stone; then I felt to his knees, and so upward, and upward, and all was as cold as any stone.

Nym. They say, he cried out of sack,
Quick. Ay, that 'a did.
Bard. And of women.
Quick. Nay, that 'a did not.

¹ Complement has in this instance the same sense as in Love's Labour's Lost, Act I. Complements, in the age of Shakspeare, meant the same as accomplishments in the present one. ² The king means to say of Scroop, that he was a cautious man, who knew that a specious appearance was deceitful and therefore did not trust the air or look of any man till he had tried him by enquiry and conversation.

³ i. e. refined or sifted from all faults. ⁴ i. e. marked by the blot he speaks of in the preceding line.

⁵ The old quarto has it, crisomb'd child. The chrysom was the white cloth put on the new baptised child. The child itself was also sometimes called a chrysom. ⁶ It was a common opinion among the women of our author's time, that nobody died but in the time of ebb; though every day's experience must have confuted such a notion. ⁷ This indication of approaching death is enumerated by Celsus, Lommius, Hippocrates, and Galen.

Boy. Yes, that 'a did; and said, they were devils incarnate.

Quick. 'A could never abide carnation; 'twas a colour he never lik'd.

Boy. 'A said once, the devil would have him about women.

Quick. 'A did in some sort, indeed, handle women: but then he was rheumatic; and talk'd of the whore of Babylon.

Boy. Do you not remember, 'a saw a flea stick upon Bardolph's nose; and 'a said, it was a black soul burning in hell-fire?

Bard. Well, the fuel is gone, that maintain'd that fire: that's all the riches I got in his service.

Nym. Shall we shog? the king will be gone from Southampton.

Pist. Come, let's away.—My love, give me thy lips.

Look to my chattels, and my moveables:

Let senses rule¹; the word is, *Pitch and pay*²;

Trust none;

For oaths are straws, men's faiths are wafer-cakes, And hold-fast is the only dog, my duck;

Therefore, caveto be thy counsellor.

Go, clear thy crystals³.—Yoke-fellows in arms, Let us to France! like horse-leeches, my boys; To suck, to suck, the very blood to suck.

Boy. And that is but unwholesome food, they say.

Pist. Touch her soft mouth, and march.

Bard. Farewel, hostess.

Nym. I cannot kiss, that is the humour of it; but adieu.

Pist. Let housewif'ry appear; keep close, I thee command.

Quick. Farewel; adieu.

[Exeunt.]

S C E N E IV.

The French King's palace.

Enter the French King, the Dauphin, the Duke of Burgundy, and the Constable.

Fr. King. Thus come the English with full power upon us;

And more than carefully it us concerns, To answer royally in our defences.

Therefore the dukes of Berry, and Bretagne, Of Brabant, and of Orleans, shall make forth,—

And you, prince Dauphin,—with all swift dispatch, To line, and new repair, our towns of war,

With men of courage, and with means defendant: For England his approaches makes as fierce,

As waters to the sucking of a gulph.

It fits us then, to be as provident

As fear may teach us, out of late examples

Left by the fatal and neglected English

Upon our fields.

Dau. My most redoubted father,

It is most meet we arm us 'gainst the foe:

For peace itself should not so dull a kingdom,

(Though war, nor no known quarrel, were in question)

But that defences, musters, preparations, Should be maintain'd, assembled, and collected,

As were a war in expectation.

Therefore, I say, 'tis meet we all go forth,

To view the sick and feeble parts of France:

And let us do it with no shew of fear;

No, with no more, than if we heard that England

Were busied⁴ with a Whitsun morris-dance:

For, my good liege, she is so idly king'd,

Her scepter so fantastically borne

By a vain, giddy, shallow, humorous youth,

That fear attends her not.

Con. O peace, prince Dauphin!

You are too much mistaken in this king:

Question your grace the late ambassadors,—

With what great state he heard their embassy,

How well supply'd with noble counsellors,

How modest in exception⁵, and withal,

How terrible in constant resolution,—

And you shall find, his vanities fore-spent

Were but the out-side of the Roman Brutus,

Covering discretion with a coat of folly;

As gardeners do with ordure hide those roots

That shall first spring, and be most delicate.

Dau. Well, 'tis not so, my lord high constable,

But though we think it so, it is no matter:

In cases of defence, 'tis best to weigh

The enemy more mighty than he seems,

So the proportions of defence are fill'd;

Which, of a weak and niggardly projection,

Doth, like a miser, spoil his coat, with scanting

A little cloth.

Fr. King. Think we king Harry strong;

And princes, look, you strongly arm to meet him.

The kindred of him hath been flesh'd upon us;

And he is bred out of that bloody strain,

That haunted us in our familiar paths:

Witness our too much memorable shame,

When Cressy battle fatally was struck,

And all our princes captiv'd, by the hand

Of that black name, Edward black prince of Wales; [standing,

Whiles that his mountain sire,—on mountain

Up in the air, crown'd with the golden sun,—

Saw his heroical seed, and smil'd to see him

Mangle the work of nature, and deface

The patterns that by God and by French fathers

Had twenty years been made. This is a stem

Of that victorious stock; and let us fear

The native mightiness and fate of him.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Ambassadors from Henry king of England

Do crave admittance to your majesty.

Fr. King. We'll give them present audience.—

Go, and bring them.

You see this chase is hotly follow'd, friends.

Dau. Turn head, and stop pursuit: for coward dogs

¹ i. e. let prudence govern you. ² This caution was a very proper one to Mrs. Quickly, who had suffered before by letting Falstaff run in her debt. ³ i. e. dry thine eyes. ⁴ The 4to to 1608 reads, were troubled. ⁵ i. e. how diffident and decent in making objections.

Most spend their mouths*, when what they seem to threaten

Runs far before them. Good my sovereign,
Take up the English short; and let them know
Of what a monarchy you are the head:
Self-love, my liege, is not so vile a sin,
As self-neglecting.

Enter Exeter.

Fr. King. From our brother England? [jesty.

Exe. From him; and thus he greets your ma-
He wills you, in the name of God Almighty,
That you divest yourself, and lay apart
The borrow'd glories, that, by gift of heaven,
By law of nature, and of nations, 'long
To him and to his heirs; namely, the crown,
And all wide-stretched honours that pertain
By custom, and the ordinance of times,
Unto the crown of France. That you may know,
'Tis no sinister, nor no awkward claim,
Pick'd from the worm-holes of long-vanish'd days,
Nor from the dust of old oblivion rak'd,
He sends you this most memorable line',
In every branch truly demonstrative;

[Gives the French King a paper.

Willing you, overlook this pedigree:
And, when you find him evenly deriv'd
From his most fam'd of famous ancestors,
Edward the third, he bids you then resign
Your crown and kingdom, indirectly held
From him the native and true challenger.

Fr. King. Or else what follows?

Exe. Bloody constraint; for if you hide the crown

Even in your hearts, there will he rake for it:
And therefore in fierce tempest is he coming,
In thunder, and in earthquake, like a Jove,
That, if requiring fail, he will compel.
He bids you, in the bowels of the Lord,
Deliver up the crown: and to take mercy
On the poor souls, for whom this hungry war
Opens his vasty jaws: and on your head
Turns he the widows' tears, the orphans' cries,
The dead men's blood, the pining maidens' groans,

For husbands, fathers, and betrothed lovers,
That shall be swallow'd in this controversy.
This is his claim, his threatening, and my message;
Unless the Dauphin be in presence here,
To whom expressly I bring greeting too.

Fr. King. For us, we will consider of this further:

To-morrow shall you bear our full intent
Back to our brother of England.

Dau. For the Dauphin,
I stand herefor him; What to him from England?

Exe. Scorn, and defiance; slight regard, contempt,
And any thing that may not misbecome
The mighty sender, doth he prize you at.

Thus says my king: and, if your father's highness
Do not, in grant of all demands at large,
Sweeten the bitter mock you sent his majesty,
He'll call you to so hot an answer for it,
That caves and womby vaultages of France
Shall chide² your trespass, and return your mock
In second accent of his ordinance.

Dau. Say, if my father render fair reply,
It is against my will: for I desire
Nothing but odds with England; to that end,
As matching to his youth and vanity,
I did present him with those Paris balls.

Exe. He'll make your Paris Louvre shake for it,
Were it the mistress court of mighty Europe:
And, be assur'd, you'll find a difference

(As we, his subjects, have in wonder found)
Between the promise of his greener days,
And these he masters' now; now he weighs time,
Even to the utmost grain; which you shall read
In your own losses, if he stay in France.

Fr. King. To-morrow you shall know our mind at full. [Flourish.

Exe. Dispatch us with all speed, lest that our king

Come here himself to question our delay;
For he is footed in this land already. [conditions:

Fr. King. You shall besoon dispatch'd, with fair
A night is but small breath, and little pause,
To answer matters of this consequence. [Exeunt.

A C T III.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. THUS with imagin'd wing our swift scene flies,
In motion of no less celerity
Than that of thought. Suppose, that you have seen
The well-appointed king at Hampton pier
Embark his royalty; and his brave fleet
With silken streamers the young Phœbus fanning.
Play with your fancies; and in them behold,
Upon the hempen tackle, ship-boys climbing:
Hear the shrill whistle, which doth order give

To sounds confus'd: behold the threaten sales,
Borne with the invisible and creeping wind,
Draw the huge bottoms through the furrow'd sea,
Breasting the lofty surge: O, do but think,
You stand upon the rivage³, and behold
A city on the inconstant billows dancing;
For so appears this fleet majestical,
Holding due course to Harfleur. Follow, follow!
Grapple your minds to sternage⁴ of this navy;
And leave your England, as dead midnight, still Guarded with grandsires, babies, and old women,

* i. e. bark.
sound, to echo.

² The quartos 1600 and 1608, read musters.

³ To chide is to re-
The bank or shore. ⁴ i. e. Let your minds follow close after the navy.

Or past, or not arriv'd to, pith and puissance:
 For who is he, whose chin is but enrich'd
 With one appearing hair, that will not follow
 These cull'd and choice-drawn cavaliers to France?
 Work, work, your thoughts, and therein see a siege;
 Behold the ordnance on their carriages,
 With fatal mouths gaping on girded Harfleur.
 Suppose, the ambassador from the French comes back;

Tells Harry—that the king doth offer him
 Katharine his daughter; and with her, to dowry,
 Some petty and unprofitable dukedoms.
 The offer likes not: and the nimble gunner
 With linstock¹ now the devilish cannon touches,
 [Alarums; and chambers go off.]
 And down goes all before him. Still be kind,
 And eke out our performance with your mind.

[Exit.]

S C E N E I.

Before Harfleur.

[Alarum.]

Enter King Henry, Exeter, Bedford, Gloster, and Soldiers, with Scaling Ladders.

K. Henry. Once more unto the breach, dear friends, once more;
 Or close the wall up with the English dead!
 In peace, there's nothing so becomes a man,
 As modest stillness, and humility:
 But when the blast of war blows in our ears,
 Then imitate the action of the tyger;
 Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood,
 Disguise fair nature with hard-favoured rage:
 Then lend the eye a terrible aspect;
 Let it pry through the portage² of the head,
 Like the brass cannon; let the brow o'erwhelm it,
 As fearfully, as doth a galled rock
 O'er-hang and jutty his confounded³ base,
 Swill'd with the wild and wasteful ocean.
 Now set the teeth, and stretch the nostril wide;
 Hold hard the breath, and bend up every spirit
 To his full height!—On, on, you noblest English,
 Whose blood is set from fathers of war-proof!
 Fathers, that, like so many Alexanders,
 Have, in these parts, from morn'till even fought,
 And sheath'd their sword for lack of argument⁴.
 Dishonour not your mothers; now attest,
 That those, whom you call'd fathers, did beget you!
 Be copy now to men of grosser blood, [yeomen,
 And teach them how to war!—And you, good
 Whose limbs were made in England, shew us here
 The mettle of your pasture; let us swear [not;
 That you are worth your breeding: which I doubt
 For there is none of you so mean and base,
 That hath not noble lustre in your eyes.
 I see you stand like greyhounds in the slips,
 Straining upon the start. The game's afoot;

Follow your spirit: and, upon this charge,
 Cry—God for Harry! England! and saint George!

[Exeunt King and train.]

[Alarum, and chambers go off.]

S C E N E II.

Enter Nym, Bardolph, Pistol, and Boy.

Bard. On, on, on, on, on! to the breach, to the breach!

Nym. Pray thee, corporal, stay; the knocks are too hot; and, for mine own part, I have not a case⁵ of lives; the humour of it is too hot, that is the very plain-song of it.

Pist. The plain-song is most just: for humours do abound;

Knocks go and come; God's vassals drop and die;
 And sword and shield,
 In bloody field,
 Doth win immortal fame.

Boy. 'Would I were in an ale-house in London!
 I would give all my fame for a pot of ale, and safety.

Pist. And I:

If wishes would prevail with me,
 My purpose should not fail with me,
 But thither would I hie.

Boy. As duly, but not as truly, as bird doth sing on bough.

Enter Fluellen.

Flu. 'Splood!—Up to the preaches, you rascals! will you not up to the preaches?

Pist. Be merciful, great duke, to men of mould!
 Abate thy rage, abate thy manly rage! [chuck!
 Good bawcock, bate thy rage! use lenity, sweet

Nym. These be good humours!—your honour wins bad humours. [Exeunt.]

Boy. As young as I am, I have observ'd these three swashers. I am boy to them all three; but all they three, though they would serve me, could not be man to me; for, indeed, three such antiicks do not amount to a man. For Bardolph,—he is white-liver'd, and red-fac'd; by the means whereof, 'a faces it out, but fights not. For Pistol,— he hath a killing tongue, and a quiet sword; by the means whereof 'a breaks words, and keeps whole weapons. For Nym,—he hath heard, that men of few words are the best⁶ men; and therefore he scorns to say his prayers, lest 'a should be thought a coward: but his few bad words are match'd with as few good deeds; for 'a never broke any man's head but his own; and that was against a post, when he was drunk. They will steal any thing, and call it—purchase. Bardolph stole a lute-case; bore it twelve leagues, and sold it for three-halfpence. Nym and Bardolph are sworn brothers in filching; and in Calais they stole a fire-shovel: I knew, by that piece of service, the men would carry coals.⁷ They would have

¹ The staff to which the match is fixed when ordnance is fired. ² Portage, open space, from port, a gate. The meaning is, let the eye appear in the head as cannon through the battlements, or embrasures, of a fortification. ³ i. e. his worn or wasted base. ⁴ i. e. matter, or subject. ⁵ We should read lieutenant. ⁶ i. e. a set of lives, of which, when one is worn out, another may serve. ⁷ i. e. to men of earth. ⁸ That is, bravest. ⁹ In Shakspeare's age, to carry coals, implied, to endure affronts.

me as familiar with men's pockets, as their gloves or their handkerchiefs: which makes much against my manhood, if I should take from another's pocket, to put into mine; for it is plain pocketing up of wrongs. I must leave them, and seek some better service; their villainy goes against my weak stomach, and therefore I must cast it up. [Exit Boy.]

Re-enter Fluellen, Gower following.

Gower. Captain Fluellen, you must come presently to the mines: the duke of Gloster would speak with you.

Flu. To the mines! Tell you the duke, it is not so good to come to the mines: for, look you, the mines are not according to the disciplines of the war; the concavities of it is not sufficient; for, look you, th' athversary (you may discuss unto the duke, look you) is digt himself four yards under the countermines; by Cheshu, I think 'a will plow¹ up all, if there is not petter directions.

Gower. The duke of Gloster, to whom the order of the siege is given, is altogether directed by an Irishman; a very valiant gentleman, i' faith.

Flu. It is captain Macmorris, is it not?

Gower. I think, it be.

Flu. By Cheshu, he is an ass, as in the 'orld: I will verify as much in his peard: he has no more directions in the true disciplines of the wars, look you, of the Roman disciplines, than is a puppy-dog.

Enter Macmorris, and Captain Jamy.

Gower. Here 'a comes; and the Scots captain, captain Jamy, with him.

Flu. Captain Jamy is a marvellous falorous gentleman, that is certain; and of great expedition, and knowledge, in the ancient wars, upon my particular knowledge of his directions: by Cheshu, he will maintain his argument as well as any military man in the 'orld, in the disciplines of the pristine wars of the Romans.

Jamy. I say, gude-day, captain Fluellen.

Flu. God-den to your worship, goot captain Jamy.

Gower. How now, captain Macmorris? have you quit the mines? have the pioneers given o'er?

Mac. By Chrish la, tish ill done: the work ish give over, the trumpet sound the retreat. By my hand, I swear, and by my father's soul, the work ish ill done; it ish give over: I would have blowed up the town, so Chrish save me, la, in an hour. O tish ill done, tish ill done; by my hand, tish ill done!

Flu. Captain Macmorris, I peseech you now, will you voutsafe me, look you, a few disputations with you, as partly touching or concerning the disciplines of the war, the Roman wars, in the way of argument, look you, and friendly communication; partly, to satisfy my opinion, and partly, for the satisfaction, look you, of my mind, as touching the direction of the military discipline; that is the point.

Jamy. It sall be very gud, gud feith, gud captains bath: and I sall quit² you with gud leve, as I may pick occasion; that sall I, marry.

Mac. It is no time to discourse, so Chrish save me: the day is hot, and the weather, and the wars, and the king, and the dukes; it is no time to discourse. The town is beseech'd, and the trumpet calls us to the breach; and we talk, and by Chrish, do nothing; 'tis shame for us all: so God sa' me, 'tis shame to stand still; it is shame, by my hand: and there is throats to be cut, and works to be done; and there ish nothing done, so Chrish sa' me, la.

Jamy. By the mess, ere theise eyes of mine take themselves to slumber, aile do good service, or aile ligge i' the grund for it; or go to death; and aile pay it as valorously as I may, that sal I surely do, that is the breiff and the long: Marry, I wad full fain heard some question 'tween you tway.

Flu. Captain Macmorris, I think, look you, under your correction, there is not many of your nation—

Mac. Of my nation? What ish my nation? ish a villain, and a bastard, and a knave, and a rascal? What ish my nation? Who talks of my nation?

Flu. Look you, if you take the matter otherwise than is meant, captain Macmorris, peradventure, I shall think you do not use me with that affability as in discretion you ought to use me, look you; being as goot a man as yourself, both in the disciplines of wars, and in the derivation of my birth, and in other particularities.

Mac. I do not know you so good a man as myself: so Chrish save me, I will cut off your head.

Gower. Gentlemen, both, you will mistake each other.

Jamy. Au! that's a foul fault. [A parley sounded.]

Gower. The town sounds a parley.

Flu. Captain Macmorris, when there is more petter opportunity to be requir'd, look you, I will be so bold as to tell you, I know the disciplines of war; and there's an end. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.

Before the Gates of Harfleur.

Enter King Henry and his Train.

K. Henry. How yet resolves the governor of the town?

This is the latest parle we will admit:

Therefore, to our best mercy give yourselves:

Or, like to men proud of destruction,

Defy us to our worst: for, as I am a soldier,—

(A name, that, in my thoughts, becomes me best)

If I begin the battery once again,

I will not leave the half-atchiev'd Harfleur,

'Till in her ashes she lie buried.

The gates of mercy shall be all shut up;

And the flesh'd soldier,—rough and hard of heart,—

In liberty of bloody hand, shall range

With conscience wide as hell; mowing like grass

Your fresh fair virgins, and your flowering infants.

What is it then to me, if impious war,—

Array'd in flames, like to the prince of fiends,—

Do, with his smirch'd complexion, all fell feats

Enlink'd to waste and desolation?

What is't to me, when you yourselves are cause,

¹ That is, he will blow up all.

² That is, I shall requite you, answer you.

If your pure maidens fall into the hand
Of hot and forcing violation?
What rein can hold licentious wickedness,
When down the hill he holds his fierce career?
We may as bootless spend our vain command
Upon the enraged soldiers in their spoil,
As send precepts to the Leviathan
To come ashore. Therefore, you men of Harfleur,
Take pity of your town, and of your people,
Whiles yet my soldiers are in my command;
Whiles yet the cool and temperate wind of grace
O'er-blows¹ the filthy and contagious clouds
Of heady murder, spoil, and villainy.
If not, why, in a moment, look to see
The blind and bloody soldier with foul hand
Defile the locks of your shrill-shrieking daughters;
Your fathers taken by the silver beards,
And their most reverend heads dash'd to the walls;
Your naked infants spitted upon pikes;
Whiles the mad mothers with their howls confus'd
Do break the clouds, as did the wives of Jewry
At Herod's bloody-hunting slaughtermen.
What say you? will you yield, and this avoid?
Or, guilty in defence, be thus destroy'd?

Enter Governor, upon the Walls.

Gov. Our expectation hath this day an end:
The Dauphin, whom of succour we entreated,
Returns us—that his powers are not yet ready
To raise so great a siege. Therefore, dread king,
We yield our town, and lives, to thy soft mercy;
Enter our gates; dispose of us, and ours;
For we no longer are defensible.

K. Henry. Open your gates.—Come, uncle Exeter,
Go you and enter Harfleur; there remain,
And fortify it strongly 'gainst the French:
Use mercy to them all. For us, dear uncle,—
The winter coming on, and sickness growing
Upon our soldiers,—we'll retire to Calais.
To-night in Harfleur will we be your guest;
To-morrow for the march are we addrest².

[Flourish, and enter the town.]

SCENE IV.

The French Camp.

Enter Katharine and an old Gentlewoman.

Kath. Alice, tu as esté en Angleterre, & tu parles bien le language.

Alice. Un peu, madame.

Kath. Je te prie, m'enseigniez; il faut que j'apprenne à parler. Comment appelez vous la main, en Anglois?

Alice. La main? elle est appelée, de hand.

Kath. De hand. Et les doigts?

Alice. Les doigts? ma joye, je oublie les doigts; mais je me souviendray. Les doigts?
je pense, qu'ils sont appelé de fingres; ouy, de fingers; oui de fingers.

Kath. La main, de hand; les doigts, de fingres.
Je pense, que je suis le bon escolier. J'ay gagnée deux mots d'Anglois vistement. Comment appellez vous les ongles?

Alice. Des ongles? les appellons, de nails.

Kath. De nails. Escoutez: dites moy, si je parle bien: de hand, de fingres, de nails.

Alice. C'est bien dit, madame; il est fort bon

Kath. Dites moy en Anglois, le bras. [Anglois.]

Alice. De arm, madame.

Kath. Et le coude.

5 Alice. De elbow.

Kath. De elbow. Je m'en faitz la repetition de tous le mots, que vous m'avez appris des à present.

Alice. Il est trop difficile, madame, comme je pense.

10 Kath. Excusez moy, Alice; escoutez: De hand, de fingre, de nails, de arm, de bilbow.

Alice. De elbow, madame.

Kath. O Seigneur Dieu! je m'en oublie; De elbow. Comment appelez vous le col?

Alice. De neck, madame.

15 Kath. De neck: Et le menton?

Alice. De chin.

Kath. De sin. Le col, de neck: le menton, de sin.

Alice. Ouy. Sauf vostre honneur; en verité, vous prononcez le mots aussi droict que les naitifs d'Angleterre.

Kath. Je ne doute point d'apprendre par la grace de Dieu; & en peu de temps.

Alice. N'avez vous pas deja oublié ce que je vous ay enseignée?

25 Kath. Non, je reciteray à vous promptement.
De hand, de fingre, de mails.

Alice. De nails, madame.

Kath. De nails, de arm, de ilbow.

Alice. Sauf vostre honneur, de elbow.

30 Kath. Ainsi dis je; de elbow, de neck, et de sin:
Comment appelez vous les pieds & la robe?

Alice. De foot, madame; & de con.

Kath. De foot, & de con? O Seigneur Dieu!
ces sont mots de son mauvais, corruptible, grosse, et impudique, & non pour les dames d'honneur d'user: Je ne voudrois prononcer ces mots devant les seigneurs de France, pour tout le monde. Il faut de foot, & de con, n'cant-moins. Je reciterai une autre fois ma lecon ensemble: De hand, de 40 fingre, de nails, de arm, de elbow, ne neck, de sin, de foot, de con.

Alice. Excellent, madame!

Kath. C'est assez pour une fois; allons nous à disner. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.

Presence-Chamber in the French Court.

Enter the King of France, the Dauphin, Duke of Bourbon, the Constable of France, and others.

50 Fr. King. 'Tis certain, he hath pass'd the river Somme.

Con. And if he be not fought withal, my lord,
Let us not live in France; let us quit all,

And give our vineyards to a barbarous people.

55 Dau. O Dieu vivant! shall a few sprays of us,—

The emptying of our father's luxury³,—
Our syons, put in wild and savage⁴ stock,
Sprout up so suddenly into the clouds,

60 And over-grow their grafters? [bastards!]

Bour. Normans, but bastard Normans, Norman

Mort de ma vie! if thus they march along

Unfought withal, but I will sell my dukedom,

To buy a slobbery and a dirty farm

¹ To overblow is to drive away, or to keep off.
means lust. ² i. e. uncultivated, or wild.

³ i. e. prepared. ⁴ In this place, as in others, luxury
In

In that nook-shotten¹ isle of Albion. [mettle?]

Con. Dieu de batailles! where have they this
Is not their climate foggy, raw, and dull;
On whom, as in despatch, the sun looks pale,
Killing their fruit with frowns? Can sodden water,
A drench for sur-reyn'd² jades, their barley broth,
Decoct their cold blood to such valiant heat?
And shall our quick blood, spirited with wine,
Seem frosty? Oh, for honour of our land,
Let us not hang like roping icicles [ple 10
Upon the houses' thatch, whiles a more frosty peo-
Sweat drops of gallant youth in our rich fields;
Poor—we may call them, in their native lords.

Dau. By faith and honour,
Our madams mock at us; and plainly say,
Our mettle is bred out; and they will give
Their bodies to the lust of English youth,
To new store France with bastard warriors.

Bour. They bid us—to the English dancing-schools,
And teach *lavoltas*³ high, and swift corantos;
Saying, our grace is only in our heels,
And that we are most lofty run-aways.

Fr. King. Where is Montjoy, the herald? speed
him hence;

Let him greet England with our sharp defiance.—
Up, princes; and, with spirit of honour edg'd,
More sharper than your swords, hie to the field:
Charles De-la-bret, high constable of France;
You dukes of Orleans, Bourbon, and of Berry,
Alençon, Brabant, Bar, and Burgundy;
Jaques Chatillion, Rambures, Vaudemont,
Beaumont, Grandpré, Roussi, and Fauconberg,
Foix, Lestrale, Bouciqualt, and Charolois;
High dukes, great princes, barons, lords, and 35
knights,

For your great seats, now quit you of great shames.
Bar Harry England, that sweeps through our land
With pennons⁴ painted in the blood of Harfleur:
Rush on his host, as doth the melted snow
Upon the vallies; whose low vassal seat
The Alps doth spit and void his rheum upon:
Go down upon him,—you have power enough,—
And in a captive chariot, into Roan
Bring him our prisoner.

Con. This becomes the great,
Sorry am I, his numbers are so few,
His soldiers sick, and famish'd in their march;
For I am sure, when he shall see our army,
He'll drop his heart into the sink of fear,
And, for atchievement, offer us his ransom.

Fr. King. Therefore, lord constable, haste on Montjoy;

And let him say to England, that we send
To know what willing ransom he will give.—
Prince Dauphin, you shall stay with us in Roan.

Dau. Not so, I do beseech your majesty.

Fr. King. Be patient, for you shall remain with us.—

Now, forth, lord constable, and princes all:
And quickly bring us word of England's fall.

[Exeunt.]

S C E N E VI.

The English Camp.

Enter Gower and Fluellen.

Gow. How now, captain Fluellen? come you from the bridge?

Flu. I assure you there is very excellent service committed at the pridge.

Gow. Is the duke of Exeter safe?

Flu. The duke of Exeter is as magnanimous as Agamemnon; and a man that I love and honour 15 with my soul, and my heart, and my duty, and my life, and my livings, and my uttermost powers: he is not (Got be praised and plessed!) any hurt in the 'orld; but keeps the pridge most valiantly, with excellent discipline. There is an ancient lieutenant there at the pridge,—I think in my very conscience, he is as valiant a man as Mark Antony; and he is a man of no estimation in the 'orld; but I did see him do gallant services.

Gow. What do you call him?

Flu. He is call'd—ancient Pistol.

Gow. I know him not.

Enter Pistol.

Flu. Do you not know him? Here comes the
man.

Pist. Captain, I beseech thee to do me favours:
The duke of Exeter doth love thee well.

Flu. Ay, I praise Got; and I have merited some love at his hands.

Pist. Bardolph, a soldier firm and sound at heart,
Of buxom⁵ valour, hath,—by cruel fate,
And giddy fortune's furious fickle wheel,
That goddess blind,
That stands upon the rolling restless stone,—

Flu. By your patience, ancient Pistol. Fortune 40 is painted plind, with a muffler before her eyes, to signify to you, that fortune is plind: And she is painted also with a wheel; to signify to you, which is the moral of it, that she is turning, and inconstant, and mutabilities, and variations; and her foot, look you, is fixed upon a spherical stone, 45 which rolls, and rolls, and rolls:—In good truth, the poet makes a most excellent description of fortune: fortune, look you, is an excellent moral.

Pist. Fortune is Bardolph's foe, and frowns on 50 him;

For he hath stolen a pix, and hang'd must 'a be.
Damn'd death!

Let gallows gape for dog, let man go free,
And let not hemp his wind-pipe suffocate:

55 But Exeter hath given the doom of death,
For pix of little price.

Therefore, go speak, the duke will hear thy voice:
And let not Bardolph's vital thread be cut
With edge of penny-cord, and vile reproach:

¹ Shotten signifies any thing projected: so nook-shotten isle is an isle that shoots out into capes, promontories, and necks of land, the very figure of Great Britain. ² i. e. over-ridden horses. ³ Hanner observes, that in this dance there was much turning and much capering. ⁴ Pennons armorial were small flags, on which the arms, device, and motto of a knight were painted. Pennon means the same as pendant. ⁵ i. e. valour under good command, obedient to its superiors.

Speak, captain, for his life, and I will thee requite.

Flu. Ancient Pistol, I do partly understand your meaning.

Pist. Why then rejoice therefore.

Flu. Certainly, ancient, it is not a thing to rejoice at: for if, look you, he were my brother, I would desire the duke to use his goot pleasure, and put him to executions; for discipline ought to be used.

Pist. Die and be damn'd; and figo for thy friendship!

Flu. It is well.

Pist. The fig¹ of Spain! [Exit Pistol.]

Flu. Very good.

Gow. Why, this is an arrant counterfeit rascal: I remember him now; a bawd, a cut-purse.

Flu. I'll assure you, 'a utter'd as prave 'ords at the pridge, as you shall see in a summer's day: But it is very well; what he has spoke to me, that is well, I warrant you, when time is serve.

Gow. Why, 'tis a gull, a fool, a rogue; that now and then goes to the wars, to grace himself, at his return into London, under the form of a soldier. And such fellows are perfect in the great commanders' names: and they will learn you by rote, where services were done;—at such and such a sconce², at such a breach, at such a convoy; who came off bravely, who was shot, who disgrac'd, what terms the enemy stood on; and this they con perfectly in the phrase of war, which they trick up with new-tuned oaths: And what a heard of the general's cut, and a horrid suit³ of the camp, will do among foaming bottles, and ale-wash'd wits, is wonderful to be thought on! But you must learn to know such slanders of the age, or else you may be marvellously mistook.

Flu. I tell you what, captain Gower;—I do perceive, he is not the man that he would gladly make shew to the 'orld he is; if I find a hole in his coat, I will tell him my mind. Hear you, the king is coming; and I must speak with him from the pridge.

Drum and colours. Enter the King, Gloster, and Soldiers.

Flu. Got pless your majesty!

K. Henry. How now, Fluellin? cam'st thou from the bridge?

Flu. Ay, so please your majesty. The duke of Exeter has very gallantly maintain'd the pridge: the French is gone off, look you: and there is gallants and most prave passages: Marry, th'athversary was have possession of the pridge; but he is enforced to retire, and the duke of Exeter is master of the pridge: I can tell your majesty, the duke is a prave man.

K. Henry. What men have you lost, Fluellen?

Flu. The perdition of th'athversary hath been very great, very reasonable great: marry, for my part, I think the duke hath lost never a man, but one that is like to be executed for robbing a church, one Bardolph, if your majesty know the man: his face is all bubukles, and whelks, and knobs, and flames of fire: and his lips plows at his nose, and it is like a coal of fire, sometimes plue and sometimes red; but his nose is executed, and his fire's out.

K. Henry. We would have all such offenders so cut off—and we give express charge, that, in our marches through the country, there be nothing compelled from the villages, nothing taken but paid for; none of the French upbraided, or abused in disdainful language; For when lenity and cruelty play for a kingdom, the gentlest gamester is the soonest winner.

Tucket sounds. Enter Montjoy⁴.

Mont. You know me by my habit⁵.

K. Henry. Well then, I know thee; What shall I know of thee?

Mont. My master's mind.

K. Henry. Unfold it.

Mont. Thus says my king:—Say thou to Harry of England, Though we seemed dead, we did but sleep; Advantage is a better soldier, than rashness. Tell him, we could have rebuk'd him at Harfleur; but that we thought not good to bruise an injury, 'till it were full ripe:—now we speak upon our cue⁶, and our voice is imperial: England shall repent his folly, see his weakness, and admire our sufferance. Bid him, therefore, consider of his ransom; which must proportion the losses we have borne, the subjects we have lost, the disgrace we have digested; which, in weight to re-answer, his pettiness would bow under. For our losses, his exchequer is too poor; for the effusion of our blood, the muster of his kingdom too faint a number; and for our disgrace, his own person, kneeling at our feet, but a weak and worthless satisfaction. To this add—defiance: and tell him, for conclusion, he hath betray'd his followers, whose condemnation is pronounced. So far my king and master; so much my office.

K. Henry. What is thy name? I know thy quality.

Mont. Montjoy.

K. Henry. Thou dost thy office fairly. Turn thee back,

And tell thy king,—I do not seek him now; But could be willing to march on to Calais Without impeachment⁷: for, to say the sooth, (Though 'tis no wisdom to confess so much Unto an enemy of craft and vantage) My people are with sickness much enfeebled;

¹ This alludes to the custom of giving poison'd figs to those who were the objects either of Spanish or Italian revenge. ² A sconce appears to have been some hasty, rude, inconsiderable kind of fortification. ³ The 4tos 1600, &c. read—a horrid shout of the camp. ⁴ Mont-joye is the title of the first king at arms in France, as Garter is in our own country. ⁵ That is, by my herald's coat. ⁶ In our turn. This phrase the author learned among players, and has imparted it to kings. ⁷ i. e. hindrance.

My numbers lessen'd; and those few I have,
Almost no better than so many French;
Who when they were in health, I tell thee, herald,
I thought, upon one pair of English legs
Did march three Frenchmen.—Yet, forgive me
God,

That I do brag thus!—this your air of France
Hath blown that vice in me; I must repent.
Go, therefore, tell thy master,—here I am;
My ransom, is this frail and worthless trunk;
My army, but a weak and sickly guard;
Yet, God before¹, tell him we will come on,
Though France himself, and such another neighbour,

[joy.
Stand in our way. There's for thy labour, Mont-
Go, bid thy master well advise himself:
If we may pass, we will; if we be hinder'd,
We shall your tawny ground with your red blood
Discolour: and so, Montjoy, fare you well.
The sum of all our answer is but this:
We would not seek a battle, as we are;
Nor, as we are, we say, we will not shun it;
So tell your master.

Mont. I shall deliver so. Thanks to your highness.

Glo. I hope, they will not come upon us now.

K. Henry. We are in God's hand, brother, not in theirs.—

March to the bridge; it now draws toward
night:

Beyond the river we'll encamp ourselves;
And on to-morrow bid them march away. [Exeunt.

The French Camp near Agincourt.

Enter the Constable of France, the Lord Ram-bures, the Duke of Orleans, Dauphin, with others.

Con. Tut! I have the best armour of the world.—
Would it were day!

Orl. You have an excellent armour; but let my horse have his due.

Con. It is the best horse of Europe.

Orl. Will it never be morning?

Dau. My lord of Orleans, and my lord high constable, you talk of horse and armour,—

Orl. You are as well provided of both, as any prince in the world.

Dau. What a long night is this!—I will not change my horse with any that treads but on four pasterns. Ca, ha! He bounds² from the earth, as if his entrails were hairs; le cheval volant, the Pegasus, qui a les narines de feu! When I be-stride him, I soar, I am a hawk: he trots the air; the earth sings when he touches it; the basest horn of his hoof is more musical than the pipe of Hermes.

Orl. He's of the colour of the nutmeg.

Dau. And of the heat of the ginger. It is a beast for Perseus: he is pure air and fire; and the dull elements of earth and water never appear in him, but only in patient stillness, while his rider mounts him: he is, indeed, a horse; and all other jades you may call—beasts³.

Con. Indeed, my lord, it is a most absolute and excellent horse.

Dau. It is the prince of palfreys; his neigh is like the bidding of a monarch, and his countenance enforces homage.

Orl. No more, cousin.

Dau. Nay, the man hath no wit, that cannot, from the rising of the lark to the lodging of the lamb, vary deserved praise on my palfrey: it is a theme as fluent as the sea: turn the sands into eloquent tongues, and my horse is argument for them all: 'tis a subject for a sovereign to reason on, and for a sovereign's sovereign to ride on;
and for the world (familiar to us, and unknown)
to lay apart their particular functions, and wonder at him. I once writ a sonnet in his praise, and began thus, *Wonder of nature*⁴,—

Orl. I have heard a sonnet begin so to one's mistress.

Dau. Then did they imitate that which I compos'd to my courser; for my horse is my mistress.

Orl. Your mistress bears well.

Dau. Me well; which is the prescript praise and perfection of a good and particular mistress.

Con. Ma foy! the other day, methought, your mistress shrewdly shook your back.

Dau. So, perhaps, did yours.

Con. Mine was not bridled.

Dau. O! then, belike, she was old and gentle;
and you rode, like a kerne of Ireland, your French hose off, and in your strait trossers⁵.

Con. You have good judgement in horsemanship.

Dau. Be warn'd by me, then: they that ride so, and ride not warily, fall into foul bogs; I had rather have my horse to my mistress.

Con. I had as lief have my mistress a jade.

Dau. I tell thee, constable, my mistress wears her own hair.

Con. I could make as true a boast as that, if I had a sow to my mistress.

Dau. Le chien est retourné à son propre comissement, & la truie lavée au borbier: thou mak'st use of any thing.

Con. Yet do I not use my horse for my mistress;
or any such proverb, so little kin to the purpose.

Ram. My lord constable, the armour that I saw in your tent to-night, are those stars, or suns, upon it?

Con. Stars, my lord.

¹ This was an expression in that age for God being my guide, or, when used to another, God be thy guide. ² Alluding to the bounding of tennis-balls, which were stuff'd with hair, as appears from Much ado about Nothing: "And the old ornament of his cheek hath already stuff'd tennis-balls." ³ Jade is sometimes used for a post-horse. Beast is always employed as a contemptuous distinction. ⁴ Here, probably, some foolish poem of our author's time is ridiculed. ⁵ Trossers signifies a pair of breeches. Mr. Steevens observes, that the kerns, or peasants, of Ireland, anciently rode without breeches; and therefore strait trossers may mean only in their naked skin, which sits close to them.

Dau. Some of them will fall to-morrow, I hope.
Con. And yet my sky shall not want.
Dau. That may be, for you bear many superfluously; and 'twere more honour, some were away.
Con. Even as your horse bears your praises; who would trot as well, were some of your brags dismounted.
Dau. Would I were able to load him with his desert! Will it never be day? I will trot to-morrow a mile, and my way shall be paved with English faces.
Con. I will not say so, for fear I should be fac'd out of my way: But I would it were morning, for I would fain be about the ears of the English.
Ram. Who will go to hazard with me for twenty English prisoners?
Con. You must first go yourself to hazard, ere you have them.
Dau. 'Tis midnight, I'll go arm myself. [Exit.
Orl. The Dauphin longs for morning.
Ram. He longs to eat the English.
Con. I think, he will eat all he kills.
Orl. By the white hand of my lady, he's a gallant prince.
Con. Swear by her foot, that she may tread out the oath.
Orl. He is simply the most active gentleman of France.
Con. Doing is activity; and he will still be doing.
Orl. He never did harm, that I heard of.
Con. Nor will do none to-morrow; he will keep that good man still.
Orl. I know him to be valiant.
Con. I was told that, by one that knows him better than you.
Orl. What's he?
Con. Marry, he told me so himself: and he said, he car'd not who knew it.
Orl. He needs not, it is no hidden virtue in him.
Con. By my faith, sir, but it is; never any body saw it, but his lacquey: 'tis a hooded valour; and, when it appears, it will bate.¹
Orl. Ill-will never said well.
Con. I will cap² that proverb with—There is flattery in friendship.

Orl. And I will take up that with—Give the devil his due.
Con. Well plac'd; there stands your friend for the devil: have at the very eye of that proverb, with—A pox of the devil.
Orl. You are the better at proverbs, by how much—A fool's bolt is soon shot.
Con. You have shot over.
Orl. 'Tis not the first time you were over-shot.
Enter a Messenger.
Mes. My lord high constable, the English lie within fifteen hundred paces of your tent.
Con. Who hath measur'd the ground?
Mess. The lord Grandpré.
Con. A valiant and most expert gentleman.—'Would it were day!—Alas, poor Harry of England! he longs not for the dawning, as we do.
Orl. What a wretched and peevish³ fellow is this king of England, to mope with his fat-brain'd followers so far out of his knowledge!
Con. If the English had any apprehension, they would run away.
Orl. That they lack; for if their heads had any intellectual armour, they could never wear such heavy head-pieces.
Ram. That island of England breeds very valiant creatures; their mastiffs are of unmatched courage.
Orl. Foolish curs! that run winking into the mouth of a Russian bear, and have their heads crush'd like rotten apples; you may as well say,—that's a valiant flea, that dare eat his breakfast on the lip of a lion.
Con. Just, just; and the men do sympathize with the mastiffs, in robustious and rough coming on, leaving their wits with their wives: and then give them great meals of beef, and iron and steel, they will eat like wolves, and fight like devils.
Orl. Ay, but these English are shrewdly out of beef.
Con. Then we shall find to-morrow—they have only stomachs to eat, and none to fight. Now it is time to arm; Come, shall we about it?
Orl. 'Tis two o'clock: but, let me see—by ten, We shall each have a hundred Englishmen.
[Exeunt.]

A C T IV.

Enter Chorus.

Chorus. NOW entertain conjecture of a time,
 When creeping murmur, and the poring dark,
 Fills the wide vessel of the universe.

55 From camp to camp, through the foul womb of
 night,
 The hum of either army stilly sounds,
 That the fix'd centinels almost receive
 The secret whispers of each other's watch:
 Fire answers fire; and through their paly flames

¹ This alludes to falcons which are kept hooded when they are not to fly at game, and, as soon as the hood is off, bait or flap the wing. The meaning is, the Dauphin's valour has never been let loose upon an enemy; yet when he makes his first essay, we shall see how he will flutter. ² Alluding to the practice of capping verses. ³ Peevish, in ancient language, signified—foolish, silly.

Each battle sees the other's umber'd¹ face:
 Steed threatens steed, in high and boastful neighs
 Piercing the night's dull ear: and from the tents,
 The armourers, accomplishing the knights,
 With busy hammers closing rivets up,
 Give dreadful note of preparation.
 The country cocks do crow; the clocks do toll,
 And the third hour of drowsy morning name.
 Proud of their numbers, and secure in soul,
 The confident and over-lusty French
 Do the low-rated English play² at dice;
 And chide the cripple tardy-gaited night,
 Who, like a foul and ugly witch, doth limp
 So tediously away. The poor condemned English,
 Like sacrifices, by their watchful fires
 Sit patiently, and inly ruminate
 The morning's danger; and their gesture sad,
 Investing lank-lean cheeks, and war-worn coats,
 Presented them unto the gazing moon
 So many horrid ghosts. O, now, who will behold
 The royal captain of this ruin'd band,
 Walking from watch to watch, from tent to tent,
 Let him cry—Praise and glory on his head!
 For forth he goes, and visits all his host;
 Bids them good morrow, with a modest smile;
 And calls them—brothers, friends, and countrymen.
 Upon his royal face there is no note,
 How dread an army hath enrounded him;
 Nor doth he dedicate one jot of colour
 Unto the weary and all-watched night:
 But freshly looks, and over-bears attaint,
 With cheerful semblance, and sweet majesty;
 That every wretch, pining and pale before,
 Beholding him, plucks comfort from his looks:
 A largess universal, like the sun,
 His liberal eye doth give to every one,
 Thawing cold fear. Then, mean and gentle all,
 Behold, as may unworthiness define,
 A little touch of Harry in the night:
 And so our scene must to the battle fly;
 Where (O for pity!) we shall much disgrace,—
 With four or five most vile and ragged foils,
 Right ill-dispos'd, in brawl ridiculous,—
 The name of Agincourt: Yet, sit and see;
 Minding³ true things by what their mockeries be.

[Exit.

S C E N E I.

The English Camp at Agincourt.Enter King Henry, Bedford, and Gloster.

K. Henry. Gloster, 'tis true, that we are in great danger;

The greater therefore should our courage be.—
 Good-morrow, brother Bedford.—God Almighty!
 There is some soul of goodness in things evil,
 Would men observingly distil it out;
 For our bad neighbour makes us early stirrers,
 Which is both healthful, and good husbandry:

Besides, they are our outward consciences,
 And preachers to us all; admonishing,
 That we should dress us fairly for our end.
 Thus may we gather honey from the weed,
 And make a moral of the devil himself.

Enter Erpingham.

Good morrow, old Sir Thomas Erpingham:
 A good soft pillow for that good white head
 Were better than a churlish turf of France. [better,

Erping. Not so, my liege; this lodging likes me
 Since I may say—now lie I like a king. [sent pains,

K. Henry. 'Tis good for men to love their pre-
 Upon example; so the spirit is eased:

And, when the mind is quicken'd, out of doubt,

Erping. The organs, though defunct and dead before,
 Break up their drowsy grave, and newly move,
 With casted slough⁴ and fresh legerity⁵.

Lend me thy cloak, Sir Thomas.—Brothers both,
 Commend me to the princes in our camp;

Do my good morrow to them; and, anon,

Desire them all to my pavilion.

Glo. We shall, my liege.

Erping. Shall I attend your grace?

K. Henry. No, my good knight;

Go with my brothers to my lords of England:

I and my bosom must debate a while,

And then I would no other company. [Harry!

Erping. The Lord in heaven bless thee, noble

K. Henry. God-a-mercy, old heart! thou speak'st cheerfully. [Exit.

Enter Pistol.

Pist. Qui va la?

K. Henry. A friend.

Pist. Discuss unto me: Art thou officer?

Or art thou base, common, and popular?

K. Henry. I am a gentleman of a company.

Pist. Trail'st thou the puissant pike?

K. Hen. Even so: What are you?

Pist. As good a gentleman as the emperor.

K. Hen. Then you are a better than the king.

Pist. The king's a bawcock, and a heart of gold;

A lad of life, an imp⁶ of fame;

Of parents good, of fist most valiant:

I kiss his dirty shoe, and from my heart-strings

I love the lovely bully. What's thy name?

K. Henry. Harry le Roy. [Cornish crew?

Pist. Le Roy! a Cornish name: art thou of K. Henry. No, I am a Welshman.

Pist. Know'st thou Fluellen?

K. Henry. Yes.

Pist. Tell him, I'll knock his leek about his pate
 Upon saint David's day.

K. Henry. Do not you wear your dagger in your cap that day, lest he knock that about yours.

Pist. Art thou his friend?

K. Henry. And his kinsman too.

Pist. The figo for thee then!

¹ Umber is a brown colour: the distant visages of the soldiers would certainly appear of this hue when beheld through the light of midnight fires. Mr. Tollet observes that another interpretation of this phrase occurs, expressive of the preparation of both armies for an engagement, in Hamlet, Act III. Mr. Steevens gives the following quotation from Stowe's Chronicle: "He brast up his umber three times;" where umber means the vizor of the helmet, as umbriere doth in Spenser, from the French ombre, ombriere, or ombraire, a shadow, an umbrella, or any thing that hides or covers the face. Hence umber'd face may denote a face arm'd with a helmet. ² i. e. do play them away at dice. ³ To mind is the same as to call to remembrance. ⁴ Slough is the skin which the serpent annually throws off, and by the change of which he is supposed to regain new vigour and fresh youth. ⁵ Legerity is lightness, nimbleness. ⁶ See Note², p. 506. K. Henry.

K. Henry. I thank you: God be with you!

Pist. My name is Pistol call'd. [Exit.]

K. Henry. It sorts¹ well with your fierceness.

Enter Fluellen, and Gower, severally.

Gow. Captain Fluellen,—

Flu. So! in the name Cheshu Christ, speak fewer. It is the greatest admiration in the universal world, when the true and ancient prerogatives and laws of the wars is not kept: if you would take the pains but to examine the wars of Pompey the great, you shall find, I warrant you, that there is no tittle tattle, nor pibble pabble, in Pompey's camp: I warrant you, you shall find the ceremonies of the wars, and the cares of it, and the forms of it, and the sobriety of it, and the modesty of it, to be otherwise.

Gow. Why, the enemy is loud; you heard him all night.

Flu. If the enemy is an ass and a fool, and a prating coxcomb, is it meet, think you, that we should also, look you, be an ass and a fool, and a prating coxcomb; in your own conscience now?

Gow. I will speak lower.

Flu. I pray you, and beseech you, that you will. [Exit.]

K. Henry. Though it appear a little out of fashion, there is much care and valour in this Welshman.

Enter three Soldiers; John Bates, Alexander Court, and Michael Williams.

Court. Brother John Bates, is not that the morning which breaks yonder?

Bates. I think it be: but we have no great cause to desire the approach of day.

Will. We see yonder the beginning of the day, but, I think, we shall never see the end of it.—Who goes there?

K. Henry. A friend.

Will. Under what captain serve you?

K. Henry. Under Sir Thomas Erpingham.

Will. A good old commander, and a most kind gentleman: I pray you, what thinks he of our estate?

K. Henry. Even as men wreck'd upon the sand, that look to be wash'd off the next tide.

Bates. He hath not told his thought to the king?

K. Henry. No; nor it is not meet he should.—For, though I speak it to you, I think, the king is but a man, as I am: the violet smells to him, as it doth to me; the element shews to him, as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditions²: his ceremonies laid by, in his nakedness he appears but a man; and though his affections are higher mounted than ours, yet, when they stoop, they stoop with the like wing; therefore, when he sees reason of fears, as we do, his fears, out of doubt, be of the same relish as ours are: Yet, in reason, no man should possess him with any appearance of fear, lest he, by shewing it, should dishearten his army.

Bates. He may shew what outward courage he will: but, I believe, as cold a night as 'tis, he could wish himself in the Thames up to the neck; and so I would he were, and I by him, at all adventures, so we were quit here.

K. Henry. By my troth, I will speak my conscience of the king; I think, he would not wish himself any where but where he is.

Bates. Then, 'would he were here alone; so should he be sure to be ransom'd, and a many poor men's lives sav'd.

K. Henry. I dare say, you love him not so ill, to wish him here alone; howsoever you speak this, to feel other men's minds: Methinks, I could not die any where so contented, as in the king's company; his cause being just, and his quarrel honourable.

Will. That's more than we know.

Bates. Ay, or more than we should seek after: for we know enough, if we know we are the king's subjects: If his cause be wrong, our obedience to the king wipes the crime of it out of us.

Will. But if the cause be not good, the king himself hath a heavy reckoning to make; when all those legs, and arms, and heads, chopp'd off in a battle, shall join together at the latter day, and cry all,—We dy'd in such a place; some, swearing; some, crying for a surgeon; some, upon their wives left poor behind them; some, upon the debts they owe; some, upon their children rawly left. I am afraid there are few die well, that die in a battle; for how can they charitably dispose of any thing, when blood is their argument? Now, if these men do not die well, it will be a black matter for the king that led them to it; whom to disobey, were against all proportion of subjection.

K. Henry. So, if a son, that is by his father sent about merchandize, do sinfully miscarry upon the sea, the imputation of his wickedness, by your rule, should be imposed upon his father that sent him; or, if a servant, under his master's command, transporting a sum of money, be assail'd by robbers, and die in many irreconcil'd iniquities, you may call the business of the master the author of the servant's damnation:—~~E~~ this is not so: the king is not bound to answer the particular endings of his soldiers, the father of his son, nor the master of his servant; for they purpose not their death, when they purpose their services. Besides, there is no king, be his cause never so spotless, if it come to the arbitrement of swords, can try it out with all unspotted soldiers. Some, peradventure, have on them the guilt of premeditated and contrived murder; some, of beguiling virgins with the broken seals of perjury; some, making the wars their bulwark, that have before gored the gentle bosom of peace with pillage and robbery. Now if these men have defeated the law and out-run native punishment³, though they can out-strip men, they have no wings to fly from God: war is his beadle, war is his vengeance; so that here men are punished, for before-breach of the king's laws, in now the king's quarrel: where they feared the death, they have borne life away; and where they would be safe, they perish: Then if they die unprovided, no more is the king guilty of their damnation, than he was before guilty of those impieties for the which they are now visited.—

Every subject's duty is the king's; but every subject's soul is his own. Therefore should every soldier in the wars do as every sick man in his bed, wash every moth out of his conscience: and dying so, death is to him advantage; or not dying, the time was blessedly lost, wherein such preparation was gained; and, in him that escapes, it were not sin to think, that, making God so free an offer, he let him out-live that day to see his greatness, and to teach others how they should prepare.

Will. 'Tis certain, that every man that dies ill, the ill is upon his own head, the king is not to answer for it.

Bates. I do not desire he should answer for me; and yet I determine to fight lustily for him.

K. Henry. I myself heard the kingsay, he would not be ransom'd.

Will. Ay, he said so, to make us fight cheerfully: but, when our throats are cut, he may be ransom'd, and we ne'er the wiser.

K. Henry. If I live to see it, I will never trust his word after.

Will. You pay him then! that's a perilous shot out of an elder gun¹, that a poor and private displeasure can do against a monarch! you may as well go about to turn the sun to ice, with fanning in his face with a peacock's feather. You'll never trust his word after! come, 'tis a foolish saying.

K. Henry. Your reproof is something too round: I should be angry with you, if the time were convenient.

Will. Let it be a quarrel between us if you live.

K. Henry. I embrace it.

Will. How shall I know thee again?

K. Henry. Give me any gage of thine, and I will wear it in my bonnet: then, if ever thou dar'st acknowledge it, I will make it my quarrel.

Will. Here's my glove; give me another of thine.

K. Henry. There.

Will. This will I also wear in my cap: if ever thou come to me and say, after to-morrow, This is my glove, by this hand, I will take thee a box on the ear.

K. Henry. If ever I live to see it, I will challenge it.

Will. Thou dar'st as well be hang'd.

K. Henry. Well, I will do it, though I take thee in the king's company.

Will. Keep thy word: fare thee well.

Bates. Be friends, you English fools, be friends; we have French quarrels enough, if you could tell how to reckon.

K. Henry. Indeed, the French may lay twenty French crowns to one, they will beat us; for they bear them on their shoulders: But it is no English treason to cut French crowns; and, to-morrow, the king himself will be a clipper.

[Exeunt soldiers.]

Upon the king! let us our lives, our souls, Our debts, our careful wives, our children, and Our sins, lay on the king; he must bear all.

O hard condition! twin-born with greatness, Subjected to the breath of every fool, [ing!]

Whose sense no more can feel but his own wrong—

What infinite heart's ease must kings neglect,

That private men enjoy? and what have kings,

That privates have not too, save ceremony?

Save general ceremony?

And what art thou, thou idol ceremony?

What kind of God art thou, that suffer'st more

Of mortal griefs, than do thy worshippers?

What are thy rents? what are thy comings-in?

O ceremony, shew me but thy worth!

What is thy soul, O adoration?

Art thou aught else but place, degree, and form,

Creating awe and fear in other men?

Wherein thou art less happy being fear'd,

Than they in fearing.

What drink'st thou oft, instead of homage sweet,

But poison'd flattery? O, be sick, great greatness,

And bid thy ceremony give thee cure!

Think'st thou, the fiery fever will go out

With titles blown from adulation?

Will it give place to flexure and low bending?

Can'st thou, when thou command'st the beggar's knee, [dream,

Command the health of it? No, thou proud

That play'st so subtly with a king's repose,

I am a king, that find thee: and I know,

'Tis not the balm, the scepter, and the ball,

The sword, the mace, the crown imperial,

The enter-tissued robe of gold and pearl,

The farsed² title running 'fore the king,

The throne he sits on, nor the tide of pomp

That beats upon the high shore of the world,

No, not all these, thrice-gorgeous ceremony,

Not all these, laid in bed majestical,

Can sleep so soundly as the wretched slave;

Who, with a body fill'd, and vacant mind,

Gets him to rest, cramm'd with distressful bread,

Never sees horrid night, the child of hell;

But, like a lacquey, from the rise to set,

Sweats in the eye of Phoebus, and all night

Sleeps in Elysium; next day, after dawn,

Doth rise, and help Hyperion to his horse;

And follow so the ever-running year

With profitable labour, to his grave:

And, but for ceremony, such a wretch,

Winding up days with toil, and nights with sleep,

Had the fore-hand and vantage of a king.

The slave, a member of the country's peace,

Enjoys it; but in gross brain little wots,

What watch the king keeps to maintain the peace,

Whose hours the peasant best advantages.

¹ Meaning, it is a great displeasure that an elder gun can do against a cannon. ² Farsed is stuffed meaning, the tumid puffy titles with which a king's name is always introduced.

Enter Erpingham.

Erp. My lord, your nobles, jealous of your
Seek through your camp to find you. [absence,
K. Henry. Good old knight,
Collect them all together at my tent:
I'll be before thee.

Erp. I shall do't, my lord. [Exit.

K. Henry. O God of battles! steel my soldiers' hearts!

Possess them not with fear; take from them now
The sense of reckoning, if the opposed numbers
Pluck their hearts from them!—Not to-day, O
O not to-day, think not upon the fault [Lord,
My father made in compassing the crown;
I Richard's body have interred new;
And on it have bestow'd more contrite tears,
Than from it issued forced drops of blood.
Five hundred poor I have in yearly pay,
Who twice a day their wither'd hands hold up
Toward heaven, to pardon blood; and I have built
Two chantries, where the sad and solemn priests
Sing still for Richard's soul. More will I do:
Though all that I can do, is nothing worth;
Since that my penitence comes after all,
Imploring pardon.

Enter Gloster.

Glo. My liege!

K. Henry. My brother Gloster's voice!—Ay;
I know thy errand, I will go with thee:—
The day, my friends, and all things stay for me.

[Exit.

S C E N E II.

The French Camp.

Enter the Dauphin, Orleans, Rambures, and Beaumont.

Orl. The sun doth gild our armour; up, my lords.

Dau. Montez à cheval:—My horse! valet!
lacquey! ha!

Orl. O brave spirit!

Dau. Via!—les eaux & la terre.—

Orl. Rien plus? l'air & le feu.—

Dau. Ciel! cousin Orleans!—

Enter Constable.

Now, my lord Constable!

Con. Hark, how our steeds for present service neigh!

Dau. Mount them, and make incision in their hides;

That their hot blood may spin in English eyes,
And daunt them with superfluous courage. Ha!

Ram. What, will you have them weep our horses' blood?

How shall we then behold their natural tears?

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. The English are embattled, you French peers.

Con. To horse, you gallant princes! straight to horse!
Do but behold yon poor and starved band,
And your fair shew shall suck away their souls,
Leaving them but the shales and husks of men.
5 There is not work enough for all our hands;
scarce blood enough in all their sickly veins,
To give each naked curtle-ax a stain,
That our French gallants shall to-day draw out,
And sheath for lack of sport: let us but blow on 10 them,

The vapour of our valour will o'erturn them.
'Tis positive 'gainst all exceptions, lords,
That our superfluous lacqueys, and our peasants,—
Who, in unnecessary action, swarm
15 About our squares of battle,—were enough
To purge this field of such a hilding foe;
Though we, upon this mountain's basis by,
Took stand for idle speculation:
But that our honours must not.—What's to say?
20 A very little little let us do,
And all is done. Then let the trumpets sound
The tucket sonuance² and the note to mount:
For our approach shall so much dare the field,
That England shall couch down in fear, and 25 yield.

Enter Grandpré.

Grand. Why do you stay so long, my lords of France?

Yon island carrions, desperate of their bones,
Ill-favour'dly become the morning field:
30 Their ragged curtains poorly are let loose,
And our air shakes them passing scornfully.
Big Mars seems bankrupt in their beggar'd host,
And faintly through a rusty beaver peeps.
35 Their horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,
With torch-staves in their hand³: and their poor
jades

Lob down their heads, dropping the hide and hips;
The gum down-roping from their pale-dead eyes;
40 And in their pale dull mouths the gimmal⁴ bit
Lies foul with chew'd grass, still and motionless;
And their executors, the knavish crows,
Fly o'er them all, impatient for their hour.
Description cannot suit itself in words,
45 To demonstrate the life of such a battle
In life so lifeless as it shews itself.

Con. They have said their prayers, and they stay for death.

Dau. Shall we go send them dinners, and fresh suits,

50 And give their fasting horses provender,
And after fight with them?

Con. I stay but for my guard⁵; On, to the field:
I will the banner from a trumpet take,
55 And use it for my haste. Come, come away!
The sun is high, and we out-wear the day.

[Exit.

¹ Via! is an old hortatory exclamation, as allons! ² The tucket-sonuance was probably the name of an introductory flourish on the trumpet. ³ Grandpré alludes to the form of the ancient candlesticks, which frequently represented human figures holding the sockets for the lights in their extended hands.

⁴ Gimnal is, in the western counties, a ring; a gimnal bit is therefore a bit of which the parts played one within another. ⁵ It seems, by what follows, that guard in this place means rather something of ornament or of distinction than a body of attendants. The following quotation from Holinshed will best elucidate this passage—"The duke of Brabant, when his standard was not come, caused a banner to be taken from a trumpet and fastened upon a spear, the which he commanded to be borne before him instead of a standard."

S C E N E III.

The English Camp.

Enter Gloster, Bedford, Exeter, Erpingham, with all the English Host; Salisbury, and Westmoreland.

Glo. Where is the king?

Bed. The king himself is rode to view their battle.

West. Of fighting men they have full threescore thousand. [fresh.]

Exe. There's five to one; besides, they all are

Sal. God's arm strike with us! 'tis a fearful odds.

God be wi' you, princes all; I'll to my charge:

If we no more meet, 'till we meet in heaven,

Then joyfully,—my noble lord of Bedford,—

My dear lord Gloster—and my good lord Exeter,—

And my kind kinsman,—warriors all, adieu!

Bed. Farewel, good Salisbury; and good luck go with thee!

Exe. to Sal. Farewell, kind lord! fight valiantly to-day:

And yet I do thee wrong, to mind thee of it,
For thou art fram'd of the firm truth of valour.

[Exit Salisbury.]

Bed. He is as full of valour as of kindness;
Princely in both.

Enter King Henry.

West. O, that we now had here
But one ten thousand of those men in England,
That do no work to-day!

K. Henry. What's he, that wishes so?
My cousin Westmoreland?—No, my fair cousin:

If we are mark'd to die, we are enough

To do our country loss; and if to live,

The fewer men, the greater share of honour.

God's will! I pray thee, wish not one man more.

By Jove, I am not covetous for gold;

Nor care I who doth feed upon my cost;

It yearns me not, if men my garments wear;

Such outward things dwell not in my desires:

But, if it be a sin to covet honour,

I am the most offending soul alive.

No, 'faith, my coz, wish not a man from England:

God's peace! I would not lose so great an honour,

As one man more, methinks, would share from me,

For the best hope I have. O, do not wish one more:

Rather proclaim it, Westmoreland, through my

That he which hath no stomach to this fight, [host,

Let him depart; his passport shall be made,

And crowns for convoy put into his purse:

We would not die in that man's company,

That fears his fellowship to die with us.

This day is called—the feast of Crispian:¹

He, that out-lives this day, and comes safe home,

Will stand a-tip-toe when this day is nam'd,

And rouse him at the name of Crispian.

He, that shall live this day, and see old age,

Will yearly on the vigil feast his friends,

And say—To-morrow is saint Crispian:

Then will he strip his sleeve, and shew his scars.

Old men forget; yet all shall be forgot,
But they'll remember, with advantages,
What feats they did that day: Then shall our
names,

5 Familiar in their mouth as household words,—

Harry the king, Bedford, and Exeter,

Warwick and Talbot, Salisbury and Gloster,—

Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd:

This story shall the good man teach his son;

10 And Crispin Crispian shall ne'er go by,

From this day to the ending of the world,

But we in it shall be remembered:

We few, we happy few, we band of brothers;

For he to-day that sheds his blood with me,

15 Shall be my brother; be he ne'er so vile,

This day shall gentle his condition²:

And gentlemen in England, now a-bed,

Shall think themselves accursed, they were not here;

And hold their manhoods cheap, while any speaks,

20 That fought with us upon saint Crispin's day.

Enter Salisbury.

Sal. My sovereign lord, bestow yourself with speed:

The French are³ bravely in their battles set,

25 And will with all expedience⁴ charge on us.

K. Henry. All things are ready, if our minds be so.

West. Perish the man, whose mind is backward now!

30 K. Henry. Thou dost not wish more help from England, cousin!

West. God's will, my liege, would you and I alone,

Without more help, might fight this battle out!

35 K. Henry. Why, now thou hast unwish'd five thousand men;

Which likes me better, than to wish us one.—

You know your places: God be with you all!

Tucket. Enter Montjoy.

40 Mont. Once more I come to know of thee, king Harry,

If for thy ransom thou wilt now compound,

Before thy most assured over-throw:

For, certainly, thou art so near the gulf,

45 Thou needs must be englutted. Besides, in mercy,

The Constable desires thee—thou wilt mind

Thy followers of repentance; that their souls

May make a peaceful and a sweet retire

From off these fields, where (wretches) their poor

50 bodies

Must lie and fester.

K. Henry. Who hath sent thee now?

Mont. The Constable of France.

55 K. Henry. I pray thee, bear my former answer back;

Bid them atchieve me, and then sell my bones.

Good God! why should they mock poor fellows thus?

The man, that once did sell the lion's skin

60 While the beast liv'd, was kill'd with hunting him.

¹ The battle of Agincourt was fought upon the 25th of October, St. Crispin's day. ² i. e. this day shall advance him to the rank of a gentleman. ³ i. e. splendidly, ostentatiously. ⁴ i. e. expedition.

A many of our bodles shall, no doubt,
Find native graves; upon the which, I trust,
Shall witness live in brass of this day's work:
And those that leave their valiant bones in France,
Dying like men, though buried in your dunghills,
They shall be fam'd: for there the sun shall greet
them,

And draw their honours reeking up to heaven;
Leaving their earthly parts to choak your clime,
The smell whereof shall breed a plague in France.
Mark then a bounding valour in our English;
That, being dead, like to the bullet's grazing,
Breaks out into a second course of mischief,
Killing in relapse of mortality¹.

Let me speak proudly;—Tell the Constable,
We are but warriors for the working-day:
Our gayness, and our gilt², are all besmirch'd
With rainy marching in the painful field;
There's not a piece of feather in our host,
(Good argument, I hope, we shall not fly)
And time hath worn us into slovenry:

But, by the mass, our hearts are in the trim:
And my poor soldiers tell me—yet ere night
They'll be in fresher robes; or they will pluck
The gay new coats o'er the French soldiers' heads,
And turn them out of service. If they do this,
(As, if God please, they shall) my ransom then
Will soon be levy'd. Herald, save thy labour;
Come thou no more for ransom, gentle herald;
They shall have none, I swear, but these my joints:

Which if they have as I will leave 'em to them,
Shall yield them little, tell the Constable.

Mont. I shall, king Harry. And so fare thee
well:

Thou never shalt hear herald any more. [Exit.

K. Henry. I fear, thou'lt once more come again for ransom.

Enter the Duke of York.

York. My lord, most humbly on my knee I beg
The leading of the vaward.

K. Henry. Take it, brave York.—Now, soldiers, march away:—

And how thou pleasest, God, dispose the day!

[Exit.

SCENE IV.

The Field of Battle.

Alarm, excursions. Enter Pistol, French Soldier, and Boy.

Pist. Yield, cur.

Fr. Sol. Je pense, que vous estes le gentilhomme de bonne qualité.

Pist. Quality, call you me?—Construe me, art thou a gentleman? What is thy name? discuss.

Fr. Sol. O seigneur Dieu!

Pist. O, signieur Dew should be a gentleman:—
Perpend my words, O signieur Dew, and mark;—
O signieur Dew, thou dy'st on point of fox³,
Except, O signieur, thou do give to me
Egregious ransom.

Fr. Sol. O, prenez misericorde! ayez pitié de moi!

Pist. Moys shall not serve, I will have forty moys;
For I will fetch thy rim⁴ out at thy throat,
In drops of crimson b'ood.

Fr. Sol. Est-il impossible d'eschapper la force de ton bras?

Pist. Brass, cur!

Thou damned and luxurious mountain goat,
Offer'st me brass?

Fr. Sol. O, pardonnez moi!

Pist. Say'st thou me so? is that a ton of moys⁵?
—Come hither, boy; Ask me this slave in French,

What is his name.

Boy. Escoutez; Comment estes vous appelé?

Fr. Sol. Monsieur le Fer.

Boy. He says, his name is—master Fer.

Pist. Master Fer! I'll fer him, and firk⁶ him, and ferret him;—discuss the same in French unto
him.

Boy. I do not know the French for fer, and ferret, and firk.

Pist. Bid him prepare, for I will cut his throat.

Fr. Sol. Que dit-il, monsieur?

Boy. Il me commande de vous dire que vous vous teniez prest; car ce soldat icy est disposé tout à cette heure de couper vostre gorge.

Pist. Ouy, couper gorge, par ma foy, pesant,
Unless thou give me crowns, brave crowns;
Or mangled shalt thou be by this my sword.

Fr. Sol. O, je vous supplie, pour l'amour de Dieu, me pardonner! Je suis gentilhomme de bonne maison; gardez ma vie, & je vous donneray deux

Pist. What are his words? [cents escus.

Boy. He prays you to save his life: he is a gentleman of a good house; and, for his ransom, he will give you two hundred crowns.

Pist. Tell him,—my fury shall abate, and I
The crowns will take.

Fr. Sol. Petit monsieur, que dit-il?

Boy. Encore qu'il est contre son jurement, de pardonner aucun prisonnier; neantmoins, pour les escus que vous l'avez promettez, il est content de vous donner la liberté, le franchisement.

Fr. Sol. Sur mes genoux je vous donne mille remercimens: & je m'estime heureux que je suis tombé entre les mains d'un chevalier, je pense, le plus brave, valiant, & tres distingué seigneur

Pist. Expound unto me, boy. [d'Angleterre.

¹ Mr. Steevens observes, that by this phrase, however uncouth, Shakspeare seems to mean the same as in the preceding line. Mortality is death. Relapse may be used for rebound. Shakspeare has given mind of honour, for honourable mind; and by the same rule might write relapse of mortality, for fatal or mortal rebound; or by relapse of mortality, he may mean—after they had relapsed into inanimation. ² i. e. golden show, superficial gilding. Obsolete. ³ Fox is an old cant word for a sword. ⁴ The rim means what is now called the diaphragm in human creatures, and the skirt or midriff in beasts. ⁵ Moys is a piece of money; whence moi d'or, or moi of gold. ⁶ To firk is used in a variety of senses by different old authors: in this place it would seem to mean, to chastise.

Boy.

Boy. He gives you, upon his knees, a thousand thanks; and esteems himself happy that he hath fallen into the hands of one (as he thinks), the most brave, valorous, and thrice-worthy signieur of England.

Pist. As I suck blood, I will some mercy shew.
—Follow me, cur.

Boy. Suivez vous le grand capitaine.

[Exc. Pistol, and French Soldier.]

I did never know so full a voice issue from so empty a heart: but the saying is true,—The empty vessel makes the greatest sound. Bardolph, and Nym, had ten times more valour than this roaring devil¹ in the old play, that every one may pare his nails with a wooden dagger; yet they are both hang'd; and so would this be, if he durst steal any thing advent'rously. I must stay with the lacqueys, with the luggage of our camp: the French might have a good prey of us, if he knew of it; for there is none to guard it, but boys.

[Exit.]

SCENE V.

Another part of the field of Battle.

Enter Constable, Orleans, Bourbon, Dauphin, and Rambures.

Con. O diable! [perdu!]

Orl. O seigneur!—le jour est perdu, tout est

Dau. Mort de ma vie! all is confounded, all!

Reproach and everlasting shame

Sits mocking in our plumes.— [A short alarm.]

O meschante fortune!—Do not run away.

Con. Why, all our ranks are broke.

Dau. O perdurable² shame!—let's stab ourselves.

Be these the wretches that we play'd at dice for?

Orl. Is this the king we sent to for his ransom?

Bour. Shame, and eternal shame, nothing but shame!

Let us die instant:—Once more back again;

And he that will not follow Bourbon now,

Let him go hence, and, with his cap in hand,

Like a base pander, hold the chamber-door,

Whilst by a slave, no gentler than my dog,

His fairest daughter is contaminated.

Con. Disorder, that hath spoiled us, friend us now!

Let us, in heaps, go offer up our lives

Unto these English, or else die with fame.

Orl. We are enough, yet living in the field,

To smother up the English in our throngs,

If any order might be thought upon. [throng;]

Bour. The devil take order now! I'll to the Let life be short; else shame will be too long.

[Excunt.]

SCENE VI.

Alarum. Enter King Henry and his Train, with Prisoners.

K. Henry. Well have we done, thrice-valiant countrymen:

But all's not done, yet keep the French the field.

Exc. The duke of York commends him to your majesty.

K. Henry. Lives he, good uncle? Thrice, within this hour,

5 I saw him down; thrice up again, and fighting;
From helmet to the spur, all blood he was.

Exc. In which array (brave soldier) doth he lie,
Larding the plain: and by his bloody side
(Yoak-fellow to his honour-owing wounds,)

10 The noble earl of Suffolk also lies.

Suffolk first dy'd: and York, all haggled over,
Comes to him, where in gore he lay insteep'd,
And takes him by the beard; kisses the gashes,
That bloodily did yawn upon his face;

15 And cries aloud,—Tarry, dear cousin Suffolk!

My soul shall thine keep company to heaven:

Tarry, sweet soul, for mine, then fly a-breast;

As, in this glorious and well-foughten field,

We kept together in our chivalry.

20 Upon these words I came, and cheer'd him up:

He smil'd me in the face, raught me in his hand,

And, with a feeble gripe, says,—Dear my lord,

Commend my service to my sovereign.

So did he turn, and over Suffolk's neck

25 He threw his wounded arm, and kiss'd his lips;

And so, espous'd to death, with blood he seal'd

A testament of noble-ending love.

The pretty and sweet manner of it forc'd

Those waters from me, which I would have stopp'd;

30 But I had not so much of man in me,

But all my mother came into mine eyes,

And gave me up to tears.

K. Henry. I blame you not;

For, hearing this, I must perforce compound

35 With mistful eyes, or they will issue too.—[Alarum.]

But, hark! what new alarum is this same?—

The French have reinforc'd their scatter'd men:—

Then every soldier kill his prisoners;

Give the word through. [Excunt.]

SCENE VII.

Alarums continued; after which, enter Fluellen and Gower.

Flu. Kill the poys and the luggage! 'tis expressly against the law of arms: 'tis as arrant a piece of knavery, mark you now, as can be offer'd, in the world: In your conscience now, is it not?

Gow. 'Tis certain, there's not a boy left alive; and the cowardly rascals, that ran away from the battle, have done this slaughter: besides, they have burn'd or carried away all that was in the king's tent; wherefore the king, most worthily, has caus'd every soldier to cut his prisoner's throat.

55 O, 'tis a gallant king!

Flu. I, he was born at Monmouth, captain Gower: What call you the town's name, where Alexander the pig was born?

Gow. Alexander the Great.

60 Flu. Why, I pray you, is not pig, great? the

¹ Dr. Johnson on this passage observes, that in modern puppet-shows, which seem to be copied from the old farces, Punch sometimes fights the Devil, and always overcomes him. I suppose the Vice of the old farce, to whom Punch succeeds, used to fight the Devil with a wooden dagger. ² Perdurable means lasting.

pig, or the great, or the mighty, or the huge, or the magnanimous, are all one reckonings, save the phrase is a little variations.

Gow. I think, Alexander the Great was born in Macedon; his father was called—Philip of Macedon, as I take it.

Flu. I think, it is in Macedon, where Alexander is born. I tell you, captain,—If you look in the maps of the 'orld, I warrant, you shall find, in the comparisons between Macedon and Monmouth, that the situations, look you, is both alike. There is a river in Macedon: and there is also, moreover, a river at Monmouth: it is call'd Wye, at Monmouth; but it is out of my prains, what is the name of the other river; but 'tis all one, 'tis so like as my fingers is to my fingers, and there is salmons in both. If you mark Alexander's life well, Harry of Monmouth's life is come after it indifferent well; for there is figures in all things. Alexander (Got knows, and you know) in his rages, and his furies, and his wraths, and his cholers, and his moods, and his displeasures, and his indignations, and also being a little intoxicates in his prains, did, in his ales and his angers, look you, kill his pest friend Clytus.

Gow. Our king is not like him in that; he never kill'd any of his friends.

Flu. It is not well done, mark you now, to take the tales out of my mouth, ere it is made an end and finish'd. I speak but in figures and comparisons of it: As Alexander is kill his friend Clytus, being in his ales and his cups; so also Harry Monmouth, being in his right wits and his goot judgments, is turn away the fat knight with the great pelly-douplet: he was full of jests, and gypes, and knaveries, and mocks; I am forget his name.

Gow. Sir John Falstaff.

Flu. That is he; I tell you, there is goot men born at Monmouth.

Gow. Here comes his majesty.

Alarum. Enter King Henry, Warwick, Gloster, Exeter, &c. Flourish.

K. Henry. I was not angry since I came to France,

Until this instant.—Take a trumpet, herald; Ride thou unto the horsemen on yon hill: If they will fight with us, bid them come down, Or void the field; they do offend our sight: If they'll do neither, we will come to them; And make them skir' away, as swift as stones Enforced from the old Assyrian slings: Besides, we'll cut the throats of those we have; And not a man of them, that we shall take, Shall taste our mercy:—Go, and tell them so.

Enter Montjoy.

Ere. Here comes the herald of the French, my liege.

Glo. His eyes are humbler than they us'd to be.

K. Henry. How now! what means their herald? Know'st thou not,

That I have fin'd these bones of mine for ransom? Com'st thou again for ransom?

Mont. No, great king:

I come to thee for charitable licence, That we may wander o'er the bloody field, To book our dead, and then to bury them; To sort our nobles from our common men; For many of our princes (woe the while!) Lie drown'd and soak'd in mercenary² blood: So do our vulgar drench their peasant limbs In blood of princes; while their wounded steeds Fret fetlock deep in gore, and, with wild rage, Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters, Killing them twice. O, give us leave, great king, To view the field in safety, and dispose Of their dead bodies.

K. Henry. I tell thee truly, herald, I know not, if the day be ours, or no; For yet a many of your horsemen peer, And gallop o'er the field.

Mont. The day is yours.

K. Henry. Praised be God, and not our strength, for it!—

What is this castle call'd, that stands hard by?

Mont. They call it—Agincourt. [court,

K. Henry. Then call we this—the field of Agincourt, fought on the day of Crispin Crispianus.

Flu. Your grandfather of famous memory, an't please your majesty, and your great-uncle Edward the plack prince of Wales, as I have read in the chronicles, fought a most prave pattle here in France.

K. Henry. They did, Fluellen.

Flu. Your majesty says very true: If your majesties is remember'd of it, the Welchmen did goot service in a garden where leeks did grow, wearing leeks in their Monmouth caps; which, your majesty knows, to this hour is an honourable padge of the service: and, I do believe, your majesty takes no scorn to wear the leek upon saint Iavy's day.

K. Henry. I wear it for a memorable honour: For I am Welch, you know, good countryman.

Flu. All the water in Wye cannot wash your majesty's Welsh plood out of your pody, I can tell you that: Got pless and preserve it, as long as it pleases his grace and his majesty too!

K. Henry. Thanks, good my countryman.

Flu. By Cheshu, I am your majesty's countryman, I care not who know it; I will confess it to all the 'orld: I need not be ashamed of your majesty, praised be Got, so long as your majesty is an honest man.

K. Henry. God keep me so!—Our heralds go with him;

Enter Williams.

Bring me just notice of the numbers dead On both our parts.—Call yonder fellow hither. [Exeunt Montjoy and others.

Ere. Soldier, you must come to the king.

K. Henry. Soldier, why wear'st thou that glove in thy cap?

¹ See note ², p. 384. ² Mercenary here means common or hired blood. The gentlemen of the army served at their own charge, in consequence of their tenures.

Will. An't please your majesty, 'tis the gage of one that I should fight withal, if he be alive.

K. Henry. An Englishman?

Will. An't please your majesty, a rascal, that swaggered with me last night: who, if 'a live, and it ever dare to challenge this glove, I have sworn to take him a box o' the ear; or, if I can see my glove in his cap (which, he swore, as he was a soldier, he would wear, if alive) I will strike it out soundly.

K. Henry. What think you, captain Fluellen? is it fit this soldier keep his oath?

Flu. He is a craven and a villain else, an't please your majesty, in my conscience.

K. Henry. It may be, his enemy is a gentleman of great sort¹, quite from the answer of his degree².

Flu. Though he be as goot a gentleman as the tevil is, as Lucifer and Belzebub himself, it is necessary, look your grace, that he keep his vow and his oath: if he be perjur'd, see you now, his reputation is as arrant a villain, and a jack-sauce, as ever his plack shoe trod upon Got's ground and his earth, in my conscience, la.

K. Henry. Then keep thy vow, sirrah, when thou meet'st the fellow.

Will. So I will, my liege, as I live.

K. Henry. Who servest thou under?

Will. Under Captain Gower, my liege.

Flu. Gower is a goot captain; and is goot knowledge and literature in the wars.

K. Henry. Call him hither to me, soldier.

Will. I will, my liege. [Exit.

K. Henry. Here, Fluellen; wear thou this favour for me, and stick it in thy cap: When Alençon and myself were down together, I pluck'd this glove from his helm: if any man challenge this, he is a friend to Alençon, and an enemy to our person; if thou encounter any such, apprehend him, as thou dost love me.

Flu. Your grace does me as great honours, as can be desired in the hearts of his subjs: I would fain see the man, that has but two legs, that shall find himself aggrief'd at this glove, that is all; but I would fain see it once; an please Got of his grace, that I might see it.

K. Henry. Know'st thou Gower?

Flu. He is my dear friend, an please you.

K. Henry. Pray thee, go seek him, and bring him to my tent.

Flu. I will fetch him. [Exit.

K. Henry. My lord of Warwick,—and my brother Gloster,—

Follow Fluellen closely at the heels:

The glove, which I have given him for a favour, May, haply, purchase him a box o' the ear:

It is the soldier's; I, by bargain, should wear it myself. Follow, good cousin Warwick: If that the soldier strike him, (as, I judge By his blunt bearing, he will keep his word)

Some sudden mischief may arise of it;

For I do know Fluellen valiant,

And, touch'd with choler, hot as gunpowder,

And quickly he'll return an injury:

Follow, and see there be no harm between them —

Go you with me, uncle of Exeter. [Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.

Before King Henry's Pavillion.

Enter Gower and Williams.

Will. I warrant, it is to knight you, captain.

Enter Fluellen.

Flu. Got's will and his pleasure, captain, I pe-seech you now, come apace to the king: there is more goot toward you, paradventure, than is in your knowledge to dream of.

Will. Sir, know you this glove?

Flu. Know the glove? I know, the glove is a glove.

Will. I know this; and thus I challenge it.

[Strikes him.

Flu. 'Sblud, an arrant traitor, as any's in the universal 'orld, or in France, or in England.

Gow. How now, sir? you villain!

Will. Do you think I'll be forsworn?

Flu. Stand away, captain Gower; I will give treason his payment into plows³, I warrant you.

Will. I am no traitor.

Flu. That's a lie in thy throat.—I charge you in his majesty's name, apprehend him; he's a friend of the duke Alençon's.

Enter Warwick, and Gloster.

War. How now, how now! what's the matter?

Flu. My lord of Warwick, here is (praised be Got for it) a most contagious treason come to light, look you, as you shall desire in a summer's day. Here is his majesty.

Enter King Henry, and Exeter.

K. Henry. How now! what's the matter?

Flu. My liege, here is a villain and a traitor, that, look your grace, has struck the glove which your majesty is take out of the helmet of Alençon.

Will. My liege, this is my glove; here is the fellow of it: and he, that I give it to in change, promis'd to wear it in his cap; I promis'd to strike him, if he did: I met this man with my glove in his cap, and I have been as good as my word.

Flu. Your majesty hear now, (saving your majesty's manhood) what an arrant, rascally, peggary, lowsy knave it is: I hope, your majesty is pear me testimonies, and witnesses, and avouchments, that this is the glove of Alençon, that your majesty is give me, in your conscience now.

K. Henry. Give me thy⁴ glove, soldier; Look, here is the fellow of it. 'Twas I, indeed, thou promisedst to strike; and thou hast given me most bitter terms.

Flu. An please your majesty, let his neck answer for it, if there is any martial law in the 'orld.

¹ High rank. ² Meaning, a man of such station as is not bound to hazard his person to answer to a challenge from one of the soldier's low degree. ³ The Revisal reads, very plausibly, "in two plows." The quarto reads, I will give treason his due presently. ⁴ It must be, give me my glove; for of the soldier's glove the king had not the fellow.

K. Henry.

K. Henry. How canst thou make me satisfaction?

Will. All offences, my liege, come from the heart: never came any from mine, that might offend your majesty.

K. Henry. It was ourself thou didst abuse.

Will. Your majesty came not like yourself: you appear'd to me but as a common man: witness the night, your garments, your lowliness; and what your highness suffer'd under that shape, I beseech you, take it for your own fault, and not mine: for had you been as I took you for, I made no offence; therefore, I beseech your highness, pardon me.

K. Henry. Here, uncle Exeter, fill this glove with crowns,

And give it to this fellow.—Keep it, fellow; And wear it for an honour in thy cap, Till I do challenge it. Give him the crowns:— And, captain, you must needs be friends with him.

Flu. By this day and this light, the fellow has mettle enough in his pelly:—Hold, there is twelve pence for you, and I pray you to serve God, and keep you out of prawls, and prabbles, and quarrels, and dissensions, and, I warrant you, it is the petter for you.

Will. I will none of your money.

Flu. It is with a goot will; I can tell you, it will serve you to mend your shoes: Come, wherefore should you be so pashful? your shoes is not so goot: 'tis a goot silling, I warrant you, or I will change it.

Enter Herald.

K. Hen. Now, herald; are the dead number'd?

Her. Here is the number of the slaughter'd French.

K. Hen. What prisoners of good sort are taken, uncle? [king;

Ere. Charles duke of Orleans, nephew to the John duke of Bourbon, and lord Bouciqualt; Of other lords, and barons, knights, and 'squires, Full fifteen hundred, besides common men.

K. Hen. This note doth tell me of ten thousand French, [ber, That in the field lie slain: of princes, in this number, And nobles bearing banners, there lie dead One hundred twenty-six: added to these, Of knights, esquires, and gallant gentlemen,

Eight thousand and four hundred; of the which, Five hundred were but yesterday dubb'd knights; So that, in these ten thousand they have lost, There are but sixteen hundred mercenaries¹;

5 The rest are—princes, barons, lords, knights, And gentlemen of blood and quality. [squires,

The names of those their nobles that lie dead,— Charles De-la-bret², high constable of France; Jaques of Chatillon, admiral of France;

10 The master of the cross-bows, lord Rambures; Great master of France, the brave Sir Guischard Dauphin;

John duke of Alençon; Anthony duke of Brabant, The brother to the duke of Burgundy;

15 And Edward duke of Bar: of lusty earls, Grandpré, and Roussi, Fauconberg and Foix, Beaumont, and Marle, Vaudemont, and Lestrale. Here was a royal fellowship of death!—

Where is the number of our English dead? [folk, Ere. Edward the duke of York, the earl of Suffolk, Sir Richard Ketly, Davy Gam esquire: None else of name; and, of all other men, But five and twenty.

K. Hen. O God, thy arm was here!

25 And not to us, but to thy arm alone, Ascribe we all.—When, without stratagem, But in plain shock and even play of battle, Was ever known so great and little loss, On one part and on the other?—Take it, God, For it is only thine!

Ere. 'Tis wonderful!

K. Hen. Come, go we in procession to the village: And be it death proclaimed through our host, To boast of this, or take that praise from God, Which is his only.

Flu. Is it not lawful, an please your majesty, to tell how many is kill'd? [ledgment,

K. Hen. Yes, captain; but with this acknowledgment, That God fought for us.

40 Flu. Yes, my conscience, he did us great goot.

K. Hen. Do we all holy rites; Let there be sung Non nobis and Te Deum. The dead with charity enclos'd in clay, We'll then to Calais; and to England then;

45 Where ne'er from France arriv'd more happy men. [Exeunt.

A C T V.

Enter Chorus.

Chorus. VOUCHSAFE, to those that have not read the story,

That I may prompt them: and for such as have, I humbly pray them to admit the excuse Of time, of numbers, and due course of things, Which cannot in their huge and proper life

Be here presented. Now we bear the king [seen, Towards Calais: grant him there; and there being Heave him away upon your winged thoughts Athwart the sea: behold, the English beach Pales in the flood with men, with wives, and boys, Whose shouts and claps out-voice the deep-mouth'd sea,

¹ See note², p. 534. ² De-la-bret here, as in a former passage, should be Charles D'Albret, would the measure permit of such a change. ³ The king (say the Chronicles) caused the psalm, In exitu Israel de Aegypto (in which, according to the Vulgate, is included the psalm Non nobis, Domine, &c.) to be sung after the victory.

Which,

Which, like a mighty whiffler¹ 'fore the king,
 Seems to prepare his way: so let him land;
 And, solemnly, see him set on to London.
 So swift a pace hath thought, that even now
 You may imagine him upon Black-heath:
 Where that his lords desire him, to have borne
 His bruised helmet, and his bended sword,
 Before him, through the city: he forbids it,
 Being free from vainness and self-glorious pride;
 Giving full trophy, signal, and ostent,
 Quite from himself, to God. But now behold,
 In the quick forge and working-house of thought,
 How London doth pour out her citizens!
 The mayor, and all his brethren in best sort,—
 Like to the senators of antique Rome,
 With the plebeians swarming at their heels,—
 Go forth, and fetch their conquering Cæsar in:
 As, by a lower but by loving likelihood²,
 Were now the general* of our gracious empress
 (As, in good time, he may) from Ireland coming,
 Bringing rebellion broached³ on his sword,
 How many would the peaceful city quit, [cause,
 To welcome him? Much more, and much more
 Did they this Harry. Now in London place him;
 (As yet the lamentation of the French
 Invites the king of England's stay at home:
 The emperor's coming in behalf of France,
 To order peace between them) and omit
 All the occurrences, whatever chanc'd,
 'Till Harry's back-return again to France;
 There must we bring him; and myself have play'd
 The interim, by remembring you—'tis past.
 Then brook abridgment; and your eyes advance
 After your thoughts, straight back again to France.

S C E N E I.

The English Camp in France.

Enter Fluellen, and Gower.

Gow. Nay, that's right; but why wear you your leek to-day? Saint Davy's day is past.

Flu. There is occasions and causes why and wherefore in all things: I will tell you, as my friend, captain Gower; the rascally, scald, peggarily, lowsy, praggings knave, Pistol,—which you and yourself, and all the 'orld, know to be no petter than a fellow, look you now, of no merits—
 he is come to me, and prings me pread and salt yesterday, look you, and pid me eat my leak: it was in a place where I could not preed no contentions with him: but I will be so pold as to wear it in my cap 'till I see him once again, and then I will tell him a little piece of my desires.

Enter Pistol.

Gow. Why, here he comes, swelling like a turkey-cock.

Flu. 'Tis no matter for his swellings, nor his turkey-cocks.—Got pless you, antient Pistol! you scurvy, lowsy knave, Got pless you!

Pist. Ha! art thou Bedlam? dost thou thirst, base Trojan,

To have me fold up Parca's fatal web⁴?

Hence! I am quahnish at the smell of leek.

Flu. I peseech you heartily, scurvy, lowsy knave, at my desires, and my request, and my petitions,
 to eat, look you, this leek; because, look you,
 you do not love it, nor your affections, and your appetites, and your digestions, does not agree with it, I would desire you to eat it.

Pist. Not for Cadwallader, and all his goats.

Flu. There is one goat for you. [strikes him.]
 Will you be so goot, scald knave, as eat it?

Pist. Base Trojan, thou shalt die.

Flu. You say very true, scald knave, when Got's will is: I will desire you to live in the mean time, and eat your victuals; come, there is sauce for it.—[Strikes him.] You call'd me yesterday, mountain squire; but I will make you to-day a squire of low degree.⁵ I pray you fall to; if you can mock a leek, you can eat a leek. [him.]

Gow. Enough, captain; you have⁶ astonish'd

Flu. I say, I will make him eat some part of my leek, or I will peat his pate four days:—Pite,
 I pray you; it is goot for your green wound, and your ploody coxcomb.

Pist. Must I bite?

Flu. Yes, certainly; and out of doubt, and out of questions too, and ambiguities.

Pist. By this leek, I will most horribly revenge;
 I eat, and eat, I swear.

Flu. Eat, I pray you: will you have some more sauce to your leek? there is not enough leek to swear by.

Pist. Quiet thy cudgel; thou dost see, I eat.

Flu. Much goot do you, scald knave, heartily.
 Nay, pray you, throw none away; the skin is goot for your proken coxcomb. When you take occasions to see leeks hereafter, I pray you, mock at them; that is all.

Pist. Good.

Flu. Ay, leeks is goot:—Hold you, there is a groat to heal your pate.

Pist. Me a groat!

Flu. Yes, verily, and in truth, you shall take it; or I have another leek in my pocket, which you shall eat.

Pist. I take thy groat, in earnest of revenge.

Flu. If I owe you any thing, I will pay you in cudgels; you shall be a woodmonger, and buy nothing of me but cudgels. Got be wi' you, and keep you, and heal your pate. [Exit.]

¹ A whiffler is an officer who walks first in processions, or before persons in high stations, on occasions of ceremony. The name is still retained in London, and there is an officer so called that walks before their companies on the 9th of November, or what is vulgarly called Lord Mayor's Day. ² Likelihood for similitude. * The earl of Essex in the reign of queen Elizabeth. ³ i. e. spitted, transfix'd.

⁴ The meaning is, dost thou desire to have me put thee to death? ⁵ That is, according to Dr. Johnson, I will bring thee to the ground. Other commentators think it alludes to an old metrical romance, which was very popular among our countrymen in ancient times, entitled, The Squires of low Degree. ⁶ That is, you have stunned him with the blow.

Pist. All hell shall stir for this.

Gow. Go, go; you are a counterfeit cowardly knave. Will you mock at an ancient tradition,—begun upon an honourable respect, and worn as a memorable trophy of predeceas'd valour,—and dare not avouch in your deeds any of your words? I have seen you gleeking¹ and galling at this gentleman twice or thrice. You thought, because he could not speak English in the native garb, he could not therefore handle an English cudgel: you find it otherwise; and, henceforth, let a Welsh correction teach you a good English condition. Fare ye well.

Pist. Doth fortune play the huswife² with me now?

News have I, that my Nell is dead i' the spital Of malady of France;
And there my rendezvous is quite cut off.
Old I do wax; and from my weary limbs Honour is cudgell'd. Well, bawd will I turn,
And something lean to cut-purse of quick hand.
To England will I steal, and there I'll steal:
And patches will I get unto these cudgell'd scars,
And swear I got them in the Gallia wars. [Exit.]

S C E N E II.

The French Court, at Trois in Champagne.

Enter at one door, King Henry, Exeter, Bedford, Warwick, and other Lords; at another, the French King, Queen Isabel, Princess Katharine, the Duke of Burgundy, and other French.

K. Henry. Peace to this meeting, wherefore we are met!—

Unto our brother France,—and to our sister,—
Health and fair time of day;—joy and good wishes
To our most fair and princely cousin Katharine;—
And (as a branch and member of this royalty,
By whom this great assembly is contriv'd)
We do salute you, duke of Burgundy;—

And, princes French, and peers, health to you all!
Fr. King. Right joyous are we to behold your face,
Most worthy brother England; fairly met:—
So are you, princes English, every one.

2. Isa. So happy be the issue, brother England,
Of this good day, and of this gracious meeting,
As we are now glad to behold your eyes;
Your eyes which hitherto have borne in them
Against the French, that met them in their bent,
The fatal balls of murdering basilisks:

The venom of such looks, we fairly hope,
Have lost their quality; and that this day
Shall change all griefs, and quarrels, into love.

K. Henry. To cry amen to that, thus we appear.

2. Isa. You English princes all, I do salute you.

Bur. My duty to you both, on equal love, Great kings of France and England! That I have labour'd

With all my wits, my pains, and strong endeavours,
To bring your most imperial majesties
Unto this bar³, and royal interview,
Your mightiness on both parts best can witness.

Since then my office hath so far prevail'd,
That, face to face, and royal eye to eye,
You have congregated; let it not disgrace me,
If I demand, before this royal view,
What rub, or what impediment, there is,
Why that the naked, poor, and mangled peace,
Dear nurse of arts, plenties, and joyful births,
Should not, in this best garden of the world,
Our fertile France, put up her lovely visage?
Alas! she hath from France too long been chas'd;
And all her husbandry doth lie in heaps,
Corrupting in its own fertility.

Her vine, the merry chearer of the heart,
Upruned dies: her hedges even-pleach'd,
Like prisoners wildly over-grown with hair,
Put forth disorder'd twigs: her fallow leas
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory,
Doth root upon; while that the coulter rusts,
That should deracinate⁴ such savag'ry:

The even mead that erst brought sweetly forth
The freckled cowslip, burnet, and green clover,
Wanting the scythe, all uncorrected, rank,
Conceives by idleness; and nothing teems,
But hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies, burs,
Losing both beauty and utility.

And as our vineyards, fallows, meads, and hedges,
Defective in their natures, grow to wildness;
Even so our houses, and ourselves, and children,
Have lost, or do not learn, for want of time,
The sciences that should become our country;
But grow, like savages,—as soldiers will,
That nothing do but meditate on blood,—
To swearing, and stern looks, diffus'd⁵ attire,
And every thing that seems unnatural.

Which to reduce into our former favour⁶,
You are assembled: and my speech intreats
That I may know the let, why gentle peace
Should not expel these inconveniencies,
And bless us with her former qualities.

K. Henry. If, duke of Burgundy, you would the peace,

Whose want gives growth to the imperfections
Which you have cited, you must buy that peace
With full accord to all our just demands;
Whose tenors and particular effects
You have, enschedul'd briefly, in your hands.

Bur. The king hath heard them; to the which,
as yet,
There is no answer made.

K. Henry. Well then, the peace,
Which you before so urg'd, lies in his answer.

Fr. King. I have but with a cursory eye
O'er-glanc'd the articles: pleaseth your grace
To appoint some of your council presently
To sit with us once more, with better heed
To re-survey them, we will, suddenly,
Pass, or accept, and peremptory answer.

K. Henry. Brother, we shall.—Go, uncle
Exeter,—

And brother Clarence,—and you, brother Gloster,— Warwick,—and Huntington,—go with the king:

¹ i. e. scoffing, sneering. Gleek was a game at cards. ² i. e. the jilt. Huswife is here used in an ill sense. ³ i. e. to this barrier; to this place of congress. ⁴ To deracinate is to force up by the roots. ⁵ i. e. wild, irregular, extravagant. ⁶ i. e. former appearance.

And take with you free power, to ratify,
Augment, or alter, as your wisdoms best
Shall see advantageable for our dignity,
Any thing in, or out of, our demands;
And we'll consign thereto.—Will you, fair sister,
Go with the princes, or stay here with us?

2. Isa. Our gracious brother, I will go with them;

Haply, a woman's voice may do some good,
When articles, too nicely urg'd, be stood on.

K. Henry. Yet leave our cousin Katharine here with us:

She is our capital demand, compris'd
Within the fore-rank of our articles.

2. Isa. She hath good leave. [Exeunt.
Manent King Henry, Katharine, and a Lady.

K. Henry. Fair Katharine, and most fair!
Will you vouchsafe to teach a soldier terms,
Such as will enter at a lady's ear,
And plead his love-suit to her gentle heart?

Kath. Your majesty shall mock at me; I cannot speak your England.

K. Henry. O fair Katharine, if you will love me soundly with your French heart, I will be glad to hear you confess it brokenly with your English tongue. Do you like me, Kate?

Kath. Pardonnez moy, I cannot tell vat is—likeme.

K. Henry. An angel is like you, Kate; and you are like an angel.

Kath. Que dit-il? que je suis semblable à les anges?

Lady. Ouy, vrayment, (sauf vostre grace) ainsi dit-il.

K. Henry. I said so, dear Katharine; and I must not blush to affirm it.

Kath. O bon Dieu! des langues des hommes sont pleines des tromperies.

K. Henry. What says she, fair one? that the tongues of men are full of deceit?

Lady. Ouy; dat de tongues of de mans is be full of deceits: dat is de princess.

K. Henry. The princess is the better English-woman. I'faith, Kate, my wooing is fit for thy understanding: I am glad, thou canst speak no better English; for, if thou couldst, thou wouldst find me such a plain king, that thou wouldst think, I had sold my farm to buy my crown. I know no ways to mince it in love, but directly to say—I love you: then, if you urge me further than to say—Do you in faith? I wear out my suit. Give me your answer; i'faith, do; and so clap hands, and a bargain: How say you, lady?

Kath. Sauf vostre honneur, me understand well.

K. Henry. Marry, if you would put me to verses, or to dance for your sake, Kate, why you undid me: for the one, I have neither words nor measure; and for the other, I have no strength in measure: yet a reasonable measure in strength. If I could win a lady at leap-frog, or by vaulting into my saddle with my armour on my back, under the correction of bragging be it spoken, I should quickly leap into a wife. Or, if I might buffet for my love, or bound my horse for her favours, I could lay on like a butcher, and sit like a jack-anapes, never off: But, before God, Kate, I cannot look greenly, nor gasp out my eloquence, nor I have no cunning in protestation; only downright oaths, which I never use 'till urg'd, nor never break for urging. If thou can'st love a fellow of this temper, Kate, whose face is not worth sun-burning, that never looks in his glass for love of any thing he sees there, let mine eye be thy cook. I speak to thee plain soldier: If thou can'st love me for this, take me: if not, to say to thee—that I shall die, 'tis true;—but for thy love, by the Lord, no; yet I love thee too. And while thou liv'st, dear Kate, take a fellow of plain and uncoined constancy¹; for he perforce must do thee right, because he hath not the gift to woo in other places: for these fellows of infinite tongue, that can rhyme themselves into ladies' favours,—they do always reason themselves out again. What! a speaker is but a prater; a rhyme is but a ballad. A good leg will fall; a straight back will stoop; a black beard will turn white; a curl'd pate will grow bald; a fair face will wither; a full eye will wax hollow: but a good heart, Kate, is the sun and the moon; or, rather, the sun, and not the moon; for it shines bright, and never changes, but keeps his course truly. If thou would have such a one, take me: And take me, take a soldier; take a soldier, take a king: And what say'st thou then to my love? Speak, my fair, and fairly, I pray thee.

Kath. Is it possible dat I should love the enemy of France?

K. Hen. No; it is not possible, that you should love the enemy of France, Kate: but, in loving me, you should love the friend of France; for I love France so well, that I will not part with a village of it; I will have it all mine: and, Kate, when France is mine, and I am yours, then yours is France, and you are mine.

Kath. I cannot tell vat is dat.

K. Henry. No, Kate? I will tell thee in French; which, I am sure, will hang upon my tongue like a new-married wife about her husband's neck, hardly to be shook off. Quand j'ay la possession de France, & quand vous avez la possession de moi, (let me see, what then? Saint Denis be my speed!)—donc vostre est France, & vous estes mienne. It is as easy for me, Kate, to conquer the kingdom, as to speak so much more French: I shall never move thee in French, unless it be to laugh at me.

Kath. Sauf vostre honneur, le Francois, que vous parlez, est meilleur que l'Anglois lequel je parle.

K. Hen. No, faith, is't not, Kate; but thy speaking of my tongue, and I thine, most truly falsely, must needs be granted to me much at one. But, Kate, dost thou understand thus much English? Can'st thou love me?

Kath. I cannot tell.

K. Henry. Can any of your neighbours tell, Kate? I'll ask them. Come, I know, thou lovest me: and at night when you come into your closet, you'll question this gentlewoman about me; and I know, Kate, you will, to her, dispraise those parts in me, that you love with your heart: but good Kate, mock me mercifully; the rather, gentle princess, because I love thee cruelly. If ever thou be'st mine, Kate, (as I have saving faith within me, tells me—thou shalt) I get thee with scrambling¹, and thou must therefore needs prove a good soldier-breeder: shall not thou and I, between saint Denis and saint George, compound a boy, half French, half English, that shall go to Constantinople², and take the Turk by the beard; shall we not? What say'st thou, my fair flower-de-luce?

¹ i. e. real and true constancy, unrefined and unadorned.

Kath. I do not know dat.

K. Hen. No; 'tis hereafter to know, but now to promise: do but now promise, Kate, you will endeavour for your French part of such a boy; and, for my English moiety, take the word of a king and a bachelor. How answer you, la plus belle Katharine du monde, montres chere & divinée d'esse!

Kath. Your majesté ave fausse French enough to deceive de most sage damoiselle dat is en France.

K. Hen. Now, fie upon my false French! By mine honour, in true English, I love thee, Kate; by which honour I dare not swear, thou lovest me; yet my blood begins to flatter me that thou dost, notwithstanding the poor and untenpering effect of my visage. Now beshrew my father's ambition! he was thinking of civil wars when he got me; therefore was I created with a stubborn outside, with an aspect of iron, that, when I come to woo ladies, I fright them. But, in faith, Kate, the elder I wax, the better I shall appear: my comfort is, that old age, that ill layer-up of beauty, can do no more spoil upon my face; thou hast me, if thou hast me, at the worst; and thou shalt wear me, if thou wear me, better and better; and therefore tell me, most fair Katharine, will you have me? Put off your maiden blushes; avouch the thoughts of your heart with the looks of an empress; take me by the hand, and say—Harry of England, I am thine: which word thou shalt no sooner bless mine ear withal, but I will tell thee aloud—England is thine, Ireland is thine, France is thine, and Henry Plantagenet is thine; who, though I speak it before his face, if he be not fellow with the best king, thou shalt find the best king of good-fellows. Come, your answer in broken music; for thy voice is music, and thy English broken: therefore, queen of all, Katharine, break thy mind to me in broken English. Wilt thou have me?

Kath. Dat is, as it shall please de roy mon pere.

K. Hen. Nay, it will please him well, Kate; it shall please him, Kate.

Kath. Den it shall also content me.

K. Hen. Upon that I kiss your hand, and I call you—my queen.

Kath. Laissez, mon seigneur, laissez, laissez: me

foy, je ne veux point que vous abaissez vostre grandeur, en baisant la main d'une vostre indigne serviteure; excusez moy, je vous supplie, mon tres puissant seigneur.

K. Hen. Then I will kiss your lips, Kate.

Kath. Les dames, & damoiselles pour estre baisées devant leur nopees, il n'est pas le coutume de France.

K. Hen. Madam, my interpreter, what says she?

Lady. Dat is not be de fashion pour de ladies of France,—I cannot tell what is, baiser, en English.

K. Hen. To kiss.

Lady. Your majesty entendre better que moy.

K. Hen. It is not a fashion for the maids in France to kiss before they are married, would she

Lady. Ouy, vrayment. [say?]

K. Hen. O, Kate, nice customs curt'sy to great kings. Dear Kate, you and I cannot be confin'd within the weak list of a country's fashion: we are the makers of manners, Kate; and the liberty, that follows our places, stops the mouth of all find-faults; as I will do yours, for upholding the nice fashion of your country, in denying me a kiss: therefore, patiently, and yielding—[kissing her.] You have witchcraft in your lips, Kate: there is more eloquence in a sugar touch of them, than in the tongues of the French council; and they should sooner persuade Harry of England, than a general petition of monarchs. Here comes your father.

Enter the French King and Queen, with French and English Lords.

Burg. God save your majesty! my royal cousin, teach you our princess English?

K. Hen. I would have her learn, my fair cousin, how perfectly I love her; and that is good English.

Burg. Is she not apt?

K. Hen. Our tongue is rough, coz'; and my condition³ is not smooth; so that, having neither the voice nor the heart of flattery about me, I cannot so conjure up the spirit of love in her, that he will appear in his true likeness.

Burg. Pardon the frankness of my mirth, if I answer you for that. If you would conjure in her, you must make a circle: if conjure up love in her, in his true likeness, he must appear naked, and blind: can you blame her then, being a maid yet rosy'd over with the virgin crimson of modesty, if she deny the appearance of a naked blind boy in her naked seeing self? It were, my lord, a hard condition for a maid to consign to.

K. Hen. Yet they do wink, and yield; as love is blind, and enforces.

Burg. They are then excus'd, my lord, when they see not what they do.

K. Hen. Then, good my lord, teach your cousin to consent to winking.

Burg. I will wink on her to consent, my lord, if you will teach her to know my meaning: for maids, well summer'd and warm kept, are like flies at Bartholomew-tide, blind, though they have their eyes: and then they will endure handling, which before would not abide looking on.

K. Henry. This moral¹ ties me over to time, and a hot summer: and so I shall catch the fly, your cousin, in the latter end, and she must be blind too.

Burg. As love is, my lord, before it loves.

K. Henry. It is so: and you may, some of you, thank love for my blindness; who cannot see many a fair French city, for one fair French maid that stands in my way.

Fr. King. Yes, my lord, you see them perspectively, the cities turn'd into a maid; for they are all girdled within maiden walls, that war hath never enter'd.

K. Henry. Shall Kate be my wife?

Fr. King. So please you.

K. Henry. I am content; so the maiden cities you talk of, may wait on her: so the maid, that stood in the way for my wish, shall shew me the way to my will.

Fr. King. We have consented to all terms of reason.

K. Henry. Is't so, my lords of England?

West. The king hath granted every article: His daughter, first; and then in sequel all, According to their firm proposed natures.

Exe. Only, he hath not yet subscribed this:—Where your majesty demands,—That the king of France, having any occasion to write for matter of grant, shall name your highness in this form, and with this addition in French:—Notre tres cher filz Henry roy d' Angleterre, heretier de France: and thus in Latin,—Præclarissimus filius noster Henricus, rex Angliæ, & hæres Franciæ.

Fr. King. Yet this I have not, brother, so deny'd, But your request shall make me let it pass.

K. Henry. I pray you then, in love and dear alliance,

Let that one article rank with the rest:

And, thereupon, give me your daughter.

Fr. King. Take her, fair son: and from her blood raise up

Issue to me: that the contending kingdoms [pale Of France and England, whose very shores look

With envy of each other's happiness,
May cease their hatred; and this dear conjunction Plant neighbourhood and christian-like accord
In their sweet bosoms, that never war advance
His bleeding sword 'twixt England and fair France.

All. Amen. [witness all,

K. Henry. Now welcome, Kate:—and bear me
That here I kiss her as my sovereign queen.

[Flourish.

10 2. Isa. God, the best maker of all marriages,
Combine your hearts in one, your realms in one!
As man and wife, being two, are one in love,
So be there 'twixt your kingdoms such a spousal,
That never may ill office, or fell jealousy,
15 Which troubles oft the bed of blessed marriage,
Thrust in between the paction of these kingdoms,
To make divorce of their incorporate league;
That English may as French, French Englishmen,
Receive each other!—God speak this Amen!

All. Amen!

K. Henry. Prepare we for our marriage:—on which day,

My lord of Burgundy, we'll take your oath
And all the peers', for surety of our leagues.—
25 Then shall I swear to Kate,—and you to me;—
And may our oaths well kept and prosp'rous be!

Westminster-Abbey.

Dead March. Enter the funeral of King Henry the Fifth, attended on by the Duke of Bedford, Regent of France; the Duke of Gloster, Protector; the Duke of Exeter, and the Earl of Warwick; the Bishop of Winchester, and the Duke of Somerset, &c.

Bed. HUNG be the heavens with black, yield day to night!
Comets, importing change of times and states,

Brandish your crystal tresses in the sky;
And with them scourge the bad revolting stars,
That have consented unto Henry's death!
Henry the fifth, too famous to live long!
5 England ne'er lost a king of so much worth.
Glo. England ne'er had a king, until his time.
Virtue he had, deserving to command:
His brandish'd sword did blind men with his beams;
His arms spread wider than a dragon's wings;
10 His sparkling eyes, replete with wrathful fire,
More dazzled and drove back his enemies,
Than mid-day sun, fierce bent against their faces.

¹ Mr. Theobald observes, that, "the historical transactions contained in this play, take in the compass of above thirty years. I must observe, however, that our author, in the three parts of Henry VI. has not been very precise to the date and disposition of his facts; but shuffled them, backwards and forwards, out of time. For instance; the lord Talbot is kill'd at the end of the fourth act of this play, who in reality did not fall till the 13th of July 1453; and The Second Part of Henry VI. opens with the marriage of the king, which was solemniz'd eight years before Talbot's death, in the year 1445. Again, in the second part, dame Eleanor Cobham is introduced to insult queen Margaret; though her penance and banishment for sorcery happened three years before that princess came over to England. I could point out many other transgressions against history, as far as the order of time is concerned. Indeed, though there are several master-strokes in these three plays, which incontestably betray the workmanship of Shakspeare; yet I am almost doubtful whether they were entirely of his writing. And unless they were wrote by him very early, I should rather imagine them to have been brought to him as a director of the stage; and so have received some finishing beauties at his hand. An accurate observer will easily see, the diction of them is more obsolete, and the numbers more mean and prosaical, than in the generality of his genuine compositions."

What should I say? his deeds exceed all speech:
He ne'er lift up his hand but conquered.

Exe. We mourn in black; Why mourn we not in blood?

Henry is dead, and never shall revive:

Upon a wooden coffin we attend;

And death's dishonourable victory

We with our stately presence glorify,

Like captives bound to a triumphant car.

What? shall we curse the planets of mishap,

That plotted thus our glory's overthrow?

Or shall we think the subtle-witted French

Conjurers and sorcerers, that, afraid of him,

By magic verses have contriv'd his end?

Win. He was a king blest of the King of Kings.

Unto the French the dreadful judgment-day

So dreadful will not be, as was his sight.

The battles of the Lord of Hosts he fought:

The church's prayers made him so prosperous.

Glo. The church! where is it? Had not churchmen pray'd,

His thread of life had not so soon decay'd:

None do you like but an effeminate prince,

Whom, like a school-boy, you may over-awe.

Win. Gloster, whate'er we like, thou art protector;

And lookest to command the prince, and realm.

Thy wife is proud; she holdeth thee in awe,

More than God, or religious church-men, may.

Glo. Namenot religion, for thou lov'st the flesh;

And ne'er throughout the year to church thou go'st,

Except it be to pray against thy foes.

Bed. Cease, cease these jars, and rest your minds
in peace!

Let's to the altar:—Heralds, wait on us:—

Instead of gold, we'll offer up our arms;

Since arms avail not, now that Henry's dead.—

Posterity, await for wretched years,

When at their mothers' moist eyes babes shall suck:

Our isle be made a nourish¹ of salt tears,

And none but women left to wail the dead.—

Henry the fifth! thy ghost I invoke;

Prosper this realm, keep it from civil broils!

Combat with adverse planets in the heavens!

A far more glorious star thy soul will make,

Than Julius Cæsar, or bright——

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My honourable lords, health to you all!

Sad tidings bring I to you out of France,

Of loss, of slaughter, and discomfiture:

Guienne, Champagne, Rheims, Orleans,

Paris, Guisors, Poitiers, are all quite lost.

Bed. What say'st thou, man, before dead Henry's corse?

Speak softly; or the loss of those great towns

Will make him burst his lead, and rise from death.

Glo. Is Paris lost? Is Roan yielded up?

If Henry were recall'd to life again, [ghost.

These news would cause him once more yield the

Exe. How were they lost? what treachery was us'd? [money.

Mess. No treachery; but want of men and

Among the soldiers this is muttered,—

That here you maintain several factions;

And, whilst a field should be dispatch'd and fought,
You are disputing of your generals.

5 One would have ling'ring wars with little cost;

Another would fly swift, but wanteth wings;

A third man thinks, without expence at all,

By guileful fair words peace may be obtain'd.

Awake, awake, English nobility;

10 Let not sloth dim your honours, new-begot:

Cropp'd are the flower-de-luces in your arms;

Of England's coat one half is cut away.

Exe. Were our tears wanting to this funeral,

These tidings would call forth their flowing tides.

15 Bed. Me they concern; regent I am of France:—

Give me my steeled coat, I'll fight for France.—

Away with these disgraceful wailing robes!

Wounds I will lend the French instead of eyes,

To weep their intermissive² miseries.

Enter to them another Messenger.

2 Mess. Lords, view these letters, full of bad mischance.

France is revolted from the English quite;

Except some petty towns of no import:

25 The Dauphin Charles is crowned king in Rheims;

The bastard of Orleans with him is join'd;

Reignier, duke of Anjou, doth take his part;

The duke of Alençon flieth to his side. [Exit.

Exe. The Dauphin crowned king! all fly to 30 O, whither shall we fly from this reproach? [him!

Glo. We will not fly but to our enemies' throats:—

Bedford, if thou be slack, I'll fight it out.

Bed. Gloster, why doubt'st thou of my forwardness?

35 An army have I muster'd in my thoughts,

Wherewith already France is over-run.

Enter a third Messenger.

3 Mess. My gracious lords,—to add to your la-ments,

40 Wherewith you now bedew king Henry's hearse,—

I must inform you of a dismal fight,

Betwixt the stout lord Talbot and the French.

Win. What! wherein Talbot overcame? is't so?

3 Mess. O, no; wherein lord Talbot was o'er-
thrown:

45 The circumstance I'll tell you more at large.

The tenth of August last, this dreadful lord,

Retiring from the siege of Orleans,

Having full scarce³ six thousand in his troop,

50 By three and twenty thousand of the French

Was round encompassed and set upon:

No leisure had he to enrank his men;

He wanted pikes to set before his archers;

Instead whereof, sharp stakes, pluck'd out of hedges,

55 They pitched in the ground confusedly,

To keep the horsemen off from breaking in.

More than three hours the fight continued;

Where valiant Talbot, above human thought,

Enacted wonders with his sword and lance.

60 Hundreds he sent to hell, and none durst stand him;

Here, there, and every where, enrag'd he flew:

The French exclaim'd, The devil was in arms;

¹ Nourish here signifies a nurse. ² i. e. their miseries which have had only a short intermission from Henry the Fifth's death to my coming amongst them. ³ i. e. scarcely.

All the whole army stood agaz'd on him:
His soldiers, spying his undaunted spirit,
A Talbot! a Talbot! cried out amain,
And rush'd into the bowels of the battle.
Here had the conquest fully been seal'd up,
If Sir John Fastolfe had not play'd the coward:
He being in the vaward¹ (plac'd behind,
With purpose to relieve and follow them)
Cowardly fled, not having struck one stroke.
Hence grew the general wreck and massacre;
Enclosed were they with their enemies:
A base Walloon, to win the Dauphin's grace,
Thrust Talbot with a spear into the back;
Whom all France, with her chief assembled strength,
Durst not presume to look once in the face.

Bed. Is Talbot slain? then I will slay myself,
For living idly here, in pomp and ease,
Whilst such a worthy leader, wanting aid,
Unto his dastard foe-men is betray'd.

3 Mess. O no, he lives; but is took prisoner,
And lord Scales with him, and lord Hungerford:
Most of the rest slaughter'd, or took, likewise.

Bed. His ransom there is none but I shall pay:
I'll hale the Dauphin headlong from his throne,
His crown shall be the ransom of my friend;
Four of their lords I'll change for one of ours.—
Farewell, my masters; to my task will I;
Bonfires in France forthwith I am to make,
To keep our great Saint George's feast withal:
Ten thousand soldiers with me I will take,
Whose bloody deeds shall make all Europe quake.

3 Mess. So you had need; for Orleans is besieg'd;
The English army is grown weak and faint:
The earl of Salisbury craveth supply;
And hardly keeps his men from mutiny,
Since they, so few, watch such a multitude.

Exe. Remember, lords, your oaths to Henry sworn;

Either to quell the Dauphin utterly,
Or bring him in obedience to your yoke.

Bed. I do remember it; and here take leave,
To go about my preparation. [Exit.

Glo. I'll to the Tower with all the haste I can,
To view the artillery and munition;
And then I will proclaim young Henry king. [Exit.

Exe. To Eltham will I, where the young king is,
Being ordain'd his special governor;
And for his safety there I'll best advise. [Exit.

Win. Each hath his place and function to attend:
I am left out; for me nothing remains.
But long I will not be Jack-out-of-office;
The king from Eltham I intend to send,
And sit at chiefest stern of public weal. [Exit.

S C E N E II.

Before Orleans in France.

Enter Charles, Alençon, and Reignier, marching with a Drum and Soldiers.

Char. Mars his true moving, even as in the heavens,

So in the earth, to this day is not known:
Late, did he shine upon the English side;
Now we are victors, upon us he smiles.

What towns of any moment, but we have?
5 At pleasure here we lie, near Orleans;
Otherwhiles, the famish'd English, like pale ghosts,
Faintly besiege us one hour in a month.

Alen. They want their porridge, and their fat bull-beeves:

10 Either they must be dieted, like mules,
And have their provender ty'd to their mouths,
Or piteous they will look like drowned mice.

Reig. Let's raise the siege; Why live we idly here?
Talbot is taken, whom we wont to fear:

15 Remaineth none, but mad-brain'd Salisbury;
And he may well in fretting spend his gall,
Nor men, nor money, hath he to make war.

Char. Sound, sound alarum; we will rush on them.

20 Now for the honour of the forlorn French:—
Him I forgive my death, that killeth me,
When he sees me go back one foot, or fly. [Exeunt.
[Here alarum, they are beaten back by the English, with great loss.

25 Re-enter Charles, Alençon, and Reignier.

Char. Who ever saw the like? what men have
I?— [fled,

Dogs! cowards! dastards!—I would ne'er have
But that they left me 'midst my enemies.

30 Reig. Salisbury is a desperate homicide;
He fighteth as one weary of his life.

The other lords, like lions wanting food,
Do rush upon us as their hungry prey.

Alen. Froisard, a countryman of ours, records,
35 England all Olivers and Rowlands² bred,
During the time Edward the third did reign.
More truly now may this be verified;
For none but Sampsons, and Goliasses,
It sendeth forth to skirmish. One to ten!

40 Lean raw-bon'd rascals! who would e'er suppose
They had such courage and audacity?

Char. Let's leave this town; for they are hair-brain'd slaves,

And hunger will enforce them to be more eager:
45 Of old I know them; rather with their teeth

The walls they'll tear down, than forsake the siege.
Reig. I think, by some odd gimmals³ or device,
Their arms are set, like clocks, still to strike on;
Else they could ne'er hold out so, as they do.

50 By my consent, we'll e'en let them alone.

Alen. Be it so.

Enter the Bastard of Orleans.

Bast. Where's the Prince Dauphin? I have news for him.

55 Dau. Bastard of Orleans, thrice welcome to us.
Bast. Methinks, your looks are sad, your chear⁴
appall'd;

Hath the late overthrow wrought this offence?
Be not dismay'd, for succour is at hand:

¹ i. e. the back part of the van or front. ² These were two of the most famous in the list of, Charlemagne's twelve peers; and their exploits are render'd so ridiculously and equally extravagant by the old romancers, that from thence arose that saying amongst our plain and sensible ancestors, of giving one a Rowland for his Oliver, to signify the matching one incredible lye with another; or, as in the modern acceptation of the proverb, to give a person as good a one as he brings. ³ A gimmel is a piece of jointed work, where one piece moves within another, whence it is taken at large for an engine. It is now vulgarly called a gimcrack. ⁴ Cheer is countenance, appearance.

A holy maid hither with me I bring,
Which, by a vision sent to her from heaven,
Ordained is to raise this tedious siege,
And drive the English forth the bounds of France.
The spirit of deep prophecy she hath,
Exceeding the nine sibyls¹ of old Rome;
What's past, and what's to come, she can descry.
Speak, shall I call her in? Believe my² words,
For they are certain and unfallible.

Dau. Go, call her in: But first, to try her skill,
Reignier, stand thou as Dauphin in my place:
Question her proudly, let thy looks be stern;—
By this means shall we sound what skill she hath.

Enter Joan la Pucelle.

Reig. Fair maid, is't thou wilt do these wond'rous feats? [me?]

Pucel. Reignier, is't thou that thinkest to beguile
Where is the Dauphin? come, come from behind;
I know thee well, though never seen before.

Be not amaz'd, there's nothing hid from me:
In private will I talk with thee apart;—

Stand back, you lords, and give us leave awhile.

Reig. She takes upon her bravely at first dash.

Pucel. Dauphin, I am by birth a shepherd's daughter,

My wit untrain'd in any kind of art.

Heaven, and our Lady gracious, hath it pleas'd
To shine on my contemptible estate:

Lo, whilst I waited on my tender lambs,
And to sun's parching heat display'd my cheeks,
God's mother deigned to appear to me;

And, in a vision full of majesty,

Will'd me to leave my base vocation,

And free my country from calamity:

Her aid she promis'd, and assur'd success:

In complete glory she reveal'd herself;

And, whereas I was black and swart before,

With those clear rays which she infus'd on me,

That beauty am I blest with, which you see.

Ask me what question thou canst possible,

And I will answer unpremeditated:

My courage try by combat, if thou dar'st,

And thou shalt find that I exceed my sex.

Resolve on this: Thou shalt be fortunate,

If thou receive me for thy warlike mate.

Dau. Thou hast astonish'd me with thy high terms:

Only this proof I'll of thy valour make,—

In single combat thou shalt buckle with me;

And, if thou vanquishest, thy words are true;

Otherwise, I renounce all confidence.

Pucel. I am prepar'd: here is my keen-edg'd
sword,

Deck'd with fine flower-de-luces on each side;

The which, at Touraine in Saint Katharine's churchyard,

Out of a deal of old iron I chose forth.

Dau. Then come o' God's name, I fear no woman.

Pucel. And, while I live, I'll never fly no man.
[Here they fight, and Joan la Pucelle overcomes.]

Dau. Stay, stay thy hands; thou art an Amazon,
And fightest with the sword of Deborah.

Pucel. Christ's mother helps me, else I were too weak. [help me;]

Dau. Whoe'er helps thee, 'tis thou that must Impatiently I burn with thy desire;

My heart and hands thou hast at once subdu'd.
Excellent Pucelle, if thy name be so,

Let me thy servant, and not sovereign, be;

'Tis the French Dauphin sueth to thee thus.

Pucel. I must not yield to any rites of love,
For my profession's sacred from above:

When I have chased all thy foes from hence,
Then will I think upon a recompence.

Dau. Mean time, look gracious on thy prostrate thrall.

Reig. My lord, methinks, is very long in talk.

Alen. Doubtless, he shrives this woman to her smock;

Else ne'er could he so long protract his speech.

Reig. Shall we disturb him, since he keeps no mean?

Alen. He may mean more than we poor men do know: [tongues.]

These women are shrewd tempters with their

Reig. My lord, where are you? what devise you on?

Shall we give over Orleans, or no?

Pucel. Why, no, I say, distrustful recreants!
Fight 'till the last gasp; I will be your guard.

Dau. What she says, I'll confirm; we'll fight it out.

Pucel. Assign'd I am to be the English scourge.
This night the siege assuredly I'll raise:

Expect St. Martin's summer³, halcyon days,

Since I have enter'd thus into these wars.

Glory is like a circle in the water,

Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself,

'Till, by broad spreading, it disperse to nought.

With Henry's death the English circle ends;

Dispersed are the glories it included.

Now am I like that proud insulting ship,

Which Caesar and his fortune bare at once.

Dau. Was Mahomet inspired with a dove⁴?
Thou with an eagle art inspired then.

Helen, the mother of great Constantine,

Nor yet Saint Philip's daughters⁵, were like thee.

Bright star of Venus, fall'n down on the earth,

How may I reverently worship thee enough?

Alen. Leave off delays, and let us raise the siege.

Reig. Woman, do what thou canst to save our honours;

Drive them from Orleans, and be immortaliz'd.

¹ There were no nine sibyls of Rome! but our author confounds things, and mistakes this for the nine books of Sibylline oracles, brought to one of the Tarquins. ² It should be read, believe her words. ³ That is, expect prosperity after misfortune, like fair weather at Martlemas, after winter has begun. ⁴ Mahomet had a dove, which he used to feed with wheat out of his ear; which dove, when it was hungry, lighted on Mahomet's shoulder, and thrust its bill in to find its breakfast; Mahomet persuading the rude and simple Arabians, that it was the Holy Ghost that gave him advice. ⁵ Meaning, the four daughters of Philip mentioned in the Acts.

Dau. Presently we'll try:—Come, let's away about it:—
No prophet will I trust, if she prove false.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.

Tower-Gates in London.

Enter Gloster, with his Serving-men.

Glo. I am come to survey the Tower this day;
Since Henry's death, I fear, there is conveyance¹.—

Where be these warders, that they wait not here?
Open the gates: it is Gloster that calls.

1 Ward. Who's there, that knocketh so imperiously?

1 Man. It is the noble duke of Gloster.

2 Ward. Whoe'er he be, you may not be let in.

1 Man. Villains, answer you so the lord protect?

1 Ward. The Lord protect him! so we answer him:

We do no otherwise than we are will'd.

Glo. Who will'd you? or whose will stands, but mine?

There's none protector of the realm, but I.—
Break up the gates, I'll be your warrantize:
Shall I be flouted thus by dunghill grooms?

Gloster's Men rush at the Tower-Gates, and Woodvile, the Lieutenant, speaks within.

Wood. What noise is this? what traitors have we here?

Glo. Lieutenant, is it you, whose voice I hear?
Open the gates; here's Gloster, that would enter.

Wood. Have patience, noble duke; I may not open;

The cardinal of Winchester forbids:

From him I have express commandment,
That thou, nor none of thine, shall be let in. [me?]

Glo. Faint-hearted Woodvile, prizest him fore
Arrogant Winchester? that haughty prelate, Whom Henry, our late sovereign, ne'er could brook?

Thou art no friend to God, or to the king:

Open the gates, or I'll shut thee out shortly.

Serv. Open the gates there to the lord protector;
We'll burst them open, if that you come not quickly.

Enter to the Protector, at the Tower-Gates, Winchester and his men in tawny coats².

Win. How now, ambitious Humphry? what means this?

Glo. Piel'd³ priest, dost thou command me to be shut out?

Win. I do, thou most usurping proditor,
And not protector of the king or realm.

Glo. Stand back, thou manifest conspirator;
Thou, that contriv'dst to murder our dead lord;
Thou, that giv'st whores indulgences to sin⁴:

I'll canvass thee in thy broad cardinal's hat⁵,

5 If thou proceed in this thy insolence. [foot:

Win. Nay, stand thou back, I will not budge a

This be Damascus, be thou cursed Cain⁶,

To slay thy brother Abel, if thou wilt.

Glo. I will not slay thee, but I'll drive thee back:

10 Thy scarlet robes, as a child's bearing-cloth

I'll use, to carry thee out of this place. [face.

Win. Do what thou dar'st; I heard thee to thy

Glo. What? am I dar'd, and bearded to my

Draw, men, for all this privileged place; [face?—

15 Blue-coats to tawny-coats. Priest, beware thy beard;

I mean to tug it, and to cuff you soundly:

Under my feet I'll stamp thy cardinal's hat;

In spite of pope, or dignities of church,

20 Here by the cheeks I'll drag thee up and down.

Win. Gloster, thou'lt answer this before the pope.

Glo. Winchester goose⁷! I cry—A rope! a rope!—

[stay?

Now beat them hence, Why do you let them

25 Thee I'll chase hence, thou wolf in sheep's array.—

Out, tawny-coats!—out, scarlet hypocrite!

Here Gloster's Men beat out the Cardinal's; and enter in the hurly-burly, the Mayor of London and his Officers.

Mayor. I'ie, lords! that you, being supreme magistrates,

Thus contumeliously should break the peace!

Glo. Peace, mayor; for thou know'st little of my wrongs:

35 Here's Beaufort, that regards nor God nor king,

Hath here distrain'd the Tower to his use.

Win. Here's Gloster too, a foe to citizens;

One that still motions war, and never peace,

O'er-charging your free purses with large fines;

40 That seeks to overthrow religion,

Because he is protector of the realm;

And would have armour here out of the Tower,
To crown himself king, and suppress the prince.

Glo. I will not answer thee with words, but blows. [Here they skirmish again.

Mayor. Nought rests for me, in this tumultuous strife,

But to make open proclamation:—

Come, officer; as loud as e'er thou canst.

50 Off. All manner of men, assembled here in arms this day, against God's peace and the king's, we charge and command you, in his highness' name to repair to your several dwelling places; and not wear, handle, or use, any sword, weapon,

55 or dagger, henceforward, upon pain of death.

¹ Conveyance means theft. ² A tawny coat was the dress of the officer whose business it was to summon offenders to an ecclesiastical court. These are the proper attendants therefore on the bishop of Winchester. ³ Alluding to his shaven crown. In Weever's Funeral Monuments, p. 154, Robert Baldocke, bishop of London, is called a peeled priest, pilide clerk, seemingly in allusion to his shaven crown alone. So, bald-head was a term of scorn and mockery. ⁴ The public stews were formerly under the district of the bishop of Winchester. ⁵ This means, I believe, I'll tumble thee into thy great hat, and shake thee, as bran and meal are shaken in a sieve. ⁶ Maundrel, in his Travels, says, that about four miles from Damascus is a high hill, reported to be the same on which Cain slew his brother Abel, ⁷ A strumpet, or the consequences of her love, was a Winchester goose.

Glo. Cardinal, I'll be no breaker of the law :
But we shall meet, and break our minds at large.

Win. Gloster, we'll meet; to thy cost, be thou sure :

Thy heart-blood I will have for this day's work.

Mayor. I'll call for clubs, if you will not away :
This cardinal is more haughty than the devil.

Glo. Mayor, farewell : thou dost but what thou may'st.

Win. Abominable Gloster ! guard thy head ;
For I intend to have it, ere long. [Exeunt.]

Mayor. See the coast clear'd, and then we will depart.—

Good God ! that nobles should such stomachs bear !
I myself fight not once in forty year. [Exeunt.]

S C E N E IV.

Orleans in France.

Enter the Master-Gunner of Orleans, and his Boy.

M. Gun. Sirrah, thou know'st how Orleans is besieg'd ;

And how the English have the suburbs won.

Boy. Father, I know; and oft have shot at them,
Howe'er, unfortunate, I miss'd my aim.

M. Gun. But now thou shalt not. Be thou rul'd by me :

Chief master-gunner am I of this town ;
Something I must do to procure me grace.

The prince's 'spials¹ have informed me,
How the English, in the suburbs close intrench'd,

²Went, through a secret grate of iron bars
In yonder tower, to over-peer the city ;

And thence discover, how, with most advantage,
They may vex us, with shot, or with assault.

To intercept this inconvenience,
A piece of ordnance 'gainst it I have plac'd ;

And fully even these three days have I watch'd,
If I could see them : Now, boy, do thou watch ;

For I can stay no longer.
If thou spy'st any, run and bring me word ;

And thou shalt find me at the governor's. [Exit.]

Boy. Father, I warrant you ; take you no care ;
I'll never trouble you, if I may spy them.

*Enter the Lords Salisbury and Talbot, with Sir W.
Glansdale and Sir Tho. Gargrave, on the turrets.*

Sal. Talbot, my life, my joy, again return'd !
How wert thou handled, being prisoner ?

Or by what means gott'st thou to be releas'd ?
Discourse, I pry'thee, on this turret's top.

Tal. The duke of Bedford had a prisoner,
Called—the brave lord Ponton de Santrailles ;

For him was I exchang'd and ransomed.
But with a baser man of arms by far,

Once, in contempt, they would have barter'd me :
Which I, disdaining, scorn'd ; and craved death

Rather than I would be so pill'd³ esteemed.
In fine, redeem'd I was as I desir'd.

But, oh ! the treacherous Fastolfe wounds my heart !

Whom with my bare fists I would execute,
If I now had him brought into my power.

Sal. Yet tell'st thou not, how thou wert entertain'd.

Tal. With scoffs, and scorns, and contumelious taunts.

In open market-place produc'd they me,
To be a public spectacle to all ;

Here, said they, is the terror of the French,
The scare-crow that affrights our children so.

Then broke I from the officers that led me ;
And with my nails digg'd stones out of the ground,

To hurl at the beholders of my shame.
My grisly countenance made others fly ;

None durst come near, for fear of sudden death.
In iron walls they deem'd me not secure ;

So great fear of my name 'mongst them was spread,
That they suppos'd, I could rend bars of steel,

And spurn in pieces posts of adamant :
Wherefore a guard of chosen shot I had,

That walk'd about me every minute while ;
And if I did but stir out of my bed,

Ready they were to shoot me to the heart.
Enter the Boy, with a linstock.

Sal. I grieve to hear what torments you endur'd ;

But we will be reveng'd sufficiently.
Now it is supper-time in Orleans :

Here, through this grate, I can count every one,
And view the Frenchmen how they fortify ;

Let us look in, the sight will much delight thee.—
Sir Thomas Gargrave, and Sir William Glansdale,

Let me have your express opinions,
Where is best place to make our battery next.

Gar. I think, at the north gate : for there stand
lords.

Glan. And I here, at the bulwark of the bridge.
Tal. For aught I see, this city must be famish'd,

Or with light skirmishes enfeebled.
[Shot from the town. Salisbury and Sir Tho.

Gargrave fall down.
Sal. O Lord, have mercy on us, wretched sinners !

Gar. O Lord, have mercy on me, woeful man !
Tal. What chance is this, that suddenly hath cross'd us ?—

Speak, Salisbury ; at least, if thou canst speak ;
How far'st thou, mirror of all martial men ?

One of thy eyes, and thy cheek's side struck off !—
Accursed tower ! accursed fatal hand,

That hath contriv'd this woeful tragedy !
In thirteen battles Salisbury o'ercame ;

Henry the fifth he first train'd to the wars :
Whilst any trump did sound, or drum struck up,

His sword did ne'er leave striking in the field.—
Yet liv'st thou, Salisbury ? though thy speech doth fail,

One eye thou hast to look to heaven for grace :
The sun with one eye vieweth all the world.—

Heaven, be thou gracious to none alive,
If Salisbury wants mercy at thy hands !—

Bear hence his body, I will help to bury it.—
Sir Thomas Gargrave, hast thou any life ?

Speak unto Talbot ; nay, look up to him.
Salisbury, cheer thy spirit with this comfort ;

Thou shalt not die, whiles—
He beckons with his hand, and smiles on me ;

¹ Espials are spies. ² Wont, i. e. were accustomed. ³ So pill'd, means so pillaged, so stripp'd of honours.

As who should say, *When I am dead and gone,
Remember to avenge me on the French.*—

Plantagenet, I will; and, Nero-like,
Play on the lute, beholding the towns burn:
Wretched shall France be only in my name.

[Here an alarum, and it thunders and lightens.
What stir is this? What tumult's in the heavens?
Whence cometh this alarum and this noise?

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, my lord, the French have gather'd head:

The Dauphin, with one Joan la Pucelle join'd,—
A holy prophetess, new risen up,—
Is come with a great power to raise the siege.

[Here Salisbury lifteth himself up, and groans.

Tal. Hear, hear, how dying Salisbury doth groan!

It irks his heart, he cannot be reveng'd.—

Frenchmen, I'll be a Salisbury to you:—

Pucelle or puzzel¹, dolphin or dogfish,
Your hearts I'll stamp out with my horse's heels,
And make a quagmire of your mingled brains.—

Convey me Salisbury into his tent,
And then we'll try what dastard Frenchmen dare.

[Alarum. Exeunt, bearing out the bodies.

SCENE V.

Here an alarum again; and Talbot pursueth the Dauphin, and driveth him: then enter Joan la Pucelle, driving Englishmen before her. Then enter Talbot.

Tal. Where is my strength, my valour, and my force?

Our English troops retire, I cannot stay them;
A woman, clad in armour, chaseth them.

Enter La Pucelle.

Here, here she comes:—I'll have a bout with thee;
Devil, or devil's dam, I'll conjure thee:

Blood will I draw on thee², thou art a witch,
And straightway give thy soul to him thou serv'st.

Pucel. Come, come, 'tis only I that must disgrace thee. [They fight.

Tal. Heavens, can you suffer hell so to prevail?
My breast I'll burst with straining of my courage,
And from my shoulders crack my arms asunder,
But I will chastise this high-minded strumpet.

Pucel. Talbot, farewell; thy hour is not yet
I must go victual Orleans forthwith. [come:

[A short alarum. Then enters the town with soldiers.

O'ertake me if thou canst; I scorn thy strength.

Go, go, cheer up thy hunger-starved men;

Help Salisbury to make his testament:

This day is ours, as many more shall be.

[Exit Pucelle.

Tal. My thoughts are whirled like a potter's wheel;

I know not where I am, nor what I do:

A witch, by fear, not force, like Hannibal,

5 Drives back our troops, and conquers as she lists:

So bees with smoke, and doves with noise, murther,

Are from their hives, and houses, driven away.

They call'd us, for our fierceness, English dogs;

Now, like their whelps, we crying run away.

[A short alarum.

Hark, countrymen! either renew the fight,

Or tear the lions out of England's coat;

Renounce your soil, give sheep in lions' stead:

Sheep run not half so timorous from the wolf,

15 Or horse, or oxen, from the leopard,

As you fly from your oft-subdued slaves.—

[Alarum. Here another skirmish.

It will not be:—Retire into your trenches:

You all consented unto Salisbury's death,

20 For none would strike a stroke in his revenge.—

Pucelle is enter'd into Orleans,

In spite of us, or aught that we could do.

O, would I were to die with Salisbury!

The shame hereof will make me hide my head.

[Exit Talbot.

[Alarum, retreat, flourish.

SCENE VI.

Enter on the walls, Pucelle, Dauphin, Reignier, Alençon, and Soldiers.

30 Pucelle. Advance our waving colours on the walls;

Rescu'd is Orleans from the English wolves:—

Thus Joan la Pucelle hath perform'd her word.

Dau. Divinest creature, bright Astræa's daughter,

How shall I honour thee for this success?

35 Thy promises are like Adonis' gardens,

That one day bloom'd, and fruitful were the next.

France, triumph in thy glorious prophetess!—

Recover'd is the town of Orleans:

More blessed hap did ne'er befall our state.

40 Reig. Why ring not out the bells throughout the town?

Dauphin, command the citizens make bonfires,

And feast and banquet in the open streets,

To celebrate the joy that God hath given us.

45 Alen. All France will be replete with mirth and
joy,

When they shall hear how we have play'd them.

Dau. 'Tis Joan, not we, by whom the day is won;

For which, I will divide my crown with her:

50 And all the priests and friars in my realm

Shall, in procession, sing her endless praise.

A statelier pyramid to her I'll rear,

Than Rhodopè's³, or Memphis', ever was;

In memory of her, when she is dead,

¹ Mr. Tollet says, Pussel means a dirty wench or a drab, from puzza, i. e. malus fœtor, says Minshew. In a translation from Stephens's Apology for Herodotus, in 1607, p. 98, we read,—“Some filthy queans, especially our puzzles of Paris, use this other theft.” ² The superstition of those times taught, that he that could draw the witch's blood, was free from her power. ³ Rhodopè was a famous strumpet, who acquired great riches by her trade. The least but most finished of the Egyptian pyramids was built by her. She is said afterwards to have married Psammetichus, king of Egypt.

Her ashes, in an urn more precious
Than the rich-jewel'd coffer of Darius¹,
Transported shall be at high festivals
Before the kings and queens of France.

No longer on Saint Denis will we cry,
But Joan la Pucelle shall be France's saint.
Come in; and let us banquet royally,
After this golden day of victory. [Flourish. Exeunt.]

A C T II.

SCENE I.

Before Orleans.

Enter a French Serjeant, with two Centinels.

Serj. SIRS, take your places, and be vigilant:
If any noise, or soldier, you perceive,
Near to the walls, by some apparent sign,
Let us have knowledge at the court of guard.

Cent. Serjeant, you shall. [Exit Serjeant.] Thus are poor servitors

(When others sleep upon their quiet beds)
Constrain'd to watch in darkness, rain, and cold.

Enter Talbot, Bedford, and Burgundy, with scaling ladders; their drums beating a dead march.

Tal. Lord regent—and redoubted Burgundy,—
By whose approach, the regions of Artois,
Walloon, and Picardy, are friends to us,—
'This happy night the Frenchmen are secure,
Having all day carous'd and banqueted:
Embrace we then this opportunity;
As fitting best to quittance their deceit,
Contriv'd by art, and baleful sorcery.

Bed. Coward of France!--how much he wrongs his fame,

Despairing of his own arm's fortitude,
To join with witches, and the help of hell.

Bur. Traitors have never other company.—
But what's that Pucelle, whom they term so pure?

Tal. A maid, they say.

Bed. A maid! and be so martial!

Bur. Pray God, she prove not masculine ere long;
If underneath the standard of the French,
She carry armour as she hath begun.

Tal. Well, let them practise and converse with spirits:

God is our fortress; in whose conquering name,
Let us resolve to scale their flinty bulwarks.

Bed. Ascend, brave Talbot; we will follow thee.

Tal. Not all together; better far, I guess,
That we do make our entrance several ways;
That, if it chance the one of us do fail,
The other yet may rise against their force.

Bed. Agreed; I'll to yon corner.

Bur. And I to this.

Tal. And here will Talbot mount, or make his
Now, Salisbury! for thee, and for the right

Of English Henry, shall this night appear
How much in duty I am bound to both.

15 The English, scaling the walls, cry, St. George!
A Talbot!

Cent. [Within.] Arm, arm! the enemy doth make assault!

The French leap over the walls in their shirts. Enter several ways, Bastard, Alençon, Reignier, half ready, and half unready.

Alen. How now, my lords? what all unready² so?

Bast. Unready? ay, and glad we 'scap'd so well.

20 Reig. 'Twas time, I trow, to wake, and leave
Hearing alarums at our chamber doors. [our beds,

Alen. Of all exploits, since first I follow'd arms,
Ne'er heard I of a warlike enterprize

More venturous, or desperate, than this.

Bast. I think, this Talbot is a fiend of hell.

30 Reig. If not of hell, the heavens, sure, favour him.

Alen. Here cometh Charles; I marvel how he sped.

Enter Charles, and Pucelle.

Bast. Tut! holy Joan was his defensive guard.

35 Char. Is this thy cunning, thou deceitful dame?
Didst thou at first, to flatter us withal,

Make us partakers of a little gain,

That now our loss might be ten times so much?

40 Pucel. Wherefore is Charles impatient with his friend?

At all times will you have my power alike?

Sleeping, or waking, must I still prevail,

Or will you blame and lay the fault on me?—

Improvident soldiers! had your watch been good,

45 This sudden mischief never could have fall'n.

Char. Duke of Alençon, this was your default;

That, being captain of the watch to-night,

Did look no better to that weighty charge.

50 Alen. Had all your quarters been as safely kept,
As that whereof I had the government,

We had not been thus shamefully surpriz'd.

Bast. Mine was secure.

Reign. And so was mine, my lord.

55 Char. And, for myself, most part of all this night,
Within her quarter, and mine own precinct,

I was employ'd in passing to and fro,

About relieving of the centinels:

Then how, or which way, should they first break in?

¹ When Alexander the Great took the city of Gaza, the metropolis of Syria, amidst the spoils and wealth of Darius treasured up there, he found an exceeding rich and beautiful little chest or casket, and asked those about him what they thought fittest to be laid up in it. When they had severally delivered their opinions, he told them, he esteemed nothing so worthy to be preserved in it as Homer's Iliad. ² Unready was the current word in those times for undress'd.

Pucel. Question, my lords, no further of the case, How, or which way: 'tis sure they found some part

But weakly guarded, where the breach was made.
And now there rests no other shift but this,—
To gather our soldiers, scatter'd and dispers'd,
And lay new platforms to endamage them.

Alarum. Enter a Soldier crying, A Talbot! A
Talbot! they fly, leaving their clothes behind.

Sol. I'll be so bold to take what they have left.
The cry of Talbot serves me for a sword;
For I have loaden me with many spoils,
Using no other weapon but his name. [Exit.

S C E N E II.

The same.

Enter Talbot, Bedford, Burgundy, &c.

Bed. The day begins to break, and night is fled,
Whose pitchy mantle over-veil'd the earth.
Here sound retreat, and cease our hot pursuit.

[Retreat.

Tal. Bring forth the body of old Salisbury;
And here advance it in the market-place,
The middle centre of this cursed town.—
Now have I pay'd my vow unto his soul;—
For every drop of blood was drawn from him,
There hath at least five Frenchmen dy'd to-night,
And, that hereafter ages may behold
What ruin happen'd in revenge of him,
Within their chiefest temple I'll erect
A tomb, wherein his corpse shall be interr'd:
Upon the which, that every one may read,
Shall be engrav'd the sack of Orleans;
The treacherous manner of his mournful death,
And what a terror he had been to France.
But, lords; in all our bloody massacre,
I muse, we met not with the Dauphin's grace;
His new-come champion, virtuous Joan of Arc;
Nor any of his false confederates. [began,

Bed. 'Tis thought, lord Talbot, when the fight
Rous'd on the sudden from their drowsy beds,
They did, amongst the troops of armed men,
Leap o'er the walls for refuge in the field.

Bur. Myself (as far as I could well discern,
For smoke, and dusky vapours of the night)
Am sure, I scar'd the Dauphin, and his trull;
When arm in arm they both came swiftly running,
Like to a pair of loving turtle-doves,
That could not live asunder day or night.
After that things are set in order here,
We'll follow them with all the power we have.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. All hail, my lords! Which of this princely
Call ye the warlike Talbot, for his acts [train
So much applauded through the realm of France?

Tal. Here is the Talbot; Who would speak with him?

Mess. The virtuous lady, countess of Auvergne,
With modesty admiring thy renown,
By me entreats, great lord, thou wouldst vouchsafe
To visit her poor castle where she lies;
That she may boast, she hath beheld the man

Whose glory fills the world with loud report.

Bur. Is it even so? Nay, then, I see, our wars
Will turn into a peaceful comic sport,
When ladies crave to be encounter'd with.—

5 You may not, my lord, despise her gentle suit.

Tal. Ne'er trust me then; for, when a world of men

Could not prevail with all their oratory,
Yet hath a woman's kindness over-rul'd:
10 And therefore tell her, I return great thanks;
And in submission will attend on her.—
Will not your honours bear me company?

Bed. No, truly; that is more than manners will:
And I have heard it said,—Unbidden guests
15 Are often welcomest when they are gone.

Tal. Well then, alone, since there's no remedy,
I mean to prove this lady's courtesy.

Come hither, captain. [Whispers]—You perceive my mind.

20 Capt. I do, my lord; and mean accordingly.
[Exit.

S C E N E III.

The Countess of Auvergne's Castle.

Enter the Countess, and her Porter.

Count. Porter, remember what I gave in charge;
And, when you have done so, bring the keys to me.

Port. Madam, I will. [Exit.

Count. The plot is laid: if all things fall out right,
30 I shall as famous be by this exploit,
As Scythian Tomyris by Cyrus' death.

Great is the rumour of this dreadful knight,
And his achievements of no less account:
Fain would mine eyes be witness with mine ears,
35 To give their censure of these rare reports.

Enter Messenger, and Talbot.

Mess. Madam, according as your ladyship desir'd,
By message crav'd, so is lord Talbot come.

Count. And he is welcome. What! is this the man?

Mess. Madam, it is.

Count. [as musing] Is this the scourge of France?
Is this the Talbot, so much fear'd abroad,
That with his name the mothers still their babes?
I see, report is fabulous and false:

45 I thought, I should have seen some Hercules,
A second Hector, for his grim aspect,
And large proportion of his strong-knit limbs.
Alas! this is a child, a silly dwarf:

It cannot be, this weak and wrizled shrimp
50 Should strike such terror to his enemies.

Tal. Madam, I have been bold to trouble you:
But, since your ladyship is not at leisure,
I'll sort some other time to visit you.

Count. What means he now?—Go ask him, whither he goes?

Mess. Stay, my lord Talbot; for my lady craves
To know the cause of your abrupt departure.

Tal. Marry, for that she's in a wrong belief,
I go to certify her, Talbot's here.

Re-enter Porter with keys.

Count. If thou be he, then art thou prisoner.

Tal. Prisoner! to whom?

* This alludes to a popular tradition, that the French women, to affray their children, would tell them, that the TALBOT cometh. See also the end of Scene iii. Act II.

Count. To me, blood-thirsty lord;
And for that cause I train'd thee to my house.
Long time thy shadow hath been thrall to me,
For in my gallery thy picture hangs:
But now the substance shall endure the like:
And I will chain these legs and arms of thine,
That hast by tyranny, these many years,
Wasted our country, slain our citizens,
And sent our sons and husbands captivate.

Tal. Ha, ha, ha! [turn to moan.] 10

Count. Laughst thou, wretch? thy mirth shall

Tal. I laugh to see your ladyship so fond¹,
To think that you have ought but Talbot's shadow,
Whereon to practise your severity.

Count. Why, art not thou the man?

Tal. I am, indeed.

Count. Then have I substance too.

Tal. No, no, I am but shadow of myself:
You are deceiv'd, my substance is not here;
For what you see is but the smallest part
And least proportion of humanity:
I tell you, madam, were the whole frame here;
It is of such a spacious lofty pitch,
Your roof were not sufficient to contain it.

Count. This is a riddling² merchant for then once; 25
He will be here, and yet he is not here:
How can these contrarieties agree?

Tal. That will I shew you presently.

Wind his horn; drums strike up: a peal of ordnance.

Enter Soldiers.

How say you, madam? are you now persuaded,
That Talbot is but shadow of himself?
These are his substance, sinews, arms, and strength,
With which he yoketh your rebellious necks;
Razeth your cities, and subverts your towns,
And in a moment makes them desolate.

Count. Victorious Talbot! pardon my abuse:
I find thou art no less than fame hath bruited,
And more than may be gather'd by thy shape.
Let my presumption not provoke thy wrath;
For I am sorry, that with reverence
I did not entertain thee as thou art.

Tal. Be not dismay'd, fair lady; nor misconstrue
The mind of Talbot, as you did mistake
The outward composition of his body.
What you have done, hath not offended me:
Nor other satisfaction do I crave,
But only (with your patience) that we may Taste of your wine, and see what cates you have;
For soldiers' stomachs always serve them well.

Count. With all my heart; and think me honoured
To feast so great a warrior in my house. [Exeunt.]

S C E N E IV.

London. The Temple Garden.

Enter the Earls of Somerset, Suffolk, and Warwick; 35
Richard Plantagenet, Vernon, and another Lawyer.

Plant. Great lords and gentlemen, what means this silence?

Dare no man answer in a case of truth?

Suf. Within the Temple-hall we were too loud;
The garden here is more convenient. [truth;

Plant. Then say at once, if I maintain'd the 5 Or, else, was wrangling Somerset in the error?

Suf. 'Faith, I have been a truant in the law;
I never yet could frame my will to it;
And, therefore, frame the law unto my will.

Som. Judge you, my lord of Warwick, then 10 between us. [er pitch,

War. Between two hawks, which flies the high-
Between two dogs, which hath the deeper mouth,
Between two blades, which bears the better temper,
Between two horses, which doth bear him best,
15 Between two girls, which hath the merriest eye,
I have, perhaps, some shallow spirit of judgment:
But in these nice sharp quilllets of the law,
Good faith, I am no wiser than a daw.

Plant. Tut, tut, here is a mannerly forbearance;
20 The truth appears so naked on my side,
That any purblind eye may find it out.

Som. And on my side it is so well apparell'd,
So clear, so shining, and so evident,
That it will glimmer through a blind man's eye.

Plant. Since you are tongue-ty'd, and so loth
25 to speak,

In dumb significants proclaim your thoughts:

Let him, that is a true-born gentleman,
And stands upon the honour of his birth,

30 If he suppose that I have pleaded truth,
From off this briar pluck a white rose with me³.

Som. Let him that is no coward, nor no flatterer,
But dare maintain the party of the truth,
Pluck a red rose from off this thorn with me.

35 War. I love no colours⁴; and, without all colour
Of base insinuating flattery,

I pluck this white rose, with Plantagenet.

Suf. I pluck this red rose, with young Somerset;
And say withal, I think he held the right.

40 Ver. Stay, lords, and gentlemen; and pluck
no more,

'Till you conclude—that he, upon whose side

The fewest roses are cropt from the tree,

Shall yield the other in the right opinion.

45 Som. Good master Vernon, it is well objected⁵;
If I have fewest, I subscribe in silence.

Plant. And I.

Ver. Then for the truth and plainness of the case,
I pluck this pale and maiden blossom here,

50 Giving my verdict on the white rose side.

Som. Prick not your finger as you pluck it off;
Lest, bleeding, you do paint the white rose red,
And fall on my side so against your will.

Ver. If I, my lord, for my opinion bleed,

55 Opinion shall be surgeon to my hurt,
And keep me on the side where still I am.

Som. Well, well, come on: Who else?

Law. Unless my study and my books be false,

¹ i. e. so foolish. ² The term merchant, which was, and now is, frequently applied to the lowest sort of dealers, seems anciently to have been used on familiar occasions in contradistinction to gentleman; signifying, that the person shewed by his behaviour he was a low fellow. The word chap, i. e. chapman, a word of the same import with merchant, in its less respectable sense, is still in common use, particularly in Staffordshire, and the adjoining counties, as a common denomination for any person of whom they mean to speak with freedom or disrespect. ³ The rose (as the fables say) was the symbol of silence, and consecrated by Cupid to Harpocrates, to conceal the lewd pranks of his mother. ⁴ Colours is here used ambiguously for tints and deceits. ⁵ i. e. it is justly proposed.

The argument you held, was wrong in you;

[To Somerset.

In sign whereof, I pluck a white rose too.

Plant. Now, Somerset, where is your argument?

Som. Here, in my scabbard; meditating, that Shall dye your white rose to a bloody red. [roses;

Plant. Meantime your cheeks do counterfeit our
For pale they look with fear, as witnessing
The truth on our side.

Som. No, Plantagenet,

'Tis not for fear; but anger—that thy cheeks
Blush for pure shame, to counterfeit our roses;
And yet thy tongue will not confess thy error.

Plant. Hath not thy rose a canker, Somerset?

Som. Hath not thy rose a thorn, Plantagenet?

Plant. Ay, sharp and piercing, to maintain his truth;

Whiles thy consuming canker eats his falsehood.

Som. Well, I'll find friends to wear my bleeding roses,

That shall maintain what I have said is true,
Where false Plantagenet dare not be seen.

Plant. Now, by this maiden blossom in my hand,
I scorn thee and thy fashion¹, peevish boy.

Suf. Turn not thy scorns this way, Plantagenet.

Plant. Proud Poole, I will; and scorn both him and thee.

Suf. I'll turn my part thereof into thy throat.

Som. Away, away, good William De-la-Poole!

We grace the yeoman, by conversing with him.

War. Now, by God's will, thou wrong'st him,
Somerset;

His grandfather was Lionel duke of Clarence,
Third son to the third Edward king of England;
Spring crestless yeomen² from so deep a root?

Plant. He bears him on the place's privilege³,
Or durst not, for his craven heart, say thus.

Som. By him that made me, I'll maintain my
On any plot of ground in Christendom: [words
Was not thy father, Richard, earl of Cambridge,
For treason executed in our late king's days?
And, by his treason, stand'st not thou attainted,
Corrupted, and exempt⁴ from ancient gentry?
His trespass yet lives guilty in thy blood;
And, 'till thou be restor'd, thou art a yeoman.

Plant. My father was attached, not attainted;
Condemn'd to die for treason, but no traitor;
And that I'll prove on better men than Somerset,
Were growing time once ripen'd to my will.
For your partaker Poole, and you yourself,
I'll note you in my book of memory,
To scourge you for this apprehension⁵:
Look to it well; and say you are well warn'd.

Som. Ay, thou shalt find us ready for thee still:
And know us, by these colours, for thy foes;

For these my friends, in spite of thee, shall wear.

Plant. And, by my soul, this pale and angry rose,
As cognisance⁶ of my blood-drinking hate,
Will I for ever, and my faction, wear;

Until it wither with me to my grave,
Or flourish to the height of my degree. [bition!

Suf. Go forward, and be choak'd with thy am-
And so farewell, until I meet thee next. [Exit.

Som. Have with thee, Poole.—Farewell, ambitious Richard. [Exit.

Plant. How I am brav'd, and must perforce endure it! [house,

War. This blot, that they object against your
Shall be wip'd out in the next parliament,

Call'd for the truce of Winchester and Gloster:

And, if thou be not then created York,

I will not live to be accounted Warwick.

Mean time, in signal of my love to thee,

Against proud Somerset, and William Poole,

Will I upon thy party wear this rose:

And here I prophesy,—This brawl to-day

Grown to this faction, in the Temple-garden,

Shall send, between the red rose and the white,

A thousand souls to death and deadly night.

Plant. Good master Vernon, I am bound to you,
That you on my behalf would pluck a flower.

Ver. In your behalf still will I wear the same.

Law. And so will I.

Plant. Thanks, gentle sir.

Come, let us four to dinner: I dare say,

This quarrel will drink blood another day. [Exit.

SCENE V.

A Room in the Tower.

Enter Mortimer⁷, brought in a chair, and Jailors.

Mor. Kind keepers of my weak decaying age,
Let dying Mortimer here rest himself.—

Even like a man new haled from the rack,

So fare my limbs with long imprisonment:

And these grey locks, the⁸ pursuivants of death,

Nestor-like aged, in an age of care,

Argue the end of Edmund Mortimer.

These eyes—like lamps whose wasting oil is spent—

Wax dim, as drawing to their exigent⁹:

Weak shoulders, over-borne with burth¹⁰ning grief;

And pithless arms, like to a wither'd vine

That droops his sapless branches to the ground.—

Yet are these feet—whose strengthless stay is Unable to support this lump of clay,— [numb,

Swift-winged with desire to get a grave,

As witting I no other comfort have.—

¹ By fashion is meant the badge of the red rose, which Somerset says he and his friends should be distinguish'd by. ² i. e. those who have no right to arms. ³ The Temple, being a religious house, was an asylum, a place of exemption, from violence, revenge, and bloodshed. ⁴ Exempt for excluded. ⁵ i. e. opinion. ⁶ A badge is called a cognisance à cognoscendo, because by it such persons as do wear it upon their sleeves, their shoulders, or in their hats, are manifestly known whose servants they are. ⁷ Mr. Edwards observes, that Shakspeare has varied from the truth of history, to introduce this scene between Mortimer and Richard Plantagenet. Edmund Mortimer served under Henry V. in 1422, and died unconfined in Ireland in 1424. Holinshed says, that Mortimer was one of the mourners at the funeral of Henry V. Mr. Steevens adds, "that his uncle, Sir John Mortimer, was indeed prisoner in the Tower, and was executed not long before the earl of March's death, being charged with an attempt to make his escape in order to stir up an insurrection in Wales." ⁸ i. e. the heralds that, forerunning death, proclaim its approach. ⁹ i. e. end.

But tell me, keeper, will my nephew come?

Keep. Richard Plantagenet, my lord, will come:
We sent unto the Temple, to his chamber;
And answer was return'd, that he will come.

Mor. Enough; my soul then shall be satisfy'd.—
Poor gentleman! his wrong doth equal mine.
Since Henry Monmouth first began to reign,
(Before whose glory I was great in arms,)—
'This loathsome sequestration have I had;
And even since then hath Richard been obscur'd,
Depriv'd of honour and inheritance;
But now, the arbitrator of despairs,
Just death, kind umpire¹ of men's miseries,
With sweet enlargement doth dismiss me hence:
I would, his troubles likewise were expir'd,
That so he might recover what was lost.

Enter Richard Plantagenet.

Keep. My lord, your loving nephew now is come, [come?

Mor. Richard Plantagenet, my friend? is he?

Plant. Ay, noble uncle, thus ignobly us'd,
Your nephew, late-despised Richard, comes.

Mor. Direct mine arms, I may embrace his neck,
And in his bosom spend my latter gasp:

Oh, tell me, when my lips do touch his cheeks,
That I may kindly give one fainting kiss.—

And now declare, sweet stem from York's great stock,

Why didst thou say—of late thou wert despis'd?

Plant. First, lean thine aged back against mine
And, in that ease, I'll tell thee my disease². [arm;

This day, in argument upon a case,
Some words there grew 'twixt Somerset and me:

Among which terms, he us'd his lavish tongue,
And did upbraid me with my father's death;

Which obloquy set bars before my tongue,
Else with the like I had requited him;

Therefore, good uncle—for my father's sake,
In honour of a true Plantagenet,

And for alliance' sake,—declare the cause
My father, earl of Cambridge, lost his head. [me,

Mor. That cause, fair nephew, that imprison'd
And hath detain'd me, all my flow'ring youth,

Within a loathsome dungeon, there to pine,
Was curs'd instrument of his decease. [was:

Plant. Discover more at large what cause that
For I am ignorant, and cannot guess.

Mor. I will; if that my fading breath permit,
And death approach not ere my tale be done.

Henry the fourth, grandfather to this king,
Depos'd his nephew Richard; Edward's son,

The first-begotten, and the lawful heir
Of Edward king, the third of that descent:

During whose reign, the Percies of the north,
Finding his usurpation most unjust,

Endeavour'd my advancement to the throne:
The reason mov'd these warlike lords to this,

Was—for that (young king Richard thus remov'd, Leaving no heir begotten of his body)

I was the next by birth and parentage;

For by my mother I derived am
From Lionel duke of Clarence, the third son
To king Edward the Third; whereas he
From John of Gaunt doth bring his pedigree,
Being but the fourth of that heroic line.

But mark; as, in this haughty³ great attempt,
They laboured to plant the rightful heir,
I lost my liberty, and they their lives.

Long after this, when Henry the fifth,—
Succeeding his father Bolingbroke,—did reign,
Thy father, earl of Cambridge,—then deriv'd
From famous Edmund Langley, duke of York,—

Marrying my sister, that thy mother was,
Again, in pity of my hard distress,

Levied an army; weening to redeem,
And have install'd me in the diadem:

But, as the rest, so fell that noble earl,
And was beheaded. Thus the Mortimers,
In whom the title rested, were suppress'd.

Plant. Of which, my lord, your honour is the last.

Mor. True; and thou seest, that I no issue have;
And that my fainting words do warrant death:

Thou art my heir; the rest I wish thee gather⁴;
But yet be wary in thy studious care. [me:

Plant. Thy grave admonishments prevail with
But yet, methinks, my father's execution

Was nothing less than bloody tyranny.

Mor. With silence, nephew, be thou politick;
Strong fixed is the house of Lancaster,

And, like a mountain, not to be remov'd,
But now thy uncle is removing hence;

As princes do their courts when they are cloy'd
With long continuance in a settled place. [years

Plant. O, uncle, would some part of my young Might but redeem the passage of your age!

Mor. Thou dost then wrong me; as the slaught'rer doth,

Which giveth many wounds, when one will kill,
Mourn not, except thou sorrow for my good;

Only, give order for my funeral;
And so farewell; and fair⁵ be all thy hopes!

And prosperous bethy life, in peace, and war! [Dies.

Plan. And peace, no war, befall thy parting soul!
In prison hast thou spent a pilgrimage,

And like a hermit over-pass'd thy days.—
Well, I will lock his counsel in my breast;

And what I do imagine, let that rest.—
Keepers, convey him hence; and I myself

Will see his burial better than his life.—
Here dies the dusky torch of Mortimer,

Choak'd with ambition of the meaner sort⁶;
And, for those wrongs, those bitter injuries,

Which Somerset hath offer'd to my house,—
I doubt not, but with honour to redress:

And therefore haste I to the parliament;
Either to be restored to my blood,

Or make my ill the advantage of my good.

[Exit.

¹ That is, he that terminates or concludes misery. ² i. e. my uneasiness or discontent. ³ i. e. high.

⁴ The sense is, I acknowledge thee to be my heir; the consequences which may be collected from thence, I recommend it to thee to draw. ⁵ i. e. lucky or prosperous. ⁶ We are to understand the speaker as reflecting on the ill fortune of Mortimer, in being always made a tool of by the Percies of the north in their rebellious intrigues; rather than in asserting his claim to the crown, in support of his own princely ambition.

A C T III.

S C E N E I.

The Parliament.

Flourish. Enter King Henry, Exeter, Gloster, Winchester, Warwick, Somerset, Suffolk, and Richard Plantagenet. Gloster offers to put up a Bill; Winchester snatches it, and tears it.

Win. COM'ST thou with deep premeditated lines,

With written pamphlets studiously devis'd,
Humphrey of Gloster? If thou canst accuse,
Or ought intend'st to lay unto my charge,
Do it without invention suddenly;
As I with sudden and extemporal speech
Purpose to answer what thou canst object.

Glo. Presumptuous priest! this place commands my patience,
Or thou shouldst find thou hast dishonour'd me.
Think not, although in writing I prefer'd
The manner of thy vile outrageous crimes,
That therefore I have forg'd, or am not able Verbatim to rehearse the method of my pen:
No, prelate; such is thy audacious wickedness,
Thy lewd, pestiferous, and dissentious pranks,
As very infants prattle of thy pride,
Thou art a most pernicious usurer;
Froward by nature, enemy to peace;
Lascivious, wanton, more than well beseems
A man of thy profession, and degree;
And for thy treachery, What's more manifest?
In that thou laid'st a trap to take my life,
As well at London-bridge, as at the Tower?
Beside, I fear me, if thy thoughts were sifted,
The king, thy sovereign, is not quite exempt
From envious malice of thy swelling heart.

Win. Gloster, I do defy thee.—Lords, vouch-
To give me hearing what I shall reply. [safe
If I were covetous, perverse, ambitious,
As he will have me, How am I so poor?
Or how haps it, I seek not to advance
Or raise myself, but keep my wonted calling?
And for dissention, Who preferreth peace
More than I do,—except I be provok'd?
No, my good lords, it is not that offends;
It is not that, that hath incens'd the duke:
It is, because no one should sway but he;
No one, but he, should be about the king;
And that engenders thunder in his breast,
And makes him roar these accusations forth.
But he shall know, I am as good——

Glo. As good?
Thou bastard of my grandfather!——

Win. Ay, lordly sir; For what are you, I pray,
But one imperious in another's throne?

Glo. Am I not protector, saucy priest?

Win. And am I not a prelate of the church?

Glo. Yes, as an out-law in a castle keeps,
And useth it to patronage his theft.

Win. Unreverent Gloster!

Glo. Thou art reverent

Touching thy spiritual function, not thy life.

Win. Rome shall remedy this.

War. ¹ Roam thither then.

Som. My lord, it were your duty to forbear.

War. Ay, see the bishop be not over-borne.

Som. Methinks, my lord should be religious,
And know the office that belongs to such.

War. Methinks, his lordship should be humbler;
It fitteth not a prelate so to plead. [near.

Som. Yes, when his holy state is touch'd so

War. State holy, or unhallow'd, what of that?

Is not his grace protector to the king?

Rich. Plantagenet, I see, must hold his tongue;

15 Lest it be said, Speak, sirrah, when you should;
Must your bold verdict enter talk with lords?

Else would I have a fling at Winchester. [Aside.

K. Henry. Uncles of Gloster, and of Winchester,
The special watchmen of our English weal;

20 I would prevail, if prayers might prevail,
To join your hearts in love and amity.

Oh, what a scandal is it to our crown,

That two such noble peers as ye, should jar!

Believe me, lords, my tender years can tell,

25 Civil dissention is a viperous worm,

That gnaws the bowels of the common-wealth.—

[A noise within; Down with the tawny coats!

What tumult's this?

War. An uproar, I dare warrant,

30 Begun through malice of the bishop's men.

[A noise again, Stones! Stones!

Enter the Mayor of London, attended.

Mayor. Oh, my good lords,—and virtuous
Pity the city of London, pity us! [Henry,—

35 The bishop and the duke of Gloster's men,

Forbidden late to carry any weapon,

Have fill'd their pockets full of pebble-stones;

And, banding themselves in contrary parts,

Do pelt so fast at one another's pate,

40 That many have their giddy brains knock'd out:

Our windows are broke down in every street,

And we, for fear, compell'd to shut our shops.

Enter men in skirmish, with bloody pates.

K. Henry. We charge you, on allegiance to ourself,

45 To hold your slaught'ring hands, and keep the

Pray, uncle Gloster, mitigate this strife. [peace.

1 Serv. Nay, if we be Forbidden stones, we'll fall to it with our teeth.

2 Serv. Do what you dare, we are as resolute.

50 [Skirmish again.

Glo. You of my household, leave this peevish
And set this unaccustom'd ² fight aside. [broil,

3 Serv. My lord, we know your grace to be a man

Just and upright; and, for your royal birth,

55 Inferior to none, but to his majesty:

And, ere that we will suffer such a prince,

So kind a father of the common-weal,

To be disgraced by an inkhorn mate ³,

We, and our wives, and children, all will fight,

¹ Roam to Rome.—To roam is supposed to be derived from the cant of vagabonds, who often pretended a pilgrimage to Rome. ² i. e. unseemly, indecent. ³ i. e. a bookman.

And have our bodies slaughter'd by thy foes.

1 Serv. Ay, and the very parings of our nails
Shall pitch a field when we are dead. [Begin again.]

Glo. Stay, stay, I say!

And, if you love me, as you say you do,
Let me persuade you to forbear a while. [soul!—

K. Henry. Oh, how this discord doth afflict my
Can you, my lord of Winchester, behold
My sighs and tears, and will not once relent?
Who should be pitiful, if you be not?

Or who should study to prefer a peace,
If holy churchmen take delight in broils?

War. My lord protector, yield;—yield,
Winchester;—

Except you mean, with obstinate repulse,
To slay your sovereign, and destroy the realm.
You see what mischief, and what murder too,
Hath been enacted through your enmity;
Then be at peace, except ye thirst for blood.

Win. He shall submit, or I will never yield.

Glo. Compassion on the king commands me stoop;
Or, I would see his heart out, ere the priest
Should ever get that privilege of me.

War. Behold, my lord of Winchester, the duke
Hath banish'd moody discontented fury,
As by his smoothed brows it doth appear:
Why look you still so stern, and tragical?

Glo. Here, Winchester, I offer thee my hand.

K. Henry. Fie, uncle Beaufort! I have heard you preach,

That malice was a great and grievous sin:
And will not you maintain the thing you teach,
But prove a chief offender in the same? [gird!—

War. Sweet king!—the bishop hath a kindly
For shame, my lord of Winchester! relent;
What, shall a child instruct you what to do?

Win. Well, duke of Gloster, I will yield to thee;
Love for thy love, and hand for hand I give.

Glo. Ay; but I fear me, with a hollow heart.—
See here, my friends, and loving countrymen;
This token serveth for a flag of truce
Betwixt ourselves, and all our followers:

So help me God, as I dissemble not! [not!]

Win. [Aside.] So help me God, as I intend it

K. Henry. O loving uncle, kind duke of Gloster,
How joyful I am made by this contract!—
Away, my masters! trouble us no more;
But join in friendship, as your lords have done.

1 Serv. Content; I'll to the surgeon's.

2 Serv. So will I.

3 Serv. And I will see what physic
The tavern affords. [Exeunt.]

War. Accept this scowl, most gracious sovereign;
Which in the right of Richard Plantagenet
We do exhibit to your majesty. [sweet prince,]

Glo. Well urg'd, my lord of Warwick;—for,
An if your grace mark every circumstance,
You have great reason to do Richard right:
Especially, for those occasions

At Eltham-place I told your majesty. [force:]

K. Henry. And those occasions, uncle, were of Therefore, my loving lords, our pleasure is,

That Richard be restored to his blood.

War. Let Richard be restored to his blood;
So shall his father's wrongs be recompens'd.

Win. As will the rest, so willeth Winchester.

5 K. Henry. If Richard will be true, not that
But all the whole inheritance I give, [alone,]
That doth belong unto the house of York,
From whence you spring by lineal descent.

Rich. Thy humble servant vows obedience,
10 And humble service, 'till the point of death.

K. Henry. Stoop then, and set your knee against
And, in requerdon² of that duty done, [my foot:]
I gird thee with the valiant sword of York:

Rise, Richard, like a true Plantagenet;
15 And rise created princely duke of York.

Rich. And so thrive Richard, as thy foes may
And as my duty springs, so perish they [fall!]
That grudge one thought against your majesty!

All. Welcome, high prince, the mighty duke of York!

Som. Perish, base prince, ignoble duke of York!
[Aside.]

Glo. Now will it best avail your majesty,
To cross the seas, and to be crown'd in France:
25 The presence of a king engenders love
Amongst his subjects, and his loyal friends;

As it disanimates his enemies. [Henry goes;]

K. Henry. When Gloster says the word, king
For friendly counsel cuts off many foes.

30 Glo. Your ships already are in readiness.

[Exeunt all but Exeter.]

Exe. Ay, we may march in England, or in
Not seeing what is likely to ensue: [France,]
This late dissention, grown betwixt the peers,
35 Burns under feigned ashes of forg'd love,
And will at last break out into a flame:
As fester'd members rot but by degrees,
'Till bones, and flesh, and sinews, fall away,
So will this base and envious discord breed³.

40 And now I fear that fatal prophecy,
Which, in the time of Henry, nam'd the fifth,
Was in the mouth of every sucking babe,—
That Henry, born at Monmouth, should win all;
And Henry, born at Windsor, should lose all:
45 Which is so plain, that Exeter doth wish
His days may finish ere that hapless time. [Exit.]

SCENE II.

Roan in France.

Enter Joan la Pucelle disguis'd, and Soldiers with sacks upon their backs, like Countrymen.

50 Pucel. These are the city gates, the gates of Roan,
Through which our policy must make a breach:—
Take heed, be wary how you place your words;
Talk like the vulgar sort of market-men,
That come to gather money for their corn.

If we have entrance, (as, I hope, we shall)
And that we find the slothful watch but weak,
I'll by a sign give notice to our friends,
That Charles the Dauphin may encounter them.

1 Sol. Our sacks shall be a mean to sack the city,
And we be lords and rulers over Roan;
Therefore we'll knock. [Knocks.]

² i. e. recompence, return.

³ That is, pro-

Watch. Qui va là ?

Pucel. Paisans pauvres gens de France :

Poor market-folks, that come to sell their corn.

Watch. Enter, go in ; the market-bell is rung.

Pucel. Now, Roan, I'll shake thy bulwarks to the ground. [Exeunt.

Enter Dauphin, Bastard, and Alençon.

Dau. Saint Denis bless this happy stratagem !

And once again we'll sleep secure in Roan.

Bast. Here enter'd Pucelle, and her practisants¹ :

Now she is there, how will she specify

Where is the best and safest passage in ?

Reig. By thrusting out a torch from yonder tower ;

Which, oncediscern'd, shews, that her meaning is, —

No way to that², for weakness, which she enter'd.

Enter Joan la Pucelle on a battlement, thrusting out a torch burning.

Pucel. Behold, this is the happy wedding torch,

That joineth Roan unto her countrymen ;

But burning fatal to the Talbotites. [friend,

Bast. See, noble Charles ! the beacon of our The burning torch in yonder turret stands.

Dau. Now shine it like a comet of revenge, A prophet to the fall of all our foes !

Reig. Defer not time, Delay shav'd dangerous ends ;

Enter, and cry — The Dauphin ! — presently,

And then do execution on the watch.

[An alarum ; Talbot in an excursion.

Tal. France, thou shalt rue this treason with thy

If Talbot but survive thy treachery ; — [tears,

Pucelle, that witch, that damned sorceress,

Hath wrought this hellish mischief unawares,

Thathardly we escap'd the pride³ of France. [Exit.

An alarum : excursions. Enter Bedford brought in sick, in a chair, with Talbot and Burgundy, without. Within, Joan la Pucelle, Dauphin,

Bastard, and Alençon, on the Walls.

Pucel. Good morrow, gallants ; want ye corn for bread ?

I think, the duke of Burgundy will fast,

Before he'll buy again at such a rate :

'Twas full of darnel ; Do you like the taste ?

Burg. Scoffon, vile fiend, and shameless courtesan !

I trust, ere long, to choak thee with thine own,

And make thee curse the harvest of that corn.

Dau. Your grace may starve, perhaps, before that time. [treason !

Bed. Oh, let no words, but deeds, revenge this

Pucel. What will you do, good grey-beard ? break a lance,

And run a tilt at death within a chair ?

Tal. Foul fiend of France, and hag of all despight,

Encompass'd with thy lustful paramours !

Becomes it thee to taunt his valiant age,

And twit with cowardice a man half dead ?

Damsel, I'll have a bout with you again,

Or else let Talbot perish with this shame.

Pucel. Are you so hot, sir ? — Yet, Pucelle, hold thy peace ;

If Talbot do but follow, rain will follow. —

[Talbot, and the rest, whisper together in council.

Godspeed the parliament ! who shall be the speaker ?

Tal. Dare ye come forth, and meet us in the field ?

Pucel. Belike, your lordship takes us then for To try if that our own be ours, or no. [fools.

Tal. I speak not to that railing Hecate,

But unto thee, Alençon, and the rest ;

Will ye, like soldiers, come and fight it out ?

Alen. Signior, no.

Tal. Signior, hang ! — base muleteers of France !

Like peasant foot-boys do they keep the walls,

And dare not take up arms like gentlemen.

Pucel. Captains, away : let's get us from the walls ;

For Talbot means no goodness, by his looks. —

God be wi' you, my lord ! we came, sir, but to tell you

That we are here. [Exeunt from the walls.

Tal. And there will we be too, ere it be long,

Or else reproach be Talbot's greatest fame ! —

Vow, Burgundy, by honour of thy house,

(Prick'd on by public wrongs, sustain'd in France)

Either to get the town again, or die :

And I, — as sure as English Henry lives,

And as his father here was conqueror ;

As sure as in this late-betrayed town

Great Cœur-de-Lion's heart was buried ;

So sure I swear, to get the town, or die. [vows.

Burg. My vows are equal partners with thy

Tal. But, ere we go, regard this dying prince,

The valiant duke of Bedford : — Come, my lord,

We will bestow you in some better place,

Fitter for sickness, and for crazy age.

Bed. Lord Talbot, do not so dishonour me :

Here will I sit before the walls of Roan,

And will be partner of your weal or woe. [you.

Burg. Courageous Bedford, let us now persuade

Bed. Not to be gone from hence ; for once I read,

That stout Pendragon, in his litter, sick,

Came to the field, and vanquished his foes⁴ :

Methinks, I should revive the soldiers' hearts,

Because I ever found them as myself.

Tal. Undaunted spirit in a dying breast ! —

Then be it so : — Heavens keep old Bedford safe ! —

And now no more ado, brave Burgundy,

But gather we our forces out of hand,

And set upon our boasting enemy.

[Exeunt Burgundy, Talbot, and forces.

An alarum : excursions. Enter Sir John Fastolfe, and a Captain.

Cap. Whither away, Sir John Fastolfe, in such haste ?

Fast. Whither away ? to save myself by flight ; We are like to have the overthrow again.

Cap. What ! will you fly, and leave lord Talbot ?

Fast. Ay,

All the Talbots in the world, to save my life. [Exit

Cap. Cowardly knight ! ill fortune follow thee !

[Exit.

¹ Practice, in the language of that time, was treachery, and perhaps, in the softer sense, stratagem. Practisants are therefore confederates in stratagems.

² That is, no way equal to that. ³ Pride signifies the haughty power. ⁴ This hero was Uther Pendragon, brother to Aurelius, and father to king Arthur.

Retreat: extursions. Pucelle, Alençon, and Dauphin fly.

Bed. Now, quiet soul, depart when heaven shall
For I have seen our enemies' overthrow. [please;
What is the trust or strength of foolish man?
They, that of late were daring with their scoffs,
Are glad and fain by flight to save themselves.

[Dies, and is carried off in his chair.

An alarum. Enter Talbot, Burgundy, and the rest.

Tal. Lost, and recover'd in a day again!

This is a double honour, Burgundy:—

Yet, heaven have glory for this victory!

Burg. Warlike and martial Talbot, Burgundy
Enshrines thee in his heart; and there erects
Thy noble deeds, as valour's monument. [now?

Tal. Thanks, gentle duke. But where is Pucelle? 15
I think her old familiar is asleep: [gleeks?

Now where's the Bastard's braves, and Charles his
What, all a-mort? Roan hangs her head for grief,
That such a valiant company are fled.

Now will we take some order in the town,

Placing therein some expert officers;

And then depart to Paris, to the king;

For there young Henry, with his nobles, lies.

Burg. What wills lord Talbot, pleaseth Burgundy.

Tal. But yet, before we go, let's not forget 25

The noble duke of Bedford, late deceas'd,

But see his exequies fulfill'd in Roan:

A braver soldier never couched lance,

A gentler heart did never sway in court:

But kings, and mightiest potentates, must die; 30

For that's the end of human misery. [Exeunt.

S C E N E III.

The same. The Plain near the City.

Enter the Dauphin, Bastard, Alençon, and Joan la Pucelle.

Pucel. Dismay not, princes, at this accident,
Nor grieve that Roan is so recovered:

Care is no cure, but rather corrosive,

For things that are not to be remedy'd.

Let frantic Talbot triumph for a while,

And like a peacock sweep along his tail;

We'll pull his plumes, and take away his train,
If Dauphin, and the rest, will be but rul'd.

Dau. We have been guided by thee hitherto,
And of thy cunning had no diffidence;

One sudden foil shall never breed distrust.

Bast. Search out thy wit for secret policies,
And we will make thee famous through the world.

Alen. We'll set thy statue in some holy place,
And have thee reverenc'd like a blessed saint; 50

Employ thee then, sweet virgin, for our good.
Pucel. Then thus it must be; this doth Joan devise:

By fair persuasions, mix'd with sugar'd words,
We will entice the duke of Burgundy

To leave the Talbot, and to follow us.

Dau. Ay, marry, sweeting, if we could do that,
France were no place for Henry's warriors;

Nor should that nation boast it so with us,

But be extirp'd¹ from our provinces. [France, 60

Alen. For ever should they be expuls'd² from
And not have title of an earldom here. [work,

Pucel. Your honours shall perceive how I will

To bring this matter to the wished end.

[Drum beats afar off.

Hark! by the sound of drum, you may perceive
Their powers are marching unto Paris-ward.

[Here beat an English march.

There goes the Talbot, with his colours spread;
And all the troops of English after him.

[French march.

Now, in the rereward, comes the duke, and his;
Fortune, in favour, makes him lag behind.

Summon a parley, we will talk with him.

[Trumpets sound a parley.

Enter the Duke of Burgundy, marching.

Dau. A parley with the duke of Burgundy.

Burg. Who craves a parley with the Burgundy?

Pucel. The princely Charles of France, thy countryman. [marching hence.

Burg. What say'st thou, Charles? for I am

Dau. Speak, Pucelle; and enchant him with thy words. [France!

Pucel. Brave Burgundy, undoubted hope of Stay, let thy humble hand-maid speak to thee.

Burg. Speak on; but be not over-tedious.

Pucel. Look on thy country, look on fertile
And see the cities and the towns defac'd [France,
By wasting ruin of the cruel foe!

As looks the mother on her lowly babe,
When death doth close his tender dying eyes,
See, see, the pining malady of France;

Behold the wounds, the most unnatural wounds,
Which thou thyself hast given her woeful breast!
Oh, turn thy edged sword another way;

Strike those that hurt, and hurt not those that help!
One drop of blood, drawn from thy country's bosom,
Should grieve thee more than streams of foreign
Return thee, therefore, with a flood of tears, [gore;
And wash away thy country's stained spots!

Or nature makes me suddenly relent. [words,

Pucel. Besides, all French and France exclaims
Doubting thy birth and lawful progeny. [on thee,
Whom join'st thou with, but with a lordly nation,
That will not trust thee, but for profit's sake?

When Talbot hath set footing once in France,

And fashion'd thee that instrument of ill,

Who then, but English Henry, will be lord,

And thou be thrust out, like a fugitive?

Call we to mind,—and mark but this, for proof;—
Was not the duke of Orleans thy foe?

And was he not in England prisoner?

But, when they heard he was thine enemy,

They set him free, without his ransom paid,

In spite of Burgundy, and all his friends.

See then! thou fight'st against thy countrymen,
And join'st with them will be thy slaughter-men.

Come, come, return; return, thou wand'ring lord;
Charles, and the rest, will take thee in their arms.

Burg. I am vanquish'd; these haughty words of Forgive me, country, and sweet countrymen!

And, lords, accept this hearty kind embrace;

My forces and my power of men are yours;

So, farewell, Talbot; I'll no longer trust thee.

SCENE IV.

Paris. An Apartment in the Palace.

Enter King Henry, Gloster, Vernon, Basset, &c.

To them Talbot, with Soldiers.

Tal. My gracious prince,——and honourable Hearing of your arrival in this realm, [peers,— I have a while given truce unto my wars, To do my duty to my sovereign:

In sign whereof, this arm—that hath reclaim'd To your obedience fifty fortresses,

Twelve cities, and seven walled towns of strength, Beside five hundred prisoners of esteem,—

Lets fall his sword before your highness' feet; And, with submissive loyalty of heart,

Ascribes the glory of his conquest got, First to my God, and next unto your grace.

K. Henry. Is this the lord Talbot, uncle Gloster, That hath so long been resident in France?

Glo. Yes, if it please your majesty, my liege.

K. Henry. Welcome, brave captain, and victorious lord!

When I was young, (as yet I am not old,)

I do remember how my father said, A stouter champion never handled sword.

Long since we were resolved of your truth, Your faithful service, and your toil in war;

Yet never have you tasted our reward, Or been reguerdon'd² with so much as thanks,

Because 'till now we never saw your face:

Therefore, stand up; and, for these good deserts, We here create you earl of Shrewsbury;

And in our coronation take your place.

[Exeunt King, Glo. Tal.

Ver. Now, sir, to you, that were so hot at sea, Disgracing of these colours³ that I wear

In honour of my noble lord of York,—

Dar'st thou maintain the former words thou spak'st?

Bas. Yes, sir; as well as you dare patronage

The envious barking of your saucy tongue

Against my lord, the duke of Somerset.

Ver. Sirrah, thy lord I honour as he is.

Bas. Why, what is he? as good a man as York.

Ver. Hark ye; not so: in witness, take ye that.

[Strikes him.

Bas. Villain, thou know'st, the law of arms is such,

That, who so draws a sword⁴, 'tis present death; Or else this blow should broach thy dearest blood.

But I'll unto his majesty, and crave

I may have liberty to venge this wrong;

When thou shalt see, I'll met thee to thy cost.

Ver. Well, miscreant, I'll be there as soon as you;

And, after, meet you sooner than you would.

[Exeunt.

A C T IV.

SCENE I.

Paris. A Room of State.

Enter King Henry, Gloster, Winchester, York, Suffolk, Somerset, Warwick, Talbot, Exeter, and Governor of Paris.

Glo. LORD bishop, set the crown upon his head.

Win. God save king Henry, of that name the sixth!

Glo. Now, governor of Paris, take your oath,— That you elect no other king but him:

Esteem none friends, but such as are his friends;

And none your foes, but such as shall pretend

Malicious practices against his state:

This shall ye do, so help you righteous God!

Enter Sir John Fastolfe.

Fast. My gracious sovereign, as I rode from To haste unto your coronation, [Calais,

A letter was deliver'd to my hands,

Writ to your grace from the duke of Burgundy.

Tal. Shame to the duke of Burgundy and thee! I vow'd, base knight, when I did meet thee next, To tear the garter from thy craven's leg.

[plucking it off.

(Which I have done) because unworthily

Thou wast installed in that high degree.—

Pardon me, princely Henry, and the rest:

This dastard, at the battle of Pataie⁶,

When but in all I was six thousand strong,

And that the French were almost ten to one,—

Before we met, or that a stroke was given,

Like to a trusty squire, did run away;

In which assault we lost twelve hundred men;

Myself, and divers gentlemen beside,

Were there surpriz'd, and taken prisoners.

Then judge, great lords, if I have done amiss;

Or whether that such cowards ought to wear

This ornament of knighthood, yea, or no.

Glo. To say the truth, this fact was infamous,

And ill beseming any common man;

¹ Dr. Johnson on this passage observes, that the inconstancy of the French was always the subject of satire; and adds, that he has read a dissertation written to prove that the index of the wind upon our steeples was made in form of a cock, to ridicule the French for their frequent changes. ² i. e. rewarded. ³ This was the badge of a rose, and not an officer's scarf. ⁴ i. e. in the court, or in the presence-chamber. ⁵ i. e. design, or intend. ⁶ Poitiers has been used by some of the editors; but this gross blunder must be probably imputed to the players or transcribers; for the battle of Poitiers was fought in the year 1357, the 31st of king Edward III. and the scene now lies in the 7th year of the reign of king Henry VI. viz. 1428. The action of which Shakspeare is now speaking, happened (according to Holinshed) "neere unto a village in Beausse called Pataie," which we should read instead of Poitiers. "From this battell (adds the same historian) departed without anie stroke stricken, Sir John Fastolfe, the same yeere by his valiantlesse elected into the order of the garter. But for doubt of misdealing at this brunt, the duke of Bedford tooke from him the image of St. George and his garter," &c.

Much more a knight, a captain, and a leader.

Tal. When first this order was ordain'd, my lords,
Knights of the garter were of noble birth;
Valiant, and virtuous, full of haughty¹ courage,
Such as were grown to credit by the wars;
Not fearing death, nor shrinking for distress,
But always resolute in most extremes.
He then, that is not furnished in this sort,
Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight,
Profaning this most honourable order;
And should (if I were worthy to be judge)
Be quite degraded, like a hedge-born swain
That doth presume to boast of gentle blood.

K. Henry. Stain to thy countrymen! thou hear'st thy doom:

Be packing therefore, thou that wast a knight;
Henceforth we banish thee, on pain of death.—

[Exit Fastolfe.]

And now, my lord protector, view the letter
Sent from our uncle duke of Burgundy.

Glo. What means his grace, that he hath chang'd his style?

No more, but plain and bluntly,—To the king?
[Reading.]

Hath he forgot, he is his sovereign?

Or doth this churlish superscription

Pretend² some alteration in good will?

What's there?—I have, upon especial cause, [Reads.
Mov'd with compassion of my country's wreck,
Together with the pitiful complaints

Of such as your oppression feeds upon,—

Forsaken your pernicious faction, [France.

And join'd with Charles, the rightful king of
O monstrous treachery! Can this be so;

That in alliance, amity, and oaths, [guile?

There should be found such false dissembling

K. Henry. What! doth my uncle Burgundy revolt? [foe.

Glo. He doth, my lord; and is become your

K. Henry. Is that the worst, this letter doth contain?

Glo. It is the worst, and all, my lord, he writes.

K. Henry. Why then, lord Talbot there shall talk with him,

And give him chastisement for this abuse:—

My lord, how say you? are you not content?

Tal. Content, my liege? Yes; but that I am prevented,

I should have begg'd I might have been employ'd.

K. Henry. Then gather strength, and march unto him straight:

Let him perceive, how ill we brook his treason;
And what offence it is, to flout his friends.

Tal. I go, my lord; in heart desiring still;
You may behold confusion of your foes. [Exit Tal.

Enter Vernon, and Basset.

Ver. Grant me the combat, gracious sovereign!

Bas. And me, my lord, grant me the combat too!

York. This is my servant; Hear him, noble prince!

Som. And this is mine; Sweet Henry, favour him!

K. Henry. Be patient, lords, and give them leave
to speak.—

Say, gentlemen, What makes you thus exclaim?

And wherefore crave you combat? or with whom?

Ver. With him, my lord; for he hath done me wrong.

Bas. And I with him; for he hath done me wrong.

K. Henry. What is that wrong whereof you both complain?

First let me know, and then I'll answer you.

Bas. Crossing the sea from England into France,
This fellow here, with envious carping tongue,

Upbraided me about the rose I wear;

Saying, the sanguine colour of the leaves

Did represent my master's blushing cheeks,

When stubbornly he did repugn³ the truth,

About a certain question in the law,

Argu'd betwixt the duke of York and him;

With other vile and ignominious terms:

In confutation of which rude reproach,

And in defence of my lord's worthiness,

I crave the benefit of law of arms.

Ver. And that is my petition, noble lord;

For though he seem, with forged quaint conceit,

To set a gloss upon his bold intent,

Yet know, my lord, I was provok'd by him;

And he first took exceptions at this badge,

Pronouncing—that the paleness of this flower

Bewray'd the faintness of my master's heart.

York. Will not this malice, Somerset, be left?

Som. Your private grudge, my lord of York, will

Though ne'er so cunningly you smother it. [out,

K. Henry. Good Lord! what madness rules
in brain-sick men;

When, for so slight and frivolous a cause,

Such factious emulations shall arise!—

Good cousins both, of York and Somerset,

Quiet yourselves, I pray, and be at peace.

York. Let this dissention first be try'd by fight,

And then your highness shall command a peace.

Som. The quarrel toucheth none but us alone;

Betwixt ourselves let us decide it then.

York. There is my pledge; accept it, Somerset.

Ver. Nay, let it rest where it began at first.

Bas. Confirm it so, mine honourable lord!

Glo. Confirm it so? Confounded be your strife!

And perish ye, with your audacious prate!

Presumptuous vassals! are you not asham'd,

With this immodest clamorous outrage

To trouble and disturb the king and us?

And you, my lords,—methinks, you do not well,

To bear with their perverse objections;

Much less, to take occasion from their mouths

To raise a mutiny betwixt yourselves;

Let me persuade you take a better course.

Exe. It grieves his highness; Good my lords,

be friends. [combatants:

K. Henry. Come hither, you that would be

Henceforth I charge you, as you love our favour,

Quite to forget this quarrel, and the cause.—

And you, my lords,—remember where we are;

In France, amongst a fickle wavering nation:

If they perceive dissention in our looks,

And that within ourselves we disagree,

How will their grudging stomachs be provok'd

To wilful disobedience, and rebel?

¹ i. e. high. ² To pretend seems to be here used in its Latin sense, i. e. to hold out. ³ i. e. resist. Beside,

Beside, What infamy will there arise,
When foreign princes shall be certify'd,
That, for a toy, a thing of no regard,
King Henry's peers, and chief nobility,
Destroy'd themselves, and lost the realm of France?
O, think upon the conquest of my father,
My tender years; and let us not forego
That for a trifle, which was bought with blood!
Let me be umpire in this doubtful strife.
I see no reason, if I wear this rose,

[Putting on a red rose.

That any one should therefore be suspicious
I more incline to Somerset, than York:
Both are my kinsmen, and I love them both:
As well they may upbraid me with my crown,
Because, forsooth, the king of Scots is crown'd.
But your discretions better can persuade,
Than I am able to instruct or teach:
And therefore, as we hither came in peace,
So let us still continue peace and love.—
Cousin of York, we institute your grace
To be our regent in these parts of France:—
And, good my lord of Somerset, unite
Your troops of horsemen with his bands of foot;—
And, like true subjects, sons of your progenitors,
Go cheerfully together, and digest
Your angry choler on your enemies.
Ourself, my lord protector, and the rest,
After some respite, will return to Calais;
From thence to England; where I hope ere long
To be presented, by your victories,
With Charles, Alençon, and that traitorous rout.

[Flourish. Exeunt.

Manent York, Warwick, Exeter, and Vernon.

War. My lord of York, I promise you, the king
Prettily, methought, did play the orator.

York. And so he did; but yet I like it not,
In that he wears the badge of Somerset.

War. Tush! that was but his fancy, blame him not;

I dare presume, sweet prince, he thought no harm.

York. And, if I wist¹, he did—But let it rest;
Other affairs must now be managed. [Exeunt.

Manet Exeter.

Exe. Well didst thou, Richard, to suppress thy voice:

For, had the passions of thy heart burst out,
I fear, we should have seen decypher'd there
More rancorous spight, more furious raging broils,
Than yet can be imagin'd or suppos'd.

But howsoe'er, no simple man that sees
This jarring discord of nobility,
This should'ring of each other in the court,
This factious bandying of their favourites,
But that he doth presage some ill event.

'Tis much, when scepters are in children's hands;
But more, when envy breeds unkind division;
There comes the ruin, there begins confusion. [Exit.

SCENE II.

Before the walls of Bourdeaux.

Enter Talbot, with trumpets and drum.

Tal. Go to the gates of Bourdeaux, trumpeter,
Summon their general unto the wall. [Sounds.

Enter General aloft.

English John Talbot, captains, calls you forth,
Servant in arms to Harry king of England;
And thus he would,—Open your city gates,
Be humbled to us; call my sovereign yours,
And do him homage as obedient subjects,
And I'll withdraw me and my bloody power:
But, if you frown upon this proffer'd peace,
You tempt the fury of my three attendants,—
10 Lean famine, quartering steel, and climbing fire;
Who, in a moment, even with the earth
Shall lay your stately and air-braving towers,
If you forsake the offer of their love.

Gen. Thou ominous and fearful owl of death,
15 Our nation's terror, and their bloody scourge!
The period of thy tyranny approacheth.

On us thou canst not enter, but by death:
For, I protest, we are well fortify'd,
And strong enough to issue out and fight:

20 If thou retire, the Dauphin, well appointed,
Stands with the snares of war to tangle thee:
On either hand thee there are squadrons pitch'd,
To wall thee from the liberty of flight;

And no way canst thou turn thee for redress,
25 But death doth front thee with apparent spoil,
And pale destruction meets thee in the face.

Ten thousand French have ta'en the sacrament,
To rive² their dangerous artillery
Upon no christian soul but English Talbot.

30 Lo! there thou stand'st, a breathing valiant man,
Of an invincible unconquer'd spirit:
This is the latest glory of thy praise,
That I, thy enemy, due³ thee withal;

For ere the glass, that now begins to run,
35 Finish the process of his sandy hour,
These eyes, that see thee now well coloured,

Shall see thee wither'd, bloody, pale, and dead.
[Drum afar off.

Hark! hark! the Dauphin's drum, a warning bell,
40 Sings heavy music to thy timorous soul;
And mine shall ring thy dire departure out.

[Exit from the walls.

Tal. He fables not, I hear the enemy;—
Out, some light horsemen, and peruse their
O, negligent and heedless discipline! [wings.—

How are we park'd, and bounded in a pale;
A little herd of England's timorous deer,
Maz'd with a yelping kennel of French curs!

If we be English deer, be then in blood:
50 Not rascal⁴ like, to fall down with a pitch;
But rather moody mad, and desperate stags,

Turn on the bloody hounds with heads of steel,
And make the cowards stand aloof at bay:
Sell every man his life as dear as mine,

55 And they shall find dear deer of us, my friends.—
God, and saint George! Talbot, and England's right!

Prosper our colours in this dangerous fight! [Exeunt.

a trumpet, and many soldiers.*

O o

⁴ A rascal deer
That

That dogg'd the mighty army of the Dauphin?

Mess. They are return'd, my lord; and give it out,

That he is march'd to Bourdeaux with his power,
To fight with Talbot: As he march'd along,
By your espials were discovered
Two mightier troops than that the Dauphin led;
Which join'd with him, and made their march for Bourdeaux.

York. A plague upon that villain Somerset;
That thus delays my promised supply
Of horsemen, that were levied for this siege!
Renowned Talbot doth expect my aid;
And I am lowted¹ by a traitor villain,
And cannot help the noble chevalier:
God comfort him in this necessity!
If he miscarry, farewell wars in France.

Enter Sir William Lucy.

Lucy. Thou princely leader of our English strength,
Never so needful on the earth of France,
Spur to the rescue of the noble Talbot;
Who now is girdled with a waist of iron,
And hemm'd about with grim destruction:
To Bourdeaux, warlike duke! to Bourdeaux, York!
Else, farewell Talbot, France, and England's honour.

York. O God! that Somerset—who in proud heart

Doth stop my cornets—were in Talbot's place!
So should we save a valiant gentleman,
By forfeiting a traitor, and a coward.
Mad ire, and wrathful fury, makes me weep,
That thus we die, while remiss traitors sleep.

Lucy. O, send some succour to the distress'd lord!

York. He dies, we lose; I break my warlike word:

We mourn, France smiles; we lose, they daily get;
All 'long of this vile traitor Somerset.

Lucy. Then, God take mercy on brave Talbot's soul!

And on his son young John; whom, two hours
I met in travel towards his warlike father!
This seven years did not Talbot see his son;
And now they meet where both their lives are done.

York. Alas! what joy shall noble Talbot have,
To bid his young son welcome to his grave?

Away! vexation almost stops my breath,
That sunder'd friends greet in the hour of death.—

Lucy. farewell: no more my fortune can,
But curse the cause I cannot aid the man.—
Maine, Blois, Poitiers, and Tours, are won away,
'Long all of Somerset, and his delay.

Lucy. Thus, while the vulture of sedition
Feeds in the bosom of such great commanders,
Sleeping neglect doth betray to loss
The conquest of our scarce-cold conqueror,
That ever-living man of memory,
Henry the fifth:—Whiles they each other cross,
Lives, honours, lands, and all, hurry to loss.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.

Another part of France.

Enter Somerset, with his Army.

Som. It is too late: I cannot send them now:

5 This expedition was by York and Talbot
Too rashly plotted; all our general force
Might with the sally of the very town
Be buckled with: the over-daring Talbot
Hath sullied all his gloss of former honour
10 By this unheedful, desperate, wild adventure:
York set him on to fight, and die in shame,
That, Talbot dead, great York might bear the name.

Capt. Here is Sir William Lucy, who with me
Set from our o'er-match'd forces forth for aid.

15 Enter Sir William Lucy.

Som. How now, Sir William? whither were you sent?

Lucy. Whither, my lord? from bought and sold lord Talbot;

20 Who, ring'd about² with bold adversity,
Cries out for noble York and Somerset,
To beat assailing death from his weak legions.
And whiles the honourable captain there
Drops bloody sweat from his war-wearied limbs,
25 And, in advantage ling'ring³, looks for rescue,
You, his false hopes, the trust of England's honour,
Keep off aloof with worthless emulation⁴.

Let not your private discord keep away
The levied succours that shall lend him aid,

30 While he, renowned noble gentleman,
Yields up his life unto a world of odds:
Orleans the Bastard, Charles, and Burgundy,
Alençon, Reignier, compass him about,
And Talbot perisheth by your default. [him aid.]

35 Som. York set him on, York should have sent Lucy. And York as fast upon your grace exclaims;

Swearing, that you withhold his levied host,
Collected for this expedition. [the horse;]

Som. York lies; he might have sent, and had 40 I owe him little duty, and less love;

And take foul scorn, to fawn on him by sending.

Lucy. The fraud of England, not the force of France,

Hath now entrapt the noble-minded Talbot.
45 Never to England shall he bear his life;

But dies, betray'd to fortune by your strife.

Som. Come, go; I will dispatch the horsemen
Within six hours they will be at his aid. [straight;]

50 Lucy. Too late comes rescue; he is ta'en, or slain:
For fly he could not, if he would have fled;

And fly would Talbot never, though he might.

Som. If he be dead, brave Talbot then adieu!

Lucy. His fame lives in the world, his shame in you. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.

A Field of Battle near Bourdeaux.

Enter Talbot, and his Son.

Tal. O young John Talbot! I did send for thee,
60 To tutor thee in stratagems of war;

¹ i. e. I am let down, I am lowered. ² i. e. environed, encircled. ³ i. e. protracting his resistance by the advantage of a strong post. ⁴ In this line, emulation signifies merely rivalry, not struggle for superior excellence.

That Talbot's name might be in thee reviv'd,
When sapless age, and weak unable limbs,
Should bring thy father to his drooping chair.
But,—O malignant and ill-boding stars!—
Now art thou come unto a feast of death¹,
A terrible and unavoyd danger:

Therefore, dear boy, mount on my swiftest horse;
And I'll direct thee how thou shalt escape
By sudden flight: come, dally not, begone.

John. Is my name Talbot? and am I your son?
And shall I fly? O! if you love my mother,
Dishonour not her honourable name,
To make a bastard, and a slave of me:
The world will say—He is not Talbot's blood,
That basely fled, when noble Talbot stood.

Tal. Fly, to revenge my death, if I be slain.

John. He that flies so, will ne'er return again.

Tal. If we both stay, we both are sure to die.

John. Then, let me stay; and, father, do you fly:
Your loss is great, so your regard² should be;
My worth unknown, no loss is known in me.
Upon my death the French can little boast;
In yours they will, in you all hopes are lost.
Flight cannot stain the honour you have won;
But mine it will, that no exploit have done:
You fled for vantage, every one will swear;
But if I bow, they'll say—it was for fear.
There is no hope that ever I will stay,
If, the first hour, I shrink, and run away.
Here, on my knee, I beg mortality,
Rather than life preserv'd with infamy.

Tal. Shall all thy mother's hopes lie in one tomb?

John. Ay, rather than I'll shame my mother's womb.

Tal. Upon my blessing I command thee go.

John. To fight I will, but not to fly the foe.

Tal. Part of thy father may be sav'd in thee.

John. No part of him, but will be shame in me.

Tal. Thou never hadst renown, nor canst not lose it. [abuse it?

John. Yes, your renowned name; Shall flight

Tal. Thy father's charge shall clear thee from that stain.

John. You cannot witness for me, being slain.
If death be so apparent, then both fly. [die?

Tal. And leave my followers here to fight and
My age was never tainted with such shame. [blame?

John. And shall my youth be guilty of such
No more can I be sever'd from your side,
Than can yourself yourself in twain divide:
Stay, go, do what you will, the like do I;
For live I will not, if my father die.

Tal. Then here I take my leave of thee, fair son,
Born to eclipse thy life this afternoon.
Come, side by side together live and die;
And soul with soul from France to heaven fly.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VI.

Alarum: excursions, wherein Talbot's son is hemm'd about, and Talbot rescues him.

Tal. Saint George, and victory! fight, soldiers,
The regent hath with Talbot broke his word, [fight:
And left us to the rage of France's sword.

Where is John Talbot?—Pause, and take thy breath;
I gave thee life, and rescu'd thee from death.

John. O twice my father! twice am I thy son:
The life, thou gav'st me first, was lost and done;
Till with thy warlike sword, despite of fate,
To my determin'd time thou gav'st new date.

Tal. When from the Dauphin's crest thy sword struck fire,

It warm'd thy father's heart with proud desire
Of bold-fac'd victory. Then leaden age,
Quicken'd with youthful spleen, and warlike rage,
Beat down Alençon, Orleans, Burgundy,
And from the pride of Gallia rescu'd thee.

The ireful bastard Orleans—that drew blood
From thee, my boy, and had the maidenhood
Of thy first fight—I soon encountered;

And, interchanging blows, I quickly shed
Some of his bastard blood; and, in disgrace,
Bespoke him thus: Contaminated, base,

And mis-begotten blood I spill of thine,
Mean and right poor; for that pure blood of mine,
Which thou didst force from Talbot, my brave boy:—

Here, purposing the bastard to destroy,
Came in strong rescue. Speak, thy father's care;

Art not thou weary, John? How dost thou fare?
Wilt thou yet leave the battle, boy, and fly,

Now thou art seal'd the son of chivalry?
Fly, to revenge my death, when I am dead;
The help of one stands me in little stead.

Oh, too much folly is it, well I wot,
To hazard all our lives in one small boat.

If I to-day die not with Frenchmen's rage,
To-morrow I shall die with mickle age:

By me they nothing gain, and if I stay,
Tis but the short'ning of my life one day:

In thee thy mother dies, our household's name,
My death's revenge, thy youth, and England's fame:

All these, and more, we hazard by thy stay;
All these are sav'd, if thou wilt fly away. [smart,

John. The sword of Orleans hath not made me
These words of yours draw life-blood from my heart:

Oh what advantage, bought with such a shame,
To save a paltry life, and slay bright fame!

Before young Talbot from old Talbot fly,
The coward horse, that bears me, fall and die!

And like³ me to the peasant boys of France;
To be shame's scorn, and subject of mischance!

Surely, by all the glory you have won,
And if I fly, I am not Talbot's son:

Then talk no more of flight, it is no boot;
If son to Talbot, die at Talbot's foot.

Tal. Then follow thou thy desperate sire of Crete,
Thou Icarus; thy life to me is sweet:

If thou wilt fight, fight by thy father's side.
And, commendable prov'd, let's die in pride.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VII.

Alarum: excursions. Enter old Talbot, led by the French.

Tal. Where is my other life?—mine own is gone:—

O, where's young Talbot? where is valiant John?—

¹ To a field where death will be feasted with slaughter. ² Meaning, your care of your own safety.
³ i. e. make me like, or reduce me to a level with, the peasant boys, &c.

Triumphant death, smear'd with captivity¹!
 Young Talbot's valour makes me smile at thee:—
 When he perceiv'd me shrink, and on my knee,
 His bloody sword he brandish'd over me,
 And, like a hungry lion, did commence
 Rough deeds of rage, and stern impatience:
 But when my angry guardant stood alone,
 Tend'ring² my ruin, and assail'd of none,
 Dizzy-ey'd fury and great rage of heart,
 Suddenly made him from my side to start
 Into the clust'ring battle of the French:
 And in that sea of blood my boy did drench
 His over-mounting spirit; and there dy'd
 My Icarus, my blossom, in his pride.

Enter John Talbot, borne.

Serv. O my dear lord! lo, where your son is borne!

Tal. Thou antic death, which laugh'st us here to

Anon from thy insulting tyranny,
 Coupled in bonds of perpetuity,
 Two Talbots, winged through the lither³ sky,
 In thy despight, shall 'scape mortality.—
 5 O thou whose wounds become hard-favoured death,
 Speak to thy father, ere thou yield thy breath:
 Brave death by speaking, whether he will or no;
 Imagine him a Frenchman, and thy foe.—
 Poor boy! he smiles, methinks; as who should 10 say—
 Had death been French, then death had died to-day.
 Come, come, and lay him in his father's arms;
 My spirit can no longer bear these harms.
 Soldiers, adieu! I have what I would have,
 15 Now my old arms are young John Talbot's grave.

[Dies.]

A C T V.

S C E N E I.

Continues near Bourdeaux.

Enter Charles, Alençon, Burgundy, Bastard, and Joan la Pucelle.

Char. HAD York and Somerset brought rescue in,
 We should have found a bloody day of this.

Bast. How the young whelp of Talbot's raging-wood⁴,

Did flesh his puny sword in Frenchmen's blood!

Pucel. Once I encounter'd him, and thus I said,
Thou maiden youth, be vanquish'd by a maid:

But—with a proud, majestical, high scorn—
 He answer'd thus; *Young Talbot was not born—
 To be the pillage of a giglot's wench:*

So, rushing in the bowels of the French,
 He left me proudly, as unworthy fight. [knight:]

Bur. Doubtless, he would have made a noble
 See, where he lies inhered in the arms

Of the most bloody nurser of his harms. [asunder;]

Bast. Hew them to pieces, hack their bones
 Whose life was England's glory, Gallia's wonder.

Char. Oh, no; forbear: for that which we have
 During the life, let us not wrong it dead. [filed]

Enter Sir William Lucy.

Lucy. Herald, conduct me to the Dauphin's tent; to know

Who hath obtain'd the glory of the day.

Char. On what submissive message art thou sent?

Lucy. Submission, Dauphin? 'tis a mere French word;

We English warriors wot not what it means.

I come to know what prisoners thou hast ta'en,
 And to survey the bodies of the dead.

Char. For prisoners asks't thou? hell our prison is.
 But tell me whom thou seek'st.

25 Lucy. Where is the great Alcides of the field,
 Valiant lord Talbot, earl of Shrewsbury?

Created for his rare success in arms,

Great earl of Washford, Waterford, and Valence;

Lord Talbot of Goodrig and Urchinfield,

30 Lord Strange of Blackmere, lord Verdun of Alton,

Lord Cromwell of Wingfield, lord Furnival of Shef-

The thrice victorious lord of Falconbridge; [field,

Knight of the noble order of Saint George,

Worthy saint Michael, and the golden fleece;

35 Great Marshall to Henry the sixth,

Of all his wars within the realm of France?

Pucel. Here is a silly stately style, indeed!

The Turk, that two-and-fifty kingdoms hath,

Writes not so tedious a style as this.—

40 Him, that thou magnify'st with all these titles,
 Stinking, and fly-blown, lies here at our feet.

Lucy. Is Talbot slain; the Frenchman's only scourge,

Your kingdom's terror and black Nemesis?

45 Oh, were mine eye-balls into bullets turn'd,

That I, in rage, might shoot them at your faces!

Oh, that I could but call these dead to life,

It were enough to fright the realm of France:

Were but his picture left among you here,

50 It would amaze the proudest of you all.

Give me their bodies; that I may bear them hence,

And give them burial, as beseems their worth.

Pucel. I think, this upstart is old Talbot's ghost,

He speaks with such a proud commanding spirit,

55 For God's sake, let him have 'em; to keep them

They would but stink, and putrefy the air. [here,

Char. Go, take their bodies hence.

Lucy. I'll bear

Them hence: but from their ashes shall be rear'd

60 A phoenix, that shall make all France afeard. [wilt.

Char. So we be rid of them, do with him what thou

² i. e. watching me with tenderness in my fall.

³ Lither is flexible or yielding. ⁴ Raging-wood signifies raging mad. ⁵ Giglot is a wanton, or a strumpet.

And now to Paris, in this conquering vein;
All will be ours, now bloody Talbot's slain.

[Exeunt.]

S C E N E II.

England.

Enter King Henry, Gloster, and Exeter.

K. Henry. Have you perus'd the letters from the
The emperor, and the earl of Armagnac? [pope,

Glo. I have, my lord; and their intent is this,—
They humbly sue unto your excellence,
To have a godly peace concluded of,
Between the realms of England and of France.

K. Henry. How doth your grace affect their motion?

Glo. Well, my good lord; and as the only means
To stop effusion of our Christian blood,
And stablish quietness on every side.

K. Henry. Ay, marry, uncle; for I always thought,
It was both impious and unnatural,
That such inhumanity¹ and bloody strife
Should reign among professors of one faith.

Glo. Beside, my lord,—the sooner to effect,
And surer bind, this knot of amity,—

The earl of Armagnac—near knit to Charles,
A man of great authority in France,— Proffers his only daughter to your grace
In marriage, with a large and sumptuous dowry.

K. Henry. Marriage? uncle, alas! my years are
And fitter is my study and my books, [young;

Than wanton dalliance with a paramour.
Yet call the ambassadors; and, as you please,
So let them have their answers every one.

I shall be well content with any choice
Tends to God's glory, and my country's weal.

Enter a Legate, and two Ambassadors; with Winchester as Cardinal.

Exe. What! is my lord of Winchester install'd,
And call'd unto a cardinal's degree!

Then, I perceive, that will be verify'd,
Henry the fifth did sometime prophesy,—

If once he come to be a cardinal,
He'll make his cap co-equal with the crown.

K. Hen. My lords ambassadors, your several suits
Have been consider'd and debated on.

Your purpose is both good and reasonable:

And, therefore, are we certainly resolv'd

To draw conditions of a friendly peace;

Which, by my lord of Winchester, we mean

Shall be transported presently to France.

Glo. And for the proffer of my lord your master,—
I have inform'd his highness so at large,

As—liking of the lady's virtuous gifts,

Her beauty, and the value of her dower,—

He doth intend she shall be England's queen.

K. Henry. In argument and proof of which contract,

Bear her this jewel, pledge of my affection.—

And so, my lord protector, see them guarded,

And safely brought to Dover; where, in shipp'd,

Commit them to the fortune of the sea.

[Exeunt King, and train.]

Win. Stay, my lord legate; you shall first receive

The sum of money, which I promised

Should be deliver'd to his holiness

For clothing me in these brave ornaments.

Legate. I will attend upon your lordship's leisure.

Win. Now Winchester will not submit, I trow,

Or be inferior to the proudest peer.

10 Humphrey of Gloster, thou shalt well perceive,

That, nor in birth, nor for authority,

The bishop will be overborne by thee:

I'll either make thee stoop, and bend thy knee,

Or sack this country with a mutiny. [Exeunt.]

S C E N E III.

France.

Enter Dauphin, Burgundy, Alençon, and Joan la Pucelle.

20 Dau. These news, my lords, may cheer our drooping spirits:

'Tis said, the stout Parisians do revolt,

And turn again unto the warlike French. [France,

Alen. Then march to Paris, royal Charles of 25 And keep not back your powers in dalliance.

Pucel. Peace be amongst them, if they turn to us;
Else, ruin combat with their palaces!

Enter a Scout.

Scout. Success unto our valiant general,

30 And happiness to his accomplices! [speak.]

Dau. What tidings send our scouts? I pry thee,

Scout. The English army, that divided was

Into two parts, is now conjoin'd in one;

And means to give you battle presently.

35 Dau. Somewhat too sudden, sirs, the warning is;

But we will presently provide for them.

Bur. I trust, the ghost of Talbot is not there;

Now he is gone, my lord, you need not fear.

40 Pucel. Of all base passions, fear is most accurs'd:—

Command the conquest, Charles, it shall be thine;

Let Henry fret, and all the world repine.

Dau. Then on, my lords; and France be fortunate! [Exeunt.]

S C E N E IV.

Alarum: excursions. Enter Joan la Pucelle.

Pucel. The regent conquers, and the Frenchmen

Now help, ye charming spells, and periapts²; [fly.—

And ye choice spirits, that admonish me,

50 And give me signs of future accidents! [Thunder.]

You speedy helpers, that are substitutes

Under the lordly monarch of the north³,

Appear, and aid me in this enterprize!

Enter Fiends.

55 This speedy and quick appearance argues proof

Of your accustom'd diligence to me.

Now, ye familiar spirits, that are cull'd

Out of the powerful regions under earth,

Help me this once, that France may get the field.

[They walk, and speak not.]

¹ i. e. barbarity, savageness. ² Periapts were charms sewed up and worn about the neck as preservatives from disease or danger. Of these, the first chapter of St. John's Gospel was deemed the most efficacious. ³ The north was always supposed to be the particular habitation of bad spirits. Milton assembles the rebel angels in the north.

Oh, hold me not with silence over-long!
Where I was wont to feed you with my blood,
I'll lop a member off, and give it you,
In earnest of a future benefit;
So you do condescend to help me now.—

[They hang their heads.]

No hope to have redress?—My body shall Pay recompence, if you will grant my suit.

[They shake their heads.]

Cannot my body, nor blood-sacrifice,
Intreat you to your wonted furtherance?
Then take my soul; my body, soul, and all,
Before that England give the French the foil.

[They depart.]

See! they forsake me. Now the time is come,
That France must vail her lofty-plumed crest,
And let her head fall into England's lap.
My ancient incantations are too weak,
And hell too strong for me to buckle with:—
Now, France, thy glory droopeth to the dust. [Exit.]

Excursions. Pucelle and York fight hand to hand.

Pucelle is taken. The French fly.

York. Damsel of France, I think, I have you fast:
Unchain your spirits now with spelling charms,
And try if they can gain your liberty.—

A goodly prize! fit for the devil's grace!

See, how the ugly witch doth bend her brows,
As if, with Circe, she would change my shape. [be.]

Pucel. Chang'd to a worser shape thou canst not

York. Oh, Charles the Dauphin is a proper man;

No shape but his can please your dainty eye. [thee!]

Pucel. A plaguing mischief light on Charles, and
And may ye both be suddenly surpris'd

By bloody hands, in sleeping on your beds!

York. Fell, banning 'hag! enchantress, hold thy tongue.

Pucel. I pr'ythee, give me leave to curse a while.

York. Curse, miscreant, when thou comest to the stake. [Exeunt.]

Alarm. Enter Suffolk, leading in lady Margaret.

Suf. Be what thou wilt, thou art my prisoner.

[Gazes on her.]

Oh fairest beauty, do not fear, nor fly;

For I will touch thee but with reverent hands.

I kiss these fingers for eternal peace,

And lay them gently on thy tender side.

Who art thou? say, that I may honour thee.

Mar. Margaret my name; and daughter to a
The king of Naples, whosoe'er thou art. [king,]

Suf. An earl I am, and Suffolk am I call'd.

Be not offended, nature's miracle,

Thou art allotted to be ta'en by me:

So doth the swan her downy cygnets save,
Keeping them prisoners underneath her wings.

Yet, if this servile usage once offend,

Go, and be free again, as Suffolk's friend.

[She is going.]

Oh, stay!—I have no power to let her pass;

My hand would free her, but my heart says—no.

As plays the sun upon the glassy streams,

Twinkling another counterfeited beam,

So seems this gorgeous beauty to mine eyes.

Fain would I woo her, yet I dare not speak;

I'll call for pen and ink, and write my mind:

Fie, De la Poole! disable not thyself²;

5 Hast not a tongue? is she not here thy prisoner?

Wilt thou be daunted at a woman's sight?

Ay; beauty's princely majesty is such,

Confounds the tongue, and makes the senses rough.

Mar. Say, earl of Suffolk,—if thy name be so,—

10 What ransom must I pay before I pass?

For, I perceive, I am thy prisoner.

Suf. How can'st thou tell, she will deny thy suit,
Before thou make a trial of her love? [Aside.]

Mar. Why speak'st thou not? what ransom must I pay?

Suf. She's beautiful; and therefore to be woo'd:
She is a woman; therefore to be won. [Aside.]

Mar. Wilt thou accept of ransom, yea, or no?

Suf. Fond man! remember, that thou hast a wife;

Then how can Margaret be thy paramour? [Aside.]

Mar. I were best to leave him, for he will not hear. [card.]

Suf. There all is marr'd; there lies a cooling

25 Mar. He talks at random; sure, the man is mad.

Suf. And yet a dispensation may be had.

Mar. And yet I would that you would answer me.

Suf. I'll win this lady Margaret. For whom?

Why, for my king: Tush! that's a wooden thing⁴.

Mar. He talks of wood: it is some carpenter.

Suf. Yet so my fancy may be satisfy'd,

And peace established between these realms.

But there remains a scruple in that too:

For though her father be the king of Naples,

35 Duke of Anjou and Maine, yet he is poor,
And our nobility will scorn the match. [Aside.]

Mar. Hear ye, captain? Are you not at leisure?

Suf. It shall be so, disdain they ne'er so much:
Henry is youthful, and will quickly yield.—

40 Madam, I have a secret to reveal. [knight,]

Mar. What though I be enthrall'd? he seems a
And will not any way dishonour me. [Aside.]

Suf. Lady, vouchsafe to listen what I say.

Mar. Perhaps, I shall be rescu'd by the French;
45 And then I need not crave his courtesy. [Aside.]

Suf. Sweet madam, give me hearing in a cause—

Mar. Tush! women have been captivate ere
now. [Aside.]

Suf. Lady, wherefore talk you so?

50 Mar. I cry you mercy, 'tis but quid for quo.

Suf. Say, gentle princess, would you not suppose
Your bondage happy to be made a queen?

Mar. To be a queen in bondage, is more vile,
Than is a slave in base servility;

55 For princes should be free.

Suf. And so shall you,

If happy England's royal king be free.

Mar. Why, what concerns his freedom unto me?

Suf. I'll undertake to make thee Henry's queen;
60 To put a golden scepter in thy hand,

And set a precious crown upon thy head,

¹ To ban is to curse. ² Do not represent thyself so weak. To disable the judgement of another was, in our author's age, the same as to destroy its credit or authority. ³ i. e. foolish. ⁴ i. e. an awkward business, an undertaking not likely to succeed.

If thou wilt condescend to be my —

Mar. What?

Suf. His love.

Mar. I am unworthy to be Henry's wife.

Suf. No, gentle madam; I unworthy am
To woo so fair a dame to be his wife,
And have no portion in the choice myself.

How say you, madam; are you so content?

Mar. An if my father please, I am content.

Suf. Then call our captains, and our colours,
forth:

And, madam, at your father's castle walls

We'll crave a parley to confer with him.

Sound. Enter Reignier on the Walls.

Suf. See, Reignier, see, thy daughter prisoner.

Reig. To whom?

Suf. To me.

Reig. Suffolk, what remedy?

I am a soldier; and unapt to weep,

Or to exclaim on fortune's fickleness.

Suf. Yes, there is remedy enough, my lord:

Consent, (and, for thy honour, give consent)

Thy daughter shall be wedded to my king;

Whom I with pain have woo'd and won thereto;

And this her easy-held imprisonment

Hath gain'd thy daughter princely liberty.

Reig. Speaks Suffolk as he thinks?

Suf. Fair Margaret knows,

That Suffolk doth not flatter, face or feign.

Reig. Upon thy princely warrant, I descend,

To give thee answer of thy just demand.

[Exit from the walls.

Suf. And here I will expect thy coming.

Trumpets sound. Enter Reignier, below.

Reig. Welcome, brave earl, into our territories,
Command in Anjou what your honour pleases.

Suf. Thanks, Reignier, happy for so sweet a child,

Fit to be made companion with a king:

What answer makes your grace unto my suit?

Reig. Since thou dost deign to woo her little
To be the princely bride of such a lord; [worth,
Upon condition I may quietly

Enjoy mine own, the countries Maine and Anjou,
Free from oppression, or the stroke of war,
My daughter shall be Henry's, if he please.

Suf. That is her ransom, I deliver her;

And those two countries, I will undertake,
Your grace shall well and quietly enjoy.

Reig. And I again,—in Henry's royal name,
As deputy unto that gracious king,—

Give thee her hand, for sign of plighted faith.

Suf. Reignier of France, I give thee kingly
thanks,

Because this is in traffic of a king:

And yet, methinks, I could be well content

To be mine own attorney in this case. [Aside.

I'll over then to England with this news,

And make this marriage to be solemniz'd:

So, farewell, Reignier! Set this diamond safe

In golden palaces, as it becomes.

Reig. I do embrace thee, as I would embrace
The Christian prince, king Henry, were he here.

Mar. Farewell, my lord! Good wishes, praise, and prayers,

5 Shall Suffolk ever have of Margaret. [She is going.

Suf. Farewell, sweet madam! But hark you,
Margaret;

No princely commendations to my king?

Mar. Such commendations as become a maid,

10 A virgin, and his servant, say to him. [rected.

Suf. Words sweetly plac'd, and modestly di-
But, madam, I must trouble you again,—

No loving token to his majesty? [heart,

Mar. Yes, my good lord; a pure unspotted

15 Never yet taint with love, I send the king.

Suf. And this withal. [Kisses her.

Mar. That for thyself;—I will not so presume,
To send such peevish tokens to a king.

[Exeunt Reignier and Margaret.

20 Suf. O, wert thou for myself!—But, Suffolk,

Thou may'st not wander in that labyrinth; [stay,
There Minotaurs and ugly treasons lurk.

Solicit Henry with her wond'rous praise:

Bethink thee on her virtues that surmount,

25 Mad², natural graces that extinguish art;

Repeat their semblance often on the seas,

That, when thou com'st to kneel at Henry's feet,

Thou may'st bereave him of his wits with wonder.

[Exit.

SCENE V.

Camp of the Duke of York in Anjou.

Enter York, Warwick, a Shepherd, and Pucelle.

York. Bring forth that sorceress, condemn'd to burn. [right!

Shep. Ah, Joan! this kills thy father's heart out-
Have I sought every country far and near,
And now it is my chance to find thee out,
Must I behold thy timeless cruel death?

40 Ah, Joan, sweet daughter Joan, I'll die with thee!

Pucel. Decrepit miser⁴! base ignoble wretch!
I am descended of a gentler blood!

Thou art no father, nor no friend of mine.

Shep. Out, out!—My lords, an please you,
'tis not so;

45 I did beget her, all the parish knows;

Her mother liveth yet, can testify

She was the first fruit of my batehelorship.

War. Graceless! wilt thou deny thy parentage?

50 York. This argues what her kind of life hath been;
Wicked and vile; and so her death concludes.

Shep. Fie, Joan! that thou wilt be so obstacle⁵!
God knows, thou art a collop of my flesh;
And for thy sake have I shed many a tear:

55 Deny me not, I pr'ythee, gentle Joan. [this man

Pucel. Peasant, avaunt!—You have suborn'd
Of purpose to obscure my noble birth.

Shep. 'Tis true, I gave a noble to the priest,
The morn that I was wedded to her mother.—

60 Kneel down and take my blessing, good my girl.

Wilt thou not stoop? Now cursed be the time

¹ i. e. childish. ² i. e. wild or uncultivated. ³ i. e. untimely. ⁴ Miser has no relation to avarice in this passage, but simply means a miserable creature. ⁵ A vulgar corruption of obstinate.

Of thy nativity! I would, the milk [breast,
Thy mother gave thee, when thou suck'dst her
Had been a little ratsbane for thy sake!
Or else, when thou didst keep my lambs a-field,
I wish some ravenous wolf had eaten thee!
Dost thou deny thy father, cursed drab?

O, burn her, burn her; hanging is too good. [Exit.

York. Take her away; for she hath liv'd too
To fill the world with vicious qualities. [long,

Pucel. First, let me tell you whom you have condemn'd:

Not me begotten of a shepherd swain,
But issued from the progeny of kings;
Virtuous and holy; chosen from above,
By inspiration of celestial grace,
To work exceeding miracles on earth.
I never had to do with wicked spirits:
But you,—that are polluted with your lusts,
Stain'd with the guiltless blood of innocents,
Corrupt and tainted with a thousand vices,—
Because you want the grace that others have,
You judge it straight a thing impossible
To compass wonders, but by help of devils.
No, misconceived! Joan of Arc hath been
A virgin from her tender infancy,
Chaste and immaculate in very thought;
Whose maiden blood, thus rigorously effus'd,
Will cry for vengeance at the gates of heaven.

York. Ay, ay;—away with her to execution.

War. And hark ye, sirs; because she is a maid,
Spare for no faggots, let there be enough:
Place barrels of pitch upon the fatal stake,
That so her torture may be shorten'd.

Pucel. Will nothing turn your unrelenting hearts?—
Then, Joan, discover thine infirmity;
That warranteth by law to be thy privilege.—
I am with child, ye bloody homicides:

Murder not then the fruit within my womb,
Although ye hale me to a violent death. [child?

York. Now heaven forefend! the holy maid with

War. The greatest miracle that e'er ye wrought:
Is all your strict preciseness come to this?

York. She and the Dauphin have been juggling:
I did imagine what would be her refuge. [live;

War. Well, go to; we will have no bastards
Especially since Charles must father it.

Pucel. You are deceiv'd; my child is none of his;
It was Alençon that enjoy'd my love.

York. Alençon! that notorious Machiavel;
It dies, an if it had a thousand lives.

Pucel. O, give me leave, I have deluded you;
'Twas neither Charles, nor yet the duke I nam'd,
But Reignier king of Naples, that prevail'd.

War. A married man! that's most intolerable.

York. Why, here's a girl! I think she knows not well,

There were so many, whom she may accuse.

War. It's sign she hath been liberal and free.

York. And, yet, forsooth, she is a virgin pure.—
Strumpet, thy words condemn thy brat, and thee:

Use no entreaty, for it is in vain. [my curse:

Pucel. Then lead me hence;—with whom I leave

May never glorious sun reflex his beams
Upon the country where you make abode!
But darkness, and the gloomy shade of death
Environ you; 'till mischief, and despair,
Drive you to break your necks, or hang yourselves!

[Exit guarded.

York. Break thou in pieces, and consume to Thou foul accursed minister of hell! [ashes,

Enter Cardinal Beaufort, &c.

Car. Lord regent, I do greet your excellence
With letters of commission from the king.
For know, my lords, the states of Christendom,
Mov'd with remorse at these outrageous broils,
Have earnestly implor'd a general peace
Betwixt our nation and the aspiring French;
And see at hand the Dauphin, and his train,
Approacheth, to confer about some matters.

York. Is all our travel turn'd to this effect?
After the slaughter of so many peers,
So many captains, gentlemen, and soldiers,
That in this quarrel have been overthrown,
And sold their bodies for their country's benefit,
Shall we at last conclude effeminate peace?
Have we not lost most part of all the towns,
By treason, falsehood, and by treachery,
Our great progenitors had conquered?—
Oh, Warwick, Warwick! I foresee with grief
The utter loss of all the realm of France.

War. Be patient, York; if we conclude a peace,
It shall be with such strict and severe covenants,
As little shall the Frenchmen gain thereby.

Enter Charles, Alençon, Bastard, and Reignier.

Char. Since, lords of England, it is thus agreed,
That peaceful truce shall be proclaim'd in France,
We come to be informed by yourselves
What the conditions of that league must be.

York. Speak, Winchester; for boiling choler choaks

The hollow passage of my poison'd voice,
By sight of these our baleful¹ enemies.

Win. Charles, and the rest, it is enacted thus:
That—in regard king Henry gives consent,
Of meer compassion, and of lenity,
To ease your country of distressful war,

And suffer you to breathe in fruitful peace,—
You shall become true liegemen to his crown:

And, Charles, upon condition thou wilt swear
To pay him tribute, and submit thyself,

Thou shalt be plac'd as viceroy under him,
And still enjoy thy regal dignity.

Alen. Must he be then as shadow of himself,
Adorn his temples with a coronet²;
And yet, in substance and authority,
Retain but privilege of a private man?

This proffer is absurd and reasonless.

Char. 'Tis known already, that I am possess'd
Of more than half the Gallian territories,
And therein reverenc'd for their lawful king;
Shall I, for lucre of the rest unvanquish'd,
Detract so much from that prerogative,
As to be call'd but viceroy of the whole?

No, lord ambassador; I'll rather keep

¹ Baleful had anciently the same meaning as baneful. ² Coronet is here used for a crown.

That which I have, than, coveting for more,
Be cast from possibility of all. [means

York. Insulting Charles! hast thou by secret
Us'd intercession to obtain a league;
And, now the matter grows to compromise,
Stand'st thou aloof upon comparison?
Either accept the title thou usurp'st,
Of benefit¹ proceeding from our king,
And not of any challenge of desert,
Or we will plague thee with incessant wars.

Reig. My lord, you do not well in obstinacy
To cavil in the course of this contract:
If once it be neglected, ten to one,
We shall not find like opportunity.

Alen. To say the truth, it is your policy,
To save your subjects from such massacre,
And ruthless slaughters, as are daily seen
By our proceeding in hostility:
And therefore take this compact of a truce,
Although you break it when your pleasure serves.

[Aside to the Dauphin.

War. How say'st thou, Charles? shall our condition stand?

Char. It shall:

Only reserv'd, you claim no interest
In any of our towns of garrison.

York. Then swear allegiance to his majesty;
As thou art knight, never to disobey,
Nor be rebellious to the crown of England,
Thou, nor thy nobles, to the crown of England.—

[Charles and the rest give tokens of fealty.
So, now dismiss your army when ye please;
Hang up your ensigns, let your drums be still,
For here we entertain a solemn peace. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.

England.

A Room in the Palace.

Enter Suffolk in conference with King Henry; Gloster, and Exeter.

K. Henry. Your wond'rous rare description, noble earl,
Of beauteous Margaret hath astonish'd me:
Her virtues, graced with external gifts,
Do breed love's settled passions in my heart:
And like as rigour of tempestuous gusts
Provokes the mightiest hulk against the tide;
So am I driven, by breath of her renown,
Either to suffer shipwreck, or arrive
Where I may have fruition of her love.

Suf. Tush, my good lord! this superficial tale
Is but a preface of her worthy praise:
The chief perfections of that lovely dame
(Had I sufficient skill to utter them)
Would make a volume of enticing lines,
Able to ravish any dull conceit.
And, which is more, she is not so divine,
So full replete with choice of all delights,
But, with as humble lowliness of mind,
She is content to be at your command;
Command, I mean, of virtuous chaste intents,

To love and honour Henry as her lord. [sume.

K. Henry. And otherwise will Henry ne'er pre-
Therefore, my lord protector, give consent,
That Margaret may be England's royal queen.

5 Glo. So should I give consent to flatter sin:
You know, my lord, your highness is betroth'd
Unto another lady of esteem:

How shall we then dispense with that contract,
And not deface your honour with reproach?

10 Suf. As doth a ruler with unlawful oaths;
Or one, that, at a triumph² having vow'd
To try his strength, forsaketh yet the lists
By reason of his adversary's odds:

A poor earl's daughter is unequal odds,
15 And therefore may be broke without offence.

Glo. Why, what, I pray, is Margaret more than
Her father is no better than an earl, [that?
Although in glorious titles he excel.

Suf. Yes, my good lord, her father is a king,
20 The king of Naples, and Jerusalem;

And of such great authority in France,
As his alliance will confirm our peace,
And keep the Frenchmen in allegiance.

Glo. And so the earl of Armagnac may do,
25 Because he is near kinsman unto Charles.

Exc. Beside, his wealth doth warrant liberal dower;

While Reignier sooner will receive than give.

Suf. A dower, my lords! disgrace not so your
king,

30 That he should be so abject, base, and poor,
To chuse for wealth, and not for perfect love.

Henry is able to enrich his queen,
And not to seek a queen to make him rich:

35 So worthless peasants bargain for their wives,
As market-men for oxen, sheep, or horse.

But marriage is a matter of more worth,
Than to be dealt in by attorneyship³;

40 Not whom we will, but whom his grace affects,
Must be companion of his nuptial bed:

And, therefore, lords, since he affects her most,
It most of all these reasons bindeth us,
In our opinions she should be preferr'd.

45 For what is wedlock forced, but a hell,
An age of discord and continual strife?

Whereas the contrary bringeth forth bliss,
And is a pattern of celestial peace.

Whom should we match with Henry, being a king,
But Margaret, that is daughter to a king?

50 Her peerless feature, joined with her birth,
Approves her fit for none, but for a king:

Her valiant courage, and undaunted spirit,
(More than in woman commonly is seen) will Answer our hope in issue of a king;

55 For Henry, son unto a conqueror,
Is likely to beget more conquerors,

If with a lady of so high resolve,
As is fair Margaret, he be link'd in love.

Then yield, my lords; and here conclude with me, 60 That Margaret shall be queen, and none but she.

K. Henry. Whether it be through force of your
My noble lord of Suffolk; or for that [report,

¹ Benefit is here a term of law. Be content to live as the beneficiary of our king. ² That is, at the sports by which a triumph is celebrated. ³ i. e. by the discretionary agency of another.

My tender youth was never yet attaint
 With any passion of inflaming love,
 I cannot tell; but this I am assur'd,
 I feel such sharp dissention in my breast,
 Such fierce alarums both of hope and fear,
 As I am sick with working of my thoughts.
 Take, therefore, shipping; post, my lord, to France;
 Agree to any covenants; and procure
 That lady Margaret do vouchsafe to come
 To cross the seas to England, and be crown'd
 King Henry's faithful and anointed queen:
 For your expences and sufficient charge,
 Among the people gather up a tenth.
 Be gone, I say; for, 'till you do return,
 I rest perplexed with a thousand cares.—

And you, good uncle, banish all offence:
 If you do censure¹ me by what you were,
 Not what you are, I know it will excuse
 This sudden execution of my will.
 5 And so conduct me, where from company,
 I may revolve and ruminatè my grief². [Erit.
Glo. Ay, grief, I fear me, both at first and last.
 [Exeunt Gloster and Exeter.
Suf. Thus Suffolk hath prevail'd: and thus he 10 As did the youthful Paris once to Greece; [goes,
 With hope to find the like event in love,
 But prosper better than the Trojan did.
 Margaret shall now be queen, and rule the king:
 But I will rule both her, the king, and realm.
 15 [Erit.

¹ i. e. judge. ² Grief in this line is taken generally for pain or uneasiness; in the line that follows, specially for sorrow.

A C T I.

SCENE I.

The Palace.

Flourish of Trumpets: then Hautboys. Enter King Henry, Duke Humphrey, Salisbury, Warwick, and Beaufort, on the one side; the Queen, Suffolk, York, Somerset, and Buckingham, on the other.

Suf. AS by your high imperial majesty
 I had in charge at my depart for France,
 As procurator to your excellence,
 To marry princess Margaret for your grace;
 So, in the famous ancient city, Tours,—
 In presence of the kings of France and Sicil,
 The dukes of Orleans, Calabar, Bretagne, Alencon, [shops,—
 Seven earls, twelve barons, twenty reverend bi-
 I have perform'd my task, and was espous'd:
 And humbly now upon my bended knee,

In sight of England, and her lordly peers,
 Deliver up my title in the queen
 To your most gracious hand, that are the substance
 Of that great shadow I did represent;
 5 The happiest gift that ever marquess gave,
 The fairest queen that ever king receiv'd.
K. Hen. Suffolk, arise.—Welcome, queen Margaret:
 I can express no kinder sign of love,
 10 Than this kind kiss—O Lord, that lends me life,
 Lend me a heart replete with thankfulness!
 For thou hast given me, in this beauteous face,
 A world of earthly blessings to my soul,
 If sympathy of love unite our thoughts.
 15 Q. Mar. Great king of England, and my gracious lord;
 The mutual conference that my mind hath had—
 By day, by night; waking, and in my dreams;

¹ This and the Third Part, (which were first written under the title of The Contention of York and Lancaster, printed in 1600, and afterwards greatly improved by the author) contain that troublesome period of this prince's reign, which took in the whole contention betwixt the houses of York and Lancaster; and under that title were these two plays first acted and published. The present scene opens with king Henry's marriage, which was in the twenty-third year of his reign; and closes with the first battle fought at St. Alban's, and won by the York faction, in the thirty-third year of his reign: so that it comprises the history and transactions of ten years. It is apparent that this play begins where the former ends, and continues the series of transactions of which it pre-supposes the First Part already known. In

In courtly company, or at my beads,—
With you mine alder-lievest¹ sovereign,
Makes me the bolder to salute my king
With ruder terms; such as my wit affords,
And over-joy of heart doth minister. [speech,

K. Henry. Her sight did ravish: but her grace in Her words y-clad with wisdom's majesty,
Makes me, from wondering, fall to weeping joys;
Such is the fulness of my heart's content.—

Lords, with one cheerful voice welcome my love.

All. Long live queen Margaret, England's happiness!

2. Mar. We thank you all. [Flourish.

Suf. My lord protector, so it please your grace,
Here are the articles of contracted peace,
Between our sovereign and the French king Charles,
For eighteen months concluded by consent.

Glo. reads.] Imprimis, "It is agreed between
"the French king, Charles, and William de la
"Poole, marquess of Suffolk, ambassador for Hen"ry king of England,—that the said Henry shall
"espouse the lady Margaret, daughter to Reignier
"king of Naples, Sicilia, and Jerusalem; and "crown her queen of England, ere the thirtieth
"of May next ensuing."

Item, "That the dutchies of Anjou and of "Maine shall be released and delivered to the
"king her father."

K. Henry. Uncle, how now?

Glo. Pardon me, gracious lord;
Some sudden qualm hath struck me to the heart,
And dimm'd mine eyes, that I can read no further.

K. Henry. Uncle of Winchester, I pray, read on.

Win. Item, "It is further agreed between them,
"that the dutchies of Anjou and Maine shall be "released and delivered to the king her father;
"and she sent over of the king of England's own
"proper cost and charges, without having any
"dowry."

K. Henry. They please us well.—Lord marquess, kneel down;

We here create thee the first duke of Suffolk,
And gird thee with the sword.—

Cousin of York, we here discharge your grace
From being regent in the parts of France,
'Till term of eighteen months be full expir'd.—

Thanks, uncle Winchester, Gloster, York, and Buckingham,

Somerset, Salisbury, and Warwick;

We thank you all for this great favour done,

In entertainment to my princely queen.

Come, let us in; and with all speed provide

To see her coronation be perform'd.

[Exeunt King, Queen, and Suffolk.

Glo. Brave peers of England, pillars of the state,
To you duke Humphrey must unload his grief,
Your grief, the common grief of all the land.

What! did my brother Henry spend his youth,
His valour, coin, and people, in the wars?

Did he so often lodge in open field,
In winter's cold, and summer's parching heat,
To conquer France, his true inheritance?
And did my brother Bedford toil his wits,
To keep by policy what Henry got?

Have you yourselves, Somerset, Buckingham,
Brave York, and Salisbury, victorious Warwick,
Receiv'd deep scars in France and Normandy?

Or hath mine uncle Beaufort, and myself,

With all the learned council of the realm,

Study'd so long, sat in the council-house

Early and late, debating to and fro [awe?

How France and Frenchmen might be kept in

Or hath his highness in his infancy

Been crown'd in Paris, in despite of foes;

And shall these labours, and these honours, die?

Shall Henry's conquest, Bedford's vigilance,

Your deeds of war, and all our councils die?

O peers of England, shameful is this league!

Fatal this marriage! cancelling your fame;

Blotting your names from books of memory;

Razing the characters of your renown;

Reversing monuments of conquer'd France;

Undoing all, as all had never been! [course?

Car. Nephew, what means this passionate dis-

This peroration with such circumstance?

For France, 'tis ours; and we will keep it still.

Glo. Ay, uncle, we will keep it, if we can;

But now it is impossible we should;

Suf. Suffolk, the new-made duke that rules the roast,

Hath given the dutchies of Anjou and Maine

Unto the poor king Reignier, whose large style

Agrees not with the leanness of his purse.

Sal. Now, by the death of Him who dy'd for all,

These counties were the keys of Normandy:—

But wherefore weeps Warwick, my valiant son?

War. For grief that they are past recovery:

For, were there hope to conquer them again,

My sword should shed hot blood, mine eyes not tears,

Anjou and Maine! myself did win them both;

Those provinces these arms of mine did conquer;

And are the cities, that I got with wounds,

Deliver'd up again with peaceful words?

Mort Dieu!

York. For Suffolk's duke—may he be suffocate,

That dims the honour of this warlike isle!

France should have torn and rent my very heart,

Before I would have yielded to this league.

I never read but England's kings have had

Large sums of gold, and dowries, with their wives;

And our king Henry gives away his own,

To match with her that brings no vantages.

Glo. A proper jest, and never heard before,

That Suffolk should demand a whole fifteenth,

For costs and charges in transporting her!

She should have staid in France, and starv'd in

Before—— [France,

Car. My lord of Gloster, now ye grow too hot;

It was the pleasure of my lord the king.

¹ According to Warburton, alder-lievest is an old English word given to him to whom the speaker is supremely attached; lievest being the superlative of the comparative levar, rather, from lief; but Mr. Steevens asserts alder-lievest to be a corruption of the German word alder-liebste, beloved above all things; and adds, that the word is used by Chaucer.

² Meaping, this speech crowded with so many

Glo. My lord of Winchester, I know your mind;
'Tis not my speeches that you do mislike,
But 'tis my presence that doth trouble you.
Rancour will out: Proud prelate, in thy face
I see thy fury: if I longer stay,
We shall begin our ancient bickerings¹.—
Farewell, my lords; and say, when I am gone,
I prophesy'd—France will be lost ere long. [Exit.]

Car. So, there goes our protector in a rage.
'Tis known to you, he is mine enemy:
Nay, more, an enemy unto you all;
And no great friend, I fear me, to the king.
Consider, lords—he is the next of blood,
And heir apparent to the English crown;
Had Henry got an empire by his marriage,
And all the wealthy kingdoms of the west,
There's reason he should be displeas'd at it.
Look to it, lords! let not his smoothing words
Bewitch your hearts; be wise, and circumspect.
What though the common people favour him,
Calling him—Humphrey, the good duke of Gloster;
Clapping their hands, and crying with loud voice—
Jesu maintain your royal excellence!

With—God preserve the good duke Humphrey!
I fear me, lords, for all this flattering gloss,
He will be found a dangerous protector.

Buck. Why should he then protect our sovereign,
He being of age to govern of himself?
Cousin of Somerset, join you with me,
And all together,—with the duke of Suffolk,—
We'll quickly hoise duke Humphrey from his seat.

Car. This weighty business will not brook delay;
I'll to the duke of Suffolk presently. [Exit.]

Som. Cousin of Buckingham, though Humphrey's pride,
And greatness of his place, be grief to us,
Yet let us watch the haughty cardinal;
His insolence is more intolerable
Than all the princes in the land beside;
If Gloster be displac'd, he'll be protector.

Buck. Thou, or I, Somerset, will be protector,
Despight duke Humphrey, or the cardinal.

[Exeunt Buckingham and Somerset.]

Sal. Pride went before, ambition follows him.
While these do labour for their own preferment,
Behoves it us to labour for the realm.
I never saw but Humphrey duke of Gloster
Did bear him like a noble gentleman.
Oft have I seen the haughty cardinal—
More like a soldier, than a man o' the church,
As stout, and proud, as he were lord of all,—
Swear like a ruffian, and demean himself
Unlike the ruler of a common weal.—
Warwick my son, the comfort of my age!
Thy deeds, thy plainness, and thy house-keeping,
Hath won the greatest favour of the commons,
Excepting none but good duke Humphrey.—
And, brother York, thy acts in Ireland,
In bringing them to civil discipline;
Thy late exploits done in the heart of France,
When thou wert regent for our sovereign, [ple:
Have made thee fear'd, and honour'd, of the peo-

Join we together, for the public good;
In what we can, to bridle and suppress
The pride of Suffolk, and the cardinal,
With Somerset's and Buckingham's ambition;
5 And, as we may, cherish duke Humphrey's deeds,
While they do tend² the profit of the land.

War. So God help Warwick, as he loves the land,
And common profit of his country!

York. And so says York, for he hath greatest cause. [Aside.]

Sal. Then let's make haste, and look unto the main.

War. Unto the main! Oh father, Maine is lost;
That Maine, which by main force Warwick did win,
15 And would have kept, so long as breath did last:
Main chance, father, you meant; but I meant Maine;

Which I will win from France, or else be slain.
[Exeunt Warwick and Salisbury.]

York. Anjou and Maine are given to the French;
Paris is lost; the state of Normandy
Stands on a tickle³ point, now they are gone.
Suffolk concluded on the articles;

The peers agreed; and Henry was well pleas'd,
25 To change two dukedoms for a duke's fair daughter.
I cannot blame them all: What is't to them?
'Tis thine they give away, and not their own.

Pirates may make cheappennyworth of their pillage,
And purchase friends, and give to courtezans,
30 Still revelling, like lords, 'till all be gone:

While as the silly owner of the goods
Weeps over them, and wrings his hapless hands,
And shakes his head, and trembling stands aloof,
While all is shar'd, and all is borne away;

35 Ready to starve, and dares not touch his own.
So York must sit, and fret, and bite his tongue,
While his own lands are bargain'd for, and sold.
Methinks, the realms of England, France, and Ire-
Bear that proportion to my flesh and blood, [land,
40 As did the fatal brand Althea burnt
Unto the prince's heart of Calydon⁴.

Anjou and Maine, both given unto the French!
Cold news for me; for I had hope of France,
Even as I have of fertile England's soil.

45 A day will come, when York shall claim his own:
And therefore I will take the Nevils' parts,
And make a shew of love to proud duke Humphrey,

And, when I spy advantage, claim the crown,
50 For that's the golden mark I seek to hit:
Nor shall proud Lancaster usurp my right,
Nor hold the sceptre in his childish fist,
Nor wear the diadem upon his head,
Whose church-like humour fits not for a crown.

55 Then, York, be still a while, 'till time do serve:
Watch thou, and wake, when others be asleep,
To pry into the secrets of the state;

'Till Henry, surfeiting in joys of love, [queen,
With his new bride, and England's dear-bought 60 And Humphrey with the peers be fall'n at jars:
Then will I raise aloft the milk-white rose,
With whose sweet smell the air shall be perfum'd;

¹ To bicker is to skirmish.

² i. e. direct to.

³ Tickle for ticklish.

⁴ i. e. Meleager.

And in my standard bear the arms of York,
To grapple with the house of Lancaster;
And, force perforce, I'll make him yield the crown,
Whose bookish rule hath pull'd fair England down.

[Exit York.] 5

SCENE II.

The Duke of Gloster's House.

Enter Duke Humphrey and his wife Eleanor.

Elean. Why droops my lord, like over-ripen'd 10
corn,

Hanging the head at Ceres' plenteous load?
Why doth the great duke Humphrey knit his brows,
As frowning at the favours of the world?
Why are thine eyes fix'd to the sullen earth,
Gazing on that which seems to dim thy sight?
What see'st thou there? king Henry's diadem,
Inchas'd with all the honours of the world?
If so, gaze on, and grovel on thy face,
Until thy head be circled with the same.
Put forth thy hand, reach at the glorious gold:—
What, is't too short? I'll lengthen it with mine:
And, having both together heav'd it up,
We'll both together lift our heads to heaven;
And never more abase our sight so low
As to vouchsafe one glance unto the ground.

Glo. O Nell, sweet Nell, if thou dost love thy Banish the canker of ambitious thoughts: [lord,
And may that thought, when I imagine ill
Against my king and nephew, virtuous Henry,
Be my last breathing in this mortal world!
My troublous dream this night doth make me sad.

Elean. What dream'd my lord? tell me, and I'll requite it

With sweet rehearsal of my morning's dream.

Glo. Methought, this staff, mine office-badge in court,

Was broke in twain; by whom, I have forgot,
But, as I think, it was by the cardinal;
And on the pieces of the broken wand [set, 40
Were plac'd the heads of Edmund duke of Somer-
And William de la Poole first duke of Suffolk.
This was my dream; what it doth bode, God knows.

Elean. Tut, this was nothing but an argument,
That he, that breaks a stick of Gloster's grove, 45
Shall lose his head for his presumption.

But list to me, my Humphrey, my sweet duke:
Methought, I sat in seat of majesty,
In the cathedral church of Westminster,
And in that chair where kings and queens are 50
crown'd;

Where Henry, and dame Margaret, kneel'd to me,
And on my head did set the diadem.

Glo. Nay, Eleanor, then must I chide outright:
Presumptuous dame, ill-nurtur'd Eleanor!
Art thou not second woman in the realm;
And the protector's wife, belov'd of him?
Hast thou not worldly pleasure at command,
Above the reach or compass of thy thought?
And wilt thou still be hammering treachery,
To tumble down thy husband, and thyself,
From top of honour to disgrace's feet?
Away from me, and let me hear no more.

Elean. What, what, my lord! are you so choleric
With Eleanor, for telling but her dream?
Next time, I'll keep my dreams unto myself,
And not be check'd.

Glo. Nay, be not angry, I am pleas'd again.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. My lord protector, 'tis his highness' pleasure,
You do prepare to ride unto Saint Albans,
Whereas¹ the king and queen do mean to hawk.

Glo. I go.—Come, Nell, thou wilt ride with us?

Elean. Yes, my good lord, I'll follow presently.

[Exit Gloster.]

Follow I must, I cannot go before,
While Gloster bears this base and humble mind.
Were I a man, a duke, and next of blood, 15
I would remove these tedious stumbling-blocks,
And smooth my way upon their headless necks:
And, being a woman, I will not be slack
To play my part in fortune's pageant. [man,
Where are you there? Sir John! nay, fear not, 20
We are alone; here's none but thee and I.

Enter Hume.

Hume. Jesu preserve your royal majesty!

Elean. My majesty! why, man, I am but grace.

Hume. But, by the grace of God, and Hume's advice,

Your grace's title shall be multiply'd.

Elean. What say'st thou, man? hast thou as yet conferr'd 30

With Margery Jourdain, the cunning witch;
And Roger Bolingbroke, the conjurer?

And will they undertake to do me good?

Hume. This they have promised,—to shew your highness 35

A spirit rais'd from depth of under ground,
That shall make answer to such questions,
As by your grace shall be propounded him.

Elean. It is enough; I'll think upon the questions: 40

When from Saint Albans we do make return,
We'll see those things effected to the full.

Here, Hume, take this reward: make merry, man,
With thy confederates in this weighty cause.

[Exit Eleanor.]

Hume. Hume must make merry with the dutchess' gold;

Marry, and shall. But, how now, Sir John Hume?
Seal up your lips, and give no words but—mum!
The business asketh silent secrecy.

Dame Eleanor gives gold, to bring the witch:
Gold cannot come amiss, were she a devil.

Yet have I gold flies from another coast:

I dare not say, from the rich cardinal,

55 And from the great and new-made duke of Suffolk;
Yet I do find it so: for, to be plain,

They, knowing dame Eleanor's aspiring humour,
Have hired me to undermine the dutchess,
And buz these conjurations in her brain.

60 They say, A crafty knave does need no broker²;
Yet am I Suffolk's and the cardinal's broker.

Hume, if you take not heed, you shall go near
To call them both a pair of crafty knaves.

¹ Whereas is the same as where.

² This is a proverbial expression.

Well, so it stands: And thus, I fear, at last,
Hume's knavery will be the dutchess' wreck;
And her attainure will be Humphrey's fall:
Sort ¹ how it will, I shall have gold for all. [Exit.]

S C E N E III.

An Apartment in the Palace.

Enter three or four Petitioners, Peter, the Armourer's Man, being one.

1 Pet. My masters, let's stand close; my lord protector will come this way by-and-by, and then we may deliver our supplications in the quill ².

2 Pet. Marry, the Lord protect him, for he's a good man! Jesu bless him!

Enter Suffolk, and Queen.

1 Pet. Here a' comes, methinks, and the queen with him: I'll be the first, sure.

2 Pet. Come back, fool; this is the duke of Suffolk, and not my lord protector.

Suf. How now, fellow? wouldst any thing with me?

1 Pet. I pray, my lord, pardon me! I took ye for my lord protector.

2 Mar. For my lord protector! are your supplications to his lordship? Let me see them: what is thine?

1 Pet. Mine is, an't please your grace, against John Goodman, my lord cardinal's man, for keeping my house, and lands, and wife and all, from me.

Suf. Thy wife too? that is some wrong, indeed. What's your's! what's here! [reads.] Against the duke of Suffolk for enclosing the commons of Melford.—How now, sir knave?

2 Pet. Alas, sir, I am but a poor petitioner of our whole township.

Peter. Against my master, Thomas Horner, for saying, That the duke of York was rightful heir to the crown.

2 Mar. What say'st thou? Did the duke of York say, he was rightful heir to the crown?

Peter. That my mistress was? No, forsooth: my master said, That he was; and that the king was an usurper.

Suf. Who is there?—Take this fellow in, and send for his master with a pursuivant presently:—we'll hear more of your matter before the king.

[Exit Peter guarded.]

2 Mar. And as for you, that love to be protected

Under the wings of our protector's grace,
Begin your suits anew, and sue to him.

[Tears the petitions.]

Away, base cullions!—Suffolk, let them go.

All. Come, let's be gone. [Exeunt Petitioners.]

2 Mar. My lord of Suffolk, say, is this the guise, is this the fashion in the court of England?

5 Is this the govrenment of Britain's isle,

And this the royalty of Albion's king?

What, shall king Henry be a pupil still,

Under the surly Gloster's governance?

Am I a queen in title and in style,

10 And must be made a subject to a duke?

I tell thee, Poole, when in the city Tours

Thou ran'st a tilt in honour of my love,

And stol'st away the ladies' hearts of France;

I thought, king Henry had resembled thee,

15 In courage, courtship, and proportion:

But all his mind is bent to holiness,

To number Ave-Maries on his beads:

His champions are—the prophets, and apostles;

His weapons, holy saws of sacred writ;

20 His study is his tilt-yard, and his loves

Are brazen images of canoniz'd saints.

I would, the college of the cardinals

Would chuse him pope, and carry him to Rome,

And set the triple crown upon his head;

25 That were a state fit for his holiness.

Suf. Madam, be patient: as I was cause

Your highness came to England, so will I

In England work your grace's full content.

2 Mar. Beside the haught protector, have we Beaufort,

30 Theimperiouschurchman; Somerset, Buckingham,

And grumbling York: and not the least of these,

But can do more in England than the king.

Suf. And he of these, that can do most of all,

35 Cannot do more in England than the Nevils:

Salisbury and Warwick are no simple peers.

2 Mar. Not all these lords do vex me half so much,

As that proud dame, the lord protector's wife.

40 She sweeps it through the court with troops of ladies,

More like an empress, than duke Humphrey's wife;

Strangers in court do take her for the queen:

She bears a duke's revenues on her back,

45 And in her heart she scorns our poverty:

Shall I not live to be aveng'd on her?

Contemptuous base-born callat as she is,

She vaunted 'mongst her minions t'other day,

The very train of her worst wearing-gown

50 Was better worth than all my father's lands,

'Till Suffolk gave two dukedoms for his daughter.

Suf. Madam, myself have lim'd a bush for her;

And plac'd a quire of such enticing birds,

¹ i. e. happen. ² Mr. Steevens thinks, that the phrase in the quill, or in quill, implies no more than our written or penn'd supplications. Mr. Tollet supposes it may mean, with great exactness and observance of form, or with the utmost punctilio of ceremony; that it seems to be taken from part of the dress of our ancestors, whose ruffs were quilled; and that while these were worn, it might be the vogue to say, such a thing is in the quill, i. e. in the reigning mode of taste, as it has been since customary to use the similar phrase of a thing being in print, to express the same circumstance of exactness. Another critic and commentator, however, conjectures, that this may be supposed to have been a phrase formerly in use, and the same with the French en quille, which is said of a man when he stands upright upon his feet without stirring from the place. The proper sense of quille in French is a nine-pin, and in some parts of England nine-pins are still called cayls. Quelle in the old British language also signifies any piece of wood set upright.

That she will light to listen to their lays,
And never mount to trouble you again.
So, let her rest: And, madam, list to me;
For I am bold to counsel you in this.
Although we fancy not the cardinal,
Yet must we join with him, and with the lords,
'Till we have brought duke Humphrey in disgrace.
As for the duke of York,—this late complaint¹
Will make but little for his benefit:
So, one by one, we'll weed them all at last,
And you yourself shall steer the happy helm.

To them enter King Henry, Duke Humphrey, Cardinal Beaufort, Buckingham, York, Salisbury, Warwick, and the Dutchess of Gloster.

K. Henry. For my part, noble lords, I care not which;

Or Somerset, or York, all's one to me. [France, York. If York have ill demean'd himself in Then let him be deny'd the regentship.

Som. If Somerset be unworthy of the place,
Let York be regent, I will yield to him. [no,

War. Whether your grace be worthy, yea, or Dispute not that; York is the worthier.

Car. Ambitious Warwick, let thy betters speak.

War. The cardinal's not my better in the field.

Buck. All in this presence are thy betters,
Warwick.

War. Warwick may live to be the best of all.

Sal. Peace, son;—and shew some reason,
Buckingham,

Why Somerset should be preferr'd in this. [so.

2. Mar. Because the king, forsooth, will have it

Glo. Madam, the king is old enough himself
To give his censure²: these are no women's matters. [grace

2. Mar. If he be old enough, what needs your
To be protector of his excellence?

Glo. Madam, I am protector of the realm;
And, at his pleasure, will resign my place.

Suf. Resign it then, and leave thine insolence.
Since thou wert king, (as who is king, but thou?)
The commonwealth hath daily run to wreck:
The Dauphin hath prevail'd beyond the seas;
And all the peers and nobles of the realm
Have been as bondmen to thy sovereignty.

Car. The commons hast thou rack'd; the clergy's bags

Are lank and lean with thy extortions. [attire,

Som. Thy sumptuous buildings, and thy wife's
Have cost a mass of publick treasury.

Buck. Thy cruelty in execution,
Upon offenders, hath exceeded law,
And left thee to the mercy of the law. [France,

2. Mar. Thy sale of offices, and towns in
If they were known, as the suspect is great,—
Would make thee quickly hop without thy head.

[Exit Gloster. The Queen drops her fan.

Give me my fan: What, minion! can you not?

[Gives the Dutchess a box on the ear.

I cry you mercy, madam; Was it you?

Elean. Was't I? yea, I it was, proud French-
woman:

Could I come near your beauty with my nails,
I'd set my ten commandments in your face.

K. Henry. Sweet aunt, be quiet; 'twas against her will. [in time;

Elean. Against her will!—Good king, look to't
She'll hamper thee, and dandle thee like a baby:
Tho' in this place most master wears no breeches,
10 She shall not strike dame Eleanor unreveng'd.

[Exit Eleanor.

Buck. Lord cardinal, I will follow Eleanor,
And listen after Humphrey, how he proceeds:
She's tickled now; her fume can need no spurs,
15 She'll gallop fast enough to her destruction.

[Exit Buckingham.

Re-enter Duke Humphrey.

Glo. Now, lords, my choler being over-blown
With walking once about the quadrangle,
20 I come to talk of commonwealth affairs.

As for your spiteful false objections,
Prove them, and I lie open to the law:

But God in mercy deal so with my soul,
As I in duty love my king and country!

But, to the matter that we have in hand:—

I say, my sovereign, York is meetest man
To be your regent in the realm of France.

Suf. Before we make election, give me leave
To shew some reason, of no little force,
That York is most unmeet of any man.

York. I'll tell thee, Suffolk, why I am unmeet.
First, for I cannot flatter thee in pride:

Next, if I be appointed for the place,
My lord of Somerset will keep me here,

Without discharge, money, or furniture,
Till France be won into the Dauphin's hands.

Last time, I danc'd attendance on his will,
Till Paris was besieg'd, famish'd, and lost.

War. That can I witness; and a fouler fact
40 Did never traitor in the land commit.

Suf. Peace, head-strong Warwick!

War. Image of pride, why should I hold my peace?

Enter Horner the Armourer, and his Man Peter, guarded.

Suf. Because here is a man accus'd of treason:
Pray God, the duke of York excuse himself!

York. Doth any one accuse York for a traitor?

K. Henry. What mean'st thou, Suffolk? tell me: What are these?

Suf. Please it your majesty, this is the man
That doth accuse his master of high treason:
His words were these;—that Richard, duke of
York,

Was rightful heir unto the English crown;
And that your majesty was an usurper.

K. Henry. Say, man, were these thy words?

Arm. An't shall please your majesty, I never said nor thought any such matter: God is my witness, I am falsely accus'd by the villain.

Peter. By these ten bones, my lord, [holding up

¹ i. e. the complaint of Peter the armourer's man against his master, for saying that York was the rightful king. ² i. e. judgement or opinion.

his hands] he did speak them to me in the garret one night, as we were scouring my lord of York's armour.

York. Base dunghill villain, and mechanical, I'll have thy head for this thy traitor's speech:— I do beseech your royal majesty, Let him have all the rigour of the law.

Arm. Alas, my lord, hang me, if ever I spake the words. My accuser is my prentice; and when I did correct him for his fault the other day, he did vow upon his knees he would be even with me: I have good witness of this; therefore, I beseech your majesty, do not cast away an honest man for a villain's accusation.

K. Henry. Uncle, what shall we say to this in law?

Glo. This doom, my lord, if I may judge. Let Somerset be regent o'er the French, Because in York this breeds suspicion: And let these have a day appointed them For single combat, in convenient place; For he hath witness of his servant's malice: This is the law, and this duke Humphrey's doom.

K. Henry. Then be it so. My lord of Somerset, We make your grace lord regent o'er the French.

Som. I humbly thank your royal majesty.

Arm. And I accept the combat willingly.

Peter. Alas, my lord, I cannot fight; for God's sake, pity my case! the spight of a man prevaileth against me. O Lord, have mercy upon me! I shall never be able to fight a blow: O Lord, my heart!—

Glo. Sirrah, or you must fight, or else be hang'd.

K. Henry. Away with them to prison: and the day

Of combat shall be the last of the next month.— Come, Somerset, we'll see thee sent away.

[Flourish. Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.

Duke Humphrey's Garden.

Enter Mother Jourdain, Hume, Southwel, and Bolingbroke.

Hume. Come, my masters; the dutchess, I tell you, expects performance of your promises.

Boling. Master Hume, we are therefore provided: Will her ladyship behold and hear our exorcisms?

Hume. Ay; what else? fear you not her courage.

Boling. I have heard her reported to be a woman of an invincible spirit: But it shall be convenient, master Hume, that you be by her aloft, while we be busy below; and so, I pray you, go in God's name, and leave us [Exit Hume]. Mother Jourdain, be you prostrate, and grovel on the earth: John Southwel, read you; and let us to our work.

Enter Eleanor, above.

Elean. Well said, my masters; and welcome all. To this geer; the sooner the better.

Boling. Patience, good lady; wizards know their times:

Deep night, dark night, the silent¹ of the night, The time of night when Troy was set on fire;

The time when scritch-owls cry, and ban-dogs² howl,

When spirits walk, and ghosts break up their graves, That time best fits the work we have in hand.

Madam, sit you, and fear not; whom we raise,

We will make fast within a hallow'd verge.

[Here they perform the ceremonies, and make the circle; Bolingbroke, or Southwel reads, Con-juro te, &c.]

It thunders and lightens terribly; then the spirit riseth.

Spirit. Adsum.

M. Jourd. Asmath,

By the eternal God, whose name and power

Thou tremblest at, answer that I shall ask;

For, 'till thou speak, thou shalt not pass from hence.

Spirit. Ask what thou wilt:—That I had said and done!

Boling. First, of the king. What shall of him become? [Reading out of a paper.]

Spirit. The duke yet lives, that Henry shall depose;

But him out-live, and die a violent death.

[As the spirit speaks, they write the answer.]

Boling. What fates await the duke of Suffolk?

Spirit. By water shall he die, and take his end.

Boling. What shall befall the duke of Somerset?

Spirit. Let him shun castles;

Safer shall he be upon the sandy plains, Than where castles mounted stand.

Have done, for more I hardly can endure. [lake:]

Boling. Descend to darkness, and the burning False fiend, avoid!

[Thunder and lightning. Spirit descends.]

Enter the Duke of York, and the Duke of Buckingham, with their guard, and break in.

York. Lay hands upon these traitors, and their trash.—

Beldame, I think, we watch'd you at an inch.— What, madam, are you there? the king and commonweal

Are deep indebted for this piece of pains;

My lord protector will, I doubt it not,

See you well guerdon'd³ for these good deserts.

Elean. Not half so bad as thine to England's king,

Injurious duke; that threat'st where is no cause.

Buck. True, madam, none at all. What call you this? [Shewing her the papers.]

Away with them; let them be clapp'd up close,

And kept asunder:—You, madam, shall with us:—

Stafford, take her to thee.—

We'll see your trinkets here forth-coming all;

Away! [Exeunt guards with Jourdain, Southwel, &c.]

¹ Silent for silence. ² Mr. Steevens says, that the etymology of the word ban-dogs is unsettled. They seem, however, to have been designed by poets to signify some terrific beings whose office it was to make night hideous. ³ i. e. rewarded.

York. Lord Buckingham, methinks, you watch'd her well:
A pretty plot, well chose to build upon!
Now, pray, my lord, let's see the devil's writ.
What have we here? [Reads.]
*The duke yet lives, that Henry shall depose;
But him out-live, and die a violent death.* [posse.
Why, this is just, Aio te, Æacida, Romanos vincere
Well, to the rest:
*Tell me what fate awaits the duke of Suffolk?
By water shall he die, and take his end.
What shall betide the duke of Somerset?
Let him shun castles;
Safer shall he be on the sandy plains,
Than where castles mounted stand.*

Come, come, my lords:
These oracles are hardly attain'd,
And hardly understood.
The king is now in progress towards Saint Albans;
With him the husband of this lovely lady: [them;
Thither go these news, as fast as horse can carry
A sorry breakfast for my lord protector. [York, Buck. Your grace shall give me leave, my lord of
To be the post, in hope of his reward.
10 York. At your pleasure, my good lord.
Who's within there, ho!
Enter a Serving-man.
Invite my lords of Salisbury, and Warwick,
To sup with me to-morrow night.——Away!
15 [Exeunt.

A C T II.

S C E N E I.

At Saint Albans.

Enter King Henry, Queen, Gloster, Cardinal, and Suffolk, with Falconers hallooing.

2. Mar. BELIEVE me, lords, for flying at the brook¹,

I saw not better sport these seven years' day:
Yet, by your leave, the wind was very high;
And, ten to one, old Joan had not gone out².

K. Henry. But what a point, my lord, your falcon made,

And what a pitch she flew above the rest!—
To see how God in all his creatures works!
Yea, man and birds are fain³ of climbing high.

Suf. No marvel, an it like your majesty,
My lord protector's hawks do tower so well;
They know, their master loves to be aloft,
And bears his thoughts above his falcon's pitch.

Glo. My lord, 'tis but a base ignoble mind
That mounts no higher than a bird can soar.

Car. I thought as much; he'd be above the clouds. [that?] 45

Glo. Ay, my lord cardinal; How think you by
Were it not good, your grace could fly to heaven?

K. Henry. The treasury of everlasting joy!

Car. Thy heaven is on earth; thine eyes and thoughts

Beat⁴ on a crown, the treasure of thy heart;
Pernicious protector, dangerous peer,
That smooth'st it so with king and common weal!

Glo. What, cardinal, is your priesthood grown so
Tantane animis caelestibus ira? [peremptory?] 55
Churchmen so hot? good uncle, hide such malice;
With such holiness can you do it?

Suf. No malice, sir; no more than well becomes
So good a quarrel, and so bad a peer.

25 Glo. As who, my lord?

Suf. Why, as yourself, my lord;
An't like your lordly lord-protectorship. [lence.

Glo. Why, Suffolk, England knows thine inso-
2. Mar. And thy ambition, Gloster.

30 K. Henry. I pr'ythee, peace, good queen;
And whet not on these too too furious peers,
For blessed are the peace-makers on earth.

Car. Let me be blessed for the peace I make,
Against this proud protector, with my sword!

35 Glo. Faith, holy uncle, 'would 'twere come to that!

Car. Marry, when thou dar'st.

Glo. Make up no factious numbers for the matter, } Aside.

40 In thine own person answer thy abuse.

Car. Ay, where thou dar'st not peep:
an if thou dar'st,

This evening, on the east side of the grove.

K. Henry. How now, my lords?

45 Car. Believe me, cousin Gloster,
Had not your man put up the fowl so suddenly,
We'd had more sport.—Come with thy two-hand sword. [Aside to Gloster.

Glo. True, uncle.

50 Are you advis'd?—the east side of the grove?

Cardinal, I am with you. [Aside.

K. Henry. Why, how now, uncle Gloster?

Glo. Talking of hawking; nothing else, my lord.—— [for this,

55 Now, by God's mother, priest, I'll shave your crown
Or all my fence⁵ shall fail. [Aside.

Car. [aside] Medice, te ipsum;

¹ This is the falconer's term for hawking at water-fowl. ² The meaning, according to Dr. Johnson, is, that the wind being high, it was ten to one that the old hawk had flown quite away; a trick which hawks often play their masters in windy weather; while Dr. Percy says, that the passage signifies, that the wind was so high, it was ten to one that old Joan would not have taken her flight at the game. Utrum horum mavis, accipe. ³ i. e. glad. ⁴ To bait or beat (bathe) is a term in falconry. ⁵ Fence is the art of defence.

Protector, see to't well, protect yourself.

K. Henry. The winds grow high; so do your stomachs, lords.

How irksome is this music to my heart!

When such strings jar, what hopes of harmony?

I pray, my lords, let me compound this strife.

Enter one, crying, A miracle!

Glo. What means this noise?

Fellow, what miracle dost thou proclaim?

One. A miracle! a miracle!

Suf. Come to the king, and tell him what miracle.

One. Forsooth, a blind man at saint Alban's shrine, Within this half-hour, hath receiv'd his sight;

A man, that ne'er saw in his life before. [soul]

K. Henry. Now, God be prais'd! that to believing Gives light in darkness, comfort in despair!

Enter the Mayor of Saint Albans, and his brethren, bearing Simpcox between two in a chair, Simpcox's wife following.

Car. Here come the townsmen on procession, To present your highness with the man.

K. Henry. Great is his comfort in this earthly vale, Though by his sight his sin be multiply'd. [king]

Glo. Stand by, my masters, bring him near the His highness' pleasure is to talk with him. [stance]

K. Henry. Good fellow, tell us here the circum- That we for thee may glorify the Lord.

What, hast thou been long blind, and now restor'd?

Simp. Born blind, an't please your grace.

Wife. Ay, indeed was he.

Suf. What woman is this?

Wife. His wife, an't like your worship.

Glo. Had'st thou been his mother, thou could'st have better told.

K. Henry. Where wert thou born? [grace]

Simp. At Berwick in the north, an't like your

K. Henry. Poor soul! God's goodness hath been great to thee:

Let never day nor night unhallow'd pass, But still remember what the Lord hath done.

Queen. Tell me, good fellow, cam'st thou here Or of devotion, to this holy shrine? [by chance]

Simp. God knows, of pure devotion; being call'd A hundred times, and oftener, in my sleep

By good saint Alban; who said,—Saunder, come; Come, offer at my shrine, and I will help thee.

Wife. Most true, forsooth; and many time and oft Myself have heard a voice to call him so.

Car. What, art thou lame?

Simp. Ay, God Almighty help me!

Suf. How cam'st thou so?

Simp. A fall off of a tree.

Wife. A plum-tree, master.

Glo. How long hast thou been blind?

Simp. O, born so, master.

Glo. What, and would'st climb a tree?

Simp. But that in all my life, when I was a youth.

Wife. Too true; and bough this climbing very dear.

Glo. Mass, thou lov'dst plums well, that would'st venture so. [damsons]

Simp. Alas, good master, my wife desir'd some And made me climb, with danger of my life.

Glo. A subtle knave! but yet it shall not serve.— Let me see thine eyes:—wink now;—now open

In my opinion, yet thou see'st not well. [them:—]

Simp. Yes, master, clear as day; I thank God, and saint Alban. [cloak of?]

Glo. Say'st thou me so? What colour is this

Simp. Red, master; red as blood. [gown of?]

Glo. Why, that's well said; what colour is my Simp. Black, forsooth; coal-black, as jet.

K. Henry. Why then, thou know'st what colour jet is of?

Suf. And yet, I think, jet did he never see.

Glo. But cloaks, and gowns, before this day, a many.

Wife. Never, before this day, in all his life.

Glo. Tell me, sirrah, what's my name?

Simp. Alas, master, I know not.

Glo. What's his name?

Simp. I know not.

Glo. Nor his?

Simp. No, indeed, master.

Glo. What's thine own name?

Simp. Saunder Simpcox, an if it please you, master.

Glo. Then, Saunder, sit there, the lyingest knave In Christendom. If thou hadst been born blind, Thou might'st as well have known all our names, as thus

To name the several colours we do wear. Sight may distinguish colours; but suddenly To nominate them all, it is impossible.—

My lords, saint Alban here hath done a miracle;

Would ye not think that cupping to be great, That could restore this cripple to his legs again?

Simp. O, master, that you could!

Glo. My masters of saint Alban's, Have you not beadles in your town, and things Call'd whips?

Mayor. Yes, my lord, if it please your grace.

Glo. Then send for one presently.

Mayor. Sirrah, go fetch the beadle hither straight. [Exit Messenger.]

Glo. Now fetch me a stool hither by-and-by. Now, sirrah, if you mean to save yourself from whipping, leap me over this stool, and run away.

Simp. Alas, master, I am not able to stand alone; You go about to torture me in vain.

Enter a Beadle, with whips.

Glo. Well, sir, we must have you find your legs. Sirrah, beadle, whip him 'till he leap over that same stool.

Bead. I will, my lord.—Come on, sirrah; off with your doublet quickly.

Simp. Alas, master, what shall I do? I am not able to stand.

[After the Beadle hath hit him once, he leaps over the stool, and runs away; and the people follow and cry, A Miracle!]

K. Henry. O God, seest thou this, and bear'st so long?

Queen. It made me laugh, to see the villain run.

Glo. Follow the knave; and take this drab away.

Wife. Alas, sir, we did it for pure need. [town]

Glo. Let them be whipt through every market Until they come to Berwick, whence they came.

[Exit Beadle, with the woman, &c.]

Car. Duke Humphrey has done a miracle to-day.

Suf. True; made the lame to leap, and fly away.

Glo.

Glo. But you have done more miracles than I;
You made, in a day, my lord, whole towns to fly.

Enter Buckingham.

K. Henry. What tidings with our cousin Buckingham?

Buck. Such as my heart doth tremble to unfold.
A sort of naughty persons, lewdly¹ bent,—
Under the countenance and confederacy
Of lady Eleanor, the protector's wife,
The ring-leader and head of all this rout,—
Have practis'd dangerously against your state,
Dealing with witches, and with conjurers:
Whom we have apprehended in the fact;
Raising up wicked spirits from under ground,
Demanding of king Henry's life and death,
And other of your highness' privy council,
As more at large your grace shall understand.

Cur. And so, my lord protector, by this means
Your lady is forth-coming yet at London².
This news, I think, hath turn'd your weapon's edge;
²⁰ 'Tis like, my lord, you will not keep your hour.

[Aside to Gloster.]

Glo. Ambitious churchman, leave to afflict my heart!
Sorrow and grief have vanquish'd all my powers;
And, vanquish'd as I am, I yield to thee,
Or to the meanest groom. [Ed ones;]

K. Henry. O God, what mischiefs work the wick-
Heaping confusion on their own heads thereby!

Queen. Gloster, see here the tainture of thy nest;
And, look, thyself be faultless, thou wert best.

Glo. Madam, for myself, to heaven I do appeal,
How I have lov'd my king, and common-weal:
And, for my wife, I know not how it stands;
Sorry I am to hear what I have heard:
Noble she is; but, if she have forgot
Honour and virtue, and convers'd with such
As, like to pitch, defile nobility,
I banish her my bed and company;
And give her, as a prey, to law, and shame,
That hath dishonour'd Gloster's honest name.

K. Henry. Well, for this night, we will repose us here:

To-morrow, toward London, back again,
To look into this business thoroughly,
And call these foul offenders to their answers;
And poise the cause in justice' equal scales,
Whose beam stands sure, whose rightful cause prevails. [Flourish. Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

The Duke of York's Garden.

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick.

York. Now, my good lords of Salisbury and Warwick,
Our simple supper ended, give me leave,
In this close walk, to satisfy myself,
In craving your opinion of my title,
Which is infallible, to England's crown.

Sal. My lord, I long to hear it at full. [good.]

War. Sweet York, begin: and if thy claim be
The Nevils are thy subjects to command.

York. Then thus:—
Edward the third, my lords, had seven sons:

The first, Edward the Black Prince, prince of Wales;

The second, William of Hatfield; and the third,
Lionel, duke of Clarence; next to whom

⁵ Was John of Gaunt, the duke of Lancaster:

The fifth was Edmund Langley, duke of York;
The sixth was Thomas of Woodstock, duke of Gloster;

William of Windsor was the seventh, and last.

¹⁰ Edward, the Black Prince, dy'd before his father;
And left behind him Richard, his only son,
Who, after Edward the third's death, reign'd king;
'Till Henry Bolingbroke, duke of Lancaster,
The eldest son and heir of John of Gaunt,
¹⁵ Crown'd by the name of Henry the fourth,
Seiz'd on the realm; depos'd the rightful king;
Sent his poor queen to France, from whence she came,

And him to Pomfret; where, as both you know,
Harmless Richard was murder'd traitorously.

War. Father, the duke hath told the truth;
Thus got the house of Lancaster the crown.

York. Which now they hold by force, and not by right;

²⁵ For Richard, the first son's heir, being dead,
The issue of the next son should have reign'd.

Sal. But William of Hatfield died without an heir. [whose line]

York. The third son, duke of Clarence, (from
I claim the crown) had issue—Philippe, a daughter,
Who married Edmund Mortimer, earl of March.
Edmund had issue—Roger, earl of March:

Roger had issue—Edmund, Anne, and Eleanor.

³⁵ Sal. This Edmund, in the reign of Bolingbroke,
As I have read, laid claim unto the crown;
And, but for Owen Glendower, had been king,
Who kept him in captivity, 'till he dy'd.
But, to the rest.

York. His eldest sister, Anne,
⁴⁰ My mother, being heir unto the crown,
Married Richard earl of Cambridge; who was son
To Edmund Langley, Edward the third's fifth son.
By her I claim the kingdom: She then was heir
To Roger, earl of March; who was the son
⁴⁵ Of Edmund Mortimer; who married Philippe,
Sole daughter unto Lionel, duke of Clarence:
So, if the issue of the elder son

Succeed before the younger, I am king. [this?]

⁵⁰ War. What plain proceeding is more plain than Henry doth claim the crown from John of Gaunt,
The fourth son; York claimeth it from the third.
'Till Lionel's issue fails, his should not reign:

It fails not yet; but flourishes in thee,
And in thy sons, fair slips of such a stock.—

⁵⁵ Then, father Salisbury, kneel we both together;
And, in this private plot, be we the first,
That shall salute our rightful sovereign
With honour of his birth-right to the crown.

Both. Longlive our sovereign Richard, England's king! [king]

York. We thank you, lords. But I am not your
'Till I be crown'd; and that my sword be stain'd
With heart-blood of the house of Lancaster:

² That is, your lady is in custody.

And that's not suddenly to be perform'd;
But with advice, and silent secrecy.
Do you, as I do, in these dangerous days,
Wink at the duke of Suffolk's insolence,
At Beaufort's pride, at Somerset's ambition,
At Buckingham, and all the crew of them,
'Till they have snar'd the shepherd of the flock,
That virtuous prince, the good duke Humphrey;
'Tis that they seek; and they, in seeking that,
Shall find their deaths, if York can prophesy.

Sal. My lord, break we off; we know your mind at full. [wick

War. My heart assures me, that the earl of War-shall one day make the duke of York a king.

York. And, Nevil, this I do assure myself,—
Richard shall live to make the earl of Warwick
The greatest man in England, but the king.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.

A Hall of Justice.

Sound Trumpets. Enter King Henry, Queen Margaret, Gloster, York, Suffolk, and Salisbury; the Dutchess, Mother Jourdain, Southwel, Hume, and Bolingbroke, under guard.

K. Henry. Stand forth, dame Eleanor Cobham,
Gloster's wife:

In sight of God, and us, your guilt is great;
Receive the sentence of the law, for sins
Such as by God's book are adjudg'd to death.—
You four, from hence to prison back again;

[To the other prisoners.

From thence, unto the place of execution:
The witch in Smithfield shall be burnt to ashes,
And you three shall be strangled on the gallows.—
You, madam, for you are more nobly born,
Despoiled of your honour in your life,
Shall, after three days open penance done,
Live in your country here, in banishment,
With Sir John Stanley, in the isle of Man.

Elean. Welcome is banishment, welcome were my death. [thee;

Glo. Eleanor, the law, thou seest, hath judged
I cannot justify whom the law condemns.—

[Exeunt Eleanor, and the others, guarded.

Mine eyes are full of tears, my heart of grief.
Ah, Humphrey, this dishonour in thine age
Will bring thy head with sorrow to the ground!—
I beseech your majesty, give me leave to go;
Sorrow would solace, and mine age would ease¹.

K. Henry. Stay, Humphrey duke of Gloster:
ere thou go,

Give up thy staff; Henry will to himself
Protector be; and God shall be my hope,
My stay, my guide, and lanthorn to my feet:
And go in peace, Humphrey; no less belov'd,
Than when thou wert protector to thy king.

2. Mar. I see no reason, why a king of years
Should be to be protected like a child.—

God and king Henry govern England's realm:
Give up your staff, sir, and the king his realm.

Glo. My staff?—Here, noble Henry, is my staff:

As willingly, do I the same resign,

5 As e'er thy father Henry made it mine;

And even as willingly at thy feet I leave it,

As others would ambitiously receive it.

Farewell, good king: When I am dead and gone,

May honourable peace attend thy throne!

10 [Exit Gloster.

2. Mar. Why, now is Henry king, and Margaret queen;

And Humphrey duke of Gloster scarce himself,
That bears so shrewd a maim; two pulls at once,—

15 His lady banish'd, and a limb lopp'd off.

This staff of honour raught²:—There let it stand,

Where best it fits to be, in Henry's hand. [sprays;

Suf. Thus droops this lofty pine, and hangs his

Thus Eleanor's pride dies in her youngest days.

20 York. Lords, let him go!—Please it your majesty,

This is the day appointed for the combat;

And ready are the appellant and defendant,

The armourer and his man, to enter the lists,

So please your highness to behold the fight. [fore

25 2. Mar. Ay, good my lord; for purposely there-

Left I the court, to see this quarrel try'd.

K. Henry. O' God's name, see the lists and all things fit;

Here let them end it, and God defend the right!

30 York. I never saw a fellow worse bested³,

Or more afraid to fight, than is the appellant,

The servant of this armourer, my lords.

Enter at one door the Armourer and his Neighbours, drinking to him so much, that he is drunk; and he enters with a drum before him, and his staff with a sand-bag⁴ fastened to it; and at the other door enters his Man, with a drum and a sand-bag, and Prentices drinking to him.

40 1 Neigh. Here, neighbour Horner, I drink to you in a cup of sack; And, fear not, neighbour, you shall do well enough.

2 Neigh. And here, neighbour, here's a cup of charneco⁵.

3 Neigh. And here's a pot of good double beer, neighbour: drink, and fear not your man.

Arm. Let it come, i' faith, and I'll pledge you all; And a fig for Peter!

1 Pren. Here, Peter, I drink to thee; and be not afraid.

50 2 Pren. Be merry, Peter, and fear not thy master: fight for credit of the prentices.

Peter. I thank you all: drink, and pray for me,
I pray you; for I think I have taken my last draught in this world.—Here, Robin, an if I die, I give thee my apron;—and, Will, thou shalt have my hammer;—and here, Tom, take all the money that I have.—O Lord, bless me, I pray God! for I am never able to deal with my master, he hath learn'd so much fence already.

⁵ As, according to the old laws of duels, knights were to fight with the lance and sword; so those of inferior rank fought with an ebon staff or battoon, to the farther end of which was fixed a bag cramm'd hard with sand.

⁶ A name for a sort of sweet wine, probably much in use in our author's time.

Sal. Come, leave your drinking, and fall to blows.—Sirrah, what's thy name?

Peter. Peter, forsooth.

Sal. Peter! what more?

Peter. Thump.

Sal. Thump! then see thou thump thy master well.

Arm. Masters, I am come hither, as it were, upon my man's instigation, to prove him a knave, and myself an honest man: and touching the duke of York,—I will take my death, I never meant him any ill, nor the king, nor the queen; And therefore, Peter, have at thee with a downright blow, as Bevis of Southampton fell upon Ascapart¹.

York. Dispatch:—this knave's tongue begins to double.

Sound, trumpets, alarum to the combatants.

[They fight, and Peter strikes him down.]

Arm. Hold, Peter, hold! I confess, I confess treason.

York. Take away his weapon:—Fellow, thank God, and the good wine in thy master's way.

Peter. O God! have I overcome mine enemy in this presence?

O Peter, thou hast prevailed in right! [sight;]

K. Henry. Go, take hence that traitor from our For, by his death, we do perceive his guilt²:

And God, in justice, hath reveal'd to us

The truth and innocence of this poor fellow,

Which he had thought to have murder'd wrongfully.—

Come, fellow, follow us for thy reward. [Exeunt.]

S C E N E IV.

The Street.

Enter Duke Humphrey, and his men, in mourning cloaks.

Glo. Thus, sometimes, hath the brightest day a And, after summer, evermore succeeds [cloud;]

Barren winter, with his wrathful nipping cold:

So cares and joys abound, as seasons fleet³.—

Sirs, what's o'clock?

Serv. Ten, my lord.

Glo. Ten is the hour that was appointed me, To watch the coming of my punish'd dutchess:

Uneath⁴ may she endure the flinty streets,

To tread them with her tender-feeling feet!

Sweet Nell, ill can thy noble mind abrook

The abject people, gazing on thy face,

With envious looks still laughing at thy shame;

That erst did follow thy proud chariot-wheels,

When thou didst ride in triumph thro' the streets.

But, soft! I think, she comes; and I'll prepare

My tear-stain'd eyes to see her miseries.

Enter the Dutchess in a white sheet, her feet bare, and a taper burning in her hand, with Sir John Stanley, a Sheriff, and Officers.

Serv. So please your grace, we'll take her from the sheriff.

Glo. No, stir not for your lives; let her pass by.

Elean. Come you, my lord, to see my open shame?

Now thou dost penance too. Look, how they gaze!

See, how the giddy multitude do point,

And nod their heads, and throw their eyes on thee!

Ah, Gloster, hide thee from their hateful looks;

5 And, in thy closet pent up, rue my shame,

And ban thine enemies, both mine and thine.

Glo. Be patient, gentle Nell; forget this grief.

Elean. Ah, Gloster, teach me to forget myself;

For, whilst I think I am thy marry'd wife,

10 And thou a prince, protector of this land,

Methinks, I should not thus be led along,

Mail'd up⁵ in shame, with papers on my back;

And follow'd with a rabble, that rejoice

To see my tears, and hear my deep-fet groans.

15 The ruthless flint doth cut my tender feet;

And, when I start, the envious people laugh,

And bid me be advised how I tread.

Ah, Humphrey, can I bear this shameful yoke?

I row'st⁶ thou, that e'er I'll look upon the world;

20 Or count them happy, that enjoy the sun?

No; dark shall be my light, and night my day;

To think upon my pomp, shall be my hell.

Sometime I'll say, I am duke Humphrey's wife;

And he a prince, and ruler of the land:

25 Yet so he rul'd, and such a prince he was,

That he stood by, whilst I, his forlorn dutchess,

Was made a wonder, and a pointing-stock,

To every idle rascal follower.

But be thou mild, and blush not at my shame;

30 Nor stir at nothing, 'till the axe of death

Hang over thee, as, sure, it shortly will.

For Suffolk,—he that can do all in all

With her, that hateth thee, and hates us all,—

And York, and impious Beaufort, that false priest,

35 Have all lin'd bushes to betray thy wings,

And, fly thou how thou canst, they'll tangle thee:

But fear not thou, until thy foot be snar'd,

Nor never seek prevention of thy foes.

Glo. Ah, Nell, forbear; thou aimest all awry;

40 I must offend, before I be attainted:

And had I twenty times so many foes,

And each of them had twenty times their power,

All these could not procure me any scathe⁷,

So long as I am loyal, true, and crimeless.

45 Would'st have me rescue thee from this reproach?

Why, yet thy scandal were not wip'd away,

But I in danger for the breach of law.

Thy greatest help is quiet, gentle Nell:

I pray thee, sort thy heart to patience;

50 These few-days' wonder will be quickly worn.

Enter a Herald.

Her. I summon your grace to his majesty's parliament, holden at Bury the first of this next month.

Glo. And my consent ne'er ask'd herein before!

55 This is close dealing.—Well, I will be there.

[Exit Herald.]

My Nell, I take my leave:—and, master sheriff,

Let not her penance exceed the king's commission.

Sher. An't please your grace, here my commission stays:

¹ Ascapart—the giant of the story—was a name familiar to our ancestors. The figures of these combatants are still preserved on the gates of Southampton. ² According to the ancient usage of the duel, the vanquished person not only lost his life but his reputation, and his death was always regarded as a certain evidence of his guilt. ³ To fleet is to change. ⁴ Eath is the ancient word for ease.

Uneath, therefore, implies uneasily or painfully. ⁵ i. e. wrapped up in disgrace; alluding to the sheet of penance. ⁶ Think'st. ⁷ Scathe is harm or mischief.

And Sir John Stanley is appointed now
To take her with him to the isle of Man.

Glo. Must you, Sir John, protect my lady here?

Stan. So am I given in charge, may't please your grace.

Glo. Entreat her not the worse, in that I pray
You use her well: the world may laugh¹ again;
And I may live to do you kindness, if
You do it her. And so, Sir John, farewell.

Elean. What, gone, my lord; and bid me not farewell?

Glo. Witness my tears, I cannot stay to speak.
[Exit Gloster.]

Elean. Art thou gone too? All comfort go with thee!

For none abides with me: my joy is—death;
Death, at whose name I oft have been afraid,
Because I wish'd this world's eternity.—
Stanley, I pr'ythee, go, and take me hence;
I care not whither, for I beg no favour,

Only convey me where thou art commanded.

Stan. Why, madam, that is to the isle of Man;
There to be us'd according to your state.

Elean. That's bad enough, for I am but reproach:
5 And shall I then be us'd reproachfully? [lady,

Stan. Like to a dutchess, and duke Humphrey's
According to that state you shall be us'd.

Elean. Sheriff, farewell, and better than I fare;
Although thou hast been conduct of my shame.

Sher. It is my office; and, madam, pardon me.

Elean. Ay, ay, farewell; thy office is discharg'd.—
Come, Stanley, shall we go? [this sheet,

Stan. Madam, your penance done, throw off
And go we to attire you for our journey.

15 Elean. My shame will not be shifted with my sheet:

No, it will hang upon my richest robes,
And shew itself, attire me how I can.

Go, lead the way; I long to see my prison.

[Exeunt.]

A C T III.

SCENE I.

The Abbey at Bury.

Enter King Henry, Queen, Cardinal, Suffolk, York, and Buckingham, &c. to the Parliament.

K. Hen. I MUSE, my lord of Gloster is not come:
'Tis not his wont to be the hindmost
man,

Whate'er occasion keeps him from us now. [serve

2. Mar. Can you not see? or will you not ob-
The strangeness of his alter'd countenance?

With what a majesty he bears himself;

How insolent of late he is become,

How proud, how peremptory, and unlike himself!

We know the time, since he was mild and affable;

And, if we did but glance a far-off look,

Immediately he was upon his knee,

That all the court admir'd him for submission:

But meet him now, and, be it in the morn,

When every one will give the time of day,

He knits his brow, and shews an angry eye,

And passeth by with stiff unbowed knee,

Disdaining duty that to us belongs.

Small curs are not regarded, when they grin:

But great men tremble, when the lion roars;

And Humphrey is no little man in England.

First, note, that he is near you in descent;

And, should you fall, he is the next will mount,

Me seemeth² then, it is no policy,

Respecting what a rancorous mind he bears,

And his advantage following your decease,—

That he should come about your royal person,

Or be admitted to your highness' council,

By flattery hath he won the commons' hearts;

And, when he please to make commotion,

30 'Tis to be fear'd, they all will follow him.

Now, 'tis the spring, and weeds are shallow-rooted;

Suffer them now, and they'll o'er-grow the garden,

And choak the herbs for want of husbandry.

The reverent care I bear unto my lord,

35 Made me collect these dangers in the duke.

If it be fond, call it a woman's fear;

Which fear if better reasons can supplant,

I will subscribe, and say—I wrong'd the duke.

My lords of Suffolk,—Buckingham,—and York,—

40 Reprove my allegation if you can;

Or else conclude my words effectual.

Suf. Well hath your highness seen into this duke;

And, had I first been put to speak my mind.

I think, I should have told your grace's³ tale.

45 The dutchess, by his subornation,

Upon my life, began her devilish practices:

Or, if he were not privy to those faults,

Yet, by reputing⁴ of his high descent,

(As, next the king, he was successive heir)

50 And such high vaunts of his nobility,

Did instigate the bedlam brain-sick dutchess,

By wicked means to frame our sovereign's fall.

Smooth runs the water, where the brook is deepest;

And in his simple shew he harbours treason.

55 The fox barks not, when he would steal the lamb.

No, no, my sovereign; Gloster is a man

Unsounded yet, and full of deep deceit.

Car. Did he not, contrary to form of law,

Devise strange deaths for small offences done?

60 York. And did he not, in his protectorship,

¹ i. e. the world may look again favourably upon me. ² i. e. it seemeth to me. ³ Suffolk uses highness and grace promiscuously to the queen. Majesty was not the settled title till the time of king James the First. ⁴ Reputing of his high descent, means, valuing himself upon it.

Levy great sums of money through the realm,
For soldiers' pay in France, and never sent it?
By means whereof, the towns each day revolted.

Buck. Tut! these are petty faults to faults unknown,

Which time will bring to light in smooth duke

K. Henry. My lords, at once: the care you have of us,

To mow down thorns, that would annoy our foot,
Is worthy praise: but shall I speak my conscience?

Our kinsman Gloster is as innocent

From meaning treason to our royal person

As is the sucking lamb, or harmless dove:

The duke is virtuous, mild; and too well given,

To dream on evil, or to work my downfall.

2. Mar. Ah, what's more dangerous than this fond affiance!

Seems he a dove? his feathers are but borrow'd,

For he's disposed as the hateful raven.

Is he a lamb? his skin is surely lent him,

For he's inclin'd as is the ravenous wolf.

Who cannot steal a shape, that means deceit?

Take heed, my lord; the welfare of us all

Hangs on the cutting short that fraudulent man.

Enter Somerset.

Som. All health unto my gracious sovereign!

K. Henry. Welcome, lord Somerset. What news from France?

Som. That all your interest in those territories
Is utterly bereft you; all is lost.

K. Henry. Cold news, lord Somerset: but God's will be done!

[France,

York. Cold news for me; for I had hope of
As firmly as I hope for fertile England.

Thus are my blossoms blasted in the bud,

And caterpillars eat my leaves away;

But I will remedy this gear¹ ere long,

Or sell my title for a glorious grave. [Aside.

Enter Gloster.

Glo. All happiness unto my lord the king!

Pardon, my liege, that I have staid so long.

Suf. Nay, Gloster, know, that thou art come too soon,

Unless thou wert more loyal than thou art:

I do arrest thee of high treason here. [blush,

Glo. Well, Suffolk, yet thou shalt not see me

Nor change my countenance for this arrest;

A heart unspotted is not easily daunted.

The purest spring is not so free from mud,

As I am clear from treason to my sovereign:

Who can accuse me? wherein am I guilty?

York. 'Tis thought, my lord, that you took bribes of France,

And, being protector, stay'd the soldiers' pay;

By means whereof, his highness hath lost France.

Glo. Is it but thought so? What are they, that think it?

I never robb'd the soldiers of their pay,

Nor ever had one penny bribe from France.

So help me God, as I have watch'd the night,—

Ay, night by night,—in studying good for England!

That doit that e'er I wrested from the king,

Or any groat I hoarded to my use,
Be brought against me at my trial day!

No; many a pound of mine own proper store,
Because I would not tax the needy commons,

Have I disbursed to the garrisons,
And never ask'd for restitution.

Car. It serves you well, my lord, to say so much.

Glo. I say no more than truth, so help me God!

York. In your protectorship, you did devise

Strange tortures for offenders, never heard of,

That England was defam'd by tyranny.

Glo. Why, 'tis well known, that, whiles I was protector,

Pity was all the fault that was in me;

For I should melt at an offender's tears,

And lowly words were ransom for their fault:

Unless it were a bloody murderer,

Or foul felonious thief, that fleec'd poor passengers,

I never gave them condign punishment:

Murder, indeed, that bloody sin, I tortur'd

Above the felon, or what trespass else.

Suf. My lord, these faults are easy², quickly answer'd:

But mightier crimes are laid unto your charge,

Whereof you cannot easily purge yourself.

I do arrest you in his highness' name;

And here commit you to my lord cardinal

To keep until your further time of trial.

K. Hen. My lord of Gloster, 'tis my special hope,

That you will clear yourself from all suspicion;

My conscience tells me, you are innocent. [ous!

Glo. Ah, gracious lord, these days are danger-

Virtue is choak'd with foul ambition,

And charity chas'd hence by rancour's hand;

Foul subornation is predominant,

And equity exil'd your highness' land.

I know, their complot is to have my life;

And, if my death might make this island happy,

And prove the period of their tyranny,

I would expend it with all willingness:

But mine is made the prologue to their play;

For thousands more, that yet suspect no peril,

Will not conclude their plotted tragedy.

Beaufort's red sparkling eyes blab his heart's malice,

And Suffolk's cloudy brow his stormy hate;

Sharp Buckingham unburdens with his tongue

The envious load that lies upon his heart;

And dogged York, that reaches at the moon,

Whose over-weening arm I have pluck'd back,

By false accuse doth level at my life:—

And you, my sovereign lady, with the rest,

Causeless have laid disgraces on my head;

And, with your best endeavour, have stirr'd up

My liefe³st liege to be mine enemy:—

Ay, all of you have laid your heads together,

Myself had notice of your conventicles,

And all to make away my guiltless life:

I shall not want false witness to condemn me,

Nor store of treasons to augment my guilt;

The ancient proverb will be well effected,

A staff is quickly found to beat a dog.

Car. My liege, his railing is intolerable:

¹ Gear was a general word for things or matters.

² Easy here means slight, inconsiderable.

³ i. e. dearest liege.

If those, that care to keep your royal person
From treason's secret knife, and traitors' rage,
Be thus upbraided, chid, and rated at,
And the offender granted scope of speech,
'Twill make them cool in zeal unto your grace.

Suf. Hath he not twit our sovereign lady here,
With ignominious words, though clerkly couch'd,
As if she had suborned some to swear
False allegations to o'erthrow his state?

2. Mar. But I can give the loser leave to chide.

Glo. Far truer spoke, than meant: I lose, indeed;—

Beshrew the winners, for they play me false!—
And well such losers may have leave to speak.

Buck. He'll wrest the sense, and hold us here all Lord cardinal, he is your prisoner. [day:—

Car. Sirs, take away the duke, and guard him sure.

Glo. Ah, thus king Henry throws away his crutch,
Before his legs be firm to bear his body:

Thus is the shepherd beaten from thy side,
And wolves are gnarling who shall gnaw thee first.
Ah, that my fear were false! ah, that it were!
For, good king Henry, thy decay I fear.

[Exit guarded.

K. Henry. My lords, what to your wisdom
seemeth best,

Do, or undo, as if ourself were here.

2. Mar. What, will your highness leave the parliament? [with grief,

K. Henry. Ay, Margaret: my heart is drown'd
Whose flood begins to flow within mine eyes;
My body round engirt with misery;

For what's more miserable than discontent?—
Ah, uncle Humphrey! in thy face I see
The map of honour, truth, and loyalty;
And yet, good Humphrey, is the hour to come,
That e'er I prov'd thee false, or fear'd thy faith.

What low'ring star now envies thy estate,
That these great lords, and Margaret our queen,
Do seek subversion of thy harmless life?

Thou never didst them wrong, nor no man wrong:
And as the butcher takes away the calf,
And binds the wretch, and beats it when it strays,
Bearing it to the bloody slaughter-house;

Even so, remorseless, have they borne him hence.
And as the dam runs lowing up and down,
Looking the way her harmless young one went,
And can do nought but wail her darling's loss;

Even so myself bewail good Gloster's case,
With sad unhelpful tears; and with dimm'd eyes
Look after him, and cannot do him good;
So mighty are his vowed enemies.

His fortunes I will weep; and, 'twixt each groan,
Say—Who's a traitor? Gloster he is none. [Exit.

2. Mar. Free¹ lords, cold snow melts with the sun's hot beams.

Henry my lord is cold in great affairs,
Too full of foolish pity: and Gloster's shew
Beguiles him, as the mournful crocodile

With sorrow snares relenting passengers;
Or as the snake, roll'd on a flowering bank,
With shining checker'd slough, doth sting a child,
That, for the beauty, thinks it excellent.

Believe me, lords, were none more wise than I,
(And yet, herein, I judge my own wit good)
This Gloster should be quickly rid the world,
To rid us from the fear we have of him.

Car. That he should die, is worthy policy;
But yet we want a colour for his death:

'Tis meet, he be condemn'd by course of law.

Suf. But, in my mind, that were no policy:
The king will labour still to save his life,
The commons haply rise to save his life;

And yet we have but trivial argument,
More than mistrust, that shews him worthy death.

York. So that, by this, you would not have him

Suf. Ah, York, no man alive so fain as I. [die.

York. 'Tis York that hath more reason for his death².— [Suffolk,—

But, my lord cardinal, and you, my lord of Say as you think, and speak it from your souls,—

Wer't not all one, an empty eagle were set
To guard the chicken from a hungry kite,

As place duke Humphrey for the king's protector?
2. Mar. So the poor chicken should be sure of death. [then,

Suf. Madam, 'tis true; And wer't not madness,
To make the fox surveyor of the fold?

Who being accus'd a crafty murderer,
His guilt should be but idly posted over,

Because his purpose is not executed.
No; let him die, in that he is a fox,

By nature prov'd an enemy to the flock,
Before his chaps be stain'd with crimson blood;

As Humphrey prov'd by reasons to my liege.
And do not stand on quilllets, how to slay him:

Be it by gins, by snares, by subtilty,
Sleeping, or waking, 'tis no matter how,

So he be dead; for that is good deceit
Which mates³ him first, that first intends deceit.

2. Mar. Thrice-noble Suffolk, 'tis resolutely spoke.

Suf. Not resolute, except so much were done;
For things are often spoke, and seldom meant:

But, that my heart accordeth with my tongue,—
Seeing the deed is meritorious,

And to preserve my sovereign from his foe,—
Say but the word, and I will be his priest⁴.

Car. But I would have him dead, my lord of Suffolk,

Ere you can take due orders for a priest:
Say, you consent, and censure well⁵ the deed,

And I'll provide his executioner,
I tender so the safety of my liege.

Suf. Here is my hand, the deed is worthy doing.

2. Mar. And so say I.

York. And I: and now we three have spoke it,
It skills not greatly⁶ who impugns our doom.

¹ By this she means (as may be seen by the sequel) you, who are not bound up to such precise regards of religion as is the king; but are men of the world, and know how to live. ² Because duke Humphrey stood between York and the crown.

³ Mates him means—that first puts an end to his moving. To mate is a term in chess, used when the king is stopped from moving, and an end put to the game. ⁴ i. e. I will be the attendant on his last scene. ⁵ i. e. judge the deed good. ⁶ i. e. is of no importance.

Enter a Post.

Post. Great lords, from Ireland am I come again,
To signify—that rebels there are up,
And put the Englishmen unto the sword:
Send succours, lords, and stop the rage betime,
Before the wound do grow incurable:
For, being green, there is great hope of help.

Car. A breach, that craves a quick expedient stop!
What counsel give you in this weighty cause?

York. That Somerset be sent a regent thither:
'Tis meet, that lucky ruler be employ'd;
Witness the fortune he hath had in France.—

Som. If York, with all his far-fet policy,
Had been the regent there instead of me,
He never would have staid in France so long.

York. No, not to lose it all, as thou hast done:
I rather would have lost my life betimes,
Than bring a burden of dishonour home,
By staying there so long, 'till all were lost,
Shew me one scar character'd on thy skin:
Men's flesh preserv'd so whole, do seldom win.

2. Mar. Nay then, this spark will prove a raging fire,
If wind and fuel be brought to feed it with:—
No more, good York;—sweet Somerset, be still;—
Thy fortune, York, hadst thou been regent there, Might happily have prov'd far worse than his.

York. What, worse than nought? nay, then a shame take all! [shame!]

Som. And, in the number, thee, that wishest

Car. My lord of York, try what your fortune is.
The uncivil kerns of Ireland are in arms,
And temper clay with blood of Englishmen:
To Ireland will you lead a band of men,
Collected choicely, from each county some,
And try your hap against the Irishmen?

York. I will, my lord, so please his majesty.

Suf. Why, our authority is his consent;
And, what we do establish, he confirms:
Then, noble York, take thou this task in hand.

York. I am content: Provide me soldiers, lords,
Whiles I take order for mine own affairs.

Suf. A charge, lord York, that I will see perform'd.

But now return we to the false duke Humphrey.
Car. No more of him; for I will deal with him,
That, henceforth, he shall trouble us no more.
And so break off; the day is almost spent:—
Lord Suffolk, you and I must talk of that event.

York. My lord of Suffolk, within fourteen days,
At Bristol I expect my soldiers;
For there I'll ship them all for Ireland.

Suf. I'll see it truly done, my lord of York.

[Exeunt all but York.]

York. Now, York, or never, steel thy fearful
And change misdoubt to resolution: [thoughts,
Be that thou hop'st to be; or what thou art
Resign to death; it is not worth the enjoying:
Let pale-fac'd fear keep with the mean-born man,
And find no harbour in a royal heart. [thought;
Faster than spring-time showers, comes thought on
And not a thought, but thinks on dignity.

¹ Flaw is a sudden violent gust of wind,
that is, a Moorish dance.

My brain, more busy than the labouring spider,
Weaves tedious snares to trap mine enemies.
Well, nobles, well; 'tis politickly done,
To send me packing with an host of men:
5 I fear me, you but warm the starved snake,
Who, cherish'd in your breasts, will sting your hearts.

'Twas men I lack'd, and you will give them me:
I take it kindly; yet, be well assur'd

10 You put sharp weapons in a mad-man's hands.
Whiles I in Ireland nourish a mighty band,
I will stir up in England some black storm,
Shall blow ten thousand souls to heaven, or hell:
And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage
15 Until the golden circuit on my head,
Likè to the glorious sun's transparent beams,
Do calm the fury of this mad-bred flaw¹.

And, for a minister of my intent,
I have seduc'd a head-strong Kentishman,
20 John Cade of Ashford,

To make commotion, as full well he can,
Under the title of John Mortimer.

In Ireland have I seen this stubborn Cade
Oppose himself against a troop of kerns;

25 And fought so long, 'till that his thighs with darts
Were almost like a sharp-quill'd porcupine:
And, in the end being rescu'd, I have seen him
Caper upright like to a wild Morisco²,

Shaking the bloody darts, as he his bells.
Full often, like a shag-hair'd crafty kern,

30 Hath he conversed with the enemy;
And undiscover'd come to me again,
And given me notice of their villainies.

This devil here shall be my substitute:
For that John Mortimer, which now is dead,

35 In face, in gait, in speech he doth resemble:
By this I shall perceive the commons' minds,
How they affect the house and claim of York,
Say, he be taken, rack'd, and tortur'd;

40 I know, no pain, they can inflict upon him,
Will make him say—I mov'd him to those arms,
Say, that he thrive, (as 'tis great like he will)

Why, then from Ireland come I with my strength,
And reap the harvest which that rascal sow'd:

45 For, Humphrey being dead, as he shall be,
And Henry put apart, the next for me. [Exit.]

SCENE II.

An Apartment in the Palace.

50 Enter two or three, running over the stage, from the murder of duke Humphrey.

First M. Run to my lord of Suffolk; let him
know,

We have dispatch'd the duke, as he commanded.

Second M. O, that it were to do!—What have Didst ever hear a man so penitent? [we done?]

Enter Suffolk.

First M. Here comes my lord.
Suf. Now, sirs, have you dispatch'd this thing?

60 First M. Ay, my good lord, he's dead. [house;
Suf. Why, that's well said. Go, get you to my
I will reward you for this venturous deed.

² A Moor in a military dance, now called Morris,

The

The king and all the peers are here at hand :—
Have you laid fair the bed? are all things well,
According as I gave directions?

First M. Yes, my good lord.

Suf. Away, be gone! [Exeunt Murderers.]

Enter King Henry, the Queen, Cardinal, Somerset, with Attendants.

K. Henry. Go call our uncle to our presence
Say, we intend to try his grace to-day, [straight:
If he be guilty, as 'tis published.

Suf. I'll call him presently, my noble lord.

[Exit.]

K. Henry. Lords, take your places;—And I pray you all,

Proceed no straiter 'gainst our uncle Gloster,
Than from true evidence, of good esteem,
He be approv'd in practice culpable.

2. Mar. God forbid, any malice should prevail,
That faultless may condemn a nobleman!
Pray God, he may acquit him of suspicion!

K. Henry. I thank thee: Well, these words content me much.—

Re-enter Suffolk.

How now? why look'st thou pale? why trem-blest thou?

Where is our uncle? what is the matter, Suffolk?

Suf. Dead in his bed, my lord; Gloster is dead.

2. Mar. Marry, God forefend!

Car. God's secret judgment:—I did dream
to-night,

The duke was dumb, and could not speak a word.
[The King swoons.]

2. Mar. How fares my lord?—Help, lords!
the king is dead.

Som. Rear up his body; wring him by the nose.

2. Mar. Run, go, help, help!—Oh, Henry, ope thine eyes!

Suf. He doth revive again;—Madam, be pa-

K. Henry. O heavenly God! [tient.

2. Mar. How fares my gracious lord?

Suf. Comfort, my sovereign! gracious Henry, comfort! [fort me?

K. Henry. What, doth my lord of Suffolk com-
Came he right now¹ to sing a raven's note,
Whose dismal tune bereft my vital powers;
And thinks he, that the chirping of a wren,
By crying comfort from a hollow breast,
Can chase away the first-conceived sound?
Hide not thy poison with such sugar'd words.
Lay not thy hands on me; forbear, I say;
Their touch affrights me, as a serpent's sting.
Thou baleful messenger, out of my sight!
Upon thy eye-balls murderous tyranny
Sits, in grim majesty, to fright the world.
Look not upon me, for thine eyes are wounding:—
Yet do not go away;—Come, basilisk,
And kill the innocent gazer with thy sight:
For in the shade of death I shall find joy;
In life, but double death, now Gloster's dead.

2. Mar. Why do you rate my lord of Suffolk thus?

Although the duke was enemy to him,
Yet he, most christian-like, laments his death:
And for myself,—foe as he was to me,
Might liquid tears, or heart-offending groans,
Or blood-consuming sighs recall his life,
I would be blind with weeping, sick with groans,
Look pale as primrose with blood-drinking sighs,
And all to have the noble duke alive.

What know I how the world may deem of me?
For it is known, we were but hollow friends;
It may be judg'd, I made the duke away: [ed,
So shall my name with slander's tongue bewound-
And princes' courts be fill'd with my reproach.
This get I by his death: Ah me, unhappy!
To be a queen, and crown'd with infamy!

K. Henry. Ah, woe is me for Gloster, wretched man! [he is.

2. Mar. Be woe for me, more wretched than What, dost thou turn away, and hide thy face?

I am no loathsome leper, look on me.

What, art thou, like the adder, waxen deaf?
Be poisonous too, and kill thy forlorn queen.

Is all thy comfort shut in Gloster's tomb?

Why, then dame Margaret was ne'er thy joy:

Erect his statue then, and worship it,
And make my image but an ale-house sign.

Was I, for this, nigh wreck'd upon the sea;
And twice by awkward² wind from England's bank

Drove back again unto my native clime?
What boded this, but well-fore-warning wind

Did seem to say,—Seek not a scorpion's nest,
Nor set no footing on this unkind shore?

What did I then, but curs'd the gentle gusts,

And he that loos'd them from their brazen caves:
And bid them blow towards England's blessed

Or turn our stern upon a dreadful rock? [shore,
Yet Æolus would not be a murderer,

But left that hateful office unto thee:

The pretty vaulting sea refus'd to drown me;
Knowing, that thou would'st have me drown'd on shore

With tears as salt as sea through thy unkindness:
The splitting rocks cower'd in the sinking sands,

And would not dash me with their ragged sides;
Because thy flinty heart, more hard than they,

Might in thy palace perish³ Margaret.
As far as I could ken thy chalky cliffs,

When from thy shore the tempest beat us back,

I stood upon the hatches in the storm:
And when the dusky sky began to rob

My earnest-gaping sight of thy land's view,
I took a costly jewel from my neck,—

A heart it was, bound in with diamonds,—
And threw it towards thy land; the sea received it;

And, so, I wish'd, thy body might my heart:
And even with this, I lost fair England's view,

And bid mine eyes be packing with my heart;
And call'd them blind and dusky spectacles,

For losing ken of Albion's wished coast.
How often have I tempted Suffolk's tongue
(The agent of thy foul inconstancy)

² i. e. adverse.

³ i. e. kill or destroy.

To sit and witch me, as Ascanius did,
When he to madding Dido would unfold
His father's acts, commenc'd in burning Troy?
Am I not witch'd like her? or thou not false like him?

Ah me, I can no more! Die, Margaret!
For Henry weeps, that thou dost live so long.

Noise within. Enter Warwick, Salisbury, and many Commons.

War. It is reported, mighty sovereign, [der'd
That good duke Humphrey traiterously is mur-
By Suffolk's and the cardinal Beaufort's means.
The commons, like an angry hive of bees,
That want their leader, scatter up and down,
And care not who they sting in his revenge.
Myself have calm'd their spleenful mutiny,
Until they hear the order of his death.

K. Henry. That he is dead, good Warwick,
'tis too true;

But how he died, God knows, not Henry:
Enter his chamber, view his breathless corpse,
And comment then upon his sudden death.

War. That I shall do, my liege:—Stay, Salisbury,
With the rude multitude, 'till I return.

[Warwick goes in.]

K. Henry. O Thou that judgest all things, stay my thoughts;

My thoughts, that labour to persuade my soul,
Some violent hands were laid on Humphrey's life!
If my suspect be false, forgive me, God;
For judgment only doth belong to thee!
Fain would I go to chafe his paly lips
With twenty thousand kisses, and to drain
Upon his face an ocean of salt tears;
To tell my love unto his dumb deaf trunk,
And with my fingers feel his hand unfeeling:
But all in vain are these mean obsequies;
And, to survey his dead and earthy image,
What were it but to make my sorrow greater?

[A bed, with Gloster's body, put forth.]

War. Come hither, gracious sovereign, view this body.

K. Henry. That is to see how deep my grave is made:

For, with his soul, fled all my worldly solace;
For seeing him, I see my life in death¹.

War. As surely as my soul intends to live
With that dread King, that took our state upon him
To free us from his father's wrathful curse,
I do believe that violent hands were laid
Upon the life of this thrice-famed duke.

Suf. A dreadful oath, sworn with a solemn tongue!

What instance gives lord Warwick for his vow?

War. See, how the blood is settled in his face!
Oft have I seen a timely-parted ghost,
Of ashy semblance, meagre, pale, and bloodless,
Being all descended to the labouring heart;
Who, in the conflict that it holds with death,
Attracts the same for aidance 'gainst the enemy;

Which with the heart there cools, and ne'er
returneth

To blush and beautify the cheek again.

But see, his face is black, and full of blood;

His eye-balls further out than when he liv'd,

Staring full ghastly like a strangled man:

His hair up-rear'd, his nostrils stretch'd with struggling;

His hands abroad display'd, as one that grasp'd

And tugg'd for life, and was by strength subdu'd.

Look on the sheets, his hair, you see, is sticking;

His wellproportion'd beard maderough and rugged,

Like to the summer's corn by tempest lodg'd.

It cannot be, but he was murder'd here;

The least of all these signs were probable.

Suf. Why, Warwick, who should do the duke
to death?

Myself, and Beaufort, had him in protection;

And we, I hope, sir, are no murderers.

War. But both of you were vow'd duke Humphrey's foes;

And you, forsooth, had the good duke to keep:

'Tis like, you would not feast him like a friend;

And 'tis well seen, he found an enemy.

2. Mar. Then you, belike, suspect these noblemen

As guilty of duke Humphrey's timeless death.

War. Who finds the heifer dead, and bleeding fresh,

And sees fast by a butcher with an axe,

But will suspect, 'twas he that made the slaughter?

Who finds the partridge in the puttock's² nest,

But may imagine how the bird was dead,

Although the kite soar with unbloody'd beak?

Even so suspicious is this tragedy. [your knife?

2. Mar. Are you the butcher, Suffolk? where's

Is Beaufort term'd a kite? where are his talons?

Suf. I wear no knife, to slaughter sleeping men;

But here's a vengeful sword, rusted with ease,

That shall be scoured in his rancorous heart,

That slanders me with murder's crimson badge:—

Say, if thou dar'st, proud lord of Warwickshire,

That I am faulty in duke Humphrey's death.

[Exit Cardinal.]

War. What dares not Warwick, if false Suffolk dare him?

2. Mar. He dares not calm his contumelious

Nor cease to be an arrogant controller, [spirit,

Though Suffolk dare him twenty thousand times.

War. Madam, be still; with reverence may I say it;

For every word, you speak in his behalf,

Is slander to your royal dignity.

Suf. Blunt-witted lord, ignoble in demeanour!

If ever lady wrong'd her lord so much,

Thy mother took into her blameful bed

Some stern untutor'd churl, and noble stock

Was graft with crab-tree slip; whose fruit thou art,

And never of the Nevils' noble race. [thee,

War. But that the guilt of murder bucklers

And I should rob the death's-man of his fee,

¹ i. e. I see my life destroyed or endangered by his death.

² The puttock is the kite.

Quitting thee thereby of ten thousand shames,
And that my sovereign's presence makes me mild,
I would, false murderous coward, on thy knee
Make thee beg pardon for thy passed speech,
And say—it was thy mother that thou meant'st,
That thou thyself wast born in bastardy:

And, after all this fearful homage done,
Give thee thy hire, and send thy soul to hell,
Pernicious blood-sucker of sleeping men! [blood,

Suf. Thou shalt be waking, while I shed thy
If from this presence thou dar'st go with me.

War. Away even now, or I will drag thee hence:
Unworthy though thou art, I'll cope with thee,
And do some service to duke Humphrey's ghost.

[Exeunt. 15

K. Henry. What stronger breast-plate than a heart untainted!

Thrice is he arm'd, that hath his quarrel just;
And he but naked, though lock'd up in steel,
Whose conscience with injustice is corrupted.

[A noise within. 20

2. Mar. What noise is this?

Re-enter Suffolk and Warwick, with their weapons drawn.

K. Henry. Why, how now, lords? your wrathful weapons drawn

Here in our presence? dare you be so bold?—
Why, what tumultuous clamour have we here?

Suf. The traiterous Warwick, with the men of Bury,

Set all upon me, mighty sovereign.

Noise of a crowd within. Enter Salisbury.

Sal. Sirs, stand apart; the king shall know your mind.—

Dread lord, the commons send you word by me,
Unless lord Suffolk straight be done to death,

Or banished fair England's territories,
They will by violence tear him from your palace,

And torture him with grievous ling'ring death;
They say, by him the good duke Humphrey died;

They say, in him they fear your highness' death;
And mere instinct of love and loyalty,—

Free from a stubborn opposite intent,
As being thought to contradict your liking,—

Makes them thus forward in his banishment.
They say, in care of your most royal person,

That, if your highness should intend to sleep,
And charge—that no man should disturb your rest,

In pain of your dislike, or pain of death;
Yet, notwithstanding such a strait edict,

Were there a serpent seen, with forked tongue,
That slily glided towards your majesty,

It were but necessary you were wak'd;
Lest, being suffer'd in that harmful slumber,

The mortal worm¹ might make the sleep eternal:
And therefore do they cry, though you forbid,

That they will guard you, whe'r you will, or no,

From such fell serpents as false Suffolk is;
With whose envenomed and fatal sting,
Your loving uncle, twenty times his worth,
They say, is shamefully bereft of life.

Commons [within] An answer from the king,
my lord of Salisbury. [hinds,

Suf. 'Tis like, the commons, rude unpolish'd
Could send such message to their sovereign:

But you, my lord, were glad to be employ'd,
To shew how quaint an orator you are:

But all the honour Salisbury hath won,
Is—that he was the lord ambassador,

Sent from a sort² of tinkers to the king.
Within. An answer from the king, or we will all break in.

K. Hen. Go, Salisbury, and tell them all from me,
I thank them for their tender loving care:

And had I not been cited so by them,
Yet did I purpose as they do entreat;

For, sure, my thoughts do hourly prophesy
Mischance unto my state by Suffolk's means.

And therefore,—by His Majesty I swear,
Whose far unworthy deputy I am,—

He shall not breathe infection in this air
But three days longer, on the pain of death.

[Exit Salisbury. 25

2. Mar. Oh Henry, let me plead for gentle
Suffolk! [Suffolk.

K. Henry. Ungentle queen, to call him gentle
No more, I say; if thou dost plead for him,

Thou wilt but add increase unto my wrath.
Had I but said, I would have kept my word;

But, when I swear, it is irrevocable:—
If, after three days space, thou here be'st found

On any ground that I am ruler of,
The world shall not be ransom for thy life.—

Come, Warwick, come, good Warwick, go with
me;

I have great matters to impart to thee.
[Exeunt all but Suffolk, and the Queen. 40

2. Mar. Mischance, and sorrow, go along with you!

Heart's discontent, and sour affliction,
Be play-fellows to keep you company!

There's two of you; the devil make a third!
And three-fold vengeance tend upon your steps!

Suf. Cease, gentle queen, these execrations;
And let thy Suffolk take his heavy leave.

2. Mar. Fie, coward woman, and soft-hearted
wretch!

Hast thou not spirit to curse thine enemies?
Suf. A plague upon them! wherefore should I curse them?

Would curses kill, as doth the mandrake's groan³,
I would invent as bitter searching terms,

As curst, as harsh, and horrible to hear,
Deliver'd strongly through my fixed teeth,

With full as many signs of deadly hate,

¹ Serpents in general are called worms. ² i. e. a company. ³ The fabulous accounts of the plant called a mandrake give it an inferior degree of animal life, and relate, that when it is torn from the ground, it groans, and that, this groan being certainly fatal to him that is offering such unwelcome violence, the practice of those who gather mandrakes is to tie one end of a string to the plant, and the other to a dog, upon whom the fatal groan discharges its malignity.

As lean-fac'd Envy in her loathsome cave:
 My tongue should stumble in mine earnest words;
 Mine eyes should sparkle like the beaten flint;
 My hair be fix'd on end, as one distract;
 Ay, every joint should seem to curse and ban:
 And even now my burden'd heart would break,
 Should I not curse them. Poison be their drink!
 Gall, worse than gall, the daintiest that they taste!
 Their sweetest shade, a grove of cypress trees¹!
 Their chiefest prospect, murdering basilisks²!
 Their softest touch, as smart as lizards'² stings!
 Their music, frightful as the serpent's hiss!
 And boding scritch-owls make the concert full!
 All the foul terrors in dark-seated hell——

2. Mar. Enough, sweet Suffolk, thou torment'st thyself:

And these dread curses—like the sun 'gainst glass,
 Or like an over-charged gun,—recoil,
 And turn the force of them upon thyself.

Suf. You bade me ban³, and will you bid me leave?

Now, by the ground that I am banish'd from,
 Well could I curse away a winter's night,
 Though standing naked on a mountain top,
 Where biting cold would never let grass grow,
 And think it but a minute spent in sport.

2. Mar. Oh, let me entreat thee cease! Give me thy hand,

That I may dew it with my mournful tears;
 Nor let the rain of heaven wet this place,
 To wash away my woeful monuments.

Oh, could this kiss be printed in thy hand;

[Kisses his hand.]

That thou might'st think upon these by the seal,
 Through whom a thousand sighs are breath'd for thee!

So, get thee gone, that I may know my grief;
 'Tis but surmis'd whilst thou art standing by,
 As one that surfeits thinking on a want.

I will repeal thee, or, be well assur'd,
 Adventure to be banished myself:

And banished I am, if but from thee.

Go, speak not to me; even now be gone.—

Oh, go not yet!—Even thus two friends condemn'd

Embrace, and kiss, and take ten thousand leaves,
 Loth'er a hundred times to part than die.

Yet now farewell; and farewell life with thee!

Suf. Thus is poor Suffolk ten times banished,
 Once by the king, and three times thrice by thee.
 'Tis not the land I care for, wert thou hence;

A wilderness is populous enough,
 So Suffolk had thy heavenly company;
 For where thou art, there is the world itself,
 With every several pleasure in the world;
 And where thou art not, desolation.

I can no more:—Live thou to joy thy life;
 Myself no joy in nought, but that thou liv'st.

Enter Vaux.

2. Mar. Whither goes Vaux so fast! what news, I pr'ythee?

Vaux. To signify unto his majesty,

5 That cardinal Beaufort is at point of death:
 For suddenly a grievous sickness took him,
 That makes him gasp, and stare, and catch the air,
 Blaspheming God, and cursing men on earth.
 Sometime, he talks as if duke Humphrey's ghost
 10 Were by his side; sometime, he calls the king,
 And whispers to his pillow, as to him,
 The secrets of his over-charged soul:
 And I am sent to tell his majesty,
 That even now he cries aloud for him.

2. Mar. Go, tell this heavy message to the king.
 [Exit Vaux.]

Ah me! what is this world? what news are these?
 But wherefore grieve I at an hour's poor loss⁴,
 Omitting Suffolk's exile, my soul's treasure?

20 Why only, Suffolk, mourn I not for thee,
 And with the southern clouds contend in tears;
 Theirs for the earth's increase, mine for my sorrows? [coming;]

Now, get thee hence.—The king, thou know'st, is 25 If thou be found by me, thou art but dead.

Suf. If I depart from thee, I cannot live:
 And in thy sight to die, what were it else,
 But like a pleasant slumber in thy lap?
 Here could I breathe my soul into the air,
 30 As mild and gentle as the cradle babe,
 Dying with mother's dug between its lips:
 Where, from thy sight, I should be raging mad,
 And cry out for thee to close up mine eyes,
 To have thee with thy lips to stop my mouth;
 35 So shouldst thou either turn my flying soul,
 Or I should breathe it so into thy body,
 And then it liv'd in sweet Elysium.

To die by thee, were but to die in jest;
 From thee to die, were torture more than death;
 40 O, let me stay, befall what may befall. [corrosive,

2. Mar. Away! though parting be a fretful
 It is applied to a deathful wound.

To France, sweet Suffolk: Let me hear from thee;
 For wheresoe'er thou art in this world's globe,
 45 I'll have an Iris⁵ that shall find thee out.

Suf. I go.

2. Mar. And take my heart with thee.

Suf. A jewel lock'd into the woful'st cask
 That ever did contain a thing of worth.
 50 Even as a splitted bark, so sunder we:
 This way fall I to death.

2. Mar. This way for me. [Exeunt severally.]
 S C E N E III.

The Cardinal's Bed-chamber.

55 Enter King Henry, Salisbury, Warwick, and others, to the Cardinal in bed.

K. Hen. How fares my lord? speak, Beaufort, to thy sovereign.

¹ Cypress was employed in the funeral rites of the Romans, and hence is always mentioned as an ill-boding plant. ² It has been said of the basilisk, that it had the power of destroying by a single glance of its eye.—A lizard has no sting, but is quite inoffensive. ³ i. e. curse. ⁴ Meaning, Wherefore do I grieve that Beaufort has died an hour before his time, who, being an old man, could not have had a long time to live? ⁵ Iris was the messenger of Juno.

Car. If thou be'st death, I'll give thee England's Enough to purchase such another island, [treasure,
So thou wilt let me live, and feel no pain.

K. Henry. Ah, what a sign it is of evil life,
When death's approach is seen so terrible!

War. Beaufort, it is thy sovereign speaks to thee.

Car. Bring me unto my trial when you will.
Dy'd he not in his bed? where should he die?
Can I make men live, wh'er they will or no?—
Oh! torture me no more, I will confess.—

Alive again? then shew me where he is:

I'll give a thousand pound to look upon him.—

He hath no eyes, the dust hath blinded them.—

Comb down his hair; look! look! it stands upright,

Like lime-twigs set to catch my winged soul!—

Give me some drink; and bid the apothecary

Bring the strong poison that I bought of him.

K. Henry. O thou eternal Mover of the heavens,

Look with a gentle eye upon this wretch!

Oh, beat away the busy meddling fiend,

That lays strong siege unto this wretch's soul,

And from his bosom purge this black despair!

5 War. See, how the pangs of death do make him grin.

Sal. Disturb him not, let him pass peaceably.

K. Henry. Peace to his soul, if God's good pleasure be!—

10 Lord cardinal, if thou think'st on heaven's bliss,
Hold up thy hand, make signal of thy hope.—

He dies, and makes no sign:—O God, forgive him!

War. So bad a death argues a monstrous life.

15 K. Henry. Forbear to judge, for we are sinners
all.—

Close up his eyes, and draw the curtain close;

And let us all to meditation. [Exeunt.

A C T IV.

S C E N E I.

The Coast of Kent.

Alarm. Fight at Sea. Ordnance goes off. Enter Captain, Whitmore, and other pirates, with Suffolk, and other prisoners.

Cap. THE gaudy, blabbing¹, and remorse-ful² day

Is crept into the bosom of the sea;

And now loud-howling wolves arouse the jades

That drag the tragic melancholy night;

Who with their drowsy, slow, and flagging wings

Clip dead men's graves, and from their misty jaws

Breathe foul contagious darkness in the air.

Therefore bring forth the soldiers of our prize;

For, whilst our pinnace anchors in the Downs,

Here shall they make their ransom on the sand,

Or with their blood stain this discolour'd shore.—

Master, this prisoner freely give I thee;—

And thou that art his mate, make boot of this;—

The other, Walter Whitmore, is thy share.

[Pointing to Suffolk.

1 Gent. What is my ransom, master? let me know. [head.

Mast. A thousand crowns, or else lay down your Mate. And so much shall you give, or off goes yours. [sand crowns,

Whit. What, think you much to pay two thou-

And bear the name and port of gentlemen?—

Cut both the villains' throats;—for die you shall;

Nor can those lives which we have lost in fight,

Be counterpois'd with such a petty sum. [life.

1 Gent. I'll give it, sir; and therefore spare my

2 Gent. And so will I, and write home for it straight.

Whit. I lost mine eye in laying the prize aboard,
And therefore, to revenge it, shalt thou die;

[To Suffolk.

And so should these, if I might have my will.

30 Cap. Be not so rash; take ransom, let him live.

Suf. Look on my George, I am a gentleman;

Rate me at what thou wilt, thou shalt be paid.—

Whit. And so am I; my name is—Walter

Whitmore

35 How now? why start'st thou? what, doth death

affright? [death.

Suf. Thy name affrights me, in whose sound is

A cunning man did calculate my birth,

And told me—that by *Water*³ I should die:

40 Yet let not this make thee be bloody-minded;

Thy name is—Gualtier, being rightly sounded.

Whit. Gualtier, or Walter, which it is, I care not:

Ne'er yet did base dishonour blur our name,

But with our sword we wip'd away the blot;

45 Therefore, when merchant-like I sell revenge,

Broke be my sword, my arms torn and defac'd,

And I proclaim'd a coward through the world!

Suf. Stay, Whitmore; for thy prisoner is a prince,

The duke of Suffolk, William de la Pole.

50 Whit. The duke of Suffolk, muffled up in rags!

Suf. Ay, but these rags are no part of the duke;

Jove sometime went disguis'd, and why not I?

Cap. But Jove was never slain, as thou shalt be.

Suf. Obscure and lowly swain, king Henry's

The honourable blood of Lancaster, [blood,

Must not be shed by such a jaded groom.

Hast thou not kiss'd thy hand, and held my stirrup?

And bare-head plodded by my foot-cloth mule,

And thought thee happy when I shook my head?

60 How often hast thou waited at my cup,

¹ The epithet blabbing, applied to the day by a man about to commit murder, is exquisitely beautiful. Guilt is afraid of light, considers darkness as a natural shelter, and makes night the confidante of those actions which cannot be trusted to the tell-tale day. ² Remorseful is pitiful. ³ See the fourth scene of the first act of this play.

Fed from my trencher, kneel'd down at the board,
When I have feasted with queen Margaret?
Remember it, and let it make thee crest-fall'n;
Ay, and allay this thy abortive¹ pride;
How in our voiding lobby hast thou stood,
And duly waited for my coming forth?
This hand of mine hath writ in thy behalf,
And therefore shall it charm thy riotous tongue.

Whit. Speak, captain, shall I stab the forlorn swain?

Cap. First let my words stab him, as he hath me.

Suf. Base slave! thy words are blunt, and so art thou. [side]

Cap. Convey him hence, and on our long-boat's Strike off his head.

Suf. Thou dar'st not for thine own.

Cap. Poole? Sir Poole? Lord?

Ay, kennel, puddle, sink; whose filth and dirt
Troubles the silver spring where England drinks.
Now will I dam up this thy yawning mouth,
For swallowing the treasure of the realm:
Thy lips, that kiss'd the queen, shall sweep the ground; [death,

And thou, that smil'dst at good duke Humphrey's
Against the senseless winds shall grin in vain,
Who, in contempt, shall hiss at thee again:

And wedded be thou to the hags of hell,
For daring to affy² a mighty lord
Unto the daughter of a worthless king,
Having neither subject, wealth, nor diadem.

By devilish policy art thou grown great,
And, like ambitious Sylla, over-gorg'd
With gobbets of thy mother's bleeding heart.
By thee, Anjou and Maine were sold to France:

The false revolting Normans, thorough thee,
Disdain to call us lord; and Picardy
Hath slain their governors, surpriz'd our forts,
And sent the ragged soldiers wounded home.

The princely Warwick, and the Nevils all,— Whosedreadfulswordswere never drawn in vain,—
As hating thee, are rising up in arms: [crown,

And now the house of York—thrust from the
By shameful murder of a guiltless king,
And lofty proud encroaching tyranny,—
Burns with revenging fire; whose hopeful colours

Advance our halt-fac'd sun, striving to shine,
Under the which is writ—Invitis nubibus.

The commons here in Kent are up in arms:
And, to conclude, reproach, and beggary,
Is crept into the palace of our king,

And all by thee:—Away! convey him hence.

Suf. O that I were a god, to shoot forth thunder
Upon these paltry, servile, abject drudges! [here,
Small things make base men proud: this villain
Being captain of a pinnace³, threatens more
Than Bargulus⁴ the strong Illyrian pirate.
Drones suck not eagles' blood, but rob bee-hives.

It is impossible that I should die

By such a lowly vassal as thyself.

Thy words move rage, and not remorse in me:

I go of message from the queen to France;

5 I charge thee, waft me safely cross the channel.

Cap. Walter,— [death.

Whit. Come, Suffolk, I must waft thee to thy

Suf. Gelidus timor occupat artus:—'tis thee I fear.

Whit. Thou shalt have cause to fear, before I
10 leave thee.

What, are ye daunted now? now will ye stoop?

1 Gent. My gracious lord, entreat him, speak him fair.

Suf. Suffolk's imperial tongue is stern and rough,

15 Us'd to command, untaught to plead for favour.

Far be it, we should honour such as these

With humble suit: no, rather let my head

Stoop to the block, than these knees bow to any,

Save to the God of heaven, and to my king;

20 And sooner dance upon a bloody pole,

Than stand uncover'd to the vulgar groom.

True nobility is exempt from fear:—

More can I bear, than you dare execute.

Cap. Hale him away, and let him talk no more:

25 Come, soldiers, shew what cruelty ye can.—

Suf. That this my death may never be forgot!—

Great men oft die by vile bezonians⁵:

A Roman sworder and banditto slave⁶

Murder'd sweet Tully; Brutus' bastard hand⁷

30 Stabb'd Julius Cæsar; savage islanders,

Pompey the great⁸; and Suffolk dies by pirates.

[Exit Walter Whitmore, with Suffolk.

Cap. And as for these whose ransom we have set,

It is our pleasure one of them depart:—

35 Therefore come you with us, and let him go.

[Exit Captain, with all but the first Gentleman.

Re-enter Whitmore, with Suffolk's body.

Whit. There let his head and lifeless body lie,
Until the queen his mistress bury it. [Exit Whit.

40 1 Gent. O barbarous and bloody spectacle!

His body will I bear unto the king;

If he revenge it not, yet will his friends;

So will the queen, that living held him dear.

[Exit.

SCENE II.

Another part of Kent.

Enter George Bevis and John Holland.

50 Bevis. Come, and get thee a sword, though made of a lath; they have been up these two days.

Hol. They have the more need to sleep now then.

Bevis. I tell thee, Jack Cade the clothier means to dress the commonwealth, and turn it, and set a new nap upon it.

55 Hol. So he had need, for 'tis thread-bare. Well,
I say, it was never merry world in England, since gentlemen came up.

² To affy is to betroth in marriage.

³ A pinnace

did not anciently signify, as at present, a man of war's boat, but a ship of small burthen.

⁴ This Bargulus is to be met with in Tully's Offices; and the legend is the famous Theopompus's History.

"Bargulus Illyrius latro, de quo est apud Theopompum, magnas opes habuit," lib. ii. cap. 11.

⁶ i.e. Herennius a centurion, and Popilius Laenas, tribune of the soldiers.

⁷ Brutus was the son of Servilia, a Roman lady, who had been concubine to Julius Cæsar.

⁸ The poet seems to have confounded the story of Pompey with some other.

Bevis.

Bevis. O miserable age! Virtue is not regarded in handicrafts-men.

Hol. The nobility think scorn to go in leather aprons.

Bevis. Nay more, the king's council are no good workmen.

Hol. True; And yet it is said,—Labour in thy vocation: which is as much to say as,—let the magistrates be labouring men; and therefore should we be magistrates.

Bevis. Thou hast hit it: for there's no better sign of a brave mind, than a hard hand.

Hol. I see them! I see them! There's Best's son, the tanner of Wingham.

Bevis. He shall have the skins of our enemies, to make dog's leather of.

Hol. And Dick the butcher,—

Bevis. Then is sin struck down like an ox, and iniquity's throat cut like a calf.

Hol. And Smith the weaver:—

Bevis. Argo, their thread of life is spun.

Hol. Come, come, let's fall in with them.

Drum. Enter Cade, Dick the butcher, Smith the weaver, and a sawyer, with infinite numbers.

Cade. We John Cade, so term'd of our supposed father,—

Dick. Or rather, of stealing a cade of herrings¹.

[Aside.

Cade. For our enemies shall fall² before us, inspired with the spirit of putting down kings and princes.—Command silence.

Dick. Silence!

Cade. My father was a Mortimer,—

Dick. He was an honest man, and a good bricklayer.

[Aside.

Cade. My mother a Plantagenet,—

Dick. I knew her well, she was a midwife. [Aside.

Cade. My wife descended of the Lacies,—

Dick. She was, indeed, a pedlar's daughter, and sold many laces.

[Aside.

Smith. But, now of late, not able to travel with her furr'd pack³, she washes bucks here at home.

[Aside.

Cade. Therefore am I of an honourable house.

Dick. Ay, by my faith: the field is honourable; and there was he born, under a hedge; for his father had never a house, but the cage.

[Aside.

Cade. Valiant I am.

Smith. 'A must needs; for beggary is valiant.

[Aside.

Cade. I am able to endure much.

Dick. No question of that; for I have seen him whipp'd three market-days together.

[Aside.

Cade. I fear neither sword nor fire.

Smith. He need not fear the sword, for his coat is of proof.

[Aside.

Dick. But, methinks, he should stand in fear of fire, being so often burnt i' the hand for stealing of sheep.

[Aside.

Cade. Be brave then; for your captain is brave, and vows reformation. There shall be, in England, seven half-penny loaves sold for a penny: the three-hoop'd pot shall have ten hoops; and I will make it felony to drink small beer: all the realm shall be in common, and in Cheapside shall my palfry go to grass. And, when I am king (as king I will be)——

All. God save your majesty!

Cade. I thank you, good people:—There shall be no money; all shall eat and drink on my score; and I will apparel them all in one livery, that they may agree like brothers, and worship me their lord.

Dick. The first thing we do, let's kill all the lawyers.

Cade. Nay, that I mean to do. Is not this a lamentable thing, that of the skin of an innocent lamb should be made parchment? that parchment, being scribbled o'er, should undo a man? Some say, the bee stings; but I say, 'tis the bee's wax; for I did but seal once to a thing, and I was never my own man since. How now? who's there?

Enter some, bringing in the Clerk of Chatham.

Smith. The clerk of Chatham: he can write and read, and cast accompt.

Cade. O monstrous!

Smith. We took him setting of boys copies.

Cade. Here's a villain!

Smith. H'as a book in his pocket, with red letters in't.

Cade. Nay, then he is a conjurer.

Dick. Nay, he can make obligations, and write court-hand.

Cade. I am sorry for't: the man is a proper man, on mine honour; unless I find him guilty, he shall not die.—Come hither, sirrah, I must examine thee: What is thy name?

Clerk. Emanuel.

Dick. They use to write it on the top of letters⁴;—'Twill go hard with you.

Cade. Let me alone:—Dost thou use to write thy name? or hast thou a mark to thyself, like an honest plain-dealing man?

Clerk. Sir, I thank God, I have been so well brought up, that I can write my name.

All. He hath confess'd: away with him; he's a villain, and a traitor.

Cade. Away with him, I say: hang him with his pen and inkhorn about his neck.

[Exit one with the Clerk.

Enter Michael.

Mich. Where's our general?

Cade. Here I am, thou particular fellow.

Mich. Fly, fly, fly! Sir Humphrey Stafford and his brother are hard by, with the king's forces.

Cade. Stand, villain, stand, or I'll fell thee down: He shall be encounter'd with a man as good as himself: He is but a knight, is a'?

Mich. No.

Cade. To equal him, I will make myself a knight presently; Rise up Sir John Mortimer.

¹ That is, a barrel of herrings. Perhaps the word keg, which is now used, is cade corrupted. ² He alludes to his name Cade, from cado, Lat. to fall.

³ A wallet or knapsack of skin with the hair outward. ⁴ i. e. of letters missive, and such like public acts.

Now have at him. Is there any more of them that be knights?

Mich. Ay, his brother.

Cade. Then kneel down, Dick Butcher; Rise up Sir Dick Butcher. Now sound up the drum.
Enter Sir Humphrey Stafford, and his Brother, with drum and soldiers.

Staf. Rebellious hinds, the filth and scum of Kent, Mark'd for the gallows,—lay your weapons down, Home to your cottages, forsake this groom:—
The king is merciful, if you revolt. [blood,

Y. Staf. But angry, wrathful, and inclin'd to If you go forward: therefore yield, or die. [not¹;

Cade. As for these silken-coated slaves, I pass It is to you, good people, that I speak, O'er whom, in time to come, I hope to reign; For I am rightful heir unto the crown.

Staf. Villain, thy father was a plaisterer; And thou thyself, a shearman, Art thou not?

Cade. And Adam was a gardener.

Y. Staf. And what of that?

Cade. Marry, this:—Edmund Mortimer, earl of March, [not?

Married the duke of Clarence's daughter; Did he Staf. Ay, sir.

Cade. By her he had two children at one birth.

Y. Staf. That's false. [true:

Cade. Ay, there's the question; but, I say, 'tis The elder of them, being put to nurse, Was by a beggar-woman stol'n away; And, ignorant of his birth and parentage, Became a bricklayer, when he came to age: His son am I; deny it, if you can. [king.

Dick. Nay, 'tis too true; therefore he shall be

Smith. Sir, he made a chimney in my father's house, and the bricks are alive at this day to testify it; therefore, deny it not.

Staf. And will you credit this base drudge's words, That speaks he knows not what?

All. Ay, marry, will we; therefore get you gone.

Y. Staf. Jack Cade, the duke of York hath taught you this.

Cade. He lies, for I invented it myself. [Aside. Go to, sirrah, Tell the king from me, that—for his father's sake, Henry the fifth, in whose time boys went to span-counter for French crowns,—I am content he shall reign; but I'll be protector over him.

Dick. And, furthermore, we'll have the lord Say's head, for selling the dukedom of Maine.

Cade. And good reason; for thereby is England maim'd, and fain to go with a staff, but that my puissance holds it up. Fellow kings, I tell you, that that lord Say hath gelded the common-wealth, and made it an eunuch: and more than that, he can speak French, and therefore he is a traitor.

Staf. O gross and miserable ignorance!

Cade. Nay, answer, if you can: The Frenchmen are our enemies: go to then, I ask but this: Can he, that speaks with the tongue of an enemy, be a good counsellor, or no?

All. No, no; and therefore we'll have his head.

Y. Staf. Well, seeing gentle words will not pre-Assail them with the army of the king. [vail, Staf. Herald away: and, throughout every town, Proclaim them traitors that are up with Cade; That those, which fly before the battle ends, May, even in their wives' and children's sight, Be hang'd up for example at their doors:— And you, that be the king's friends, follow me.

[Exeunt the two Staffords, with their train.

Cade. And you, that love the commons, follow me.—

Now shew yourselves men, 'tis for liberty.

We will not leave one lord, one gentleman:

Spare none, but such as go in clouted shoon;

For they are thrifty honest men, and such As would (but that they dare not) take our parts.

Dick. They are all in order, and march toward us.

Cade. But then are we in order, when we are most out of order. Come, march forward. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.

Another part of the Field. The parties fight, and both the Staffords are slain.

Re-enter Cade, and the rest.

Cade. Where's Dick, the butcher of Ashford?

Dick. Here, sir.

Cade. They fell before thee like sheep and oxen, and thou behav'dst thyself as if thou hadst been in thine own slaughter-house: therefore thus I will reward thee,—The Lent shall be as long again as it is; and thou shalt have a licence to kill for a hundred lacking one.

Dick. I desire no more.

Cade. And, to speak truth, thou deserv'st no less. This monument of the victory² will I bear; and the bodies shall be dragged at my horse's heels, 'till I do come to London, where we will have the mayor's sword borne before us.

Dick. If we mean to thrive and do good, break open the gaols, and let out the prisoners.

Cade. Fear not that, I warrant thee. Come, let's march towards London. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.

Black-Heath.

Enter King Henry with a supplication, and Queen Margaret with Suffolk's head; the Duke of Buckingham, and the Lord Say.

2. Mar. Oft have I heard—that grief softens the mind,

And makes it fearful and degenerate;

Think therefore on revenge, and cease to weep.

But who can cease to weep, and look on this?

Here may his head lie on my throbbing breast:

But where's the body that I should embrace?

Buck. What answer makes your grace to the rebels' supplication?

K. Henry. I'll send some holy bishop to entreat: For God forbid, so many simple souls

Should perish by the sword! And I myself, Rather than bloody war should cut them short, Will parley with Jack Cade their general.—

¹ i. e. I pay them no regard.

² Here Cade must be supposed to take off Stafford's armour.

Cade. And henceforward all things shall be in common.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My-lord, a prize, a prize! here's the lord Say, which sold the town in France; he that made us pay one-and-twenty fifteens, and one shilling to the pound, the last subsidy.

Enter George Bevis, with the lord Say.

Cade. Well, he shall be beheaded for it ten times. —Ah, thou say¹, thou serge, nay, thou buckram lord! now art thou within point-blank of our jurisdiction regal. What canst thou answer to my majesty, for giving up of Normandy unto monsieur Basimecu, the Dauphin of France? Be it known unto thee by these presence, even the presence of lord Mortimer, that I am the besom that must sweep the court clean of such filth as thou art. Thou hast most traitorously corrupted the youth of the realm, in erecting a grammar-school: and whereas, before, our fore-fathers had no other books but the score and the tally, thou hast caused printing² to be us'd; and, contrary to the king, his crown, and dignity, thou hast built a paper-mill. It will be proved to thy face, that thou hast men about thee, that usually talk of a noun, and a verb; and such abominable words, as no christian ear can endure to hear. Thou hast appointed justices of peace, to call poor men before them about matters they were not able to answer. Moreover, thou hast put them in prison; and, because they could not read³, thou hast hang'd them; when, indeed, only for that cause they have been most worthy to live. Thou dost ride on a foot-cloth⁴, dost thou not?

Say. What of that?

Cade. Marry, thou ought'st not to let thy horse wear a cloak, when honest men than thou go in their hose and doublets.

Dick. And work in their shirt too; as myself, for example, that am a butcher.

Say. You men of Kent, —

Dick. What say you of Kent? [gens.]

Say. Nothing but this: 'Tis bona terra, mala

Cade. Away with him, away with him! he speaks Latin. [will.]

Say. Hear me but speak, and bear me where you Kent, in the Commentaries Cæsar writ, Is term'd the civil'st place of all this isle: Sweet is the country, because full of riches; The people liberal, valiant, active, wealthy; Which makes me hope you are not void of pity. I sold not Maine, I lost not Normandy; Yet, to recover them, would lose my life. Justice with favour have I always done; [never.] Prayers and tears have mov'd me, gifts could When have I aught exacted at your hands?

Kent⁵ to maintain, the king, the realm, and you, Large gifts have I bestow'd on learned clerks, Because my book preferr'd me to the king: And—seeing ignorance is the curse of God, Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heaven,— Unless you be possess'd with devilish spirits, You cannot but forbear to murder me.

This tongue hath parley'd unto foreign kings For your behoof, — [field?]

Cade. Tut! when struck'st thou one blow in the Say. Great men have reaching hands: oft have I struck

Those that I never saw, and struck them dead.

George. O monstrous coward! what, to come behind folks! [your good.]

Say. These cheeks are pale with watching for Cade. Give him a box-o' the ear, and that will make 'em red again.

Say. Long sitting to determine poor men's causes Hath made me full of sickness and diseases.

Cade. Ye shall have a hempen caudle then, and the help of a hatchet.

Dick. Why dost thou quiver, man?

Say. The palsy, and not fear, provokes me.

Cade. Nay, he nods at us; as who should say, I'll be even with you. I'll see if his head will stand steadier on a pole, or no: Take him away, and behead him.

Say. Tell me, wherein have I offended most?

Have I affected wealth, or honour? speak.

Are my chests fill'd up with extorted gold?

Is my apparel sumptuous to behold?

Whom have I injur'd, that ye seek my death?

These hands are free from guiltless blood-shedding,

This breast from harbouring foul deceitful thoughts. O, let me live!

Cade. I feel remorse in myself with his words: but I'll bridle it; he shall die, an it be but for pleading so well for his life. Away with him!

he has a familiar⁶ under his tongue; he speaks not o' God's name. Go, take him away, I say, and strike off his head presently; and then break into his son-in-law's house, Sir James Cromer, and strike off his head, and bring them both upon two poles hither.

All. It shall be done. [prayers.]

Say. Ah, countrymen! if when you make your God should be so obdurate as yourselves, How would it fare with your departed souls?

And therefore yet relent, and save my life.

Cade. Away with him, and do as I command ye.

[Exeunt some, with lord Say.]

The proudest peer of the realm shall not wear a head on his shoulders, unless he pay me tribute; there shall not a maid be married, but she shall pay to me her maidenhead⁷ ere they have it: Men shall hold of me in capite; and we charge and command, that their wives be as free as heart can wish, or tongue can tell.

Dick. My lord, when shall we go to Cheapside, and take up commodities upon our bills¹?

Cade. Marry, presently.

All. O brave!

Re-enter one with the heads.

Cade. But is not this braver?—Let them kiss one another; for they lov'd well, when they were alive. Now part them again, lest they consult about the giving up of some more towns in France. Soldiers, defer the spoil of the city until night: for with these borne before us, instead of maces, we will ride through the streets; and, at every corner, have them kiss².—Away. [Exeunt.

Southwark.

Alarum, and retreat. Enter again Cade, and all his rabblement.

Cade. Up Fish-street! down Saint Magnus' corner! kill and knock down! throw them into Thames!— [A parley sounded.

What noise is this I hear? Dare any be so bold to sound retreat and parley, when I command them kill?

Enter Buckingham, and old Clifford, attended.

Buck. Ay, here they be that dare, and will disturb thee:

Know, Cade, we come ambassadors from the king Unto the commons, whom thou hast mis-led; And here pronounce free pardon to them all, That will forsake thee, and go home in peace.

Clif. What say ye, countrymen? will ye relent, And yield to mercy, whilst 'tis offer'd you; Or let a rabble lead you to your deaths?

Who loves the king, and will embrace his pardon, Fling up his cap, and say—God save his majesty! Who hateth him, and honours not his father, Henry the fifth, that made all France to quake, Shake he his weapon at us, and pass by.

All. God save the king! God save the king!

Cade. What, Buckingham, and Clifford, are ye so brave?—And you, base peasants, do ye believe him? will you needs be hang'd with your pardons about your necks? Hath my sword therefore broke through London gates, that you should leave me at the White-hart in Southwark? I thought, ye would never have given out these arms, 'till you had recover'd your ancient freedom: but you are all recreants, and dastards; and delight to live in slavery to the nobility. Let them break your backs with burdens, take your houses over your heads, ravish your wives and daughters before your faces; For me,—I will make shift for one; and so—God's curse light upon you all!

All. We'll follow Cade, we'll follow Cade.

Clif. Is Cade the son of Henry the fifth, That thus you do exclaim—you'll go with him?

Will he conduct you through the heart of France, And make the meanest of you earls and dukes? Alas, he hath no home, no place to fly to; Nor knows he how to live, but by the spoil, Unless by robbing of your friends, and us.

Wer't not a shame, that, whilst you live at jar, The fearful French, whom you late vanquished, Should make a start o'er seas, and vanquish you? Methinks, already, in this civil broil,

I see them lording it in London streets, Crying—Villageois! unto all they meet.

Better, ten thousand base-born Cades miscarry, Than you should stoop unto a Frenchman's mercy. To France, to France, and get what you have lost; Spare England, for it is your native coast:

Henry hath money, you are strong and manly; God on our side, doubt not of victory.

All. A Clifford! a Clifford! we'll follow the king, and Clifford.

Cade. Was ever feather so lightly blown to and fro, as this multitude? The name of Henry the fifth hales them to an hundred mischiefs, and makes them leave me desolate. I see them lay their heads together, to surprize me: my sword make way for me, for here is no staying.—In despite of the devils and hell, have through the very midst of you! and heavens and honour be witness, that no want of resolution in me, but only my followers' base and ignominious treasons, makes me betake me to my heels. [Exit.

Buck. What, is he fled? go some, and follow him; And he, that brings his head unto the king, Shall have a thousand crowns for his reward.—

[Exeunt some of them.

Follow me, soldiers; we'll devise a mean To reconcile you all unto the king. [Exeunt.

S C E N E IX.

Kenelworth Castle.

Sound trumpets. Enter King Henry, Queen Margaret, and Somerset, on the Terras.

K. Henry. Was ever king, that joy'd an earthly throne,

And could command no more content than I?

No sooner was I crept out of my cradle, But I was made a king, at nine months old; Was never subject long'd to be a king, As I do long and wish to be a subject.

Enter Buckingham and Clifford.

Buck. Health and glad tidings, to your majesty!

K. Henry. Why, Buckingham, is the traitor Cade surpriz'd?

Or is he but retir'd to make him strong?

Enter below, multitudes, with halters about their necks.

Clif. He's fled, my lord, and all his powers do yield;

And humbly thus with halters on their necks Expect your highness' doom, of life or death.

K. Henry. Then, heaven, set ope thy everlasting gates,

To entertain my vows of thanks and praise!—

¹ A pun, perhaps alluding to the brown bills, or halberds, with which the commons were anciently armed. ² This fact is recorded by Holinshed, p. 634: "and as it were in a spite caused them in every street to kisse together."

Soldiers, this day have you redeem'd your lives,
And shew'd how well you love your prince and country:

Continue still in this so good a mind,
And Henry, though he be unfortunate,
Assure yourselves, will never be unkind:
And so, with thanks, and pardon to you all,
I do dismiss you to your several countries.

All. God save the king! God save the king!

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Please it your grace to be advertised,
The duke of York is newly come from Ireland;
And with a puissant and a mighty power,
Of Gallow-glasses, and stout Kernes¹,
Is marching hitherward in proud array;
And still proclaimeth, as he comes along,
His arms are only to remove from thee
The duke of Somerset, whom he terms a traitor.

K. Henry. Thus stands my state, 'twixt Cade and York distress'd;

Like to a ship, that, having 'scap'd a tempest,
Is straightway calm'd, and boarded with a pirate:
But now is Cade driven back, his men dispers'd;
And now is York in arms, to second him.—

I pray thee, Buckingham, go and meet him;
And ask him, what's the reason of these arms.
Tell him, I'll send duke Edmund to the Tower:—
And, Somerset, we will commit thee thither,
Until his army be dismiss'd from him.

Som. My lord,
I'll yield myself to prison willingly,
Or unto death, to do my country good.

K. Hen. In any case be not too rough in terms;
For he is fierce, and cannot brook hard language.

Buck. I will, my lord; and doubt not so to deal,
As all things shall redound unto your good.

K. Henry. Come, wife, let's in, and learn to govern better;
For yet may England curse my wretched reign.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE X.

A Garden in Kent.

Enter Jack Cade.

Cade. Fie on ambition! fie on myself; that have a sword, and yet am ready to famish! These five days have I hid me in these woods; and durst not peep out, for all the country is lay'd for me;
but now am I so hungry, that if I might have a lease of my life for a thousand years, I could stay no longer. Wherefore, on a brick-wall have I climb'd into this garden; to see if I can eat grass, or pick a sallet another while, which is not amiss to cool a man's stomach this hot weather. And, I think, this word sallet was born to do me good:
for, many a time, but for a sallet², my brain-pan had been cleft with a brown bill; and, many a time, when I have been dry, and bravely marching, it hath serv'd me instead of a quart-pot to drink in; and now the word sallet must serve me to feed on.

Enter Iden, with Servants.

Iden. Lord, who would live turmoiled in the 5 And may enjoy such quiet walks as these? [court,
This small inheritance, my father left me,
Contenteth me, and 's worth a monarchy.

I seek not to wax great by others' waining;
Or gather wealth, I care not with what envy;
10 Sufficeth, that I have maintains my state,
And sends the poor well pleased from my gate.

Cade. Here's the lord of the soil come to seize me for a stray, for entering his fee-simple without leave. Ah, villain, thou wilt betray me, and get a 15 thousand crowns of the king for carrying my head to him; but I'll make thee eat iron like an ostridge, and swallow my sword like a great pin, ere thou and I part.

Iden. Why, rude companion, whatsoe'er thou be,
20 I know thee not; Why then should I betray thee?
Is't not enough, to break into my garden,
And, like a thief, to come to rob my grounds,
Climbing my walls in spite of me the owner,
But thou wilt brave me with these saucy terms?

Cade. Brave thee? ay, by the best blood that ever was broach'd, and beard thee too. Look on me well: I have eat no meat these five days;
yet, come thou and thy five men, and if I do not leave you all as dead as a door-nail, I pray God, 30 I may never eat grass more.

Iden. Nay, it shall ne'er be said, while England
stands,

That Alexander Iden, an esquire of Kent,
Took odds to combat a poor famish'd man.

35 Oppose thy stedfast-gazing eyes to mine,
See if thou canst out-face me with thy looks.
Set limb to limb, and thou art far the lesser:

Thy hand is but a finger to my fist;
Thy leg a stick, compared with this truncheon;

40 My foot shall fight with all the strength thou hast;
And if mine arm be heaved in the air,
Thy grave is digg'd already in the earth.

As for more words, whose greatness answers words,
Let this my sword report what speech forbears³.

Cade. By my valour, the most complete champion that ever I heard.—Steel, if thou turn the edge, or cut not out the burly-bon'd clown in chins of beef ere thou sleep in thy sheath, I beseech Jove on my knees, thou may'st be turn'd to hobnails.

[Here they fight.]

O, I am slain! famine, and no other, hath slain me: let ten thousand devils come against me, and give me but the ten meals I have lost, and I'd defy them all. Wither, garden; and be henceforth 55 a burying-place to all that do dwell in this house, because the unconquer'd soul of Cade is fled.

Iden. Is't Cade that I have slain, that monstrous traitor?

Sword, I will hallow thee for this thy deed, more words, whose pomp may answer words, and only words, I shall forbear them, and refer the rest to my sword.

And hang thee o'er my tomb, when I am dead¹:

Ne'er shall this blood be wiped from thy point;
But thou shalt wear it as a herald's coat,
To emblaze the honour that thy master got.

Cade. Iden, farewell; and be proud of thy victory: Tell Kent from me, she hath lost her best man, and exhort all the world to be cowards; for I, that never fear'd any, am vanquish'd by famine, not by valour.

[Dies.]

Iden. How much thou wrong'st me, heaven be my judge. [thee!]

Die, damned wretch, the curse of her that bare
And as I thrust thy body in with my sword,
So wish I, I might thrust thy soul to hell.
Hence will I drag thee headlong by the heels
Unto a dunghill, which shall be thy grave,
And there cut off thy most ungracious head;
Which I will bear in triumph to the king,
Leaving thy trunk for crows to feed upon. [Exit.]

A C T V.

SCENE I.

Fields near Saint Albans.

Enter York, attended, with drum and colours.

York, at a distance from his followers.

FROM Ireland thus comes York, to claim his
right,

And pluck the crown from feeble Henry's head:
Ring, bells, aloud; burn, bonfires, clear and bright,
To entertain great England's lawful king.

Ah, sancta majestas! who would not buy thee dear?
Let them obey, that know not how to rule;

This hand was made to handle nought but gold:
I cannot give due action to my words,

Except a sword, or scepter, balance it².

A scepter shall it have, have I a soul:

On which I'll toss the flower-de-luce of France.

Enter Buckingham.

Whom have we here? Buckingham, to disturb me?
The king hath sent him, sure: I must dissemble.

Buck. York, if thou meanest well, I greet thee well. [greeting.]

York. Humphrey of Buckingham, I accept thy Art thou a messenger, or come of pleasure?

Buck. A messenger from Henry, our dread liege,
To know the reason of these arms in peace;

Or why, thou—being a subject as I am,—
Against thy oath and true allegiance sworn,

Should'st raise so great a power without his leave,
Or dare to bring thy force so near the court.

York. Scarce can I speak, my choler is so great.
Oh, I could hew up rocks, and fight with flint,

I am so angry at these abject terms;
And now, like Ajax Telamonius,

On sheep and oxen could I spend my fury!
I am far better born than is the king;

More like a king, more kingly in my thoughts:
But I must make fair weather yet a while,

'Till Henry be more weak, and I more strong.—
O Buckingham, I pr'ythee pardon me,

That I have given no answer all this while;
My mind was troubled with deep melancholy.

The cause why I have brought this army hither,
Is—to remove proud Somerset from the king,

Seditious to his grace, and to the state.

Buck. That is too much presumption on thy part:
But if thy arms be to no other end,

The king hath yielded unto thy demand;

The duke of Somerset is in the Tower.

York. Upon thine honour, is he prisoner?

Buck. Upon mine honour, he is prisoner.

York. Then, Buckingham, I do dismiss my powers.—

Soldiers, I thank you all; disperse yourselves;

Meet me to-morrow in Saint George's field,

You shall have pay, and every thing you wish.—

And let my sovereign, virtuous Henry,

Command my eldest son,—nay, all my sons,—

As pledges of my fealty and love,

I'll send them all as willing as I live;

Lands, goods, horse, armour, any thing I have

Is his to use, so Somerset may die.

Buck. York, I commend this kind submission:

We twain will go into his highness' tent.

Enter King Henry, and Attendants.

K. Henry. Buckingham, doth York intend no harm to us,

That thus he marcheth with thee arm in arm?

York. In all submission and humility,

York doth present himself unto your highness.

K. Henry. Then what intend these forces thou dost bring?

York. To heave the traitor Somerset from hence;

And fight against that monstrous rebel, Cade,

Whom since I hear to be discomfited.

Enter Iden, with Cade's head.

Iden. If one so rude, and of so mean condition,

May pass into the presence of a king,

Lo, I present your grace a traitor's head,

The head of Cade, whom I in combat slew.

K. Henry. The head of Cade?—Great God, how just art thou!—

O, let me view his visage being dead,

That living wrought me such exceeding trouble.

Tell me, my friend, art thou the man that slew him?

Iden. I was, an't like your majesty. [degree?]

K. Henry. How art thou call'd? and what is thy

Iden. Alexander Iden, that's my name;

¹ I will make a votive offering of thee, and for that purpose hang thee over the tomb in which I purpose to have my body laid, when I am dead. ² That is, balance my hand.

A poor esquire of Kent, that loves the king.

Buck. So please it you, my lord, 'twere not amiss
He were created knight for his good service.

K. Henry. Iden, kneel down; [he kneels] Rise up a knight.

We give thee for reward a thousand marks;
And will, that thou henceforth attend on us.

Iden. May Iden live to merit such a bounty,
And never live but true unto his liege!

K. Henry. See, Buckingham! Somerset comes with the queen;

Go, bid her hide him quickly from the duke.

Enter Queen Margaret, and Somerset.

2. Mar. For thousand Yorks he shall not hide his head,

But boldly stand, and front him to his face.

York. How now! is Somerset at liberty?

Then, York, unloose thy long-imprison'd thoughts,
And let thy tongue be equal with thy heart.

Shall I endure the sight of Somerset?—

False king! why hast thou broken faith with me,
Knowing how hardly I can brook abuse?

King did I call thee? no, thou art not king;

Not fit to govern and rule multitudes,

Which dar'st not, no, nor canst not rule a traitor.

That head of thine doth not become a crown;

Thy hand is made to grasp a palmer's staff,

And not to grace an awful princely scepter.

That gold must round engirt these brows of mine;

Whose smile and frown, like to Achilles' spear,

Is able with the change to kill and cure.

Here is a hand to hold a scepter up,

And with the same to act controlling laws,

Give place; by heaven, thou shalt rule no more

O'er him, whom heaven created for thy ruler.

Som. O monstrous traitor!—I arrest thee, York,

Of capital treason 'gainst the king and crown;

Obeys, audacious traitor; kneel for grace.

York. Sirrah, call in my sons to be my bail.—

[Exit an Attendant.]

Wouldst have me kneel? first let me ask of these,

If they can brook I bow a knee to man.—

I know, ere they will let me go to ward,

They'll pawn their swords for my enfranchisement.

2. Mar. Call hither Clifford; bid him come again,

To say, if that the bastard boys of York

Shall be the surety for their traitor father.

York. O blood-bespotted Neapolitan,

Out-cast of Naples, England's bloody scourge!

The sons of York, thy betters in their birth,

Shall be their father's bail; and bane to those

That for my surety will refuse the boys.

Enter Edward and Richard.

See, where they come; I'll warrant, they'll make it good.

Enter Clifford.

2. Mar. And here comes Clifford, to deny their bail.

Clif. Health and all happiness to my lord the king! [Kneels.]

York. We thank thee, Clifford: Say, what news with thee?

Nay, do not fright us with an angry look:

We are thy sovereign, Clifford, kneel again;

For thy mistaking so, we pardon thee.

Clif. This is my king, York, I do not mistake;
But thou mistak'st me much, to think I do:—

To Bedlam with him! is the man grown mad?

K. Henry. Ay, Clifford; a bedlam and ambitious humour

Makes him oppose himself against his king.

Clif. He is a traitor; let him to the Tower,
And crop away that factious pate of his.

2. Mar. He is arrested, but will not obey;

His sons, he says, shall give their words for him.

York. Will you not, sons? [serve.]

E. Plan. Ay, noble father, if our words will

R. Plan. And if words will not, then our weapons shall. [here!]

Clif. Why, what a brood of traitors have we

York. Look in a glass, and call thy image so;

I am thy king, and thou a false-heart traitor.—

Call hither to the stake my two brave bears¹,

That, with the very shaking of their chains,

They may astonish these fell lurking curs:

Bid Salisbury, and Warwick, come to me.

Drums. Enter the Earls of Warwick and Salisbury.

Clif. Are these thy bears? we'll bait thy bears
to death,

And manacle the bear-ward in their chains,

If thou dar'st bring them to the baiting-place.

R. Plan. Oft have I seen² a hot o'er-weening cur

Run back and bite, because he was withheld;

Who, being suffer'd with the bear's fell paw,

Hath clapp'd his tail between his legs, and cry'd:

And such a piece of service will you do,

If you oppose yourselves to match lord Warwick.

Clif. Hence, heap of wrath, foul indigested lump,
As crooked in thy manners as thy shape!

York. Nay, we shall heat you thoroughly anon.

Clif. Take heed, lest by your heat you burn yourselves. [to bow?—]

K. Henry. Why, Warwick, hath thy knee forgot

Old Salisbury,—shame to thy silver hair,

Thou mad mis-leader of thy brain-sick son!

What, wilt thou on thy death-bed play the ruffian,

And seek for sorrow with thy spectacles?—

Oh, where is faith? oh, where is loyalty?

If it be banish'd from the frosty head,

Where shall it find a harbour in the earth?

Wilt thou go dig a grave to find out war,

And shame thine honourable age with blood?

Why art thou old, and want'st experience?

Or wherefore dost abuse it, if thou hast it?

For shame! in duty bend thy knee to me,

That bows unto the grave with mickle age.

Sal. My lord, I have consider'd with myself

The title of this most renowned duke;

And in my conscience do repute his grace

The rightful heir to England's royal seat. [me?]

K. Henry. Hast thou not sworn allegiance unto

Sal. I have.

¹ The Nevils, earls of Warwick, had a bear and ragged staff for their cognizance.
baiting was anciently a royal sport.

² Bear-

K. Henry. Canst thou dispense with heaven for such an oath?

Sal. It is great sin, to swear unto a sin;
But greater sin, to keep a sinful oath.
Who can be bound by any solemn vow
To do a murderous deed, to rob a man,
To force a spotless virgin's chastity,
To reave the orphan of his patrimony,
To wring the widow from her custom'd right;
And have no other reason for this wrong,
But that he was bound by a solemn oath?

2. Mar. A subtle traitor needs no sophister.

K. Henry. Call Buckingham, and bid him arm himself. [hast,

York. Call Buckingham, and all the friends thou I am resolv'd for death, or dignity.

Old Clif. The first I warrant thee, if dreams prove true.

War. You were best go to bed, and dream again, To keep thee from the tempest of the field.

Old Clif. I am resolv'd to bear a greater storm, Than any thou can'st conjure up to-day:
And that I'll write upon thy burgonet¹,
Might I but know thee by thy house's badge.

War. Now by my father's badge, old Nevil's crest,

The rampant bear chain'd to the ragged staff,
This day I'll wear aloft my burgonet,
(As on a mountain top the cedar shews,
That keeps his leaves in spite of any storm)
Even to affright thee with the view thereof.

Old Clif. And from thy burgonet I'll rend thy bear,
And tread it under foot with all contempt,
Despight the bear-ward that protects the bear.

Y. Clif. And so to arms, victorious noble father,
To quell these traitors and their 'complices.

R. Plan. Fie! charity, for shame! speak not in spite,

For you shall sup with Jesu Christ to-night.

Y. Clif. Foul stigmatic²; that's more than thou canst tell.

R. Plan. If not in heaven, you'll surely sup in hell. [Exeunt severally.

SCENE II.

The Field of Battle at Saint Albans.

Enter Warwick.

War. Clifford of Cumberland, 'tis Warwick calls!
And if thou dost not hide thee from the bear,
Now,—when the angry trumpet sounds alarm,
And dead men's cries do fill the empty air,—
Clifford, I say, come forth and fight with me!
Proud northern lord, Clifford of Cumberland,
Warwick is hoarse with calling thee to arms.

Enter York.

How now, my noble lord? what, all a-foot?

York. The deadly-handed Clifford slew my steed;
But match to match I have encounter'd him,
And made a prey for carrion kites and crows
Even of the bonny beast he lov'd so well,

Enter Clifford.

War. Of one or both of us the time is come.

York. Hold, Warwick, seek thee out some other chase,

5 For I myself must hunt this deer to death.

War. Then, nobly, York; 'tis for a crown thou fight'st.—

As I intend, Clifford, to thrive to-day,
It grieves my soul to leave thee unassail'd.

10 [Exit Warwick.

Clif. What seest thou in me, York? why dost thou pause?

York. With thy brave bearing should I be in love,
But that thou art so fast mine enemy. [esteem,

15 Clif. Nor should thy prowess want praise and
But that 'tis shewn ignobly, and in treason.

York. So let it help me now against thy sword,
As I in justice and true right express it!

Clif. My soul and body on the action both!—

20 York. A dreadfullay³!—address⁴ thee instantly.

[Fight, and Clifford falls.

Clif. La fin couronne les œuvres. [Dies.

York. Thus war hath given thee peace, for thou art still.

25 Peace with his soul, heaven, if it be thy will!

[Exit.

Enter young Clifford.

Y. Clif. Shame and confusion! all is on the rout;
Fear frames disorder, and disorder wounds

30 Where it should guard. O war, thou son of hell,
Whom angry heavens do make their minister,
Throw in the frozen bosoms of our part
Hot coals of vengeance!—Let no soldier fly:

He that is truly dedicate to war,
Hath no self-love; nor he, that loves himself,

35 Hath not essentially, but by circumstance,
The name of valour.—O, let the vile world end,

[Seeing his dead father.

And the premised⁵ flames of the last day
Knit earth and heaven together!

40 Now let the general trumpet blow his blast,
Particularities and petty sounds
To cease⁶!—Wast thou ordain'd, dear father,
To lose thy youth in peace, and to atchieve⁷

45 The silver livery of advised age;
And, in thy reverence, and thy chair-days, thus
To die in ruffian battle?—Even at this sight,
My heart is turn'd to stone: and, while 'tis mine,

It shall be stony. York not our old men spares;
No more will I their babes: tears virginal

50 Shall be to me even as the dew to fire;
And beauty, that the tyrant oft reclaims,
Shall to my flaming wrath be oil and flax.
Henceforth, I will not have to do with pity;

55 Meet I an infant of the house of York,
Into as many gobbets will I cut it,
As wild Medea young Absyrtus did:
In cruelty will I seek out my fame.

Come, thou new ruin of old Clifford's house!

60 [Taking up the body.

¹ i. e. thy helmet. ² A stigmatic is one on whom nature has set a mark of deformity. ³ i. e. a dreadful wager. ⁴ i. e. prepare. ⁵ Premised, for sent before their time. The sense is, let the flames reserved for the last day be sent now. ⁶ i. e. to stop. ⁷ i. e. to obtain.

S C E N E III.

As did Æneas old Anchises bear,
So bear I thee upon my manly shoulders;
But then Æneas bare a living load,
Nothing so heavy as these woes of mine. [Exit.

Enter Richard Plantagenet and Somerset, to fight.

R. Plan. So, lie thou there;—

[Somerset is killed.

For, underneath an ale-house' paltry sign,
The Castle in St. Albans, Somerset
Hath made the wizard famous in his death¹.—
Sword, hold thy temper; heart, be wrathful still:
Priests pray for enemies, but princes kill. [Exit.

Fight. Excursions. Enter King Henry, and Queen Margaret, and others.

2. Mar. Away, my lord, you are slow; for shame, away!

K. Henry. Can we out-run the heavens? good
Margaret, stay.

2. Mar. What are you made of? you'll nor fight, nor fly:

Now is it manhood, wisdom, and defence,
To give the enemy way; and to secure us
By what we can, which can no more but fly.

[Alarum afar off.

If you be ta'en, we then should see the bottom
Of all our fortunes: but if we haply 'scape,
(As well we may, if not through your neglect)
We shall to London get; where you are lov'd;
And where this breach, now in our fortunes made,
May readily be stopp'd.

Enter young Clifford.

Clif. But that my heart's on future mischief set,
I would speak blasphemy ere bid you fly;
But fly you must; uncurable discomfit
Reigns in the hearts of all our present parts.
Away, for your relief! and we will live
To see their day, and them our fortune give:
Away, my lord, away!

[Exeunt.

Alarum. Retreat. Enter York, Richard Plantagenet, Warwick, and Soldiers, with Drum and Colours.

York. Of Salisbury, who can report of him;
That winter lion, who, in rage, forgets
Aged contusions and all brush² of time;
And, like a gallant in the brow of youth³,
Repairs him with occasion? this happy day
Is not itself, nor have we won one foot,
If Salisbury be lost.

R. Plan. My noble father,
Three times to-day I help him to his horse,
Three times bestrid him⁴; thrice I led him off,
Persuaded him from any further act:
But still, where danger was, still there I met him;
And like rich hangings in a homely house,
So was his will in his old feeble body.
But, noble as he is, look where he comes.

Enter Salisbury.

Sal. Now, by my sword, well hast thou fought
to-day;

By the mass, so did we all.—I thank you, Richard:
God knows, how long it is I have to live;
And it hath pleas'd him, that three times to-day
You have defended me from imminent death.—
Well, lords, we have not got that which we have;
'Tis not enough our foes are this time fled,
Being opposites to such repairing nature.

York. I know our safety is to follow them;
For, as I hear, the king is fled to London,
To call a present court of parliament.

Let us pursue him, ere the writs go forth:—
What says lord Warwick, shall we after them?

War. After them! nay, before them, if we can.
Now, by my hand, lords, 'twas a glorious day:
Saint Alban's battle, won by famous York,
Shall be eterniz'd in all age to come.—

Sound, drums and trumpets;—and to London all:
And more such days as these to us befall! [Exeunt.

¹ The death of Somerset here accomplishes that equivocal prediction given by Jourdain, the witch, concerning this duke; which we met with at the close of the First Act of this play. ² i. e. all wear or ravage. ³ The brow of youth means the height or summit of youth. ⁴ i. e. three times I saw him fallen, and, striding over him, defended him till he recovered.

A C T I.

SCENE I.

London. The Parliament House.

Alarum. Enter Duke of York, Edward, Richard, Norfolk, Montague, Warwick, and others, with white roses in their hats.

War. I Wonder, how the king escap'd our hands.
York. While we pursu'd the horsemen of the north,

He slyly stole away, and left his men:
Whereat the great lord of Northumberland,
Whose warlike ears could never brook retreat,
Chear'd up the drooping army; and himself,
Lord Clifford, and lord Stafford, all a-breast,
Charg'd our main battle's front, and, breaking in,
Were by the swords of common soldiers slain.

Edw. Lord Stafford's father, duke of Buckingham,
Is either slain, or wounded dangerously:
I cleft his beaver with a downright blow;

That this is true, father, behold his blood.

[Shewing his bloody sword.]

Mont. And, brother, here's the earl of Wiltshire's blood,

[To Warwick, shewing his.]

Whom I encounter'd as the battles join'd.

Rich. Speak thou for me, and tell them what I did.

[Throwing down the Duke of Somerset's head.]

York. Richard hath best deserv'd of all my sons.—
Is your grace dead, my lord of Somerset?

Norf. Such hope have all the line of John of Gaunt! [head.]

Rich. Thus do I hope to shake king Henry's

War. And so do I.—Victorious prince of York,
Before I see thee seated in that throne

Which now the house of Lancaster usurps,
I vow by heaven, these eyes shall never close.

This is the palace of the fearful king,

20 And this the regal seat: possess it, York;

¹ The action of this play opens just after the first battle at Saint Albans, wherein the York faction carried the day; and closes with the murder of king Henry VI. and the birth of prince Edward, afterwards king Edward V. So that this history takes in the space of full sixteen years.

For

For this is thine, and not king Henry's heirs'.

York. Assist me then, sweet Warwick, and I will;
For hither are we broken in by force.

Norfolk. We'll all assist you; he that flies shall die.

York. Thanks, gentle Norfolk.—Stay by me, my lords;—

And, soldiers, stay, and lodge by me this night.

War. And, when the king comes, offer him no violence,

Unless he seek to put us out by force. [ment; 10

York. The queen, this day, here holds her parlia-
But little thinks, we shall be of her council:

By words, or blows, here let us win our right.

Rich. Arm'd as we are, let's stay within this house.

War. The bloody parliament shall this be call'd, 15
Unless Plantagenet, duke of York, be king;
And bashful Henry depos'd, whose cowardice
Hath made us by-words to our enemies.

York. Then leave me not, my lords; be resolute;
I mean to take possession of my right. 20

War. Neither the king, nor he that loves him best,
The proudest he that holds up Lancaster,
Dares stir a wing, if Warwick shake his bells'.

I'll plant Plantagenet, root him up who dares:—
Resolve thee, Richard; claim the English crown. 25

[Warwick leads York to the throne, who seat himself.
Enter King Henry, Clifford, Northumberland, Westmoreland, Exeter, and others, at the further end of the stage.

K. Henry. My lords, look where the sturdy 30 rebel sits,

Even in the chair of state! belike he means (Back'd by the power of Warwick, that false peer)

To aspire unto the crown, and reign as king.—
Earl of Northumberland, he slew thy father;— 35

And thine, lord Clifford; and you both vow'd revenge

On him, his sons, his favourites, and his friends.

North. If I be not, heavens, be reveng'd on me!

Cliff. The hope thereof makes Clifford mourn 40
in steel. [down:

West. What, shall we suffer this? let's pluck him
My heart for anger burns, I cannot brook it.

K. Hen. Be patient, gentle earl of Westmoreland.

Cliff. Patience is for poltroons, and such as he: 45
He durst not sit there, had your father liv'd.

My gracious lord, here in the parliament

Let us assail the family of York.

North. Well hast thou spoken, cousin; be it so.

K. Henry. Ah, know you not, the city favours 50
them,

And they have troops of soldiers at their beck?

Exe. But, when the duke is slain, they'll quickly fly. [heart,

K. Henry. Far be it from the thoughts of Henry's 55
To make a shambles of the parliament house!

Cousin of Exeter, frowns, words, and threats,

Shall be the war that Henry means to use.—

[They advance to the duke.

Thou factious duke of York, descend my throne, 60
And kneel for grace and mercy at my feet;

I am thy sovereign.

York. Thou art deceived, I am thine.

Exe. For shame, come down; he made thee duke of York.

York. 'Twas my inheritance, as the kingdom is.

Exe. Thy father was a traitor to the crown.

War. Exeter, thou art a traitor to the crown,
In following this usurping Henry. [king?

Cliff. Whom should he follow, but his natural

War. True, Clifford; and that's Richard, duke of York. [throne?

K. Henry. And shall I stand, and thou sit in my York. It must and shall be so.—Content thyself.

War. Be duke of Lancaster, let him be king.

West. He is both king and duke of Lancaster;
And that the lord of Westmoreland shall maintain.

War. And Warwick shall disprove it. You forget,
That we are those, which chas'd you from the field,
And slew your fathers, and with colours spread
March'd through the city to the palace-gates.

North. No, Warwick, I remember it to my grief;
And, by his soul, thou and thy house shall rue it.

West. Plantagenet, of thee, and these thy sons,
Thy kinsmen, and thy friends, I'll have more lives,
Than drops of blood were in my father's veins.

Cliff. Urge it no more; lest that, instead of words,
I send thee, Warwick, such a messenger,
As shall revenge his death, before I stir.

War. Poor Clifford! how I scorn his worthless threats!

York. Will you, we shew our title to the crown?
If not, our swords shall plead it in the field.

K. Henry. What title hast thou, traitor, to the crown?

Thy father was, as thou art, duke of York;

Thy grandfather, Roger Mortimer, earl of March:
I am the son of Henry the fifth,

Who made the dauphin and the French to stoop,
And seiz'd upon their towns and provinces.

War. Talk not of France, sith thou hast lost it all.

K. Henry. The lord protector lost it, and not I;
When I was crown'd, I was but nine months old.

Rich. You are old enough now, and yet, methinks, you lose:—

Father, tear the crown from the usurper's head.

Edw. Sweet father, do so; set it on your head.

Mont. Good brother, as thou lov'st and honour'st
arms,

Let's fight it out, and not stand cavilling thus.

Rich. Sound drums and trumpets, and the king will fly.

York. Sons, peace! [leave to speak.

K. Henry. Peace, thou! and give king Henry

War. Plantagenet shall speak first:—hear him,
lords;

And be you silent and attentive too,

For he, that interrupts him, shall not live.

K. Henry. Think'st thou, that I will leave my kingly throne,

Wherein my grandsire, and my father, sat?

No: first shall war unpeople this my realm;

Ay, and their colours—often borne in France—

And now in England, to our heart's great sorrow,—

' The allusion is to falconry. The hawks had sometimes little bells hung upon them, perhaps to fright the birds from rising.

Shall

Shall be my winding-sheet.—Why faint you, lords?
My title's good, and better far than his.

War. But prove it, Henry, and thou shalt be king.

K. Henry. Henry the fourth by conquest got the crown.

York. 'Twas by rebellion against his king.

K. Henry. I know not what to say; my title's weak.

Tell me, may not a king adopt an heir?

York. What then?

K. Henry. An if he may, then am I lawful king:
For Richard, in the view of many lords,
Resign'd the crown to Henry the fourth;
Whose heir my father was, and I am his.

York. He rose against him, being his sovereign,
And made him to resign the crown perforce.

War. Suppose, my lords, he did it unconstrain'd,
Think you, 'twere prejudicial to the crown?

Exe. No; for he could not so resign his crown,
But that the next heir should succeed and reign.

K. Henry. Art thou against us, duke of Exeter?

Exe. His is the right, and therefore pardon me.

York. Why whisper you, my lords, and answer not?

Exe. My conscience tells me, he is lawful king.

K. Henry. All will revolt from me, and turn to him.

North. Plantagenet, for all the claim thou lay'st,
Think not that Henry shall be so depos'd.

War. Depos'd he shall be, in despite of all.

North. Thou art deceiv'd: 'tis not thy southern power,

Of Essex, Norfolk, Suffolk, nor of Kent,—
Which makes thee thus presumptuous and proud,—
Can set the duke up, in despite of me.

Clif. King Henry, be thy title right or wrong,
Lord Clifford vows to fight in thy defence:
May that ground gape, and swallow me alive,
Where I shall kneel to him that slew my father!

K. Henry. O Clifford, how thy words revive my heart!

York. Henry of Lancaster, resign thy crown:—
What mutter you, or what conspire you, lords?

War. Do right unto this princely duke of York;
Or I will fill the house with armed men,
And, o'er the chair of state, where now he sits,
Write up his title with usurping blood.

[He stamps, and the soldiers shew themselves.

K. Henry. My lord of Warwick, hear me but one word;—

Let me, for this my life-time, reign as king.

York. Confirm the crown to me, and to mine heirs,
And thou shalt reign in quiet while thou liv'st.

K. Henry. I am content: Richard Plantagenet,
Enjoy the kingdom after my decease.

Clif. What wrong is this unto the prince your son?

War. What good is this to England, and himself?

West. Base, fearful, and despairing Henry!

Clif. How hast thou injur'd both thyself and us!

West. I cannot stay to hear these articles.

North. Nor I. [news.

Clif. Come, cousin, let's go tell the queen these West. Farewell, faint-hearted and degenerate king,

In whose cold blood no spark of honour bides.

North. Be thou a prey unto the house of York,
And die in bands for this unmanly deed!

Clif. In dreadful war may'st thou be overcome!
Or live in peace, abandon'd, and despis'd!

[Exeunt Northumberland, Clifford, & Westmoreland.

War. Turn this way, Henry, and regard them not. [yield.

Exe. They seek revenge, and therefore will not

K. Henry. Ah, Exeter!

War. Why should you sigh, my lord? [son,

K. Henry. Not for myself, lord Warwick, but my Whom I unnaturally shall disinherit.

But, be it as it may:—I here entail
The crown to thee, and to thine heirs for ever;

Conditionally, that here thou take an oath
To cease this civil war, and, whilst I live,

To honour me as thy king and sovereign; and
Neither by treason, nor hostility,

To seek to put me down, and reign thyself.

York. This oath I willingly take, and will perform.

War. Long live king Henry!—Plantagenet, embrace him.

K. Henry. And long live thou, and these thy forward sons!

York. Now York and Lancaster are reconcil'd.

Exe. Accurs'd be he, that seeks to make them foes! [Here the Lords come forward.

York. Farewell, my gracious lord; I'll to my castle.

War. And I'll keep London with my soldiers.

Norf. And I to Norfolk with my followers.

Mont. And I unto the sea, from whence I came.

[Exeunt York, and his sons, Warwick, Northumberland, and Montague.

K. Henry. And I with grief and sorrow, to the court.

Enter the Queen, and Prince.

Exe. Here comes the queen, whose looks bewray her anger:

I'll steal away.

K. Henry. Exeter, so will I. [Going.

Queen. Nay, go not from me; I will follow thee.

K. Henry. Be patient, gentle queen, and I will stay.

Queen. Who can be patient in such extremes?

Ah, wretched man! 'would I had died a maid,

And never seen thee, never borne thee son,

Seeing thou hast prov'd so unnatural a father!

Hath he deserv'd to lose his birth-right thus?

Hadst thou but lov'd him half so well as I;

Or felt that pain which I did for him once;

Or nourish'd him, as I did with my blood;

Thou wouldst have left thy dearest heart-blood there,

Rather than made that savage duke thine heir,

And disinherited thine only son.

Prince. Father, you cannot disinherit me:

If you be king, why should not I succeed?

K. Henry. Pardon me, Margaret;—pardon me, sweet son;—

i. e. to the prerogative of the crown.

The

The earl of Warwick, and the duke, enforc'd me.

Queen. Enforc'd thee! art thou king, and wilt be forc'd?

I shame to hear thee speak. Ah, timorous wretch!

Thou hast undone thyself, thy son, and me;

And given unto the house of York such head,

As thou shalt reign but by their sufferance.

To entail him and his heirs unto the crown,

What is it, but to make thy sepulchre,

And creep into it far before thy time?

Warwick is chancellor, and the lord of Calais;

Stern Faulconbridge commands the narrow seas;

The duke is made protector of the realm:

And yet shalt thou be safe? such safety finds

The trembling lamb, environed with wolves.

Had I been there, which am a silly woman,

The soldiers should have toss'd me on their pikes,

Before I would have granted to that act.

But thou prefer'st thy life before thine honour:

And, seeing thou dost, I here divorce myself,

Both from thy table, Henry, and thy bed,

Until that act of parliament be repeal'd,

Whereby my son is disinherited.

The northern lords, that have forsworn thy colours,

Will follow mine, if once they see them spread:

And spread they shall be; to thy foul disgrace,

And utter ruin of the house of York.

Thus do I leave thee:—Come, son, let's away;

Our army's ready; come, we'll after them.

K. Henry. Stay, gentle Margaret, and hear me speak. [thee gone.]

Queen. Thou hast spoke too much already; get

K. Henry. Gentle son Edward, thou wilt stay

with me?

Queen. Ay, to be murder'd by his enemies.

Prince. When I return with victory from the field,

I'll see your grace: 'till then, I'll follow her.

Queen. Come, son, away; we may not linger

thus. [Exeunt Queen and Prince.]

K. Henry. Poor queen! how love to me, and to her son,

Hath made her break out into terms of rage!

Revenge'd may she be on that hateful duke;

Whose haughty spirit, winged with desire,

Will coast my crown¹, and, like an empty eagle,

Tire² on the flesh of me, and of my son!

The loss of those three lords' torments my heart:

I'll write unto them, and entreat them fair;—

Come, cousin, you shall be the messenger.

Exe. And I, I hope, shall reconcile them all.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

Sandal Castle, near Wakefield, in Yorkshire.

Enter Edward, Richard, and Montague.

Rich. Brother, though I be youngest, give me leave.

Edw. No, I can better play the orator.

Mont. But I have reasons strong and forcible.

Enter the Duke of York.

York. Why, how now, sons, and brother, at a strife?

What is your quarrel? how began it first?

Edw. No quarrel, but a sweet contention⁴.

York. About what? [and us;

Rich. About that which concerns your grace

5 The crown of England, father, which is yours.

York. Mine, boy? not till king Henry be dead.

Rich. Your right depends not on his life or death.

Edw. Now you are heir, therefore enjoy it now:

10 By giving the house of Lancaster leave to breathe,

It will out-run you, father, in the end.

York. I took an oath that he should quietly reign.

Edw. But, for a kingdom, any oath may be broken:

15 I'd break a thousand oaths to reign one year.

Rich. No; God forbid, your grace should be forsworn!

York. I shall be, if I claim by open war.

Rich. I'll prove the contrary, if you'll hear me

20 speak.

York. Thou can'st not, son; it is impossible.

Rich. An oath is of no moment, being not took

Before a true and lawful magistrate,

That hath authority over him that swears:

Henry had none, but did usurp the place;

25 Then, seeing 'twas he that made you to depose,

Your oath, my lord, is vain and frivolous.

Therefore, to arms: And, father, do but think,

How sweet a thing it is to wear a crown;

Within whose circuit is Elysium,

30 And all that poets feign of bliss and joy.

Why do we linger thus? I cannot rest,

Until the white rose, that I wear, be dy'd

Even in the lukewarm blood of Henry's heart.

York. Richard, enough; I will be king, or die.—

35 Brother, thou shalt to London presently,

And whet on Warwick to this enterprize.—

Thou, Richard, shalt to the duke of Norfolk,

And tell him privily of our intent.

You, Edward, shall unto my lord Cobham,

40 With whom the Kentish men will willingly rise:

In them I trust; for they are soldiers,

Witty³, and courteous, liberal, full of spirit.—

While you are thus employ'd, what resteth more,

But that I seek occasion how to rise;

45 And yet the king not privy to my drift,

Nor any of the house of Lancaster?

Enter a Messenger.

But, stay; What news? Why com'st thou in such 50 post? [lords,

Gab. The queen, with all the northern earls and Intend here to besiege you in your castle:

She is hard by with twenty thousand men;

And therefore fortify your hold, my lord.

York. Ay, with my sword. What! think'st

55 thou, that we fear them?—

Edward and Richard, you shall stay with me;—

My brother Montague shall post to London;

Let noble Warwick, Cobham, and the rest,

Whom we have left protectors of the king,

60 With powerful policy strengthen themselves,

And trust not simple Henry, nor his oaths.

Mont. Brother, I go; I'll win them, fear it not:

¹ i. e. hover over or range about my crown.
talons, from the French tirer; or to peck.

² To tire may either mean to fasten, to fix the viz. Northumberland, Westmoreland, and Clifford.

³ Meaning, that the argument of their dispute was upon a grateful topic, viz. the question of their father's immediate right to the crown.

⁴ Witty would here seem to mean, of sound judgement.

And thus most humbly I do take my leave.

[Exit Montague.

Enter Sir John and Sir Hugh Mortimer.

York. Sir John, and Sir Hugh Mortimer, mine uncles!

You are come to Sandal in a happy hour;

The army of the queen means to besiege us.

Sir John. She shall not need, we'll meet her in the field.

York. What, with five thousand men?

Rich. Ay, with five hundred, father, for a need.

A woman's general; What should we fear?

[A march afar off.

Edw. I hear their drums; let's set our men in order;

And issue forth, and bid them battle straight.

York. Five men to twenty!—though the odds be great,

I doubt not, uncle, of our victory.

Many a battle have I won in France,

When as the enemy hath been ten to one;

Why should I not now have the like success?

[Alarum. Exeunt.

SCENE III.

A Field of Battle, betwixt Sandal Castle and Wakefield.

Enter Rutland, and his Tutor.

Rut. Ah, whither shall I fly, to 'scape their hands!

Ah, tutor! look where bloody Clifford comes!

Enter Clifford and Soldiers.

Clif. Chaplain, away! thy priesthood saves thy As for the brat of this accursed duke,— [life.

Whose father slew my father, he shall die.

Tutor. And I, my lord, will bear him company.

Clif. Soldiers, away, and drag him hence perforce. [child,

Tutor. Ah, Clifford! murder not this innocent Lest thou be hated both of God and man.

[Exit, dragg'd off.

Clif. How now! is he dead already? Or, is it fear,

That makes him close his eyes?—I'll open them.

Rut. So looks the pent-up lion o'er the wretch That trembles under his devouring paws:

And so he walks, insulting o'er his prey:

And so he comes, to rend his limbs asunder.—

Ah, gentle Clifford, kill me with thy sword,

And not with such a cruel threat'ning look.

Sweet Clifford, hear me speak before I die;—

I am too mean a subject for thy wrath, Be thou reveng'd on men, and let me live.

Clif. In vain thou speak'st, poor boy; my father's blood [enter.

Hath stopp'd the passage where thy words should

Rut. Then let my father's blood open it again;

He is a man, and, Clifford, cope with him. [thine,

Clif. Had I thy brethren here, their lives, and Were not revenge sufficient for me:

No, if I digg'd up thy forefathers' graves,

And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,

It could not slake mine ire, nor ease my heart.

The sight of any of the house of York

Is as a fury to torment my soul;

And 'till I root out their accursed line,

5 And leave not one alive, I live in hell.

Therefore—

[Lifting his hand.

Rut. O, let me pray before I take my death:—

To thee I pray; sweet Clifford, pity me!

Clif. Such pity as my rapier's point affords. [me?

10 Rut. I never did thee harm; why wilt thou slay

Clif. Thy father hath.

Rut. But 'twas ere I was born.

Thou hast one son, for his sake pity me;

Lest, in revenge thereof,—sith God is just,—

15 He be as miserably slain as I.

Ah, let me live in prison all my days;

And when I give occasion of offence,

Then let me die, for now thou hast no cause.

Clif. No cause!

20 Thy father slew my father; therefore, die.

[Clifford stabs him.

Rut. ¹ Dii faciant, laudis summa sit ista tua!

[Dies.

Clif. Plantagenet! I come, Plantagenet!

25 And this thy son's blood, cleaving to my blade,

Shall rust upon my weapon, 'till thy blood,

Congea'd with this, do make me wipe off both.

[Exit.

SCENE IV.

Alarum. Enter Richard Duke of York.

York. The army of the queen hath got the field:

My uncles² both are slain in rescuing me;

And all my followers to the eager foe

35 Turn back, and fly, like ships before the wind,

Or lambs pursu'd by hunger-starved wolves.

My sons—God knows what hath bechanced them:

But this I know,—they have demean'd themselves

Like men born to renown, by life, or death.

40 Three times did Richard make a lane to me;

And thrice cry'd—Courage, father! fight it out!

And full as oft came Edward to my side,

With purple faulchion, painted to the hilt

In blood of those that had encounter'd him:

45 And when the hardiest warriors did retire,

Richard cry'd—Charge! and give no foot of ground!

And cry'd—A crown, or else a glorious tomb!

A sceptre, or an earthly sepulchre!

With this, we charg'd again: but, out, alas!

50 We bodg'd³ again; as I have seen a swan

With bootless labour swim against the tide,

And spend her strength with over-matching waves. [A short alarum within.

Ah, hark! the fatal followers do pursue;

55 And I am faint, and cannot fly their fury:

And, were I strong, I would not shun their fury.

The sands are number'd, that make up my life;

Here must I stay, and here my life must end.

Enter the Queen, Clifford, Northumberland,

and Soldiers.

60 Come, bloody Clifford,—rough Northumberland,

the mother's side, Sir John and Sir Hugh Mortimer.

² These were two bastard uncles by
³ i. e. we failed or miscarried again.

I dare

I dare your quenchless fury to more rage ;
I am your butt, and I abide your shot.

North. Yield to our mercy, proud Plantagenet.

Clif. Ay, to such mercy, as his ruthless arm,
With downright payment, shew'd unto my father.
Now Phaeton hath tumbled from his car,
And made an evening at the noon-tide prick¹.

York. My ashes, as the phoenix, may bring forth
A bird that will revenge upon you all :

And, in that hope, I throw mine eyes to heaven,
Scorning whate'er you can afflict me with.

Why come you not? what! multitudes, and fear?

Clif. So cowards fight, when they can fly no
further ;

So doves do peck the falcon's piercing talons :
So desperate thieves, all hopeless of their lives,
Breathe out invectives 'gainst the officers.

York. O, Clifford, but bethink thee once again,
And in thy thought o'er-run my former time :
And, if thou can'st for blushing, view this face ;
And bite thy tongue, that slanders him with cowardice, [this.

Whose frown hath made thee faint and fly ere

Clif. I will not bandy with thee word for word ;
But buckle with thee blows, twice two for one.

[Draws.

Queen. Hold, valiant Clifford! for a thousand
I would prolong a while the traitor's life :—[causes, Wrath makes him deaf: speak thou, Northumberland. [much,

North. Hold, Clifford! do not honour him so
To prick thy finger, though to wound his heart :
What valour were it, when a cur doth grin,
For one to thrust his hand between his teeth,
When he might spurn him with his foot away ?
It is war's prize to take all vantages ;
And ten to one is no impeach of valour.

[They lay hands on York, who struggles.

Clif. Ay, ay, so strives the woodcock with the gin.

North. So doth the coney struggle in the net.

[York is taken prisoner.

York. So triumph thieves upon their conquer'd booty!

So true men yield, with robbers so o'er-match'd.

North. What would your grace have done unto him now? [berland,

Queen. Brave warriors, Clifford and Northum-
Come make him stand upon this mole-hill here ;
That raught² at mountains with out-stretched arms
Yet parted but the shadow with his hand.—

What! was it you, that would be England's king?

Was't you, that revell'd in our parliament,

And made a preachment of your high descent?

Where are your mess of sons, to back you now?

The wanton Edward, and the lusty George?

And where's that valiant crook-back prodigy,

Dicky your boy, that, with his grumbling voice,

Was wont to cheer his dad in mutinies?

Or, with the rest, where is your darling Rutland?

Look, York; I stain'd this napkin³ with the blood

That valiant Clifford, with his rapier's point,

Made issue from the bosom of the boy :

And, if thine eyes can water for his death,

I give thee this to dry thy cheeks withal.

Alas, poor York! but that I hate thee deadly,

I should lament thy miserable state.

I pr'ythee, grieve, to make me merry, York.

What, hath thy fiery heart so parch'd thine entrails,

That not a tear could fall for Rutland's death?

Why art thou patient, man? thou should'st be mad;

And I, to make thee mad, do mock thee thus.

Stamp, rave, and fret, that I may sing and dance.

Thou wouldst be fee'd, I see, to make me sport;

York cannot speak, unless he wear a crown.—

A crown for York;—and, lords, bow low to him.—

Hold up his hands, whilst I do set it on.—

[Putting a paper crown on his head.

Ay, marry, sir, now looks he like a king!

Ay, this is he that took king Henry's chair;

And this is he was his adopted heir.—

But how is it, that great Plantagenet

Is crown'd so soon, and broke his solemn oath?

As I bethink-me, you should not be king,

'Till our king Henry had shook hands with death.

And will you pale your head in Henry's glory,

And rob his temples of the diadem,

Now in his life, against your holy oath?

O, 'tis a fault too too unpardonable!—

Off with the crown; and, with the crown, his head;

And, whilst we breathe, take time to do him dead.

Clif. That is my office, for my father's death.

Queen. Nay, stay; let's hear the orisons he makes.

York. She-wolf of France, but worse than wolves of France, [tooth!

Whose tongue more poisons than the adder's

How ill-beseeming is it in thy sex,

To triumph, like an Amazonian trull,

Upon their woes, whom fortune captivates!

But that thy face is, vizor-like, unchanging,

Made impudent with use of evil deeds,

I would assay, proud queen, to make thee blush:

To tell thee whence thou cam'st, of whom deriv'd,

Were shame enough to shame thee, wert thou not shameless.

Thy father bears the type of king of Naples,

Of both the Sicils, and Jerusalem;

Yet not so wealthy as an English yeoman.

Hath that poor monarch taught thee to insult?

It needs not, nor it boots thee not, proud queen;

Unless the adage must be verif'd,—

That beggars, mounted, run their horse to death.

'Tis beauty, that doth oft make women proud;

But, God he knows, thy share thereof is small:

'Tis virtue that doth make them most admir'd;

The contrary doth make thee wonder'd at;

'Tis government⁴, that makes them seem divine;

The want thereof makes thee abominable:

Thou art as opposite to every good,

As the Antipodes are unto us,

Or as the south to the septentrion.

Oh, tyger's heart, wrapp'd in a woman's hide!

How could'st thou drain the life-blood of the child,

¹ Or, noon-tide point on the dial. ² i. e. that reach'd, raught being the ancient preterite and participle passive of reach. ³ A napkin is a handkerchief. ⁴ Government here signifies evenness of temper, and decency of manners.

To bid the father wipe his eyes withal,
And yet be seen to bear a woman's face?
Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible;
Thou stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless.
Bidst thou me rage? why, now thou hast thy wish:
Wouldst thou have me weep? why, now thou hast thy
For raging wind blows up incessant showers, [will.
And, when the rage allays, the rain begins.
These tears are my sweet Rutland's obsequies;
And every drop cries vengeance for his death.—
'Gainst thee, fell Clifford,—and thee, false French-
woman.

North. Beshrew me, but his passions move me so,
That hardly can I check mine eyes from tears.

York. That face of his the hungry cannibals
Would not have touch'd, would not have stain'd with blood:

But you are more inhuman, more inexorable,—
O, ten times more,—than tygers of Hyreania.
See, ruthless queen, a hapless father's tears:
This cloth thou dipp'st in blood of my sweet boy,
And lo! with tears I wash the blood away.
Keep thou the napkin, and go boast of this:

[He gives back the handkerchief.]

And, if thou tell'st the heavy story right,

Upon my soul, the hearers will shed tears;
Yea, even my foe will shed fast-falling tears,
And say,—Alas, it was a piteous deed!— [curse;
There, take the crown, and with the crown, my
And, in thy need, such comfort come to thee,
As now I reap at thy too cruel hand!—

Hard-hearted Clifford, take me from the world;
My soul to heaven, my blood upon your heads!

North. Had he been slaughter-man to all my kin,
I should not for my life but weep with him,
To see how inly sorrow gripes his soul.

Queen. What, weeping ripe, my lord Northumberland?

Think but upon the wrong he did us all,
And that will quickly dry thy melting tears.

Clif. Here's for my oath, here's for my father's death. [Stabbing him.

Queen. And here's to right our gentle-hearted king. [Stabs him.

York. Open thy gate of mercy, gracious God!—
My soul flies through these wounds to seek out thee. [Dies.

Queen. Off with his head, and set it on York gates;
So York may overlook the town of York.

[Exeunt.]

A C T II.

S C E N E I.

Near Mortimer's Cross in Wales.

A march. Enter Edward, Richard, and their power.

Edw. I Wonder, how our princely father 'scap'd;
Or whether he be 'scap'd away, or no,
From Clifford's and Northumberland's pursuit:
Had he been ta'en, we should have heard the news;
Had he been slain, we should have heard the news;
Or, had he 'scap'd, methinks we should have heard
The happy tidings of his good escape.—
How fares our brother? why is he so sad?

Rich. I cannot joy, until I be resolv'd
Where our right valiant father is become.
I saw him in the battle range about;
And watch'd him, how he singled Clifford forth.
Methought he bore him in the thickest troop,
As doth a lion in a herd of neat;
Or as a bear, encompass'd round with dogs;
Who having pinch'd a few, and made them cry,
The rest stand all aloof, and bark at him.

So far'd our father with his enemies;
So fled his enemies my warlike father;
Methinks, 'tis prize¹ enough to be his son.
See, how the morning opes her golden gates,
And takes her farewell of the glorious sun!
How well resembles it the prime of youth,
Trimm'd like a yonker, prancing to his love!

Edw. Dazzle mine eyes, or do I see three suns?
Rich. Three glorious suns, each one a perfect
Not separated by the racking clouds², [sun;
But sever'd in a pale clear-shining sky.

See, see! they join, embrace, and seem to kiss,
As if they vow'd some league inviolable:

Now are they but one lamp, one light, one sun.
In this the heaven figures some event. [heard of.

Edw. 'Tis wondrous strange, the like yet never
I think, it cites us, brother, to the field;

That we, the sons of brave Plantagenet,
Each one already blazing by our meeds³,

Should, notwithstanding, join our lights together,
And over-shine the earth, as this the world.

Whate'er it bodes, henceforward will I bear
Upon my target three fair shining suns.

Rich. Nay, bear three daughters;—by your leave I speak it,

You love the breeder better than the male.
Enter a Messenger.

But what art thou, whose heavy looks foretel
Some dreadful story hanging on thy tongue?

Mes. Ah, one that was a woeful looker-on,
When as the noble duke of York was slain,
Your princely father, and my loving lord.

Edw. Oh, speak no more! for I have heard too much.

Rich. Say how he died, for I will hear it all.

² Meaning, the clouds as they are driven by the winds; from racke,

Belg. a track. ³ i. e. illustrious and shining by the armorial ensigns granted us as meeds or rewards of our great exploits.

Mes. Environed he was with many foes;
And stood against them, as the hope of Troy
Against the Greeks, that would have enter'd Troy.
But Hercules himself must yield to odds;
And many strokes, though with a little axe,
Hew down and fell the hardest-timber'd oak.
By many hands your father was subdu'd;
But only slaughter'd by the ireful arm
Of unrelenting Clifford, and the queen:
Who crown'd the gracious duke in high despite;
Laugh'd in his face; and, when with grief he wept,
The ruthless queen gave him to dry his cheeks,
A napkin, steep'd in the harmless blood
Of sweet young Rutland, by rough Clifford slain:
And, after many scorns, many foul taunts,
They took his head, and on the gates of York
They set the same; and there it doth remain,
The saddest spectacle that e'er I view'd.

Edw. Sweet duke of York, our prop to lean upon;
Now thou art gone, we have no staff, no stay!—
Oh Clifford, boisterous Clifford, thou hast slain
The flower of Europe for his chivalry;
And treacherously hast thou vanquish'd him,
For, hand to hand, he would have vanquish'd thee!—
Now my soul's palace is become a prison:
Ah, would she break from hence! that this my body
Might in the ground be closed up in rest:
For never henceforth shall I joy again,
Never, O never, shall I see more joy.

Rich. I cannot weep; for all my body's moisture
Scarce serves to quench my furnace-burning heart:
Nor can my tongue unload my heart's great burden;
For self-same wind, that I should speak withal,
Is kindling coals, that fire all my breast, [quench.
And burn me up with flames, that tears would
To weep, is to make less the depth of grief:
Tears, then, for babes; blows and revenge, for
me!—

Richard, I bear thy name, I'll venge thy death,
Or die renowned by attempting it. [thee;

Edw. His name that valiant duke hath left with His dukedom and his chair with me is left.

Rich. Nay, if thou be that princely eagle's bird,
Shew thy descent by gazing 'gainst the sun:
For chair and dukedom, throne and kingdom say;
Either that is thine, or else thou wert not his.

March. Enter Warwick, Marquis of Montague, and their army.

War. How now, fair lords? What fare? what news abroad? [count

Rich. Great lord of Warwick, if we should re-
Our baneful news, and, at each word's deliverance,
Stab poniards in our flesh, 'till all were told,
The words would add more anguish than the wounds.
O valiant lord, the duke of York is slain.

Edw. O Warwick! Warwick! that Plantagenet,
Which held thee dearly, as his soul's redemption,
Is by the stern lord Clifford done to death¹.

War. Ten days ago I drown'd these news in tears:
And now, to add more measure to your woes,
I come to tell you things since then befall'n.
After the bloody fray at Wakefield fought,

Where your brave father breath'd his latest gasp,
Tidings, as swiftly as the post could run,
Were brought me of your loss, and his depart.
I then in London, keeper of the king,
5 Muster'd my soldiers, gather'd flocks of friends,
And very well appointed, as I thought, [queen,
March'd towards Saint Alban's to intercept the Bearing the king in my behalf along:
For by my scouts I was advertised,
10 That she was coming with a full intent
To dash our late decree in parliament,
Touching king Henry's oath, and your succession.
Short tale to make,—we at Saint Alban's met,
Our battles join'd, and both sides fiercely fought:
15 But, whether 'twas the coldness of the king,
Who look'd full gently on his warlike queen,
That robb'd my soldiers of their heated spleen;
Or whether 'twas report of her success;
Or more than common fear of Clifford's rigour,
20 Who thunders to his captives—blood and death,
I cannot judge: but, to conclude with truth,
Their weapons like to lightning came and went;
Our soldiers—like the night owl's lazy flight,
Or like an idle thresher with a flail,—

25 Fell gently down, as if they struck their friends.
I cheer'd them up with justice of the cause,
With promise of high pay, and great rewards:
But all in vain; they had no heart to fight,
And we, in them, no hope to win the day,
30 So that we fled; the king, unto the queen;
Lord George your brother, Norfolk, and myself,
In haste, post-haste, are come to join with you;
For in the marches here, we heard, you were,
Making another head to fight again. [wick?

Edw. Where is the duke of Norfolk, gentle War-
And when came George from Burgundy to England? [power;

War. Some six miles off the duke is with his
And for your brother,—he was lately sent 40 From your kind aunt, dutchess of Burgundy,
With aid of soldiers to this needful war. [ried:

Rich. 'Twas odds, belike, when valiant Warwick
Oft have I heard his praises in pursuit,
But ne'er, till now, his scandal of retire. [hear;

45 War. Nor now my scandal, Richard, dost thou
For thou shalt know, this strong right hand of mine
Can pluck the diadem from faint Henry's head,
And wring the awful sceptre from his fist,
Were he as famous and as bold in war,
50 As he is fam'd for mildness, peace, and prayer.

Rich. I know it well, lord Warwick: blame me not:

'Tis love, I bear thy glories, makes me speak.
But, in this troublous time, what's to be done?
55 Shall we go throw away our coats of steel,
And wrap our bodies in black mourning gowns,
Numb'ring our Ave-Maries with our beads?
Or shall we on the helmets of our foes
Tell our devotion with revengeful arms?

60 If for the last, say—Ay, and to it, lords. [you out;

War. Why, therefore Warwick came to seek
And therefore comes my brother Montague.

¹ Done to death for killed, was a common expression long before Shakspeare's time.

Attend me, lords. The proud insulting queen,
 With Clifford, and the haught¹ Northumberland,
 And, of their feather, many more proud birds,
 Have wrought the easy-melting king like wax.
 He swore consent to your succession,
 His oath enrolled in the parliament :
 And now to London all the crew are gone,
 To frustrate both his oath, and what beside
 May make against the house of Lancaster.
 Their power, I think, is thirty thousand strong :
 Now, if the help of Norfolk, and myself,
 With all the friends that thou, brave earl of March,
 Amongst the loving Welshmen can procure,
 Will but amount to five-and-twenty thousand,
 Why, Via! to London will we march amain;
 And once again bestride our foaming steeds,
 And once again cry—Charge upon the foe!
 But never once again turn back, and fly.

Rich. Ay, now, methinks, I heard great Warwick speak :

Ne'er may he live to see a sun-shine day,
 That cries—Retire, when Warwick bids him stay.

Edw. Lord Warwick, on thy shoulder will I lean;

And when thou fail'st, (as God forbid the hour!)
 Must Edward fall, which peril heaven forefend!

War. No longer earl of March, but duke of York;

The next degree is, England's royal king :
 For king of England shalt thou be proclaim'd
 In every borough as we pass along:

And he, that casts not up his cap for joy,
 Shall for the offence make forfeit of his head.
 King Edward,—valiant Richard,—Montague,—
 Stay we no longer dreaming of renown,
 But sound the trumpets, and about our task.

Rich. 'Then, Clifford, were thy heart as hard as steel,

(As thou hast shewn it flinty by thy deeds)
 I come to pierce it, or to give thee mine.

Edw. Then strike up, drums;—God, and Saint George, for us!

Enter a Messenger.

War. How now? what news? [me,

Mess. The duke of Norfolk sends you word by
 The queen is coming with a puissant host;
 And craves your company for speedy counsel.

War. Why then it sorts², brave warriors: Let's away. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.

York.

Enter King Henry, the Queen, the Prince of Wales, Clifford, and Northumberland, with forces.

Queen. Welcome, my lord, to this brave town of York.

Yonder's the head of that arch-enemy,
 That sought to be encompass'd with your crown;
 Doth not the object cheer your heart, my lord?

K. Henry. Ay, as the rocks cheer them that fear their wreck;—

To see this sight, it irks my very soul.—
 Withhold revenge, dear God! 'tis not my fault,
 Nor wittingly have I infring'd my vow.

Clif. My gracious liege, this too much lenity,
 5 And harmful pity, must be laid aside.

To whom do lions cast their gentle looks?
 Not to the beast that would usurp their den.

Whose hand is that, the forest bear doth lick?
 Not his, that spoils her young before her face.

10 Who 'scapes the lurking serpent's mortal sting?
 Not he, that sets his foot upon her back.

The smallest worm will turn, being trodden on;
 And doves will peck, in safeguard of their brood.

15 Ambitious York did level at thy crown,
 Thou smiling, while he knit his angry brows:

He, but a duke, would have his son a king,
 And raise his issue, like a loving sire;

Thou, being a king, blest with a goodly son,
 Didst yield consent to disinherit him,

20 Which argued thee a most unloving father.
 Unreasonable creatures feed their young:

And though man's face be fearful to their eyes,
 Yet, in protection of their tender ones,

Who hath not seen them (even with those wings
 25 Which sometime they have us'd in fearful flight)

Make war with him that climb'd unto their nest,
 Offering their own lives in their young's defence?

For shame, my liege, make them your precedent!
 Were it not pity, that this goodly boy

30 Should lose his birth-right by his father's fault;
 And long hereafter say unto his child,—

“What my great grandfather and grandsire got,
 “My careless father fondly gave away?”

Ah, what a shame were this! Look on the boy;

35 And let his manly face, which promiseth
 Successful fortune, steel thy melting heart,

To hold thine own, and leave thine own with him.

K. Henry. Full well hath Clifford play'd the orator,

40 Inferring arguments of mighty force.
 But, Clifford, tell me, didst thou never hear,—

That things ill got had ever bad success?
 And happy always was it for that son,

Whose father for his hoarding went to hell?³
 45 I'll leave my son my virtuous deeds behind;

And 'would, my father had left me no more!
 For all the rest is held at such a rate,

As brings a thousand fold more care to keep,
 Than in possession any jot of pleasure.— [know,

50 Ah, cousin York! 'would thy best friends did
 How it doth grieve me that thy head is here!

Queen. My lord, cheer up your spirits; our foes are nigh,

And this soft courage makes your followers faint.

55 You promis'd knighthood to our forward son;
 Unsheath your sword, and dub him presently.—

Edward, kneel down.

K. Henry. Edward Plantagenet, arise a knight;
 And learn this lesson—Draw thy sword in right.

60 Prince. My gracious father, by your kingly leave,
 I'll draw it as apparent to the crown,

And in that quarrel use it to the death.

¹ i. e. high. ² Meaning, Why then things are as they should be.

³ This alludes to the common proverb of “Happy the child whose father went to the devil.”

Clif. Why, that is spoken like a toward prince.
Enter a Messenger.
Mess. Royal commanders, be in readiness:
 For, with a band of thirty thousand men,
 Comes Warwick, backing of the duke of York;
 And, in the towns as they do march along,
 Proclaims him king, and many fly to him:
 Darraign¹ your battle, for they are at hand.
Clif. I would, your highness would depart the field;
 The queen hath best success when you are absent.
Queen. Ay, good my lord, and leave us to our fortune. [I'll stay.
K. Henry. Why, that's my fortune too: therefore North. Be it with resolution then to fight.
Prince. My royal father, cheer these noble
 lords,
 And hearten those that fight in your defence:
 Unsheathe your sword, good father; cry, Saint
George!
March. Enter Edward, Clarence, Richard, War- wick, Norfolk, Montagu, and Soldiers.
Edw. Now, perjur'd Henry! wilt thou kneel for grace,
 And set thy diadem upon my head;
 Or bide the mortal fortune of the field?
Queen. Gorate thy minions, proud insulting boy!
 Becomes it thee to be thus bold in terms,
 Before thy sovereign, and thy lawful king?
Edw. I am his king, and he should bow his knee;
 I was adopted heir by his consent:
 Since when, his oath is broke: for, as I hear,
 You—that are king, though he do wear the crown,
 Have caus'd him, by new act of parliament,
 To blot out me, and put his own son in.
Clif. And reason too;
 Who should succeed the father, but the son?
Rich. Art thou there, butcher?—O, I cannot speak! [thee,
Clif. Ay, crook-back; here I stand, to answer
 Or any he the proudest of thy sort.
Rich. 'Twas you that kill'd young Rutland,
 was it not?
Clif. Ay, and old York, and yet not satisfy'd.
Rich. For God's sake, lords, give signal to the fight. [the crown?
War. What say'st thou, Henry, wilt thou yield Queen. Why, how now, long-tongu'd Warwick?
 dare you speak?
 When you and I met at Saint Alban's last,
 Your legs did better service than your hands².
War. Then 'twas my turn to fly, and now 'tis thine.

Clif. You said so much before, and yet you fled.
War. 'Twas not your valour, Clifford, drove me thence. [you stay.
North. No, nor your manhood, that durst make Rich. Northumberland, I hold thee reverently;
 Break off the parley; for scarce I can refrain
 The execution of my big-swoln heart
 Upon that Clifford there, that cruel child-killer.
Clif. I slew thy father; Call'st thou him a child?
Rich. Ay, like a dastard, and a treacherous coward,
 As thou didst kill our tender brother Rutland;
 But, ere sun-set, I'll make thee curse the deed,
K. Henry. Have done with words, my lords, and hear me speak. [lips.
Queen. Defy them then, or else hold close thy K. Henry. I pr'ythee, give no limits to my tongue;
 I am a king, and privileg'd to speak.
Clif. My liege, the wound, that bred this meeting here,
 Cannot be cur'd by words; therefore be still.
Rich. Then, executioner, unsheathe thy sword:
 By Him that made us all, I am resolv'd³,
 That Clifford's manhood lies upon his tongue.
Edw. Say, Henry, shall I have my right, or no?
 A thousand men have broke their fasts to-day,
 That ne'er shall dine, unless thou yield the crown.
War. If thou deny, their blood upon thy head;
 For York in justice puts his armour on.
Prince. If that be right, which Warwick says is right,
 There is no wrong, but every thing is right.
Rich. Whoever got thee, there thy mother
 stands;
 For, well I wot, thou hast thy mother's tongue.
Queen. But thou art neither like thy sire, nor dam;
 But like a foul mis-shapen stigmatic⁴,
 Mark'd by the destinies to be avoided,
 As venom'd toads, or lizards' dreadful stings.
Rich. Iron of Naples, hid with English gilt⁵,
 Whose father bears the title of a king,
 (As if a channel should be call'd the sea,) [traught,
 Sham'st thou not, knowing whence thou art ex-
 To let thy tongue detect thy base-born heart?
Edw. A wisp of straw⁶ were worth a thousand crowns,
 To make this shameless callat⁷ know herself.—
 Helen of Greece was fairer far than thou,
 Although thy husband may be Menelaus;
 And ne'er was Agamemnon's brother wrong'd
 By that false woman, as this king by thee.
 His father revell'd in the heart of France,

¹ That is, Range your host. ² Alluding to the proverb, "One pair of heels is worth two pair of hands." ³ i. e. it is my firm persuasion. ⁴ A stigmatic is said to have been a notorious lewd fellow, who hath been burnt with a hot iron, or beareth other marks about him as a token of his punishment. ⁵ Gilt is a superficial covering of gold. ⁶ Mr. Steevens comments on this passage thus: Barrett in his Alvearic, or Quadruple Dictionary, 1580, interprets the word wispe by peniculus, which signifies any thing to wipe or cleanse with; a cook's linen apron, &c. Pewter is still scoured by a wispe of straw, or hay. Perhaps, Edward means one of these wisps, as the denotement of a menial servant. Barrett adds, that, like a wase, it signifies "a wreath to be laied under the vessel that is borne upon the head, as women use." If this be its true sense, the prince may think that such a wisp would better become the head of Margaret, than a crown. Mr. Steevens afterwards adds, that "a wispe was the punishment of a scold." ⁷ Callat, a lewd woman, a drab.

And tam'd the king, and made the Dauphin stoop;
 And, had he match'd according to his state,
 He might have kept that glory to this day:
 But, when he took a beggar to his bed,
 And grac'd thy poor sire with his bridal day;
 Even then that sun-shine brew'd a shower for him,
 That wash'd his father's fortunes forth of France,
 And heap'd sedition on his crown at home.
 For what hath broach'd this tumult, but thy pride?
 Hadst thou been meek, our title still had slept;
 And we, in pity of the gentle king,
 Had slipt our claim until another age.

Cla. But, when we saw our sun-shine made thy spring,

And that thy summer bred us no increase,
 We set the axe to thy usurping root:
 And though the edge hath something hit ourselves,
 Yet know thou, since we have begun to strike,
 We'll never leave, 'till we have hewn thee down,
 Or bath'd thy growing with our heated bloods.

Edw. And, in this resolution, I defy thee;
 Not willing any further conference,
 Since thou deny'st the gentle king to speak.—
 Sound trumpets! let our bloody colours wave!—
 And either victory, or else a grave.

Queen. Stay, Edward.

Edw. No, wrangling woman, I'll no longer
 stay:

Thy words will cost ten thousand lives to-day.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.

A Field of Battle, near Towton in Yorkshire.

Alarum. Excursions. Enter Warwick.

War. Forspent¹ with toil, as runners with a race,

I lay me down a little while to breathe:
 For strokes receiv'd, and many blows repaid,
 Have robb'd my strong-knit sinews of their strength,

And, spight of spight, needs must I rest awhile.

Enter Edward, running.

Edw. Smile, gentle heaven! or strike, ungentle
 death!

For this world frowns, and Edward's sun is clouded.

War. How now, my lord? what hap? what hope of good?

Enter Clarence.

Cla. Our hap is loss, our hope but sad despair;
 Our ranks are broke, and ruin follows us:

What counsel give you? whither shall we fly?

Edw. Bootless is flight, they follow us with wings;

And weak we are, and cannot shun pursuit.

Enter Richard.

Rich. Ah, Warwick, why hast thou withdrawn
 thyself?

Thy brother's blood the thirsty earth hath drunk,
 Broach'd with the steely point of Clifford's lance:

And, in the very pangs of death, he cry'd,—
 Like to a dismal clangor heard from far,—

"Warwick, revenge! brother, revenge my death!"

So underneath the belly of their steeds,
 That stain'd their fetlocks in his smoking blood,
 The noble gentleman gave up the ghost.

War. Then let the earth be drunken with our blood:

I'll kill my horse, because I will not fly.
 Why stand we like soft-hearted women here,
 Wailing our losses, whiles the foe doth rage:

And look upon, as if the tragedy
 Were play'd in jest by counterfeiting actors?

Here on my knee I vow to God above,
 I'll never pause again, never stand still,
 'Till either death hath clos'd these eyes of mine,
 Or fortune given me measure of revenge.

Edw. O Warwick, I do bend my knee with
 thine;

And, in this vow, do chain my soul to thine.—
 And, ere my knee rise from the earth's cold face,
 I throw my hands, mine eyes, my heart to Thee,
 Thou setter up, and plucker down of kings!

Beseeching thee,—if with thy will it stands,
 That to my foes this body must be prey,—
 Yet that thy brazen gates of heaven may ope,
 And give sweet passage to my sinful soul!—

Now, lords, take leave until we meet again,
 Where-e'er it be, in heaven, or on earth.

Rich. Brother, give me thy hand:—and, gentle
 Warwick,

Let me embrace thee in my weary arms:—

I, that did never weep, now melt with woe,
 That winter should cut off our spring-time so.

War. Away, away! Once more, sweet lords,
 farewell.

Cla. Yet let us all together to our troops;
 And give them leave to fly that will not stay;
 And call them pillars, that will stand to us;
 And, if we thrive, promise them such rewards
 As victors wear at the Olympian games:
 This may plant courage in their quailing breasts;
 For yet is hope of life, and victory.—

Fore-slow² no longer, make we hence amain.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.

Another Part of the Field.

Excursions. Enter Richard, and Clifford.

Rich. Now, Clifford, I have singled thee alone:
 Suppose, this arm is for the duke of York,
 And this for Rutland; both bound to revenge,
 Wert thou environ'd with a brazen wall.

Clif. Now, Richard, I am with thee here alone:
 This is the hand, that stabb'd thy father York;
 And this the hand, that slew thy brother Rutland;
 And here's the heart, that triumphs in their death,
 And cheers these hands, that slew thy sire and bro—
 To execute the like upon thyself; [ther,
 And so, have at thee.

[They fight. Warwick enters, Clifford flies.]

Rich. Nay, Warwick, single out some other chace;

For I myself will hunt this wolf to death.

² To fore-slow implies to be dilatory, to loiter.

S C E N E V.

Another Part of the Field.Alarum. Enter King Henry.

K. Henry. This battle fares like to the morning's war,
 When dying clouds contend with growing light;
 What time the shepherd, blowing of his nails,
 Can neither call it perfect day, nor night.
 Now sways it this way, like a mighty sea,
 Forc'd by the tide to combat with the wind:
 Now sways it that way, like the self-same sea
 Forc'd to retire by fury of the wind:
 Sometime, the flood prevails; and then the wind;
 Now, one the better; then, another best:
 Both tugging to be victors, breast to breast,
 Yet neither conqueror, nor conquered:
 So is the equal poise of this fell war.
 Here on this mole-hill will I sit me down.
 To whom God will, there be the victory!
 For Margaret my queen, and Clifford too,
 Have chid me from the battle; swearing both,
 They prosper best of all when I am thence.
 'Would I were dead! if God's good will were so:
 For what is in this world, but grief and woe?
 O God! methinks it were a happy life,
 To be no better than a homely swain;
 To sit upon a hill, as I do now,
 To carve out dials quaintly, point by point,
 Thereby to see the minutes how they run:
 How many make the hour full complete,
 How many hours bring about the day,
 How many days will finish up the year,
 How many years a mortal man may live.
 When this is known, then to divide the time:
 So many hours must I tend my flock;
 So many hours must I take my rest;
 So many hours must I contemplate;
 So many hours must I sport myself;
 So many days my ewes have been with young;
 So many weeks ere the poor fools will yean;
 So many months ere I shall shear the fleece:
 So minutes, hours, days, weeks, months, and years,
 Past over to the end they were created,
 Would bring white hairs unto a quiet grave.
 Ah, what a life were this! how sweet! how lovely!
 Gives not the hawthorn bush a sweeter shade
 To shepherds, looking on their silly sheep,
 Than doth a rich embroider'd canopy
 To kings, that fear their subjects' treachery?
 O, yes, it doth; a thousand fold it doth.
 And to conclude,—the shepherd's homely curds,
 His cold thin drink out of his leather bottle,
 His wonted sleep under a fresh tree's shade,
 All which secure and sweetly he enjoys,
 Is far beyond a prince's delicates,
 His viands sparkling in a golden cup,
 His body couched in a curious bed,
 When care, mistrust, and treason waits on him.

Alarum. Enter a Son that had killed his Father.

Son. Ill blows the wind, that profits no-body.
 This man, whom hand to hand I slew in fight,
 May be possessed of some store of crowns:
 And I, that haply take them from him now,
 May yet ere night yield both my life and them
 To some man else, as this dead man doth me.—
 Who's this?—Oh God! it is my father's face,
 Whom in this conflict I unawares have kill'd.
 Oh heavy times, begetting such events!
 From London by the king was I press'd forth;
 My father, being the earl of Warwick's man,
 Came on the part of York, press'd by his master;
 And I, who at his hands receiv'd my life,
 Have by my hands of life bereaved him.—
 Pardon me, God, I knew not what I did!—
 And pardon, father, for I knew not thee!—
 My tears shall wipe away these bloody marks;
 And no more words, 'till they have flow'd their fill. [times!]

K. Henry. O piteous spectacle! O bloody
 Whilst lions war, and battle for their dens,
 Poor harmless lambs abide their enmity.—
 Weep, wretched man, I'll aid thee tear for tear;
 And let our hearts, and eyes, like civil war,
 Be blind with tears, and break o'ercharg'd with grief¹.

Enter a Father, bearing his Son.

Fath. Thou that so stoutly hast resisted me,
 Give me thy gold, if thou hast any gold;
 For I have bought it with an hundred blows.—
 But let me see:—Is this our foeman's face?
 Ah, no, no, no, it is mine only son!—
 Ah, boy, if any life be left in thee,
 Throw up thine eye; see, see, what showers arise,
 Blown with the windy tempest of my heart
 Upon thy wounds, that kill mine eye and heart!—
 O, pity, God, this miserable age!—
 What stratagems, how fell, how butcherly,
 Erroneous, mutinous, and unnatural,
 This deadly quarrel daily doth beget!—
 O boy, thy father gave thee life too soon,
 And hath bereft thee of thy life too late²!

K. Henry. Woe above woe! grief more than common grief!
 O, that my death would stay these rueful deeds!—
 O pity, pity, gentle heaven, pity!—
 The red rose and the white are on his face,
 The fatal colours of our striving houses;
 The one, his purple blood right well resembles;
 The other, his pale cheek, methinks, presenteth:
 Wither one rose, and let the other flourish!
 If you contend, a thousand lives must wither.

Son. How will my mother, for a father's death,
 Take on with me, and ne'er be satisfy'd!

Fath. How will my wife, for slaughter of my son,
 Shed seas of tears, and ne'er be satisfy'd!

K. Henry. How will the country, for these woeful chances,
 Mis-think³ the king, and not be satisfy'd!

¹ The meaning of the king is, that the state of their hearts and eyes shall be like that of the kingdom in a civil war, all shall be destroyed by a power formed within themselves. ² i. e. He should have done it by not bringing thee into being, to make both father and son thus miserable. ³ To mis-think is to think ill, unfavourably.

Son. Was ever son, so ru'd a father's death?

Fath. Was ever father, so bemoan'd his son?

K. Henry. Was ever king, so griev'd for subjects' woe?

Much is your sorrow; mine, ten times so much.

Son. I'll bear thee hence, where I may weep my fill. [Exit, with the body.]

Fath. These arms of mine shall be thy winding-sheet;

My heart, sweet boy, shall be thy sepulchre;

For from my heart thine image ne'er shall go.

My sighing breast shall be thy funeral bell;

And so obsequious¹ will thy father be,

Sad for the loss of thee, having no more,

As Priam was for all his valiant sons.

I'll bear thee hence; and let them fight that will, For I have murder'd where I should not kill.

[Exit, with the body.]

K. Henry. Sad-hearted men, much overgone with care,

Here sits a king more woeful than you are.

Alarums. Excursions. Enter the Queen, Prince of Wales, and Exeter.

Prince. Fly, father, fly! for all your friends are And Warwick rages like a chafed bull: [fled,] Away! for death doth hold us in pursuit.

Queen. Mount you, my lord, towards Berwick post amain:

Edward and Richard, like a brace of greyhounds Having the fearful flying hare in sight,

With fiery eyes, sparkling for very wrath,

And bloody steel grasp'd in their ireful hands,

Are at our backs; and therefore hence amain.

Exe. Away! for vengeance comes along with them:

Nay, stay not to expostulate, make speed;

Or else come after, I'll away before. [Exeter.]

K. Henry. Nay, take me with thee, good sweet Not that I fear to stay, but love to go

Whither the queen intends. Forward; away! [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.

A loud Alarum. Enter Clifford, wounded.

Clif. Here burns my candle out, ay, here it dies, Which, while it lasted, gave king Henry light.

Ah, Lancaster! I fear thine overthrow,

More than my body's parting with my soul.

My love and fear glew'd many friends to thee;

And, now I fall, thy tough commixture melts,

Impairing Henry, strength'ning mis-proud York.

The common people swarm like summer flies:

And whither fly the gnats, but to the sun?

And who shines now, but Henry's enemy?

O Phoebus! hadst thou never given consent

That Phaeton should check thy fiery steeds,

Thy burning car had never scorch'd the earth:

And, Henry, hadst thou sway'd as kings should do,

And as thy father, and his father, did,

Giving no ground unto the house of York,

They never then had sprung like summer flies—

I, and ten thousand in this luckless realm,

Had left no mourning widows for our deaths,

And thou this day had'st kept thy throne in peace.

For what doth cherish weeds, but gentle air?

And what makes robbers bold, but too much lenity?

Bootless are plaints, and cureless are my wounds;

No way to fly, nor strength to hold out flight:

The foe is merciless, and will not pity;

And, at their hands, I have deserv'd no pity.

The air hath got into my deadly wounds,

And much effuse of blood doth make me faint:—

10 Come, York, and Richard, Warwick, and the rest;

I stabb'd your father's bosoms, split my breast.

[He faints.]

Alarum and Retreat. Enter Edward, Clarence, Richard, Montague, Warwick, and Soldiers.

15 Edw. Now breathe we, lords; good fortune bids us pause, [looks.—]

And smooth the frowns of war with peaceful

Some troops pursue the bloody-minded queen;—

That led calm Henry, though he were a king,

20 As doth a sail, fill'd with a fretting gust,

Command an argosy to stem the waves.

But think you, lords, that Clifford flew with them?

War. No, 'tis impossible he should escape:

For, though before his face I speak the word,

25 Your brother Richard mark'd him for the grave;

And, wheresoe'er he is, he's surely dead.

[Clifford groans, and dies.]

Edw. Whose soul is that which takes her heavy leave? [parting.]

30 Rich. A deadly groan, like life and death's de-

Edw. See who it is: and, now the battle's ended,

If friend, or foe, let him be gently us'd.

Rich. Revoke that doom of mercy, for 'tis Clifford:

35 Who not contented that he lopp'd the branch

In hewing Rutland when his leaves put forth,

But set his murdering knife unto the root

From whence that tender spray did sweetly spring,

I mean, our princely father, duke of York.

40 War. From off the gates of York fetch down the head,

Your father's head, which Clifford placed there:

Instead whereof, let his supply the room:

Measure for measure must be answered. [house,]

45 Edw. Bring forth that fatal scritch-owl to our

That nothing sung but death to us and ours:

Now death shall stop his dismal threatening sound,

And his ill-boding tongue no more shall speak.

[Attendants bring the body forward.]

50 War. I think his understanding is bereft:—

Say, Clifford, dost thou know who speaks to thee?—

Dark cloudy death o'ershades his beams of life,

And he nor sees, nor hears us what we say.

Rich. O, would he did! and so, perhaps, he doth;

55 'Tis but his policy to counterfeit,

Because he would avoid such bitter taunts

As in the time of death he gave our father.

Cl. If so thou think'st, vex him with eager² words.

60 Rich. Clifford, ask mercy, and obtain no grace.

Edw. Clifford, repent in bootless penitence.

War. Clifford, devise excuses for thy faults.

Cl. While we devise fell tortures for thy faults.

¹ Obsequious here implies careful of obsequies, or of funeral rites.

² i. e. Sour, harsh words.

Rich. Thou didst love York, and I am son to York.
Edw. Thou pitied'st Rutland, I will pity thee.
Cla. Where's captain Margaret, to fence you now? [wast wont.
War. They mock thee, Clifford; swear as thou
Rich. What, not an oath? nay, then the world goes hard,
 When Clifford cannot spare his friends an oath:—
 I know by that, he's dead; And, by my soul,
 Would this right hand buy but an hour's life,
 That I in all despite might rail at him,
 I'd chop it off; and with the issuing blood
 Stifle the villain, whose unstanched thirst
 York and young Rutland could not satisfy. [head,
War. Ay, but he's dead: Off with the traitor's
 And rear it in the place your father's stands.—
 And now to London with triumphant march,
 There to be crowned England's royal king.
 From thence shall Warwick cut the sea to France,
 And ask the lady Bona for thy queen:
 So shalt thou sinew both these lands together;

And, having France thy friend, thou shalt not dread
 The scatter'd foe, that hopes to rise again;
 For though they cannot greatly sting to hurt,
 Yet look to have them buz, to offend thine ears.
 First, will I see the coronation;
 And then to Britany I'll cross the sea,
 To effect this marriage, so it please my lord. [be;
Edw. Even as thou wilt, sweet Warwick, let it
 For on thy shoulder do I build my seat;
 And never will I undertake the thing,
 Wherein thy counsel and consent is wanting.—
 Richard, I will create thee duke of Gloster;—
 And George, of Clarence;—Warwick, as ourself,
 Shall do, and undo, as him pleaseth best.
Rich. Let me be duke of Clarence; George,
 of Gloster;
 For Gloster's dukedom is too ominous¹.
War. Tut, that's a foolish observation:
 Richard, be duke of Gloster: Now to London,
 To see these honours in possession. [Exeunt.

A C T III.

S C E N E I.

A Wood in Lancashire.

Enter Sinklo², and Humphrey, with cross-bows in their hands.

Sink. UNDER this thick-grown brake we'll shroud ourselves;
 For through this³ laund anon the deer will come;
 And in this covert will we make our stand,
 Culling the principal of all the deer.

Hum. I'll stay above the hill, so both may shoot.

Sink. That cannot be; the noise of thy cross-bow
 Will scare the herd, and so my shoot is lost.
 Here stand we both, and aim we at the best:
 And, for the time shall not seem tedious,
 I'll tell thee what befel me on a day,
 In this self place where now we mean to stand.

Hum. Here comes a man, let's stay till he be past.

Enter King Henry, with a prayer-book.

K. Henry. From Scotland am I stol'n, even of pure love,
 To greet mine own land with my wishful sight.
 No, Harry, Harry, 'tis no land of thine;
 Thy place is fill'd, thy scepter wrung from thee,
 Thy balm wash'd off, wherewith thou wast anoint-
 No bending knee will call thee Caesar now, [ed:
 No humble suitors press to speak for right,
 No, not a man comes for redress to thee;
 For how can I help them, and not myself? [fee:

Sink. Ay, here's a deer whose skin's a keeper's
 This is the quondam king; let's seize upon him.

K. Henry. Let me embrace these sour adversities;
 For wise men say, it is the wisest course. [him.

Hum. Why linger we? let us lay hands upon

Sink. Forbear awhile; we'll hear a little more.

K. Henry. My queen, and son, are gone to France for aid;

And, as I hear, the great commanding Warwick
 Is thither gone, to crave the French king's sister
 To wife for Edward: If this news be true,
 Poor queen, and son, your labour is but lost;

For Warwick is a subtle orator,

And Lewis a prince soon won with moving words.

By this account, then, Margaret may win him;

For she's a woman to be pity'd much:

Her sighs will make a battery in his breast;

Her tears will pierce into a marble heart;

The tyger will be mild, while she doth mourn;

And Nero will be tainted with remorse,

To hear, and see, her plaints, her brinish tears,

Ah, but she's come to beg; Warwick, to give;

She, on his left side, craving aid for Henry;

He, on his right, asking a wife for Edward.

She weeps, and says—her Henry is depos'd;

He smiles, and says—his Edward is install'd;

That she, poor wretch, for grief can speak no more;

Whiles Warwick tells his title, smooths the wrong,

Inferreth arguments of mighty strength;

And, in conclusion, wins the king from her,

With promise of his sister, and what else,

To strengthen and support king Edward's place.

O Margaret, thus 'twill be; and thou, poor soul,

Art then forsaken, as thou went'st forlorn.

¹ Alluding, perhaps, (says Mr. Steevens,) to the deaths of Thomas of Woodstock, and Humphrey, dukes of Gloster. ² According to Hall and Holinshed, the name of the person who took King Henry was Cantlowe. ³ i. e. lawn.

Hum. Say, what art thou, that talk'st of kings and queens?

K. Henry. More than I seem, and less than I was born to:

A man at least, for less I should not be;
And men may talk of kings, and why not I?

Hum. Ay, but thou talk'st as if thou wert a king.

K. Henry. Why, so I am, in mind; and that's enough.

Hum. But, if thou be a king, where is thy crown?

K. Henry. My crown is in my heart, not on my head;

Not deck'd with diamonds, and Indian stones,
Nor to be seen: my crown is call'd, content;

A crown it is, that seldom kings enjoy. [tent,

Hum. Well, if you be a king crown'd with con-
Your crown content, and you, must be contented

To go along with us: for, as we think,
You are the king, king Edward hath depos'd;

And we his subjects, sworn in all allegiance,
Will apprehend you as his enemy. [oath?

K. Henry. But did you never swear, and break an

Hum. No, never such an oath; nor will we now.

K. Henry. Where did you dwell, when I was king of England? [main.

Hum. Here in this country, where we now re-

K. Henry. I was anointed king at nine months
My father and my grandfather were kings; [old;

And you were sworn true subjects unto me:
And, tell me then, have you not broke your oaths?

Sink. No; for we were subjects but while you were king. [a man?

K. Henry. Why, am I dead? do I not breathe
Ah, simple men, you know not what you swear.

Look, as I blow this feather from my face,
And as the air blows it to me again,

Obeying with my wind when I do blow,
And yielding to another when it blows,

Commanded always by the greater gust;
Such is the lightness of you common men.

But do not break your oaths; for, of that sin
My mild entreaty shall not make you guilty.

Go where you will, the king shall be commanded;
And be you kings; command, and I'll obey.

Sink. We are true subjects to the king, king
Edward.

K. Henry. So would you be again to Henry,
If he were seated as king Edward is. [the king's,

Sink. We charge you, in God's name, and in
To go with us unto the officers. [be obey'd:

K. Hen. In God's name, lead; your king's name
And what God will, that let your king perform;

And what he will, I humbly yield unto. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.

London. The Palace.

Enter King Edward, Gloster, Clarence, and Lady Grey.

K. Edw. Brother of Gloster, at Saint Alban's field
This lady's husband, Sir John Grey, was slain,

His land then seiz'd on by the conqueror:
Her suit is now, to repossess those lands;

Which we in justice cannot well deny,
Because in quarrel of the house of York

This noble gentleman did lose his life.

Glo. Your highness shall do well to grant her suit;
It were dishonour to deny it her. [pause.

K. Edw. It were no less; but yet I'll make a

Glo. Yea! is it so? [Aside.

5 I see the lady hath a thing to grant,
Before the king will grant her humble suit.

Clar. He knows the game; How true he keeps the wind! [Aside.

Glo. Silence!

10 K. Edw. Widow, we will consider of your suit;
And come some other time, to know our mind.

Grey. Right gracious lord, I cannot brook delay:
May it please your highness to resolve me now;

And what your pleasure is, shall satisfy me.

15 Glo. [Aside.] Ay, widow? then I'll warrant you all your lands,

An if what pleases him, shall pleasure you.
Fight closer, or, good faith, you'll catch a blow.

Clar. [Aside.] I fear her not, unless she chance to fall. [vantages.

Glo. [Aside.] God forbid that, for he'll take

Clar. [Aside.] I think, he means to beg a child give her two.

Grey. Three, my most gracious lord.

Glo. [Aside.] You shall have four, if you'll be rul'd by him. [ther's land.

K. Edw. 'Twere pity they should lose their fa-

K. Edw. Lords, give us leave; I'll try this wi-

Glo. Ay, good leave have you; for you will have 35 'Till youth take leave, and leave you to your crutch.

[Gloster and Clarence retire to the other side.

K. Edw. Now tell me, madam, do you love your children?

Grey. Ay, full as dearly as I love myself.

K. Edw. And would you not do much to do them good? [harm.

Grey. To do them good, I would sustain some

K. Edw. Then get your husband's lands to do them good.

Grey. Therefore I came unto your majesty.

K. Edw. I'll tell you how these lands are to be got.

Grey. So shall you bind me to your highness' service. [them?

K. Edw. What service wilt thou do me, if I give Grey. What you command, that rests in me to do.

K. Edw. But you will take exceptions to my boon?

Grey. No, gracious lord, except I cannot do it.

K. Edw. Ay, but thou canst do what I mean to Grey. Why, then I will do what your grace the marble. [Aside.

Clar. As red as fire! nay, then her wax must melt. [Aside.

Grey. Why stops my lord? shall I not hear my task?

K. Edw. An easy task: 'tis but to love a king.

Grey. That's soon perform'd, because I am a subject.

K. Edw.

- K. Edw.* Why then, thy husband's lands I freely give thee.
- Grey.* I take my leave, with many thousand thanks. [sy.]
- Glo.* The match is made; she seals it with a curt'- 5
- K. Edw.* But stay thee, 'tis the fruits of love I mean.
- Grey.* The fruits of love I mean, my loving liege.
- K. Edw.* Ay, but I fear me, in another sense.
- What love, thinkst thou, I sue so much to get? 10
- Grey.* My love 'till death, my humble thanks, my prayers;
- That love, which virtue begs, and virtue grants.
- K. Edw.* No, by my troth, I did not mean such love. [did.] 15
- Grey.* Why, then you mean not as I thought you
- K. Edw.* But now you partly may perceive my mind.
- Grey.* My mind will never grant what I perceive
- Your highness aims at, if I aim aright. 20
- K. Edw.* To tell thee plain, I aim to lie with thee.
- Grey.* To tell you plain, I had rather lie in prison.
- K. Edw.* Why, then thou shalt not have thy husband's lands. [er;]
- Grey.* Why, then mine honesty shall be my dow- 25
- For by that loss I will not purchase them.
- K. Edw.* Herein thou wrong'st thy children mightily. [and me.]
- Grey.* Herein your highness wrongs both them
- But, mighty lord, this merry inclination 30
- Accords not with the sadness of my suit;
- Please you dismiss me, either with ay, or no.
- K. Edw.* Ay; if thou wilt say ay, to my request:
- No; if thou dost say no, to my demand.
- Grey.* Then, no, my lord. My suit is at an end. 35
- Glo.* The widow likes him not, she knits her brows. [Aside.]
- Clar.* He is the bluntest wooer in Christendom. [Aside.]
- K. Edw.* [Aside.] Her looks do argue her re- 40
- plete with modesty;
- Her words do shew her wit incomparable;
- All her perfections challenge sovereignty:
- One way, or other, she is for a king;
- And she shall be my love, or else my queen.— 45
- Say, that king Edward take thee for his queen?
- Grey.* 'Tis better said than done, my gracious lord;
- I am a subject fit to jest withal,
- But far unfit to be a sovereign.
- K. Edw.* Sweet widow, by my state I swear to thee, 50
- I speak no more than what my soul intends;
- And that is, to enjoy thee for my love.
- Grey.* And that is more than I will yield unto:
- I know, I am too mean to be your queen;
- And yet too good to be your concubine. 55
- K. Edw.* You cavil, widow; I did mean, my queen. [call you—father.]
- Grey.* 'Twill grieve your grace, my sons should
- K. Edw.* No more, than when my daughters call thee mother.
- Thou art a widow, and thou hast some children;
- And, by God's mother, I, being but a batchelor,
- Have other some: why, 'tis a happy thing
- To be the father unto many sons,
- Answer no more, for thou shalt be my queen.
- Glo.* The ghostly father now hath done his shrift. [Aside.]
- Clar.* When he was made a shriver, 'twas for shift. [Aside.]
- K. Edw.* Brothers, you muse what chat we two have had.
- Glo.* The widow likes it not, for she looks sad.
- K. Edw.* You'd think it strange, if I should
- Clar.* To whom, my lord? [marry her.]
- K. Edw.* Why, Clarence, to myself.
- Glo.* That would be tendays' wonder, at the least.
- Clar.* That's a day longer than a wonder lasts.
- Glo.* By so much is the wonder in extremes.
- K. Edw.* Well, jest on, brothers: I can tell you
- Her suit is granted for her husband's lands. [both, Enter a Nobleman.]
- Nob.* My gracious lord, Henry your foe is taken,
- And brought as prisoner to your palace gate.
- K. Edw.* See that he be convey'd unto the Tower:—
- And go we, brothers, to the man that took him,
- To question of his apprehension.— [ably.]
- Widow, go you along:—Lords, use her honour— 25
- [Exeunt King, Lady, Clarence, and Lords.]
- Glo.* Ay, Edward will use women honourably.
- Would he were wasted, marrow, bones, and all,
- That from his loins no hopeful branch may spring,
- To cross me from the golden time I look for!
- And yet, between my soul's desire and me, 30
- (The lustful Edward's title buried)
- Is Clarence, Henry, and his young son Edward,
- And all the unlook'd-for issue of their bodies,
- To take their rooms, ere I can place myself:
- A cold premeditation for my purpose! 35
- Why, then I do but dream on sovereignty;
- Like one that stands upon a promontory,
- And spies a far-off shore where he would tread,
- Wishing his foot were equal with his eye;
- And chides the sea that sunders him from thence,
- Saying—he'll lade it dry to have his way:
- So do I wish the crown, being so far off;
- And so I chide the means that keep me from it;
- And so I say—I'll cut the causes off, 45
- Flattering me with impossibilities.—
- My eye's too quick, my heart o'erween too much,
- Unless my hand and strength could equal them.
- Well, say there is no kingdom then for Richard;
- What other pleasure can the world afford?
- I'll make my heaven in a lady's lap,
- And deck my body in gay ornaments,
- And witch sweet ladies with my words and looks.
- O miserable thought, and more unlikely,
- Than to accomplish twenty golden crowns!
- Why, love forswore me in my mother's womb: 55
- And, for I should not deal in her soft laws,
- She did corrupt frail nature with some bribe
- To shrink mine arm up like a wither'd shrub;
- To make an envious mountain on my back,
- Where sits deformity to mock my body;
- To shape my legs of an unequal size;
- To disproportion me in every part,
- Like to a chaos, or an unlick'd bear-whelp,
- That carries no impression like the dam.

And

And am I then a man to be belov'd;
 O, monstrous fault to harbour such a thought!
 Then, since this earth affords no joy to me,
 But to command, to check, to o'erbear such
 As are of better person than myself,
 I'll make my heaven—to dream upon the crown;
 And, while I live, to account this world but hell,
 Until my mis-shap'd trunk that bears this head,
 Be round impaled with a glorious crown,
 And yet I know not how to get the crown,
 For many lives stand between me and home:
 And I,—like one lost in a thorny wood,
 That rents the thorns, and is rent with the thorns;
 Seeking a way, and straying from the way;
 Not knowing how to find the open air,
 But toiling desperately to find it out,—
 Torment myself to catch the English crown:
 And from that torment I will free myself,
 Or hew my way out with a bloody axe.
 Why, I can smile, and murder while I smile;
 And cry, content, to that which grieves my heart;
 And wet my cheeks with artificial tears,
 And frame my face to all occasions.
 I'll drown more sailors than the mermaid shall;
 I'll slay more gazers than the basilisk;
 I'll play the orator as well as Nestor,
 Deceive more slyly than Ulysses could,
 And, like a Sinon, take another Troy:
 I can add colours to the camelion;
 Change shapes, with Proteus, for advantages,
 And set the murd'rous Machiavel to school.
 Can I do this, and cannot get a crown?
 Tut! were it further off, I'll pluck it down.

[Exit.

S C E N E III.

France.

Flourish. Enter Lewis the French King, Lady Bona, Bourbon, Queen Margaret, Prince Edward her Son, and the Earl of Oxford. Lewis sits, and riseth up again.

K. Lewis. Fair queen of England, worthy Margaret,
 Sit down with us; it ill befits thy state,
 And birth, that thou shouldst stand, while Lewis doth sit.

Queen. No, mighty king of France; now Margaret
 Must strike her sail, and learn a while to serve,
 Where kings command. I was, I must confess,
 Great Albion's queen in former golden days:
 But now mischance hath trod my title down,
 And with dishonour laid me on the ground;
 Where I must take like seat unto my fortune,
 And to my humble seat conform myself.

K. Lewis. Why say, fair queen, whence springs this deep despair?

Queen. From such a cause as fills mine eyes with tears,

And stops my tongue, while heart is drown'd in

K. Lewis. Whate'er it be, be thou still like
 thyself,

And sit thee by our side: yield not thy neck
 To fortune's yoke, but let thy dauntless mind
 Still ride in triumph over all mischance.

*5 Be plain, queen Margaret, and tell thy grief;
 It shall be eas'd, if France can yield relief.*

Queen. Those gracious words revive my drooping
 thoughts,

And give my tongue-ty'd sorrows leave to speak.

*10 Now, therefore, be it known to noble Lewis,—
 That Henry, sole possessor of my love,
 Is, of a king, become a banish'd man,
 And forc'd to live in Scotland a forlorn;
 While proud ambitious Edward, duke of York,
 15 Usurps the regal title, and the seat
 Of England's true-anointed lawful king.*

*This is the cause, that I, poor Margaret,—
 With this my son, prince Edward, Henry's heir,—
 Am come to crave thy just and lawful aid;
 20 And, if thou fail us, all our hope is done:
 Scotland hath will to help, but cannot help;
 Our people and our peers are both mis-led,
 Our treasure seiz'd, our soldiers put to flight,
 And, as thou seest, ourselves in heavy plight.*

25 K. Lewis. Renowned queen, with patience calm the storm,

While we bethink a means to break it off.

Queen. The more we stay, the stronger grows our foe.

30 K. Lewis. The more I stay, the more I'll succour

Queen. O, but impatience waiteth on true sorrow:
 And see, where comes the breeder of my sorrow.

Enter Warwick.

35 K. Lewis. What's he approacheth boldly to our presence?

Queen. Our earl of Warwick, Edward's greatest friend.

K. Lewis. Welcome, brave Warwick! What brings thee to France?

[He descends. She ariseth.

Queen. Ay, now begins a second storm to rise:
 For this is he, that moves both wind and tide.

War. From worthy Edward, king of Albion,
 My lord and sovereign, and thy vowed friend,
 I come,—in kindness and unfeigned love,—
 First, to do greetings to thy royal person;
 And, then, to crave a league of amity;
 And, lastly, to confirm that amity

*50 With nuptial knot, if thou vouchsafe to grant
 That virtuous lady Bona, thy fair sister,
 To England's king in lawful marriage.*

Queen. If that go forward, Henry's hope is done.

War. And, gracious madam, in our king's behalf,

*55 I am commanded, with your leave and favour,
 Humbly to kiss your hand, and with my tongue
 To tell the passion of my sovereign's heart;
 Where fame, late entering at his heedful ears,
 60 Hath plac'd thy beauty's image, and thy virtue.*

Queen. King Lewis,—and lady Bona,—hear me speak,

i. e. encircled.

Before

Before you answer Warwick. His demand
Springs not from Edward's well-meant honest love,
But from deceit, bred by necessity :

For how can tyrants safely govern home,
Unless abroad they purchase great alliance !
To prove him tyrant, this reason may suffice,—
That Henry liveth still : but were he dead,
Yet here prince Edward stands, king Henry's son.
Look therefore, Lewis, that by this league and marriage

Thou draw not on thy danger and dishonour :
For though usurpers sway the rule a while,
Yet heavens are just, and time suppresseth wrongs.

War. Injurious Margaret !

Prince. And why not queen ?

War. Because thy father Henry did usurp ;
And thou no more art prince, than she is queen.

Oxf. Then Warwick disannuls great John of Gaunt,

Which did subdue the greatest part of Spain ;
And, after John of Gaunt, Henry the fourth,
Whose wisdom was a mirror to the wisest ;
And, after that wise prince, Henry the fifth,
Who by his prowess conquered all France :
From these our Henry lineally descends.

War. Oxford, how haps it, in this smooth discourse,

You told not, how Henry the sixth hath lost
All that which Henry the fifth had gotten ?
Methinks, these peers of France should smile at
that.

But for the rest,—You tell a pedigree
Of threescore and two years ; a silly time
To make prescription for a kingdom's worth.

Oxf. Why, Warwick, canst thou speak against thy liege,

Whom thou obeyed'st thirty and six years,
And not bewray thy treason with a blush ?

War. Can Oxford, that did ever fence the right,
Now buckler falsehood with a pedigree ?

For shame, leave Henry, and call Edward king.

Oxf. Call him my king, by whose injurious doom
My elder brother, the lord Aubrey Vere,
Was done to death ! and more than so, my father,
Even in the downfall of his mellow'd years,
When nature brought him to the door of death !
No, Warwick, no ; while life upholds this arm,
This arm upholds the house of Lancaster.

War. And I the house of York.

K. Lewis. Queen Margaret, prince Edward, and Oxford,

Vouchsafe, at our request, to stand aside,
While I use further conference with Warwick.

Queen. Heavens grant that Warwick's words bewitch him not ! [They retire.]

K. Lewis. Now, Warwick, tell me, even upon thy conscience,

Is Edward your true king ? for I were loth,
To link with him that were not lawful chosen.

War. Thereon I pawn my credit and mine honour.

K. Lewis. But is he gracious in the people's eye ?

War. The more, that Henry was unfortunate.

K. Lewis. Then further,—all dissembling set
aside,

5 Tell me for truth the measure of his love
Unto our sister Bona.

War. Such it seems,

As may beseem a monarch like himself.

Myself have often heard him say, and swear,—

10 That this his love was an eternal plant ;

Whereof the root was fix'd in virtue's ground,

The leaves and fruit maintain'd with beauty's sun ;

Exempt from envy¹, but not from disdain,

Unless the lady Bona quit his pain.

15 K. Lewis. Now, sister, let us hear your firm resolve.

Bona. Your grant, or your denial, shall be mine :—
Yet I confess, that often ere this day,

[Speaking to Warwick.]

20 When I have heard your king's desert recounted,
Mine ear hath tempted judgement to desire.

K. Lewis. Then, Warwick, this,—Our sister shall be Edward's ;

And now forthwith shall articles be drawn

25 Touching the jointure that your king must make,
Which with her dowry shall be counterpois'd :—

Draw near, queen Margaret ; and be a witness,

That Bona shall be wife to the English king.

Prince. To Edward, but not to the English king.

30 Queen. Deceitful Warwick ! it was thy device
By this alliance to make void my suit ;

Before thy coming, Lewis was Henry's friend.

K. Lewis. And still is friend to him and Margaret :

35 But if your title to the crown be weak,—
As may appear by Edward's good success,—

Then 'tis but reason, that I be releas'd

From giving aid, which late I promised.

Yet shall you have all kindness at my hand,

40 That your estate requires, and mine can yield.

War. Henry now lives in Scotland, at his ease ;

Where having nothing, nothing he can lose.

And as for yourself, our quondam queen,—

You have a father² able to maintain you ;

45 And better 'twere, you troubled him than France.

Queen. Peace, impudent and shameless Warwick, peace ;

Proud setter-up and puller down of kings !

I will not hence, 'till with my talk and tears,

50 Both full of truth, I make king Lewis behold

Thy sly conveyance³, and thy lord's false love ;

[Post, blowing a horn within.]

For both of you are birds of self-same feather,

K. Lewis. Warwick, this is some post to us, or thee.

Enter a Post.

Post. My lord ambassador, these letters are for you ; [To Warwick.]

Sent from your brother, marquis Montague.—

60 These from our king unto your majesty.—

[To king Lewis.]

¹ Envy in this place seems to be put for malice or hatred. ² This seems to be spoken ironically ; the poverty of Margaret's father being a very frequent topic of reproach. ³ Conveyance is here put for artifice and fraud.

And, madam, these for you; from whom I know not.

[To the Queen. They all read their letters.

Oxf. I like it well, that our fair queen and mistress

Smiles at her news, while Warwick frowns at his.

Prince. Nay, mark, how Lewis stamps as he I hope, all's for the best. [were nettled:

K. Lew. Warwick, what are thy news? and yours, fair queen? [joys.

Queen. Mine, such as fills my heart with unhop'd

War. Mine, full of sorrow and heart's discontent.

K. Lew. What! has your king marry'd the lady Grey?

And now, to sooth your forgery and his, Sends me a paper to persuade me patience?

Is this the alliance that he seeks with France?

Dare he presume to scorn us in this manner?

Queen. I told your majesty as much before: This proveth Edward's love, and Warwick's honesty. [heaven,

War. King Lewis, I here protest,—in sight of And by the hope I have of heavenly bliss,—

That I am clear from this misdeed of Edward's;

No more my king, for he dishonours me;

But most himself, if he could see his shame.—

Did I forget, that by the house of York

My father came untimely to his death?

Did I let pass the abuse done to my niece¹?

Did I impale him with the regal crown?

Did I put Henry from his native right;

And am I guerdon'd at the last with shame?

Shame on himself! for my desert is honour.

And, to repair my honour lost for him,

I here renounce him, and return to Henry:—

My noble queen, let former grudges pass,

And henceforth I am thy true servitor;

I will revenge his wrong to lady Bona,

And replant Henry in his former state.

Queen. Warwick, these words have turn'd my hate to love;

And I forgive and quite forget old faults,

And joy that thou becom'st king Henry's friend.

War. So much his friend, ay, his unfeigned friend,

That, if king Lewis vouchsafe to furnish us

With some few bands of chosen soldiers,

I'll undertake to land them on our coast,

And force the tyrant from his seat by war.

'Tis not his new-made bride shall succour him:

And as for Clarence,—as my letters tell me,

He's very likely now to fall from him;

For matching more for wanton lust than honour,

Or than for strength and safety of our country.

Bona. Dear brother, how shall Bona be reveng'd,

But by thy help to this distressed queen?

Queen. Renowned prince, how shall poor Henry live,

Unless thou rescue him from foul despair?

Bona. My quarrel and this English queen's are one.

War. And mine, fair lady Bona, joins with yours.

K. Lew. And mine, with hers, and thine, and Margaret's.

Therefore, at last, I firmly am resolv'd, You shall have aid. [once.

Queen. Let me give humble thanks for all at

K. Lew. Then, England's messenger, return in post;

And tell false Edward, thy supposed king,—

That Lewis of France is sending over maskers,

To revel it with him and his new bride:

Thou seest what's past, go fear² thy king withal.

Bona. Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly,

I'll wear the willow garland for his sake. [aside,

Queen. Tell him, my mourning weeds are laid And I am ready to put armour on. [wrong;

War. Tell him from me, that he hath done me And therefore I'll uncrown him ere't be long.

There's thy reward; be gone. [Exit Post.

K. Lew. But, Warwick;

Thyself, and Oxford, with five thousand men,

Shall cross the seas, and bid false Edward battle:

And, as occasion serves, this noble queen

And prince shall follow with a fresh supply.

Yet, ere thou go, but answer me one doubt;—

What pledge have we of thy firm loyalty?

War. This shall assure my constant loyalty;—

That if our queen and this young prince agree,

I'll join my younger daughter, and my joy,

To him forthwith in holy wedlock bands.

Queen. Yes, I agree, and thank you for your motion:—

Son Edward, she is fair and virtuous,

Therefore delay not, give thy hand to Warwick;

And, with thy hand, thy faith irrevocable,

That only Warwick's daughter shall be thine. [it;

Prince. Yes, I accept her, for she well deserves And here, to pledge my vow, I give my hand.

[He gives his hand to Warwick.

K. Lew. Why stay we now? These soldiers shall be levy'd,

And thou, lord Bourbon, our high admiral,

Shall waft them over with our royal fleet.—

I long, 'till Edward fall by war's mischance,

For mocking marriage with a dame of France.

[Exeunt. Manet Warwick.

War. I came from Edward as ambassador,

But I return his sworn and mortal foe:

Matter of marriage was the charge he gave me,

But dreadful war shall answer his demand.

Had he none else to make a stale, but me?

Then none but I shall turn his jest to sorrow.

I was the chief that rais'd him to the crown,

And I'll be chief to bring him down again:

Not that I pity Henry's misery,

But seek revenge on Edward's mockery. [Exit.

¹ We learn from Holinshed, "That king Edward did attempt a thing once in the earles house which was much against the earles honestie, (whether he would have deflowered his daughter or his niece, the certaintie was not for both their honours revealed,) for surely such a thing was attempted by king Edward." ² i. e. fright thy king.

A C T IV.

S C E N E I.

The Palace in England.Enter Gloster, Clarence, Somerset, and Montague.

Glo. NOW tell me, brother Clarence, what think you

Of this new marriage with the lady Grey?

Hath not our brother made a worthy choice?

Clar. Alas, you know, 'tis far from hence to France;

How could he stay till Warwick made return?

Som. My lords, forbear this talk; here comes the king.

Flourish. Enter King Edward, Lady Grey, as Queen; Pembroke, Stafford, and Hastings. Four stand on one side, and four on the other.

Glo. And his well chosen bride.

Clar. I mind to tell him plainly what I think.

K. Edw. Now, brother of Clarence, how like you our choice,

That you stand pensive, as half malecontent?

Clar. As well as Lewis of France, or the earl of Warwick;

Which are so weak of courage, and in judgement, That they'll take no offence at our abuse.

K. Edw. Suppose they take offence without a cause,

They are but Lewis and Warwick; I am Edward, Your king and Warwick's, and must have my will.

Glo. And you shall have your will, because our Yet hasty marriage seldom proveth well. [king:]

K. Edw. Yea, brother Richard, are you offend- Glo. Not I: [ed too?

No; God forbid, that I should wish them sever'd, Whom God hath join'd together: ay, and 'twere To sunder them that yoke so well together. [pity

K. Edw. Setting your scorns, and your mislike, aside,

Tell me some reason, why the lady Grey Should not become my wife, and England's queen: And you too, Somerset, and Montague, Speak freely what you think.

Clar. Then this is my opinion,—that king Lewis Becomes your enemy for mocking him About the marriage of the lady Bona.

Glo. And Warwick, doing what you gave in charge,

Is now dishonour'd by this new marriage.

K. Edw. What, if both Lewis and Warwick be appeas'd,

By such invention as I can devise?

Mont. Yet to have join'd with France in such alliance,

Would more have strengthened this our common-wealth

'Gainst foreign storms, than any home-bred marriage.

Hast. Why, knows not Montague, that of itself, England is safe, if true within itself?

Mont. Yes; but the safer, when 'tis back'd with France. [France:]

Hast. 'Tis better using France, than trusting Let us be back'd with God, and with the seas¹,

Which he hath given for fence impregnable,

And with their helps alone defend ourselves;

In them, and in ourselves, our safety lies.

Clar. For this one speech, lord Hastings well deserves

To have the heir of the lord Hungerford.

K. Edw. Ay, what of that? it was my will, and grant;

And, for this once, my will shall stand for law.

Glo. And yet, methinks, your grace hath not done well,

To give the heir and daughter of lord Scales

Unto the brother of your loving bride;

She better would have fitted me, or Clarence;

But in your bride you bury brotherhood.

Clar. Or else you would not have bestow'd the heir

Of the lord Bonville on your new wife's son²,

And leave your brothers to go speed elsewhere.

K. Edw. Alas, poor Clarence! is it for a wife, That thou art malecontent? I will provide thee.

Clar. In choosing for yourself, you shew'd your judgement:

Which being shallow, you shall give me leave

To play the broker in mine own behalf;

And, to that end, I shortly mind to leave you.

K. Edw. Leave me, or tarry, Edward will be king,

And not be ty'd unto his brother's will.

Queen. My lords, before it pleas'd his majesty To raise my state to title of a queen,

Do me but right, and you must all confess

That I was not ignoble of descent,

And meaner than myself have had like fortune.

But as this title honours me and mine,

So your dislikes, to whom I would be pleasing,

Do cloud my joys with danger and with sorrow.

K. Edw. My love, forbear to fawn upon their frowns:

What danger, or what sorrow can befall thee,

So long as Edward is thy constant friend,

And their true sovereign, whom they must obey?

Nay, whom they shall obey, and love thee too,

¹ Dr. Johnson observes, that this has been the advice of every man who in any age understood and favoured the interest of England. ² Prior to the Restoration, the heiresses of great estates were in the wardship of the king, who in their minority gave them up to plunder, and afterwards matched them to his favourites.—Dr. Johnson remarks on this passage, that he knows not when liberty gained more than by the abolition of the court of wards.

Unless they seek for hatred at my hands :
Which if they do, yet will I keep thee safe,
And they shall feel the vengeance of my wrath.
Glo. [aside.] I hear, yet say not much, but think the more.

Enter a Post.

K. Edw. Now, messenger, what letters, or what news,
From France ?

Post. My sovereign liege, no letters ; and few
But such as I, without your special pardon,
Dare not relate.

K. Edw. Go to, we pardon thee : therefore, in Tell me their words as near as thou canst guess
them.

What answer makes king Lewis unto our letters ?

Post. At my depart, these were his very words :
“ Go tell false Edward, thy supposed king,—
“ That Lewis of France is sending over maskers,
“ To revel it with him and his new bride.”

K. Edw. Is Lewis so brave ? belike, he thinks me Henry.

But what said lady Bona to my marriage ?

Post. These were her words, utter'd with mild disdain :

“ Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly,
“ I'll wear the willow garland for his sake.”

K. Edw. I blame not her, she could say little less ;
She had the wrong. But what said Henry's queen ?
For I have heard, that she was there in place.

Post. “ Tell him,” quoth she, “ my mourning
weeds are done,

“ And I am ready to put armour on.”

K. Edw. Belike, she minds to play the Amazon.
But what said Warwick to these injuries ?

Post. He, more incens'd against your majesty
Than all the rest, discharg'd me with these words :
“ Tell him from me, that he hath done me wrong,
“ And therefore I'll uncrown him, ere't be long.”

K. Edw. Ha ! durst the traitor breathe out so proud words ?

Well, I will arm me, being thus forewarn'd :
They shall have wars, and pay for their presumption.

But say, is Warwick friends with Margaret ?

Post. Ay, gracious sovereign ; they are so link'd in friendship,

That young prince Edward marries Warwick's

Clar. Belike, the younger ; Clarence will have the elder.

Now, brother king, farewell, and sit you fast,
For I will hence to Warwick's other daughter ;
That, though I want a kingdom, yet in marriage
I may not prove inferior to yourself.—

You, that love me and Warwick, follow me.

[Exit Clarence, and Somerset follows.]

Glo. Not I :

My thoughts aim at a further matter ; I
Stay not for love of Edward, but the crown.

K. Edw. Clarence and Somerset both gone to Warwick !

Yet am I arm'd against the worst can happen ;

And haste is needful in this desperate case.—

Pembroke and Stafford, you in our behalf

Go levy men, and make prepare for war ;

They are already, or quickly will be landed :

5 Myself in person will straight follow you.

[Exeunt Pembroke and Stafford.]

But, ere I go, Hastings,—and Montague,—

Resolve my doubt. You twain, of all the rest,

Are near to Warwick, by blood, and by alliance :

10 Tell me, if you love Warwick more than me ?

If it be so, then both depart to him ;

I rather wish you foes, than hollow friends :

But if you mind to hold your true obedience,

Give me assurance with some friendly vow,

15 That I may never have you in suspect.

Mon. So God help Montague, as he proves true !

Hast. And Hastings, as he favours Edward's cause !

[by us ?]

K. Edw. Now, brother Richard, will you stand

Glo. Ay, in despite of all that shall withstand you.

K. Edw. Why so ; then am I sure of victory.

Now therefore let us hence ; and lose no hour,

'Till we meet Warwick with his foreign power.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

Warwickshire.

Enter Warwick and Oxford, with French soldiers.

War. Trust me, my lord, all hitherto goes well ;
The common people by numbers swarm to us.

Enter Clarence and Somerset.

35 But, see, where Somerset and Clarence come ;
Speak suddenly, my lords, are we all friends ?

Cl. Fear not that, my lord. [Warwick ;

War. Then, gentle Clarence, welcome unto

And welcome, Somerset :—I hold it cowardice,

40 To rest mistrustful where a noble heart

Hath pawn'd an open hand in sign of love ; [ther,

Else might I think, that Clarence, Edward's bro-

Were but a feigned friend to our proceedings :

45 But welcome, Clarence ; my daughter shall be thine.

And now what rests, but, in night's coverture,

Thy brother being carelessly encamp'd,

His soldiers lurking in the towns about,

And but attended by a simple guard,

50 We may surprise and take him at our pleasure ?

Our scouts have found the adventure very easy :

That as Ulysses, and stout Diomedes,

With slight and manhood stole to Rhesus' tents,

55 And brought from thence the Thracian fatal steeds ;

So we, well cover'd with the night's black mantle,

At unawares may beat down Edward's guard,

And seize himself ; I say not—slaughter him,

For I intend but only to surprize him.

You, that will follow me to this attempt,

60 Applaud the name of Henry, with your leader.

[They all cry, Henry !]

Why, then, let's on our way in silent sort :

For Warwick and his friends, God and Saint

George !

[Exeunt.]

SCENE

S C E N E III.

Edward's Camp.Enter the Watchmen to guard his tent.

1 Watch. Come on, my masters, each man take his stand;

The king, by this, is set him down to sleep.

2 Watch. What, will he not to bed?

1 Watch. Why, no: for he hath made a solemn vow,

Never to lie and take his natural rest,

'Till Warwick, or himself, be quite supprest.

2 Watch. To-morrow, then, belike, shall be
the day,

If Warwick be so near as men report. [that,

3 Watch. But say, I pray, what nobleman is
That with the king here resteth in his tent?

1 Watch. 'Tis the lord Hastings, the king's chiefest friend. [king,

3 Watch. O, is it so? But why commands the
That his chief followers lodge in towns about him,
While he himself keepeth in the cold field?

2 Watch. 'Tis the more honour, because more dangerous. [ness,

3 Watch. Ay; but give me worship and quiet-
I like it better than a dangerous honour.

If Warwick knew in what estate he stands,

'Tis to be doubted, he would waken him.

1 Watch. Unless our halberds did shut up his passage. [tent,

2 Watch. Ay; wherefore else guard we his royal
But to defend his person from night foes?

Enter Warwick, Clarence, Oxford, Somerset, and French soldiers, silent all.

War. This is his tent; and see, where stand his guard.

Courage, my masters; honour now, or never!

But follow me, and Edward shall be ours.

1 Watch. Who goes there?

2 Watch. Stay, or thou diest.

[*Warwick, and the rest, cry all,—Warwick!
Warwick! and set upon the guard; who fly, crying—Arm! Arm! Warwick, and the rest, following them.*

The drum beating, and trumpets sounding.

Enter Warwick, Somerset, and the rest, bringing the King out in a gown, sitting in a chair: Gloster and Hastings fly over the stage.

Som. What are they that fly there?

War. Richard and Hastings: let them go, here's the duke. [parted last,

K. Edw. The duke! why, Warwick, when we Thou call'd'st me king?

War. Ay, but the case is alter'd:

When you disgrac'd me in my embassy,

Then I degraded you from being king,

And come now to create you duke of York.

Alas! how should you govern any kingdom,

That know not how to use ambassadors;

Nor how to be contented with one wife;

Nor how to use your brothers brotherly;

Nor how to study for the people's welfare;

Nor how to shrowd yourself from enemies? [too?

K. Edw. Yea, brother of Clarence, art thou here?

Nay, then I see, that Edward needs must down.

Yet, Warwick, in despite of all mischance,

Of thee thyself, and all thy complices,

Edward will always bear himself as king:

Though fortune's malice overthrow my state,

My mind exceeds the compass of her wheel.

War. Then, for his mind, be Edward England's king: [Takes off his crown.

But Henry now shall wear the English crown,

10 And be true king indeed; thou but the shadow.—

My lord of Somerset, at my request,

See that forthwith duke Edward be convey'd

Unto my brother, archbishop of York.

When I have fought with Pembroke and his fel-

Lewis, and the lady Bona, send to him:—

Now, for a while, farewell, good duke of York.

K. Edw. What fates impose, that men must needs abide;

20 It boots not to resist both wind and tide.

[Exit King Edward, led out.

Oxf. What now remains, my lords, for us to do,
But march to London with our soldiers?

War. Ay, that's the first thing that we have to 25 To free king Henry from imprisonment, [do;
And see him seated in the regal throne. [Exeunt.

S C E N E IV.

London. The Palace.Enter the Queen, and Rivers.

Riv. Madam, what makes you in this sudden change? [learn,

Queen. Why, brother Rivers, are you yet to What late misfortune is befall'n king Edward?

35 Riv. What, loss of some pitch'd battle against Warwick?

Queen. No, but the loss of his own royal person.

Riv. Then is my sovereign slain?

Queen. Ay, almost slain, for he is taken prisoner;
40 Either betray'd by falsehood of his guard,

Or by his foe surpriz'd at unawares:

And, as I further have to understand,

Is new committed to the bishop of York,
Fell Warwick's brother, and by that our foe.

45 Riv. These news, I must confess, are full of grief;
Yet, gracious madam, bear it as you may;

Warwick may lose, that now hath won the day.

Queen. 'Till then, fair hope must hinder life's decay.

50 And I the rather wean me from despair,

For love of Edward's offspring in my womb:

This is it that makes me bridle my passion,

And bear with mildness my misfortune's cross;

Ay, ay, for this I draw in many a tear,

55 And stop the rising of blood-sucking sighs,

Lest with my sighs or tears I blast or drown

King Edward's fruit, true heir to the English crown.

Riv. But, madam, where is Warwick then become? [London,

60 Queen. I am informed, that he comes towards
To set the crown once more on Henry's head:

Guess thou the rest; king Edward's friends must

To save at least the heir of Edward's right;
There shall I rest secure from force, and fraud.
Come therefore, let us fly, while we may fly;
If Warwick takes us, we are sure to die. [Exeunt.]

S C E N E V.

A Park near Middleham Castle in Yorkshire.

Enter Gloster, Hastings, and Sir William Stanley.

Glo. Now, my lord Hastings, and Sir William Stanley,
Leave off to wonder why I drew you hither,
Into this chiefest thicket of the park. [brother,
Thus stands the case: You know, our king, my
Is prisoner to the bishop here, at whose hands
He hath good usage and great liberty;
And often, but attended with weak guard,
Comes hunting this way to disport himself.
I have advertis'd him by secret means,
That if, about this hour, he make this way,
Under the colour of his usual game,
He shall here find his friends, with horse and men,
To set him free from his captivity.

Enter King Edward, and a Huntsman.

Hunt. This way, my lord; for this way lies the game. [huntsmen stand.—

K. Edw. Nay, this way, man; see, where the
Now, brother of Gloster, lord Hastings, and the rest,
Stand you thus close to steal the bishop's deer?

Glo. Brother, the time and case requireth haste;
Your horse stands ready at the park-corner.

K. Edw. But whither shall we then?

Hast. To Lynn, my lord; and ship from thence to Flanders. [meaning.

Glo. Well guess'd, believe me; for that was my

K. Edw. Stanley, I will requite thy forwardness.

Glo. But wherefore stay we? 'tis no time to talk.

K. Edw. Huntsman, what say'st thou? wilt thou go along?

Hunt. Better do so, than tarry and be hang'd.

Glo. Come then, away; let's ha' no more ado.

K. Edw. Bishop, farewell; shield thee from Warwick's frown;

And pray that I may repossess the crown. [Exeunt.]

S C E N E VI.

The Tower in London.

Enter King Henry, Clarence, Warwick, Somerset, Young Richmond, Oxford, Montague, and Lieutenant of the Tower.

K. Henry. Master lieutenant, now that God and Have shaken Edward from the regalseat; [friends
And turn'd my captive state to liberty,
My fear to hope, my sorrows unto joys;
At our enlargement what are thy due fees?

Lieut. Subjects may challenge nothing of their sovereigns;

But, if an humble prayer may prevail,
I then crave pardon of your majesty.

K. Hen. For what, lieutenant? for well using me?
Nay, be thou sure, I'll well requite thy kindness,
For that it made my imprisonment a pleasure:

Ay, such a pleasure as incaged birds
Conceive, when, after many moody thoughts,
At last, by notes of household harmony,
They quite forget their loss of liberty.—

5 But, Warwick, after God, thou sett'st me free,
And chiefly therefore I thank God and thee;
He was the author, thou the instrument.

Therefore, that I may conquer fortune's spight,
By living low, where fortune cannot hurt me;

10 And that the people of this blessed land
May not be punish'd with my thwarting stars;
Warwick, although my head still wear the crown,
I here resign my government to thee,
For thou art fortunate in all thy deeds.

15 War. Your grace hath still been fam'd for virtuous;
And now may seem as wise as virtuous,
By spying, and avoiding, fortune's malice,
For few men rightly temper with the stars¹:

Yet in this one thing let me blame your grace,
20 For chusing me, when Clarence is in place.

Clar. No, Warwick, thou art worthy of the sway,
To whom the heavens, in thy nativity,
Adjudg'd an olive branch, and laurel crown,
As likely to be blest in peace, and war;

25 And therefore I yield thee my free consent.

War. And I chuse Clarence only for protector.

K. Henry. Warwick, and Clarence, give me both your hands; [hearts,

Now join your hands, and, with your hands, your
That no dissention hinder government:

I make you both protectors of this land;

While I myself will lead a private life,

And in devotion spend my latter days,

To sin's rebuke, and my Creator's praise. [will?

35 War. What answers Clarence to his sovereign's

Clar. That he consents, if Warwick yield con-

For on thy fortune I repose myself. [sent;

War. Why then, though loth, yet must I be content;

40 We'll yoke together, like a double shadow

To Henry's body, and supply his place;

I mean, in bearing weight of government,

While he enjoys the honour, and his ease.

And, Clarence, now then it is more than needful,

45 Forthwith that Edward be pronounc'd a traitor,
And all his lands and goods confiscated. [min'd.

Clar. What else? and that succession be deter-

Let me entreat, (for I command no more,)
That Margaret your queen, and my son Edward,

K. Henry. My lord of Somerset, what youth is that,

Of whom you seem to have so tender care? [mond.

Som. My liege, it is young Henry, earl of Rich-

K. Henry. Come hither, England's hope: If secret powers [Lays his hand on his head.

¹ The meaning is, that few men conform their temper to their destiny.

Suggest but truth to my divining thoughts,
 'This pretty lad¹ will prove our country's bliss.
 His looks are full of peaceful majesty;
 His head by nature fram'd to wear a crown,
 His hand to wield a sceptre; and himself
 Likely, in time, to bless a regal throne.
 Make much of him, my lords; for this is he,
 Must help you more than you are hurt by me.

Enter a Post.

War. What news, my friend?

Post. That Edward is escaped from your brother,
 And fled, as he hears since, to Burgundy.

War. Unsavoury news: But how made he escape?

Post. He was convey'd by Richard duke of Gloster,
 And the lord Hastings, who attended him
 In secret ambush on the forest side,
 And from the bishop's huntsmen rescued him;
 For hunting was his daily exercise.

War. My brother was too careless of his charge.—
 But let us hence, my sovereign, to provide
 A salve for any sore that may betide. [Exeunt.

Manent Somerset, Richmond, and Oxford.

Som. My lord, I like not this flight of Edward's:

For, doubtless, Burgundy will yield him help:
 And we shall have more wars, before 't be long.
 As Henry's late presaging prophecy [mond;
 Did glad my heart, with hope of this young Rich-
 So doth my heart misgive me, in these conflicts
 What may befall him, to his harm, and ours;
 Therefore, lord Oxford, to prevent the worst,
 Forthwith we'll send him hence to Britany,
 'Till storms be past of civil enmity.

Oxf. Ay: for, if Edward re-possess the crown,
 'Tis like, that Richmond with the rest shall down.

Som. It shall be so; he shall to Britany.
 Come, therefore, let's about it speedily. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.

York.

Enter King Edward, Gloster, Hastings, and Soldiers.

K. Edw. Now, brother Richard, lord Hastings, and the rest;

Yet thus far fortune maketh us amends,
 And says—that once more I shall interchange
 My wained state for Henry's regal crown.
 Well have we pass'd, and now repass'd the seas.
 And brought desired help from Burgundy:
 What then remains, we being thus arriv'd
 From Ravenspurg haven before the gates of York,
 But that we enter, as into our dukedom? [this;

Glo. The gates made fast!—Brother, I like not
 For many men, that stumble at the threshold,
 Are well foretold—that danger lurks within.

K. Edw. Tush, man! abodements must not now
 affright us:

By fair or foul means we must enter in,
 For hither will our friends repair to us. [mon them.

Hast. My liege, I'll knock once more, to sum-
Enter, on the walls, the Mayor of York, and his Brethren.

Mayor. My lords, we were forewarned of your coming,

And shut the gates for safety of ourselves;
 For now we owe allegiance unto Henry. [king,
K. Edw. But, master mayor, if Henry be your Yet Edward, at the least, is duke of York.

5 Mayor. True, my good lord; I know you for no less.

K. Edw. Why, and I challenge nothing but my dukedom;

As being well content with that alone.

10 Glo. But, when the fox has once got in his nose,
 He'll soon find means to make the body follow.

[Aside.

Hast. Why, master mayor, why stand you in a doubt?

15 Open the gates, we are king Henry's friends.

Mayor. Ay, say you so? the gates shall then be open'd. [He descends.

Glo. A wise stout captain, and persuaded soon!

20 Hast. The good old man would fain that all were well,

So 'twere not 'long of him: but, being enter'd,
 I doubt not, I, but we shall soon persuade
 Both him, and all his brothers, unto reason.

Re-enter the Mayor and two Aldermen, below.

25 K. Edw. So, master mayor: these gates must not be shut,

But in the night, or in the time of war.

What! fear not, man, but yield me up the keys;
 [Takes his keys.

30 For Edward will defend the town, and thee,

And all those friends that deign to follow me.

March. Enter Montgomery, with a Drum and Soldiers.

Glo. Brother, this is Sir John Montgomery,

35 Our trusty friend, unless I be deceiv'd. [in arms?

K. Edw. Welcome, Sir John! But why come you

Montg. To help king Edward in his time of storm,
 As every loyal subject ought to do. [now forget

K. Edw. Thanks, good Montgomery: But we 40 Our title to the crown; and only claim

Our dukedom, 'till God please to send the rest.

Montg. Then fare you well, for I will hence
 again;

I came to serve a king, and not a duke.—

45 Drummer, strike up, and let us march away.

[The drum begins a march.

K. Edw. Nay, stay, Sir John, a while; and we'll debate,

By what safe means the crown may be recover'd.

50 Montg. What talk you of debating? in few words,
 If you'll not here proclaim yourself our king,

I'll leave you to your fortune; and be gone,

To keep them back that come to succour you:

Why should we fight, if you pretend no title?

55 Glo. Why, brother, wherefore stand you on nice points? [make our claim:

K. Edw. When we grow stronger, then we'll
 'Till then, 'tis wisdom to conceal our meaning.

Hast. Away with scrupulous wit! now arms must rule. [crowns.

60 Glo. And fearless minds climb soonest unto Brother, we will proclaim you out of hand;

¹ He was afterwards Henry VII. a man who put an end to the civil war of the two Houses. He was grandfather to queen Elizabeth, and the king from whom James inherited.

The bruit¹ thereof will bring you many friends.

K. Edw. Then be it as you will: for 'tis my right,
And Henry but usurps the diadem. [himself;

Montg. Ay, now my sovereign speaketh like
And now will I be Edward's champion.

Hast. Sound, trumpet; Edward shall be here proclaim'd:—

Come, fellow-soldier, make thou proclamation.
[Flourish.

Sold. [reads] Edward the fourth, by the grace of God, king of England and France, and lord of Ireland, &c.

Mont. And whosoe'er gainsays King Edward's
By this I challenge him to single fight. [right, [Throws down his gauntlet.

All. Long live Edward the fourth!

K. Edw. Thanks, brave Montgomery;—and thanks unto you all.

If fortune serve me, I'll requite this kindness.

Now, for this night, let's harbour here in York;

And, when the morning sun shall raise his car,
Above the border of this horizon,

We'll forward towards Warwick, and his mates;

For well I wot that Henry is no soldier.—

Ah, froward Clarence!—how evil it beseems thee,

To flatter Henry, and forsake thy brother! [wick.

Yet, as we may, we'll meet both thee and War-

Come on, brave soldiers; doubt not of the day;

And, that once gotten, doubt not of large pay.
[Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.

London.

Enter King Henry, Warwick, Clarence, Montague, Exeter, and Oxford.

War. What counsel, lords? Edward from Belgia,

With hasty Germans, and blunt Hollanders,

Hath pass'd in safety through the narrow seas,

And with his troops doth march amain to London;

And many giddy people flock to him. [again.

K. Henry. Let's levy men, and beat him back

Clar. A little fire is quickly trodden out;

Which, being suffer'd, rivers cannot quench.

War. In Warwickshire I have true-hearted

Not mutinous in peace, yet bold in war; [friends,

Those will I muster up:—and thou, son Clarence,

Shalt stir in Suffolk, Norfolk, and in Kent,

The knights and gentlemen to come with thee:—

Thou, brother Montague, in Buckingham,

Northampton, and in Leicestershire, shalt find

Men well inclin'd to hear what thou command'st:—

And thou, brave Oxford, wond'rous well belov'd,

In Oxfordshire shalt muster up thy friends.—

My sovereign, with the loving citizens,—

Like to his island, girt in with the ocean,

Or modest Dian, circled with her nymphs,—

Shall rest in London, 'till we come to him.—

Fair lords, take leave, and stand not to reply.—

Farewell, my sovereign. [true hope.

K. Henry. Farewell, my Hector, and my Troy's

Clar. In sign of truth, I kiss your highness' hand.

K. Henry. Well-minded Clarence, be thou forfortunate! [leave.

Mont. Comfort, my lord;—and so I take my

Oxf. [Kissing Henry's hand.] And thus I seal my truth, and bid adieu. [tague,

K. Henry. Sweet Oxford, and my loving Mon-

And all at once, once more a happy farewell.

War. Farewell, sweet lords; let's meet at Coventry.

[Exeunt Warwick, Clarence, Oxford, and Montague.

K. Henry. Here at the palace will I rest a while.

Cousin of Exeter, what thinks your lordship?

Methinks, the power, that Edward hath in field,

Should not be able to encounter mine.

Exe. The doubt is, that he will seduce the rest.

K. Henry. That's not my fear, my meed² hath got me fame:

I have not stopp'd mine ears to their demands,

Nor posted off their suits with slow delays;

My pity hath been balm to heal their wounds,

My mildness hath allay'd their swelling griefs,

My mercy dry'd their water-flowing tears:

I have not been desirous of their wealth,

Nor much oppress'd them with great subsidies,

Nor forward of revenge, though they much err'd;

Then why should they love Edward more than me?

No, Exeter, these graces challenge grace:

And, when the lion fawns upon the lamb,

The lamb will never cease to follow him.

[Shout within. A Lancaster! a Lancaster!

Exe. Hark, hark, my lord! what shouts are these?

Enter King Edward, Gloster, and Soldiers.

K. Edw. Seize on the shame-fac'd Henry, bear

him hence,

And once again proclaim us king of England.—

You are the fount, that makes small brooks to flow:

Now stops thy spring; my sea shall suck them dry,

And swell so much the higher by their ebb.—

Hence with him to the Tower; let him not speak.

[Exeunt some with King Henry.

And, lords, towards Coventry bend we our course,

Where peremptory Warwick now remains;

The sun shines hot, and, if we use delay,

Cold biting winter mars our hop'd-for hay.

Glo. Away betimes, before his forces join,

And take the great-grown traitor unawares:

Brave warriors, march amain towards Coventry.
[Exeunt.

A C T V.

SCENE I.

Before the Town of Coventry.

Enter Warwick, the Mayor of Coventry, two Messengers, and others, upon the walls.

War. WHERE is the post, that came from valiant Oxford?

How far hence is thy lord, mine honest fellow?

1 Mes. By this at Dunsmore, marching hitherward.

War. How far off is our brother Montague?—

Where is the post that came from Montague?

2 Mes. By this at Daintry, with a puissant troop.

Enter Sir John Somerville.

War. Say, Somerville, what says my loving son?

And, by thy guess, how nigh is Clarence now?

¹ i. e. noise or report.

² i. e. merit.

Somerv. At Southam I did leave him with his forces,
And do expect him here some two hours hence.

War. Then Clarence is at hand, I hear his drum.

Somerv. It is not his, my lord; here Southam lies;
The drum your honour hears, marcheth from Warwick. [friends.]

War. Who should that be? belike, unlook'd-for Somerv. They are at hand, and you shall quickly know.

March. Flourish. Enter King Edward, Gloster, and Soldiers.

K. Edw. Go, trumpet, to the walls, and sound a parley.

Glo. See, how the surly Warwick mans the wall.

War. Oh, unbid spight! is sportful Edward come?

Where slept our scouts, or how are they seduc'd,
That we could hear no news of his repair?

K. Edw. Now, Warwick, wilt thou ope the city gates,

Speak gentle words, and humbly bend thy knee?—

Call Edward—king, and at his hands beg mercy,
And he shall pardon thee these outrages. [hence,

War. Nay, rather, wilt thou draw thy forces
Confess who set thee up and pluck'd thee down?—

Call Warwick—patron, and be penitent,
And thou shalt still remain the duke of York.

Glo. I thought, at least he would have said—the king;

Or did he make the jest against his will?

War. Is not a dukedom, sir, a goodly gift?

Glo. Ay, by my faith, for a poor earl to give;
I'll do thee service for so good a gift.

War. 'Twas I, that gave the kingdom to thy brother. [Warwick's gift.]

K. Edw. Why, then 'tis mine, if but by War-

War. Thou art no Atlas for so great a weight:
And, weakling, Warwick takes his gift again;

And Henry is my king, Warwick his subject.

K. Edw. But Warwick's king is Edward's prisoner:

And, gallant Warwick, do but answer this,—
What is the body, when the head is off?

Glo. Alas, that Warwick had no more fore-cast,
But, whiles he thought to steal the single ten,

The king was slyly finger'd from the deck¹!—
You left poor Henry at the bishop's palace,

And, ten to one, you'll meet him in the Tower.

K. Edw. 'Tis even so; yet you are Warwick still.

Glo. Come, Warwick, take the time, kneel down, kneel down.

Nay, when? strike now, or else the iron cools.

War. I had rather chop this hand off at a blow,
And with the other fling it at thy face,

Than bear so low a sail, to strike to thee.

K. Edw. Sail how thou canst, have wind and tide thy friend;

This hand, fast wound about thy coal-black hair,
Shall, whiles thy head is warm, and new cut off,

Write in the dust this sentence with thy blood,—
Wind-changing Warwick now can change no more.

Enter Oxford, with drum and colours.

War. O chearful colours! see, where Oxford comes!

Oxf. Oxford, Oxford, for Lancaster!

Glo. The gates are open, let us enter too.

K. Edw. So other foes may set upon our backs.
Stand we in good array; for they, no doubt,

Will issue out again, and bid us battle:
If not, the city being of small defence,

We'll quickly rouse the traitors in the same.

War. O, welcome, Oxford! for we want thy help.

Enter Montague, with drum and colours.

Mont. Montague, Montague, for Lancaster!

Glo. Thou and thy brother both shall buy this treason

Even with the dearest blood your bodies bear.

K. Edw. The harder match'd, the greater victory;
My mind presageth happy gain, and conquest.

Enter Somerset, with drum and colours.

Som. Somerset, Somerset, for Lancaster!

Glo. Two of thy name, both dukes of Somerset,

Have sold their lives unto the house of York;

And thou shalt be the third, if this sword hold.

Enter Clarence, with drum and colours.

War. And lo, where George of Clarence sweeps along,

Of force enough to bid his brother battle;

With whom an upright zeal to right prevails,
More than the nature of a brother's love: [calls.

Come, Clarence, come; thou wilt if Warwick
[A parley is sounded; Richard and Clarence whisper together; and then Clarence takes his red rose out of his hat, and throws it at Warwick.

Clar. Father of Warwick, know you what this means?

Look here, I throw my infamy at thee:

I will not ruinate my father's house,

Who gave his blood to lime² the stones together,

And set up Lancaster. Why, trow'st thou, Warwick,

That Clarence is so harsh, so blunt³, unnatural,

To bend the fatal instruments of war

Against his brother, and his lawful king?

Perhaps, thou wilt object my holy oath:

To keep that oath, were more impiety

Than Jephthah's when he sacrific'd his daughter.

I am so sorry for my trespass made,

That, to deserve well at my brother's hands,

I here proclaim myself thy mortal foe;

With resolution, wheresoe'er I meet thee,

(As I will meet thee, if thou stir abroad)

To plague thee for thy foul misleading me.

And so, proud-hearted Warwick, I defy thee,

And to my brother turn my blushing cheeks.—

Pardon me, Edward, I will make amends;

And, Richard, do not frown upon my faults,

For I will henceforth be no more unconstant.

K. Edw. Now welcome more, and ten times more belov'd,

Than if thou never hadst deserv'd our hate. [like.

Glo. Welcome, good Clarence; this is brother-

War. O passing⁴ traitor, perjur'd and unjust!

¹ A pack of cards was anciently, and is still in Staffordshire, term'd a deck of cards.
² i.e. to cement the stones. Lime makes mortar. ³ Stupid, insensible of fraternal fondness. ⁴ i.e. eminent, egregious.

K. Edw. What, Warwick, wilt thou leave the town, and fight?

Or shall we beat the stones about thine ears?

War. Alas, I am not coop'd here for defence: I will away towards Barnet presently, And bid thee battle, Edward, if thou dar'st.

K. Edw. Yes, Warwick, Edward dares, and leads the way:—

Lords, to the field; Saint George, and victory!

[Exeunt.]

March. Warwick and his company follow.

SCENE II.

A Field of Battle near Barnet.

Alarum and Excursions. Enter Edward, bringing forth Warwick wounded.

K. Edw. So, lie thou there: die thou, and die our fear;

For Warwick was a bug¹, that fear'd² us all.

Now, Montague, sit fast; I seek for thee, That Warwick's bones may keep thine company.

[Exit.]

War. Ah, who is nigh? come to me, friend, or foe,

And tell me, who is victor, York, or Warwick?

Why ask I that? my mangled body shows, [shows, My blood, my want of strength, my sick heart

That I must yield my body to the earth,

And, by my fall, the conquest to my foe.

Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge,

Whose arms gave shelter to the princely eagle,

Under whose shade the ramping lion slept;

Whose topbranch over-peer'd Jove's spreading tree,

And kept low shrubs from winter's powerful wind.

These eyes, that now are dimm'd with death's black veil,

Have been as piercing as the mid-day sun,

To search the secret treasons of the world:

The wrinkles in my brows, now fill'd with blood,

Were liken'd oft to kingly sepulchres;

For who liv'd king, but I could dig his grave?

And who durst smile, when Warwick bent his brow?

Lo, now my glory smear'd in dust and blood!

My parks, my walks, my manors that I had,

Even now forsake me; and, of all my lands,

Is nothing left me, but my body's length!

Why, what is pomp, rule, reign, but earth and dust?

And, live we how we can, yet die we must.

[Enter Oxford and Somerset.]

Som. Ah, Warwick, Warwick! wert thou as we are,

We might recover all our loss again! [power;

Even now we heard the news: Ah, couldst thou fly!

War. Why, then I would not fly.—Ah, Montague,

If thou be there, sweet brother, take my hand,

And with thy lips keep in my soul a while!

Thou lov'st me not; for, brother, if thou didst,

Thy tears would wash this cold congealed blood,

That glews my lips, and will not let me speak.

Come quickly, Montague, or I am dead. [last;

Som. Ah, Warwick, Montague hath breath'd his

And to the latest gasp, cry'd out for Warwick,

And said,—Commend me to my vallant brother.

And more he would have said; and more he spoke

Which sounded like a clamour³ in a vault,

That could not be distinguish'd; but, at last,

I well might hear deliver'd with a groan,—

O, farewell, Warwick!

War. Sweet rest his soul!—

Fly, lords, and save yourselves; for Warwick bids

You all farewell, to meet in heaven. [Dies.]

Oxf. Away, away, to meet the queen's great power!

[They bear away his body, and Exeunt.]

SCENE III.

Another Part of the Field.

Flourish. Enter King Edward in triumph; with Gloster, Clarence, and the rest.

K. Edw. Thus far our fortune keeps an upward course,

And we are grac'd with wreaths of victory.

But, in the midst of this bright-shining day,

I spy a black, suspicious, threat'ning cloud,

That will encounter with our glorious sun,

Ere he attain his easeful western bed:

I mean, my lords,—those powers that the queen

Hath rais'd in Gallia, have arriv'd our coast,

And, as we hear, march on to fight with us.

Clar. A little gale will soon disperse that cloud,

And blow it to the source from whence it came:

Thy very beams will dry those vapours up;

For every cloud engenders not a storm.

Glo. The queen is valu'd thirty thousand strong,

And Somerset, with Oxford, fled to her;

If she have time to breathe, be well assur'd,

Her faction will be full as strong as ours.

K. Edw. We are advertis'd by our loving friends,

That they do hold their coursetowards Tewksbury:

We, having now the best at Barnet field,

Will thither straight, for willingness rids way;

And, as we march, our strength will be augmented

In every county as we go along.—

Strike up the drum: cry—Courage! and away.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.

Tewksbury.

March. Enter the Queen, Prince of Wales, Somerset, Oxford, and Soldiers.

Queen. Great lords, wise men ne'er sit and wail their loss,

But chearly seek how to redress their harms.

What though the mast be now blown over-board,

The cable broke, our holding anchor lost,

And half our sailors swallow'd in the flood?

Yet lives our pilot still: Is't meet, that he Should leave the helm, and, like a fearful lad,

With tearful eyes add water to the sea, [much;

And give more strength to that which hath too

Whiles, in his moan, the ship splits on the rock,

Which industry and courage might have sav'd?

Ah, what a shame! ah, what a fault were this!

Say, Warwick was our anchor; What of that?

And Montague our top-mast; What of him?

Our slaughter'd friends the tackles; What of these?

Why, is not Oxford here, another anchor?

And Somerset another goodly mast?

² i. e. which made us all fear.

³ i. e. a clamour of tongues.

The friends of France our shrouds and tacklings?
 And, though unskilful, why not Ned and I
 For once allow'd the skilful pilot's charge?
 We will not from the helm, to sit and weep; [no,
 But keep our course, though the rough winds say—
 From shelves and rocks that threaten us with wreck.
 As good to chide the waves, as speak them fair.
 And what is Edward, but a ruthless sea?
 What Clarence, but a quick-sand of deceit?
 And Richard, but a ragged fatal rock?
 All these the enemies to our poor bark.
 Say, you can swim; alas, 'tis but a while:
 Tread on the sand; why, there you quickly sink:
 Bestride the rock; the tide will wash you off,
 Or else you famish, that's a threefold death.
 This speak I, lords, to let you understand,
 In case some one of you would fly from us,
 That there's no hop'd-for mercy with the brothers,
 More than with ruthless waves, with sands, and rocks.

Why, courage then! what cannot be avoided,
 'Twere childish weakness to lament, or fear.

Prince. Methinks, a woman of this valiant spirit
 Should, if a coward heard her speak these words,
 Infuse his breast with magnanimity,
 And make him, naked, foil a man at arms.
 I speak not this, as doubting any here:
 For, did I but suspect a fearful man,
 He should have leave to go away betimes:
 Lest, in our need, he might infect another,
 And make him of like spirit to himself.
 If any such be here, as God forbid!
 Let him depart, before we need his help.

Oxf. Women and children of so high a courage!
 And warriors faint! why, 'twere perpetual shame.—
 O brave young prince! thy famous grandfather
 Doth live again in thee! Long may'st thou live,
 To bear his image, and renew his glories!

Som. And he that will not fight for such a hope,
 Go home to bed, and, like the owl by day,
 If he arise, be mock'd and wonder'd at. [thanks.

Queen. Thanks, gentle Somerset;—sweet Oxford,

Prince. And take his thanks, that yet hath nothing else.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Prepare you, lords, for Edward is at hand,
 Ready to fight; therefore be resolute.

Oxf. I thought no less: it is his policy,
 To haste thus fast, to find us unprovided.

Som. But he's deceiv'd, we are in readiness.

Queen. This cheers my heart, to see your forwardness. [budge.

Oxf. Here pitch our battle, hence we will not March. Enter King Edward, Gloster, Clarence, and Soldiers, on the other side of the stage.

K. Edw. Brave followers, yonder stands the thorny wood,
 Which, by the heavens' assistance and your strength,
 Must by the roots be hewn up yet ere night.
 I need not add more fuel to your fire,
 For, well I wot, ye blaze to burn them out:
 Give signal to the fight, and to it, lords.

Queen. Lords, knights, and gentlemen, what I should say,

My tears gainsay¹; for every word I speak,
 Ye see, I drink the water of mine eyes. [vereign,
 Therefore, no more but this:—Henry, your so-
 Is prisoner to the foe; his state usurp'd,
 His realm a slaughter-house, his subjects slain,
 His statutes cancell'd, and his treasure spent;
 And yonder is the wolf that makes this spoil.
 You fight in justice: then, in God's name, lords,
 Be valiant, and give signal to the fight.

Queen, Oxford, and Somerset, prisoners.

K. Edw. Lo, here a period of tumultuous broils.
 15 Away with Oxford to Hammes' Castle straight:
 For Somerset, off with his guilty head.

Go, bear them hence; I will not hear them speak.

 words. [fortune.

Queen. So part we sadly in this troublous world,
 To meet with joy in sweet Jerusalem.

K. Edw. Is proclamation made,—that, who Shall have a high reward, and he his life?

Glo. It is, and, lo, where youthful Edward comes.
Enter Soldiers with the Prince.

K. Edw. Bring forth the gallant, let us hear him
 30 speak:

What! can so young a thorn begin to prick?—
 Edward, what satisfaction canst thou make,
 For bearing arms, for stirring up my subjects,
 And all the trouble thou hast turn'd me to?

35 Prince. Speak like a subject, proud ambitious
 York!

Suppose, that I am now my father's mouth;
 Resign thy chair, and, where I stand, kneel thou,
 Whilst I propose the self-same words to thee,
 40 Which, traitor, thou wouldst have me answer to.

Queen. Ah, that thy father had been so resolv'd!

Glo. That you might still have worn the petticoat,

And ne'er have stol'n the breech from Lancaster.

45 Prince. Let *Æsop*² fable in a winter's night;
 His currish riddles sort not with this place.

Glo. By heaven, brat, I'll plague you for that Prince. Nay, take away this scolding crook-back

K. Edw. Peace, wilful boy, or I will charm your tongue.

55 Clar. Untutor'd lad, thou art too malapert.

Prince. I know my duty, you are all undutiful:
 Lascivious Edward,—and thou perjur'd George,—
 And thou mishapen Dick,—I tell ye all,
 I am your better, traitors as ye are;—

60 And thou usurp'st my father's right and mine.

K. Edw. Take that, thou likeness of this railer here³. [Stabs him.

Glo. Sprawl'st thou? take that, to end thy agony.
 [Glo. stabs him.

¹ To gainsay is to deny, to contradict.

² i. e. Thou that resembl'st thy railing mother.

³ The Prince calls Richard, for his crookedness, Æsop.
Clar.

Clar. And there's for twitting me with perjury.

[Clar. stabs him.]

Queen. Oh, kill me too!

Glo. Marry, and shall. [Offers to kill her.]

K. Edw. Hold, Richard, hold, for we have done too much.

Glo. Why should she live, to fill the world with words? [her recovery.]

K. Edw. What! doth she swoon? use means for

Glo. Clarence, excuse me to the king my brother;

I'll hence to London on a serious matter:

Ere ye come there, be sure to hear more news.

Clar. What? what?

Glo. The Tower, man, the Tower! [Exit.]

Queen. Oh, Ned, sweet Ned! speak to thy mother, boy!

Canst thou not speak?—O traitors! murderers!—

They, that stabb'd Cæsar, shed no blood at all,

Did not offend, nor were not worthy blame,

If this foul deed were by, to equal it.

He was a man; this, in respect, a child;

And men ne'er spend their fury on a child.

What's worse than murderer, that I may name it?

No, no; my heart will burst, an if I speak:—

And I will speak, that so my heart may burst.—

Butchers and villains, bloody cannibals!

How sweet a plant have you untimely cropp'd!

You have no children, butchers; if you had,

The thought of them would have stirr'd up remorse:

But, if you ever chance to have a child,

Look in his youth to have him so cut off,

As, deathsmen! you have rid this sweet young prince.

K. Edw. Away with her; go, bear her hence by Queen. Nay, never bear! hence, dispatch me here;

Here sheath thy sword, I'll pardon thee my death:

What! wilt thou not?—then, Clarence, do it thou.

Clar. By heaven, I will not do thee so much ease.

Queen. Good Clarence, do; sweet Clarence, do thou do it.

Clar. Didst thou not hear me swear, I would not do it?

Queen. Ay, but thou usest to forswear thyself;

'Twas sin before, but now 'tis charity.

What! wilt thou not? where is that devil's butcher,

Hard-favour'd Richard? Richard, where art thou?

Thou art not here: Murder is thy alms-deed;

Petitioner for blood thou ne'er putt'st back.

K. Edw. Away, I say; I charge ye, bear her hence.

Queen. So come to you, and yours, as to this prince!

[Exit Queen.]

K. Edw. Where's Richard gone?

Clar. To London, all in post; and, as I guess, To make a bloody supper in the Tower. [head.]

K. Edw. He's sudden, if a thing comes in his

Now march we hence: discharge the common sort With pay and thanks, and let's away to London,

And see our gentle queen how well she fares;

By this, I hope, she hath a son for us. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.

The Tower of London.

Enter King Henry with a book, and Gloster with the Lieutenant, on the Tower walls.

Glo. Good day, my lord! What, at your book so hard?

[say rather;]

K. Henry. Ay, my good lord: My lord, I should 'Tis sin to flatter, good was little better:

Good Gloster, and good devil, were alike,

And both preposterous; therefore, not good lord.

Glo. Sirrah, leave us to ourselves: we must confer. [Exit Lieutenant.]

K. Henry. So flies the reckless shepherd from the wolf;

So first the harmless sheep doth yield his fleece, And next his throat unto the butcher's knife.—

What scene of death hath Roscius now to act?

Glo. Suspicion always haunts the guilty mind; The thief doth fear each bush an officer.

K. Henry. The bird, that hath been limed in a bush,

With trembling wings misdoubteth¹ every bush:

And I, the hapless male to one sweet bird,

Have now the fatal object in my eye, [kill'd.]

Where my poor young was lim'd, was caught, and

Glo. Why, what a peevish² fool was that of Crete,

That taught his son the office of a fowl?

And yet, for all his wings, the fool was drown'd.

K. Henry. I, Dædalus; my poor son, Icarus;

Thy father, Minos, that deny'd our course;

The sun, that sear'd the wings of my sweet boy,

Thy brother Edward; and thyself, the sea,

Whose envious gulph did swallow up his life.

Ah, kill me with thy weapon, not with words!

My breast can better brook thy dagger's point,

Than can my ears that tragic history.—

But wherefore dost thou come? is't for my life?

Glo. Think'st thou, I am an executioner?

K. Henry. A persecutor, I am sure, thou art;

If murdering innocents be executing,

Why, then thou art an executioner.

Glo. Thy son I kill'd for his presumption.

K. Henry. Hadst thou been kill'd, when first thou didst presume,

Thou hadst not liv'd to kill a son of mine.

And thus I prophesy,—that many a thousand,

Which now mistrust no parcel of my fear;

And many an old man's sigh, and many a widow's,

And many an orphan's water-standing eye,—

Men for their sons, wives for their husbands' fate,

And orphans for their parents' timeless death,—

Shall rue the hour that ever thou wast born.

The owl shriek'd at thy birth, an evil sign;

The night-crow cry'd, aboding luckless time;

Dogs howl'd, and hideous tempests shook down trees;

The raven rook'd³ her on the chimney's top,

And chattering pyes in dismal discords sung.

¹ i. e. fears, or suspects.

² i. e. childish.

³ To rook, or rather to ruck, is a north-country word, signifying to squat down, or lodge on any thing.—All of a ruck is a Staffordshire expression for all on a heap.

Thy mother felt more than a mother's pain,
And yet brought forth less than a mother's hope;
To wit, an undigest deformed lump,
Not like the fruit of such a goodly tree.

Teeth hadst thou in thy head, when thou wast born,
To signify,—thou cam'st to bite the world:
And, if the rest be true which I have heard,
Thou cam'st into the world with thy legs forward.

Glo. I'll hear no more;—Die, prophet, in thy speech. [Stabs him.]

For this, amongst the rest, was I ordain'd.

K. Henry. Ay, and for much more slaughter after this.

O God! forgive my sins, and pardon thee! [Dies.]

Glo. What, will the aspiring blood of Lancaster Sink in the ground? I thought, it would have mounted. [death!]

See, how my sword weeps for the poor king's
O, may such purple tears be always shed
From those that wish the downfall of our house!
If any spark of life be yet remaining,
Down, down to hell; and say,—I sent thee thither, [Stabs him again.]

I, that have neither pity, love, nor fear.—
Indeed, 'tis true, that Henry told me of;
For I have often heard my mother say,
I came into the world with my legs forward:
Had I not reason, think ye, to make haste,
And seek their ruin that usurp'd our right?
The midwife wonder'd, and the women cry'd,
“O, Jesus bless us, he is born with teeth!”

And so I was; which plainly signify'd—
That I should snarl, and bite, and play the dog.
Then, since the heavens have shap'd my body so,
Let hell make crook'd my mind, to answer it.

I had no father, I am like no father:
I have no brother, I am like no brother: [vine,
And this word—love, which grey-beards call di-
Be resident in men like one another,
And not in me; I am myself alone.—

Clarence, beware; thou keep'st me from the light;
But I will sort¹ a pitchy day for thee:
For I will buz abroad such prophecies,
That Edward shall be fearful of his life;
And then, to purge his fear, I'll be thy death.
King Henry, and the prince his son, are gone:
Clarence, thy turn is next; and then the rest;
Counting myself but bad, 'till I be best.—

I'll throw thy body in another room,
And triumph, Henry, in thy day of doom. [Exit.]

The Palace in London.

Enter King Edward, the Queen, with the young Prince, Clarence, Gloster, Hastings, and Attendants.

K. Edw. Once more we sit in England's royal
throne,

Re-purchas'd with the blood of enemies.

What valiant foe-men, like to autumn's corn,
Have we mow'd down, in top of all their pride!
Three dukes of Somerset, threefold renown'd
For hardy and undoubted champions:

Two Cliffords, as the father and the son,
And two Northumberlands: two braver men
Ne'er spur'd their coursers at the trumpet's sound:
With them, the two brave bears, Warwick and Montague,

That in their chains fetter'd the kingly lion,
And made the forest tremble when they roar'd.
Thus have we swept suspicion from our seat,
And made our footstool of security.—

Come hither, Bess, and let me kiss my boy:—
[Taking the child.]

Young Ned, for thee, thine uncles and myself
Have in our armours watch'd the winter's night;
Went all afoot in summer's scalding heat,
That thou might'st repossess the crown in peace;
And of our labours thou shalt reap the gain.

Glo. I'll blast his harvest, if your head were lay'd;
For yet I am not look'd on in the world.

This shoulder was ordain'd so thick, to heave;
And heave it shall some weight, or break my back:—

Work thou the way,—and thou shalt execute².
[Aside.]

K. Edw. Clarence and Gloster, love my lovely
queen;

And kiss your princely nephew, brothers both.
Clar. The duty that I owe unto your majesty,
I seal upon the lips of this sweet babe.

Queen. Thanks, noble Clarence; worthy brother, thanks.

Glo. And, that I love the tree from whence thou sprang'st,

Witness the loving kiss I give the fruit:—
To say the truth, so Judas kiss'd his master;

And cry'd—All hail! when as he meant—
All harm. [Aside.]

K. Edw. Now am I seated as my soul delights,
Having my country's peace, and brothers' loves.

Clar. What will your grace have done with Margaret?

Reignier, her father, to the king of France
Hath pawn'd the Sicils and Jerusalem,
And hither have they sent it for her ransom.

K. Edw. Away with her, and waft her hence to France.

And now what rests, but that we spend the time
With stately triumphs, mirthful comic shows,
Such as befit the pleasures of the court?—

Sound, drums and trumpets! farewell, sour annoy!
For here, I hope, begins our lasting joy.

[Exeunt omnes.]

¹ i. e. I will select or chuse such a day, whose gloom shall be as fatal to thee.

SCENE I.

England.

London. A Street.

Enter Richard Duke of Gloster.

Glo. NOW is the winter of our discontent
Made glorious summer by this sun² of
York;

And all the clouds, that lowr'd upon our house,
In the deep bosom of the ocean bury'd.

Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths,
Our bruised arms hung up for monuments;
Our stern alarums chang'd to merry meetings,
Our dreadful marches to delightful measures.
5 Grim-visag'd war hath smooth'd his wrinkled front;
And now,—instead of mounting barbed³ steeds,
To fright the souls of fearful adversaries,—
He capers nimbly in a lady's chamber,
To the lascivious pleasing of a lute.
10 But I,—that am not shap'd for sportive tricks,

¹ This tragedy, though it is call'd the Life and Death of this prince, comprizes, at most, but the last eight years of his time; for it opens with George duke of Clarence being clapp'd up in the Tower, which happen'd in the beginning of the year 1477; and closes with the death of Richard at Bosworth Field, which battle was fought on the 22d of August, in the year 1485. ² Alluding to the cognizance of Edward IV. which was a sun, in memory of the three suns, which are said to have appear'd at the battle which he gain'd over the Lancastrians at Mortimer's Cross. ³ i. e. steeds furnished with armour, or warlike trappings.

Nor made to court an amorous looking-glass;
 I, that am rudely stamp'd, and want love's majesty,
 To strut before a wanton ambling nymph;
 I, that am curtail'd of this fair proportion,
 Cheated of feature by dissembling¹ nature,
 Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time
 Into this breathing world, scarce half made up,
 And that so lamely and unfashionably,
 That dogs bark at me, as I halt by them;—
 Why I, in this weak piping time of peace,
 Have no delight to pass away the time;
 Unless to spy my shadow in the sun,
 And descant² on mine own deformity:
 And therefore,—since I cannot prove a lover,
 To entertain these fair well-spoken days,—
 I am determined to prove a villain,
 And hate the idle pleasures of these days.
 Plots have I laid, inductions³ dangerous,
 By drunken prophecies, libels, and dreams,
 To set my brother Clarence, and the king,
 In deadly hate the one against the other:
 And, if king Edward be as true and just,
 As I am subtle, false, and treacherous,
 This day should Clarence closely be mew'd up;
 About a prophecy, which says—that G
 Of Edward's heirs the murderer shall be.
 Dive, thoughts, down to my soul! here Clarence comes.

Enter Clarence guarded, and Brakenbury.
 Brother, good day: What means this armed guard,
 That waits upon your grace?

Clar. His majesty,
 Tendering my person's safety, hath appointed
 This conduct to convey me to the Tower.

Glo. Upon what cause?

Clar. Because my name is—George.

Glo. Alack, my lord, that fault is none of yours;
 He should, for that, commit your godfathers:—
 O, belike, his majesty hath some intent,
 That you should be new christen'd in the Tower.
 But what's the matter, Clarence? may I know?

Clar. Yea, Richard, when I know; for I protest,

As yet I do not: But, as I can learn,
 He hearkens after prophecies, and dreams;
 And from the cross-row plucks the letter G,
 And says—a wizard told him, that by G
 His issue disinherited should be;
 And, for my name of George begins with G,
 It follows in his thought, that I am he:
 These, as I learn, and such like toys⁴ as these,
 Have mov'd his highness to commit me now.

Glo. Why, this it is, when men are rul'd by women:—

'Tis not the king, that sends you to the Tower;
 My lady Grey his wife, Clarence, 'tis she,
 That tempts him to this harsh extremity.
 Was it not she, and that good man of worship,
 Anthony Woodeville, her brother there,

That made him send lord Hastings to the Tower;
 From whence this present day he is deliver'd?

We are not safe, Clarence, we are not safe.

Clar. By heaven, I think, there is no man secure,
 5 But the queen's kindred, and night-walking heralds
 That trudge betwixt the king and mistress Shore.
 Heard you not, what an humble suppliant
 Lord Hastings was to her for his delivery?

Glo. Humbly complaining to her deity
 10 Got my lord chamberlain his liberty.

I'll tell you what,—I think, it is our way,
 If we will keep in favour with the king,
 To be her men, and wear her livery:

The jealous o'er-worn widow, and herself,
 15 Since that our brother dubb'd them gentlewomen,
 Are mighty gossips in this monarchy.

Brak. I beseech your graces both to pardon me;
 His majesty hath straitly given in charge,
 That no man shall have private conference,
 20 Of what degree soever, with his brother. [bury,

Glo. Even so? an please your worship, Braken-
 You may partake of any thing we say:

We speak no treason, man;—We say, the king
 Is wise, and virtuous; and his noble queen

25 Well struck in years; fair, and not jealous:—

We say, that Shore's wife hath a pretty foot,
 A cherry lip, a bonny eye, a passing pleasing
 tongue;

That the queen's kindred are made gentle-folks:
 30 How say you, sir? can you deny all this?

Brak. With this, my lord, myself have nought to do. [thee, fellow,

Glo. Nought to do with mistress Shore? I tell
 He that doth naught with her, excepting one,

35 Were best to do it secretly, alone.

Brak. What one, my lord? [tray me?

Glo. Her husband, knave:—Would'st thou be-

Brak. I beseech your grace to pardon me; and,
 withal,

40 Forbear your conference with the noble duke.

Clar. We know thy charge, Brakenbury, and will obey. [obey.

Glo. We are the queen's abjects⁵, and must Brother, farewell: I will unto the king;

45 And whatso'er you will employ me in,—

Were it, to call king Edward's widow—sister,—
 I will perform it, to enfranchise you.

Mean time, this deep disgrace in brotherhood
 Touches me deeper than you can imagine.

50 Clar. I know, it pleaseth neither of us well.

Glo. Well, your imprisonment shall not be long:
 I will deliver you, or else lye for you:

Mean time, have patience.

Clar. I must perforce⁶: farewell.

55 [Exeunt Clarence and Brakenbury.

Glo. Go, tread the path that thou shalt ne'er return,

Simple, plain Clarence!—I do love thee so,
 That I will shortly send thy soul to heaven,

¹ i. e. deceitful. ² Sir John Hawkins observes, that descant is a term in music, signifying in general that kind of harmony wherein one part is broken and formed into a kind of paraphrase on the other. I prefer the common acceptation—to consider or ruminate on. ³ i. e. preparations for mischief. The induction is preparatory to the action of the play. ⁴ i. e. fancies. ⁵ That is, not the queen's subjects, whom she might protect, but her abjects, whom she drives away. ⁶ Alluding to the proverb, "Patience perforce is a medicine for a mad dog."

If heaven will take the present at our hands.
But who comes here? the new-deliver'd Hastings?

Enter Hastings.

Hast. Good time of day unto my gracious lord!

Glo. As much unto my good lord chamberlain!
Well are you welcome to this open air.

How hath your lordship brook'd imprisonment?

Hast. With patience, noble lord, as prisoners must:

But I shall live, my lord, to give them thanks,
That were the cause of my imprisonment.

Glo. No doubt, no doubt; and so shall Clarence too;

For they, that were your enemies, are his,
And have prevail'd as much on him, as you.

Hast. More pity, that the eagle should be mew'd¹,
While kites and buzzards play at liberty.

Glo. What news abroad?

Hast. No news so bad abroad, as this at home;—
The king is sickly, weak, and melancholy,
And his physicians fear him mightily.

Glo. Now, by saint Paul, that news is bad, in—
O, he hath kept an evil diet long, [deed.
And over-much consum'd his royal person;
'Tis very grievous to be thought upon.

Hast. He is.

Glo. Go you before, and I will follow you.
[Exit Hastings.

He cannot live, I hope; and must not die,
'Till George be pack'd with post-horse up to heaven.

I'll in, to urge his hatred more to Clarence,
With lies well steel'd with weighty arguments;
And, if I fail not in my deep intent,
Clarence hath not another day to live:
Which done, God take king Edward to his mercy,
And leave the world for me to bustle in!

For then I'll marry Warwick's youngest daughter:
What though I kill'd her husband, and her father?
The readiest way to make the wench amends,
Is—to become her husband, and her father:
The which will I; not all so much for love,
As for another secret close intent,
By marrying her, which I must reach unto.
But yet I run before my horse to market:
Clarence still breathes; Edward still lives, and reigns;

When they are gone, then must I count my gains.

[Exit.

SCENE II.

Another Street.

Enter the Corse of Henry the Sixth, with halberds to guard it; Lady Anne being the mourner.

Anne. Set down, set down your honourable load,—

If honour may be shrouded in a hearse,—
Whilst I awhile obsequiously² lament
The untimely fall of virtuous Lancaster.—

Poor key-cold³ figure of a holy king!

Pale ashes of the house of Lancaster!

Thou bloodless remnant of that royal blood!

Be it lawful that I invoke thy ghost,

5 To hear the lamentations of poor Anne,

Wife to thy Edward, to thy slaughter'd son,

Stabb'd by the self-same hand that made these wounds!

Lo, in these windows, that let forth thy life,

10 I pour the helpless balm of my poor eyes:—

O, cursed be the hand, that made these holes!

Cursed the heart, that had the heart to do it!

Cursed the blood, that let this blood from hence!

More direful hap betide that hated wretch,

15 That makes us wretched by the death of thee,

Than I can wish to adders, spiders, toads,

Or any creeping venom'd thing that lives!

If ever he have child, abortive be it,

Prodigious, and untimely brought to light,

20 Whose ugly and unnatural aspect

May fright the hopeful mother at the view;

And that be heir to his unhappiness!

If ever he have wife, let her be made

More miserable by the death of him,

25 Than I am made by my young lord, and thee!—

Come, now, toward Chertsey with your holy load,

Taken from Paul's to be interred there;

And, still as you are weary of the weight,

Rest you, whiles I lament king Henry's corse.

Enter Gloster.

Glo. Stay you, that bear the corse, and set it down.

Anne. What black magician conjures up this fiend,
To stop devoted charitable deeds? [Paul,

Glo. Villains, set down the corse; or, by saint

35 I'll make a corse of him that disobeys.

Gen. My lord, stand back, and let the coffin pass.

Glo. Unmanner'd dog! stand thou when I command:

Advance thy halberd higher than my breast,

40 Or, by saint Paul, I'll strike thee to my foot,

And spurn upon thee, beggar, for thy boldness.

Anne. What, do you tremble? are you all afraid?

Alas, I blame you not; for you are mortal,

And mortal eyes cannot endure the devil.—

45 Avaunt, thou dreadful minister of hell!

Thou had'st but power over his mortal body,

His soul thou canst not have; therefore, be gone.

Glo. Sweet saint, for charity, be not so curst.

Anne. Foul devil, for God's sake, hence, and trouble us not;

For thou hast made the happy earth thy hell,

Fill'd it with cursing cries, and deep exclaims.

If thou delight to view thy heinous deeds,

Behold this pattern⁴ of thy butcheries:—

55 Oh, gentlemen, see, see! dead Henry's wounds

Open their congeal'd mouths, and bleed afresh⁵!—

Blush, blush, thou lump of foul deformity;

For 'tis thy presence that exhales this blood

From cold and empty veins, where no blood

60 Thy deed, inhuman, and unnatural, [dwells!

Provokes this deluge most unnatural.—

¹ A mew was the place of confinement where a hawk was kept till he had moulted. ² Obsequious, in this instance, means funereal. ³ A key, on the account of the coldness of the metal of which it is composed, was anciently employed to stop any slight bleeding. ⁴ i. e. instance or example. ⁵ It is a tradition very generally received, that the murdered body bleeds on the touch of the murderer. Mr. Tollet observes, that this opinion seems to be derived from the ancient Swedes, or Northern nations from whom we descend; for they practised this method of trial in dubious cases.

O God, which this blood mad'st, revenge his death!
O earth, which this blood drink'st, revenge his death! [dead,
Either, heaven, with lightning strike the murderer
Or, earth, gape open wide, and eat him quick; 5
As thou dost swallow up this good king's blood,
Which his hell-govern'd arm hath butchered!
Glo. Lady, you know no rules of charity,
Which renders good for bad, blessings for curses.
Anne. Villain, thou know'st no law of God nor 10
man;
No beast so fierce, but knows some touch of pity.
Glo. But I know none, and therefore am no beast.
Anne. O wonderful, when devils tell the truth! 15
Glo. More wonderful, when angels are so angry.—
Vouchsafe, divine perfection of a woman,
Of these supposed evils, to give me leave,
By circumstance, but to acquit myself.
Anne. Vouchsafe, diffus'd¹ infection of a man, 20
For these known evils, but to give me leave,
By circumstance, to curse thy cursed self. [have
Glo. Fairer than tongue can name thee, let me
Some patient leisure to excuse myself.
Anne. Fouler than heart can think thee, thou 25 canst make
No excuse current, but to hang thyself.
Glo. By such despair, I should accuse myself.
Anne. And, by despairing, shalt thou stand ex-
For doing worthy vengeance on thyself, [cus'd 30
That didst unworthy slaughter upon others.
Glo. Say, that I slew them not?
Anne. Then say, they were not slain:
But dead they are, and, devilish slave, by thee.
Glo. I did not kill your husband. 35
Anne. Why, then he is alive.
Glo. Nay, he is dead; and slain by Edward's hand. [Margaret saw
Anne. In thy foul throat thou ly'st; queen
Thy murderous faulchion smoking in his blood; 40
The which thou once didst bend against her breast,
But that thy brothers beat aside the point.
Glo. I was provoked by her slanderous tongue,
That laid their guilt upon my guiltless shoulders.
Anne. Thou wast provoked by thy bloody mind, 45
That never dreamt on aught but butcheries:
Didst thou not kill this king?
Glo. I grant ye. [grant me too,
Anne. Dost grant me, hedge-hog? then God
Thou may'st be damned for that wicked deed! 50
Oh, he was gentle, mild, and virtuous.—
Glo. The fitter for the King of heaven that hath him. [come.
Anne. He is in heaven, where thou shalt never Glo. Let him thank me, that help to send him 55 thither;
For he was fitter for that place, than earth.
Anne. And thou unfit for any place, but hell.
Glo. Yes, one place else, if you will hear me
Anne. Some dungeon. [name it. 60
Glo. Your bed-chamber.

Anne. Ill rest betide the chamber where thou lyest!
Glo. So will it, madam, 'till I lie with you.
Anne. I hope so.
Glo. I know so.—But, gentle lady Anne,—
To leave this keen encounter of our wits,
And fall somewhat into a slower² method;—
Is not the causer of the timeless deaths
Of these Plantagenets, Henry, and Edward,
As blameful as the executioner? [effect.
Anne. Thou wast the cause, and most accurs'd
Glo. Your beauty was the cause of that effect;
Your beauty, which did haunt me in my sleep,
To undertake the death of all the world,
So I might live one hour in your sweet bosom. 15
Anne. If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide,
These nails should rend that beauty from my cheeks.
Glo. These eyes could not endure that beauty's wreck,
You should not blemish it, if I stood by:
As all the world is cheered by the sun,
So I by that; it is my day, my life. [thy life!
Anne. Black night o'er-shade thy day, and death
Glo. Curse not thyself, fair creature; thou art both.
Anne. I would I were, to be reveng'd on thee.
Glo. It is a quarrel most unnatural,
To be reveng'd on him that loveth thee.
Anne. It is a quarrel just and reasonable,
To be reveng'd on him that kill'd my husband. 30
Glo. He that bereft thee, lady, of thy husband,
Did it to help thee to a better husband. [earth.
Anne. His better doth not breathe upon the Glo. He lives, that loves you better than he Anne. Name him. [could.
Glo. Plantagenet.
Anne. Why, that was he. [nature.
Glo. The self-same name, but one of better
Anne. Where is he? [spit at me?
Glo. Here: [She spits at him.] Why dost thou
Anne. Would it were mortal poison for thy sake!
Glo. Never came poison from so sweet a place.
Anne. Never hung poison on a fouler toad.
Out of my sight! thou dost infect mine eyes.
Glo. Thine eyes, sweet lady, have infected mine, Anne. 'Would they were basilisks, to strike thee dead! [once;
Glo. I would they were, that I might die at
For now they kill me with a living death.
Those eyes of thine from mine have drawn salt
tears,
Sham'd their aspects with store of childish drops:
These eyes, which never shed remorseful tear—
Not, when my father York and Edward wept,
To hear the piteous moan that Rutland made,
When black-fac'd Clifford shook his sword at him:
Nor when thy warlike father, like a child,
Told the sad story of my father's death;
And twenty times made pause, to sob, and weep,
That all the standers-by had wet their cheeks,
Like trees bedash'd with rain: in that sad time,

¹ i. e. irregular, uncouth; or the phrase may mean, Thou that art as dangerous as a pestilence, that infects the air by its diffusion. ² i. e. a more serious method.

My manly eyes did scorn an humble tear;
And what these sorrows could not thence exhale,
Thy beauty hath, and made them blind with weep—
I never su'd to friend, nor enemy; [ing.

My tongue could never learn sweet soothing word;
But now thy beauty is propos'd my fee, [speak.
My proud heart sues, and prompts my tongue to
[She looks scornfully at him.

Teach not thy lip such scorn; for it was made
For kissing, lady, not for such contempt.
If thy revengeful heart cannot forgive,
Lo! here I lend thee this sharp-pointed sword;
Which if thou please to hide in this true breast,
And let the soul forth that adareth thee,
I lay it naked to the deadly stroke,
And humbly beg the death upon my knee.

[He lays his breast open, she offers at it with his sword.
Nay, do not pause; for I did kill king Henry;—
But 'twas thy beauty that provoked me.
Nay, now dispatch; 'twas I that stabb'd young
Edward;—

But 'twas thy heavenly face that set me on.
[She lets fall the sword.

Take up the sword again, or take up me.
Anne. Arise, dissembler; though I wish thy
I will not be thy executioner. [death,

Glo. Then bid me kill myself, and I will do it.
Anne. I have already.

Glo. That was in thy rage:
Speak it again, and, even with the word,
This hand, which, for thy love, did kill thy love,
Shall, for thy love, kill a far truer love;
To both their deaths shalt thou be accessary.

Anne. I would, I knew thy heart.
Glo. 'Tis figur'd in my tongue.

Anne. I fear me, both are false.
Glo. Then never man was true.

Anne. Well, well, put up your sword.
Glo. Say then, my peace is made.

Anne. That shall you know hereafter.
Glo. But shall I live in hope?

Anne. All men, I hope, live so.
Glo. Vouchsafe to wear this ring.

[She puts on the ring.
Anne. To take is not to give.

Glo. Look, how this ring encompasseth thy fin-
Even so thy breast encloseth my poor heart; [ger,
Wear both of them, for both of them are thine.

And if thy poor devoted servant may
But beg one favour at thy gracious hand,
Thou dost confirm his happiness for ever.

Anne. What is it? [signs
Glo. That it may please you leave these sad de-

To him that hath more cause to be a mourner,
And presently repair to Crosby-place¹:
Where—after I have solemnly interr'd

At Chertsey monast'ry this noble king,
And wet his grave with my repentant tears,—
I will with all expedient duty see you:—
For divers unknown reasons I beseech you,

Grant me this boon.

Anne. With all my heart; and much it joys me
To see you are become so penitent.— [too,
Tressel, and Berkley, go along with me.

Glo. Bid me farewell.

Anne. 'Tis more than you deserve:
But, since you teach me how to flatter you,
Imagine I have said farewell already.

[Exeunt two, with Lady Anne.
Glo. Take up the corse, sirs.

Gen. Towards Chertsey, noble lord?

Glo. No, to White-Fryars; there attend my coming. [Exeunt the rest, with the corse.

Was ever woman in this humour woo'd?
15 Was ever woman in this humour won?

I'll have her,—but I will not keep her long.
What! I that kill'd her husband, and his father,
To take her in her heart's extremest hate;
With curses in her mouth, tears in her eyes,

20 The bleeding witness of her hatred by;
With God, her conscience, and these bars against
And I no friends to back my suit withal; [me,
But the plain devil, and dissembling looks,
And yet to win her,—all the world to nothing!

25 Ha!
Hath she forgot already that brave prince,
Edward, her lord, whom I, some three months
Stabb'd in my angry mood at Tewksbury? [since,
A sweeter and a lovelier gentleman,—

30 Fram'd in the prodigality of nature²,
Young, valiant, wise, and, no doubt, right royal,—
The spacious world cannot again afford:
And will she yet abase her eyes on me,
That cropp'd the golden prime of this sweet prince,

35 And made her widow to a woeful bed?
On me, whose all not equals Edward's moiety?
On me, that halt, and am mishapen thus?
My dukedom to a beggarly denier,
I do mistake my person all this while:

40 Upon my life, she finds, although I cannot,
Myself to be a marvellous proper man.
I'll be at charges for a looking-glass;
And entertain a score or two of taylors,
To study fashions to adorn my body:

45 Since I am crept in favour with myself,
I will maintain it with some little cost.
But, first, I'll turn yon' fellow in his grave;
And then return lamenting to my love.—
Shine out, fair sun, 'till I have bought a glass,

50 That I may see my shadow as I pass. [Exit.

SCENE III.

The Palace.

Enter the Queen, Lord Rivers her brother, and 55 Lord Grey her son.

Riv. Have patience, madam; there's no doubt his majesty

Will soon recover his accusom'd health.
Grey. In that you brook it ill, it makes him worse:

60 Therefore, for God's sake, entertain good comfort,

¹ Crosby-place is now Crosby-square in Bishopsgate-street. ² i. e. when nature selected all her choicest materials to complete a perfect man.

And cheer his grace with quick and merry words.

Queen. If he were dead, what would betide of me?

Grey. No other harm than loss of such a lord.

Queen. The loss of such a lord includes all harms.

Grey. The heavens have bless'd you with a goodly son,

To be your comforter, when he is gone.

Queen. Ah, he is young; and his minority
Is put into the trust of Richard Gloster,
A man that loves not me, nor none of you.

Riv. Is it concluded, he shall be protector?

Queen. It is determin'd¹, not concluded yet:
But so it must be, if the king miscarry.

Enter Buckingham, and Stanley.

Grey. Here come the lords of Buckingham and Stanley!

Buck. Good time of day unto your royal grace!

Stanley. God make your majesty joyful as you have been! [of Stanley,

Queen. The countess Richmond, good my lord
To your good prayer will scarcely say—Amen.
Yet, Stanley, notwithstanding she's your wife,
And loves not me, be you, good lord, assur'd,
I hate not you for her proud arrogance.

Stanley. I do beseech you, either not believe
The envious slanders of her false accusers;
Or, if she be accus'd on true report,
Bear with her weakness, which, I think, proceeds
From wayward sickness, and no grounded malice.

Queen. Saw you the king to-day, my lord of Stanley?

Stanley. But now the duke of Buckingham, and I,
Are come from visiting his majesty. [lords?

Queen. What likelihood of his amendment,

Buck. Madam, good hope; his grace speaks cheerfully. [with him?

Queen. God grant him health! Did you confer

Buck. Ay, madam: he desires to make atonement
Between the duke of Gloster and your brothers,
And between them and my lord chamberlain;
And sent to warn² them to his royal presence.

Queen. 'Would all were well!—But that will never be!—

I fear, our happiness is at the height.

Enter Gloster, Hastings, and Dorset.

Glo. They do me wrong, and I will not endure
Who are they, that complain unto the king? [it:—
That I, forsooth, am stern, and love them not?
By holy Paul, they love his grace but lightly,
That fill his ears with such dissentious rumours.
Because I cannot flatter, and speak fair,
Smile in men's faces, smooth, deceive, and cog,
Duck with French nods and apish courtesy,
I must be held a rancorous enemy.

Cannot a plain man live, and think no harm,
But thus his simple truth must be abus'd
By silken, sly, insinuating Jacks? [grace?

Grey. To whom in all this presence speaks your

Glo. To thee, that hast nor honesty, nor grace.
When have I injur'd thee? when done thee wrong?
Or thee?—or thee?—or any of your faction?
A plague upon you all! His royal grace,—

Whom God preserve better than you would wish!

Cannot be quiet scarce a breathing while,
But you must trouble him with lewd complaints.

Queen. Brother of Gloster, you mistake the
The king—of his own royal disposition, [matter:
And not provok'd by any suitor else;

Aiming, belike, at your interior hatred,
That in your outward action shews itself,
Against my children, brothers, and myself;

10 Makes him to send; that thereby he may gather
The ground of your ill-will, and so remove it.

Glo. I cannot tell:—The world is grown so bad,
That wrens may prey where eagles dare not perch:
Since every Jack became a gentleman,

15 There's many a gentle person made a Jack.

Queen. Come, come, we know your meaning,
brother Gloster;

You envy my advancement, and my friends:
God grant, we never may have need of you!

Glo. Meantime, God grants that we have need of you:

Our brother is imprison'd by your means,
Myself disgrac'd, and the nobility
Held in contempt; while great promotions

25 Are daily given, to ennoble those [noble.
That scarce, some two days since, were worth a

Queen. By Him, that rais'd me to this careful
From that contented hap which I enjoy'd, [height
I never did incense his majesty

30 Against the duke of Clarence, but have been An earnest advocate to plead for him.

My lord, you do me shameful injury,
Falsely to draw me in these vile suspects.

Glo. You may deny that you were not the cause
Of my lord Hastings' late imprisonment.

Riv. She may, my lord; for— [not so!

Glo. She may, lord Rivers?—why, who knows
She may do more, sir, than denying that:

She may help you to many fair preferments;
And then deny her aiding hand therein,

40 And lay those honours on your high desert. [she—
What may she not? She may,—ay, marry, may

Riv. What, marry, may she?

Glo. What, marry, may she? marry with a king,
45 A batchelor, a handsome stripling too:

I wis, your grandam had a worser match.

Queen. My lord of Gloster, I have too long borne
Your blunt upbraidings, and your bitter scoffs:

By heaven, I will acquaint his majesty
50 Of those gross taunts I often have endur'd.

I'd rather be a country servant-maid,
Than a great queen, with this condition—

To be so baited, scorn'd, and stormed at:
Small joy have I in being England's queen.

55 Enter Queen Margaret, behind.

2. Mar. And lessen'd be that small, God, I beseech thee!

Thy honour, state, and seat, is due to me. [king?

Glo. What! threat you me with telling of the 60 Tell him, and spare not; look, what I have said.

I will avouch in presence of the king:

I dare adventure to be sent to the Tower.

¹ Determin'd signifies the final conclusion of the will: concluded, what cannot be altered by reason of some act consequent on the final judgement. ² i. e. to summon them.

'Tis time to speak, my pains¹ are quite forgot.

2. Mar. Out², devil! I remember them too well:

Thou kill'dst my husband Henry in the Tower,
And Edward, my poor son, at Tewksbury. [king,

Glo. Ere you were queen, ay, or your husband
I was a pack-horse in his great affairs;

A weeder-out of his proud adversaries,

A liberal rewarder of his friends;

To royalize³ his blood, I spilt mine own.

2. Mar. Ay, and much better blood than his or thine. [Grey,

Glo. In all which time, you, and your husband
Were factious for the house of Lancaster;—

And, Rivers, so were you:—Was not your husband 15
In Margaret's battle at Saint Alban's slain?

Let me put in your minds, if you forget,

What you have been ere now, and what you are;
Withal, what I have been, and what I am. [art.

2. Mar. A murd'rous villain, and so still thou 20

Glo. Poor Clarence did forsake his father Warwick, [don!—

Ay, and forswore himself,—Which Jesu par-

2. Mar. Which God revenge!

Glo. To fight on Edward's party, for the crown; 25
And, for his meed, poor lord, he is mew'd up:

I would to God, my heart were flint, like Edward's,
Or Edward's soft and pitiful, like mine;

I am too childish-foolish for this world. [world,

2. Mar. Hie thee to hell for shame, and leave this 30
Thou cacodæmon! there thy kingdom is.

Riv. My lord of Gloster, in those busy days,
Which here you urge, to prove us enemies,

We follow'd then our lord, our sovereign king;
So should we you, if you should be our king.

Glo. If I should be?—I had rather be a pedlar:
Far be it from my heart, the thought thereof!

Queen. As little joy, my lord, as you suppose
You should enjoy, were you this country's king;

As little joy you may suppose in me,
That I enjoy, being the queen thereof.

2. Mar. A little joy enjoys the queen thereof;
For I am she, and altogether joyless.

I can no longer hold me patient.—[She advances.

Hear me, you wrangling pirates, that fall out
In sharing that which you have pill'd⁴ from me:

Which of you trembles not, that looks on me?
If not, that I, being queen, you bow like subjects;

Yet that, by you depos'd, you quake like rebels?—
Ah, gentle⁵ villain, do not turn away! [my sight? 50

Glo. Foul wrinkled witch, what mak'st thou in

2. Mar. But repetition of what thou hast marr'd;
That will I make, before I let thee go.

Glo. Wert thou not banished, on pain of death?

2. Mar. I was; but I do find more pain in 55
banishment,

Than death can yield me here by my abode.
A husband, and a son, thou ow'st to me,—

And thou, a kingdom;—all of you, allegiance:
This sorrow that I have, by right is yours;

And all the pleasures you usurp, are mine.

Glo. The curse my noble father laid on thee,—
When thou didst crown his warlike brows with paper,

And with thy scorns drew'st rivers from his eyes;
And then, to dry them, gav'st the duke a clout,
Steep'd in the faultless blood of pretty Rutland;—
His curses, then from bitterness of soul
Denounc'd against thee, are all fallen upon thee;
And God, not we, hath plagu'd thy bloody deed. 10
Queen. So just is God, to right the innocent.
Hast. O, 'twas the foulest deed, to slay that babe,
And the most merciless, that e'er was heard of.
Riv. Tyrants themselves wept when it was reported.
Dors. No man but prophesy'd revenge for it.
Buck. Northumberland, then present, wept to see it. [came,
2. Mar. What! were you snarling all, before I
Ready to catch each other by the throat,
And turn you all your hatred now on me? [ven,
Did York's dread curse prevail so much with hea-
That Henry's death, my lovely Edward's death,
Their kingdom's loss, my woeful banishment,
Could all but answer for that peevish brat?
Can curses pierce the clouds, and enter heaven?—
Why, then give way, dull clouds, to my quick curses!
Though not by war, by surfeit die your king⁶,
As ours by murder, to make him a king!
Edward, thy son, that now is prince of Wales,
For Edward, my son, that was prince of Wales,
Die in his youth, by like untimely violence!
Thyself a queen, for me that was a queen,
Out-live thy glory, like my wretched self!
Long may'st thou live, to wail thy children's loss;
And see another, as I see thee now,
Deck'd in thy rights, as thou art stall'd in mine!
Long die thy happy days before thy death;
And, after many lengthen'd hours of grief,
Die neither mother, wife, nor England's queen!—
Rivers,—and Dorset,—you were standers-by,—
And so wast thou, lord Hastings,—when my son
Was stabb'd with bloody daggers; God, I pray him,
That none of you may live your natural age,
But by some unlook'd accident cut off!
Glo. Have done thy charm, thou hateful wi-ther'd hag. [shalt hear me.
2. Mar. And leave out thee? stay, dog, for thou
If heaven have any grievous plague in store,
Exceeding those that I can wish upon thee,
O, let them keep it, 'till thy sins be ripe,
And then hurl down their indignation
On thee, the troubler of the poor world's peace!
The worm of conscience still be-gnaw thy soul!
Thy friends suspect for traitors while thou liv'st,
And take deep traitors for thy dearest friends!
No sleep close up that deadly eye of thine,
Unless it be while some tormenting dream
Affrights thee with a hell of ugly devils! 60

Glo. Ha?

2. Mar. I call thee not.

Glo. I cry thee mercy then; for I did think,
 That thou had'st call'd me all these bitter names.

2. Mar. Why, so I did; but look'd for no reply.

O, let me make the period to my curse.

Glo. 'Tis done by me; and ends in—Margaret.

Queen. Thus have you breath'd your curse

 Teach me to be your queen, and you my subjects:
 O, serve me well, and teach yourselves that duty.

Dors. Dispute not with her, she is lunatic.

2. Mar. Peace, master marquis, you are mal-apert;

Your fire-new stamp of honour is scarce current:
 O, that your young nobility could judge,
 What 'twere to lose it, and be miserable! [them;]
 They that stand high, have many blasts to shake
 And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces.

Glo. Good counsel, marry;—learn it, learn it, marquis.

Dors. It touches you, my lord, as much as me.

Glo. Ay, and much more: But I was born so

 And dallies with the wind, and scorns the sun.

 Whose bright out-shining beams thy cloudy wrath

Hath in eternal darkness folded up.

2. Mar. I'll not believe but they ascend the sky,

20 And there awake God's gentle-sleeping peace.

O Buckingham, beware of yonder dog;

Look, when he fawns, he bites; and when he bites,

His venom tooth will rankle to the death:

Have not to do with him, beware of him; [him;

25 Sin, death, and hell, have set their marks upon

And all their ministers attend on him. [ham?

Glo. What doth she say, my lord of Bucking-

Buck. Nothing that I respect, my gracious lord.

2. Mar. What, dost thou scorn me for my gentle counsel?

And soothe the devil that I warn thee from?

O, but remember this another day,

When he shall split thy very heart with sorrow;

And say, poor Margaret was a prophetess.—

35 Live each of you the subjects to his hate,

And he to yours, and all of you to God's! [Exit.

Buck. My hair doth stand on end to hear her curses.

Riv. And so doth mine; I wonder, she's at liberty.

Glo. I cannot blame her, by God's holy mother;

40 She hath had too much wrong, and I repent

My part thereof, that I have done to her.

Queen. I never did her any, to my knowledge.

Glo. Yet you have all the vantage of her wrong.

I was too hot to do some body good,

45 That is too cold in thinking of it now.

Marry, as for Clarence, he is well repay'd;

He is frank'd up⁷ to fattening for his pains;

God pardon them that are the cause thereof!

Riv. A virtuous and a christian-like conclusion,

50 To pray for them that have done scathe⁸ to us.

Glo. So do I ever, being well advis'd;—

For had I curs'd now, I had curs'd myself. [Aside.]

¹ The common people in Scotland have still an aversion to those who have any natural defect or redundancy, as thinking them mark'd out for mischief. ² She calls him hog, as an appellation more contemptuous than boar, as he is elsewhere termed from his ensigns armorial. ³ The expression is strong and noble, and alludes to the ancient custom of masters branding their profligate slaves: by which it is insinuated, that his mishapen person was the mark that nature had set upon him to stigmatize his ill conditions. ⁴ Intimating that much of his honour was torn away. ⁵ A spider is called bottled, because, unlike other insects, he has a middle slender, and a belly protuberant. Richard's form and venom make her liken him to a spider. ⁶ An aiery is a hawk's or an eagle's nest. ⁷ Mr. Pope says, that a frank is an old English word for a hog-stye, and that 'tis possible he uses this metaphor to Clarence, in allusion to the crest of the family of York, which was a boar. Mr. Steevens, however, asserts, that a frank was not a common hog-stye, but the pen in which those hogs were confined of whom brawn was to be made. ⁸ i. e. harm, mischief.

Enter Catesby.

Cates. Madam, his majesty doth call for you,—
And for your grace,—and you, my noble lords.

Queen. Catesby, I come:—Lords, will you go with me?

Riv. Madam, we will attend your grace.

[Exeunt all but Gloster.]

Glo. I do the wrong, and first begin to brawl.
The secret mischiefs that I set abroad,
I lay unto the grievous charge of others.
Clarence, whom I, indeed, have laid in darkness,
I do beweepe to many simple gulls;
Namely, to Stanley, Hastings, Buckingham;
And tell them—'tis the queen and her allies,
That stir the king against the duke my brother.
Now they believe it; and withal whet me
To be reveng'd on Rivers, Vaughan, Grey:
But then I sigh, and, with a piece of scripture,
Tell them—that God bids us do good for evil:
And thus I clothe my naked villainy
With old odd ends, stol'n forth of holy writ;
And seem a saint, when most I play the devil.

Enter two Murderers.

But soft, here come my executioners.—
How now, my hardy, stout, resolved mates?
Are you now going to dispatch this thing?

1 Mur. We are, my lord; and come to have the warrant,

That we may be admitted where he is. [me:]

Glo. Well thought upon, I have it here about
When you have done, repair to Crosby-place.

But, sirs, be sudden in the execution,
Withal obdurate, do not hear him plead;
For Clarence is well spoken, and, perhaps,
May move your hearts to pity, if you mark him.

1 Mur. Tut, tut, my lord, we will not stand to prate,

Talkers are no good doers; be assur'd,
We go to use our hands, and not our tongues.

Glo. Your eyes drop mill-stones, when fools'
eyes drop tears¹:

I like you, lads;—about your business straight;
Go, go, dispatch.

1 Mur. We will, my noble lord. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.

An Apartment in the Tower.

Enter Clarence, and Brakenbury.

Brak. Why looks your grace so heavily to-day?

Cl. O, I have past a miserable night,
So full of fearful dreams, of ugly sights,
That, as I am a christian faithful man²,
I would not spend another such a night,
Though 'twere to buy a world of happy days;
So full of dismal terror was the time.

Brak. What was your dream, my lord? I pray you, tell me.

Cl. Methought, that I had broken from the Tower,
And was embark'd to cross to Burgundy;

And, in my company, my brother Gloster;
Who from my cabin tempted me to walk
Upon the hatches; thence we look'd towards England,

5 And cited up a thousand heavy times,
During the wars of York and Lancaster
That had befall'n us. As we pac'd along
Upon the giddy footing of the hatches,
Methought, that Gloster stumbled; and, in falling,
10 Struck me, that thought to stay him, over-board,
Into the tumbling billows of the main.

O Lord! methought what pain it was to drown!
What dreadful noise of water in mine ears!
What sights of ugly death within mine eyes!
15 Methought, I saw a thousand fearful wrecks;
A thousand men, that fishes gnaw'd upon;
Wedges of gold, great anchors, heaps of pearl,
Inestimable stones, unvalued³ jewels,
All scatter'd in the bottom of the sea.

20 Some lay in dead men's skulls; and, in those holes,
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept
(As 'twere in scorn of eyes) reflecting gems,
That woo'd the slimy bottom of the deep,
And mock'd the dead bones that lay scatter'd by,

25 Brak. Had you such leisure, in the time of death,
To gaze upon the secrets of the deep?

Cl. Methought, I had; and often did I strive
To yield the ghost: but still the envious flood
Kept in my soul, and would not let it forth
To seek the empty, vast, and wand'ring air;
But smother'd it within my panting bulk,
Which almost burst to belch it in the sea.

Brak. Awak'd you not with this sore agony?

Cl. O, no, my dream was lengthen'd after life;
O, then began the tempest to my soul!

I pass'd, methought, the melancholy flood,
With that grim ferryman which poets write of,
Unto the kingdom of perpetual night.

The first that there did greet my stranger soul,
Was my great father-in-law, renowned Warwick;
Who cry'd aloud,—What scourge for perjury
Can this dark monarchy afford false Clarence?

And so he vanish'd; Then came wand'ring by
A shadow like an angel, with bright hair

45 Dabbled in blood; and he shriek'd out aloud,—
Clarence is come,—false, fleeting⁴, perjur'd Clarence,
That stabb'd me in the field by Tewksbury;—

Seize on him, furies, take him to your torments!—
With that, methought, a legion of foul fiends

50 Environ'd me, and howled in mine ears
Such hideous cries, that, with the very noise,
I trembling wak'd, and, for a season after,
Could not believe but that I was in hell;

Such terrible impression made my dream.

55 Brak. No marvel, lord, that it affrighted you;
I am afraid, methinks, to hear you tell it.

Cl. O, Brakenbury, I have done those things,—

That now give evidence against my soul,—

60 For Edward's sake; and, see, how he requites me!
O God! if my deep prayers cannot appease thee,

is the same as changing sides.

² i. e. not an infidel,

³ i. e. invaluable,

⁴ Fleeting

But thou wilt be aveng'd on my misdeeds,
Yet execute thy wrath on me alone: [dren!—
O, spare my guiltless wife, and my poor chil-
I pray thee, gentle keeper, stay by me;
My soul is heavy, and I fain would sleep.

Brak. I will, my lord; God give your grace good rest!— [Clarence sleeps.

Sorrow breaks seasons, and reposing hours, [night.
Makes the night morning, and the noon-tide
Princes have but their titles for their glories,
An outward honour for an inward toil;
And, for unfelt imaginations,
They often feel a world of restless cares¹:
So that, between their titles, and low name,
There's nothing differs but the outward fame.

Enter the two Murderers.

1 Murd. Ho! who's here?

Brak. What would'st thou, fellow? and how cam'st thou hither?

2 Murd. I would speak with Clarence, and I came hither on my legs.

Brak. What, so brief? [dious:—

1 Murd. O, sir, 'tis better to be brief, than te-
Shew him our commission, talk no more.

Brak. I am, in this, commanded to deliver
The noble duke of Clarence to your hands:—
I will not reason what is meant hereby,
Because I will be guiltless of the meaning.
Here are the keys;—there sits the duke asleep:
I'll to the king; and signify to him,
That thus I have resign'd to you my charge.

1 Murd. You may, sir, 'tis a point of wisdom:
Fare you well. [Exit Brakenbury.

2 Murd. What, shall we stab him as he sleeps?

1 Murd. No; he'll say, 'twas done cowardly, when he wakes.

2 Murd. When he wakes! why, fool, he shall never wake until the great judgement-day.

1 Murd. Why, then he'll say, we stabb'd him sleeping.

2 Murd. The urging of that word, judgement, hath bred a kind of remorse in me.

1 Murd. What? art thou afraid?

2 Murd. Not to kill him, having a warrant for it; but to be damn'd for killing him, from the which no warrant can defend me.

1 Murd. I thought, thou had'st been resolute.

2 Murd. So I am, to let him live.

1 Murd. I'll back to the duke of Gloster, and tell him so.

2 Murd. Nay, I pr'ythee, stay a little: I hope, this compassionate humour of mine will change;
it was wont to hold me but while one would tell twenty.

1 Murd. How dost thou feel thyself now?

2 Murd. 'Faith, some certain dregs of conscience are yet within me.

1 Murd. Remember our reward, when the deed's done. [ward.

2 Murd. Come, he dies; I had forgot the re-

1 Murd. Where's thy conscience now?

2 Murd. In the duke of Gloster's purse.

1 Murd. When he opens his purse to give us our reward, thy conscience flies out.

2 Murd. 'Tis no matter; let it go; there's few, or none, will entertain it.

1 Murd. What, if it come to thee again?

2 Murd. I'll not meddle with it, it is a dangerous thing, it makes a man a coward; a man cannot steal, but it accuseth him; a man cannot swear, but it checks him; a man cannot lie with his neighbour's wife, but it detects him: 'Tis a blushing shame-fac'd spirit, that mutinies in a man's bosom; it fills one full of obstacles: it made me once restore a purse of gold, that by chance I found;
it beggars any man that keeps it: it is turn'd out of all towns and cities for a dangerous thing; and every man, that means to live well, endeavours to trust to himself, and live without it.

1 Murd. 'Zounds, it is even now at my elbow, persuading me not to kill the duke.

2 Murd. Take the devil in thy mind, and believe him not: he would insinuate with thee, but to make thee sigh.

1 Murd. I am strong fram'd, he cannot prevail
with me.

2 Murd. Spoke like a tall² fellow, that respects his reputation. Come, shall we fall to work?

1 Murd. Take him over the costard³ with the hilt of thy sword, and then throw him into the malmsey-butt, in the next room.

2 Murd. O excellent device! and make a sop of him.

1 Murd. Soft! he wakes.

2 Murd. Strike.

1 Murd. No, we'll reason⁴ with him.

Clar. Where art thou, keeper? give me a cup of wine. [anon.

1 Murd. You shall have wine enough, my lord.

Clar. In God's name, what art thou?

1 Murd. A man, as you are.

Clar. But not, as I am, royal.

1 Murd. Nor you, as we are, loyal.

Clar. Thy voice is thunder, but thy looks are humble.

1 Murd. My voice is now the king's, my looks mine own. [speak!

Clar. How darkly, and how deadly dost thou
Your eyes do menace me: why look you pale?

Who sent you hither? Wherefore do you come?

2 Murd. To, to, to—

Clar. To murder me?

Both. Ay, ay.

Clar. You scarcely have the hearts to tell me so,
And therefore cannot have the hearts to do it.

Wherein, my friends, have I offended you?

1 Murd. Offended us you have not, but the king.

Clar. I shall be reconcil'd to him again.

2 Murd. Never, my lord; therefore prepare to die.

¹ Meaning, they often suffer real miseries for imaginary and unreal gratifications. ² Tall, in old English, means stout, daring, fearless, and strong. ³ i. e. the head, a name adopted from an apple shap'd like a man's head. ⁴ i. e. we'll talk.

Clar. Are you call'd forth from out a world of men,

To slay the innocent? What is my offence?
Where is the evidence that doth accuse me?
What lawful quest¹ have given their verdict up
Unto the frowning judge? or who pronounc'd
The bitter sentence of poor Clarence' death?
Before I be convict by course of law,
To threaten me with death, is most unlawful.
I charge you, as you hope to have redemption,
That you depart, and lay no hands on me;
The deed you undertake is damnable. [mand.]

1 Murd. What we will do, we do upon com-

2 Murd. And he that hath commanded is our king.

Clar. Erroneous vassal! the great King of kings
Hath in the table of his law commanded,
That thou shalt do no murder; wilt thou then
Spurn at his edict, and fulfil a man's?
Take heed; for he holds vengeance in his hand,
To hurl upon their heads that break his law.

2 Murd. And that same vengeance doth he hurl on thee,
For false forswearing, and for murder too:
Thou didst receive the sacrament to fight
In quarrel of the house of Lancaster.

1 Murd. And, like a traitor to the name of God, [blade,
Didst break that vow; and, with thy treacherous
Unripp'dst the bowels of thy sovereign's son.

2 Murd. Whom thou wast sworn to cherish and defend. [law to us,

1 Murd. How canst thou urge God's dreadful
When thou hast broke it in such dear degree?

Clar. Alas! for whose sake did I that ill deed?
For Edward, for my brother, for his sake;
He sends you not to murder me for this:
For in that sin he is as deep as I.

If God will be avenged for the deed,
O, know you yet, he doth it publicly:
Take not the quarrel from his powerful arm;
He needs no indirect nor lawless course,
To cut off those that have offended him. [ster,

1 Murd. Who made thee then a bloody mini-
When gallant-springing², brave Plantagenet,
That princely³ novice, was struck dead by thee?

Clar. My brother's love, the devil, and my rage.

Murd. Thy brother's love, our duty, and thy fault,

Provoke us hither now to slaughter thee.

Clar. If you do love my brother, hate not me;
I am his brother, and I love him well.

If you are hir'd for meed, go back again,
And I will send you to my brother Gloster;
Who shall reward you better for my life,
Than Edward will for tidings of my death.

2 Murd. You are deceiv'd, your brother Gloster hates you. [dear:

Clar. Oh, no; he loves me, and he holds me
Go you to him from me.

Both. Ay, so we will.

[York

Clar. Tell him, when that our princely father
Bless'd his three sons with his victorious arm,
And charg'd us from his soul to love each other,
He little thought of this divided friendship:
Bid Gloster think on this, and he will weep.

1 Murd. Ay, mill-stones; as he lesson'd us to weep.

Clar. O, do not slander him, for he is kind.

1 Murd. Right, as snow in harvest.—Come,
you deceive yourself;

'Tis he that sends us to destroy you here.

Clar. It cannot be; for he bewept my fortune,
And hugg'd me in his arms, and swore with sobs,
That he would labour my delivery.

1 Murd. Why, so he doth, when he delivers you
From this earth's thralldom to the joys of heaven.

2 Murd. Make peace with God, for you must die, my lord.

Clar. Hast thou that holy feeling in thy soul,
To counsel me to make my peace with God,
And art thou yet to thy own soul so blind,
That thou wilt war with God by murdering me?—
O, sirs, consider, he that sets you on

To do this deed, will hate you for the deed.

2 Murd. What shall we do?

Clar. Relent, and save your souls.

Which of you, if you were a prince's son,
Being pent from liberty, as I am now,—
If two such murderers as yourselves came to you—
Would not intreat for life? as you would beg,
Were you in my distress,—

1 Murd. Relent! 'tis cowardly, and womanish.

Clar. Not to relent, is beastly, savage, devilish.—
My friend, I spy some pity in thy looks;

O, if thine eye be not a flatterer,
Come thou on my side, and entreat for me:
A begging prince what beggar pities not?

2 Murd. Look behind you, my lord.

1 Murd. Take that, and that; if all this will not serve, [Stabs him.

I'll drown you in the malmsey-butt within. [Exit.

2 Murd. A bloody deed, and desp'rately dis-patch'd!

How fain, like Pilate, would I wash my hands
Of this most grievous guilty murder done!

Re-enter first Murderer.

1 Murd. How now? what mean'st thou, that thou help'st me not? [been.

By heaven, the duke shall know how slack you've 2 Murd. I would he knew that I had sav'd his brother!

Take thou the fee, and tell him what I say;

For I repent me that the duke is slain. [Exit.

1 Murd. So do not I; go, coward, as thou art.—
Well, I'll go hide the body in some hole,

'Till that the duke give order for his burial:

And when I have my meed, I will away;

For this will out, and then I must not stay.

[Exit with the body.

A C T II.

S C E N E I.

The Court.

Enter King Edward sick, the Queen, Dorset, Rivers, Hastings, Buckingham, Grey, and others.

K. Edw. WHY, so:—now have I done a good day's work;—

You peers, continue this united league:

I every day expect an embassy

From my Redeemer to redeem me hence;

And now in peace my soul shall part to heaven,

Since I have made my friends at peace on earth.

Rivers, and Hastings, take each other's hand;

Dissemble not your hatred, swear your love.

Riv. By heaven, my soul is purg'd from grudging hate;

And with my hand I seal my true heart's love.

Hast. So thrive I, as I truly swear the like!

K. Edw. Take heed, you dally not before your king;

Lest He, that is the supreme King of kings,

Confound your hidden falsehood, and award

Either of you to be the other's end.

Hast. So prosper I, as I swear perfect love.

Riv. And I, as I love Hastings with my heart!

K. Edw. Madam, yourself are not exempt in this,—

Nor your son Dorset,—Buckingham, nor you;—

You have been factious one against the other.

Wife, love lord Hastings, let him kiss your hand;

And what you do, do it unfeignedly. [remember

Queen. There, Hastings;—I will never more Our former hatred, so thrive I, and mine!

K. Edw. Dorset, embrace him;—Hastings, love lord marquis.

Dor. This interchange of love, I here protest, Upon my part, shall be inviolable.

Hast. And so swear I. [this league

K. Edw. Now, princely Buckingham, seal thou With thy embracements to my wife's allies,

And make me happy in your unity.

Buck. Whenever Buckingham doth turn his hate Upon your grace, but with all duteous love

[To the Queen.

Doth cherish you, and yours, God punish me

With hate in those where I expect most love!

When I have most need to employ a friend,

And most assured that he is a friend,

Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,

Be he unto me! This do I beg of heaven,

When I am cold in love, to you, or yours.

[Embracing Rivers, &c.

K. Edw. A pleasing cordial, princely Buckingham, Is this thy vow unto my sickly heart. [ham,

There wanteth now our brother Gloster here,

To make the blessed period of this peace.

Buck. And, in good time, here comes the noble

Enter Gloster. [duke.

Glo. Good-morrow to my sovereign king and And, princely peers, a happy time of day! [queen;

K. Edw. Happy, indeed, as we have spent the Brother, we have done deeds of charity; [day:— Made peace of enmity, fair love of hate, Between these swelling wrong-incensed peers.

Glo. A blessed labour, my most sovereign liege.—

10 Among this princely heap, if any here,

By false intelligence, or wrong surmise,

Hold me a foe; if I unwittingly

Have aught committed that is hardly borne

By any in this presence, I desire

15 To reconcile me to his friendly peace:

'Tis death to me, to be at enmity;

I hate it, and desire all good men's love.—

First, madam, I entreat true peace of you,

Which I will purchase with my duteous service;—

20 Of you, my noble cousin Buckingham,

If ever any grudge were lodg'd between us;—

Of you, lord Rivers,—and, lord Grey, of you,

That all without desert have frown'd on me;—

Of you, lord Woodville,—and, lord Scales, of you,—

25 Dukes, earls, lords, gentlemen; indeed, of all.

I do not know that Englishman alive,

With whom my soul is any jot at odds,

More than the infant that is born to-night;

I thank my God for my humility.

30 Queen. A holy-day this shall be kept hereafter:—

I would to God, all strifes were well compounded.—

My sovereign lord, I do beseech your highness

To take our brother Clarence to your grace.

Glo. Why, madam, have I offer'd love for this,

35 To be so flouted in this royal presence?

Who knows not, that the gentle duke is dead?

[They all start.

You do him injury, to scorn his corse. [he is?

K. Edw. Who knows not, he is dead! who knows

40 Queen. All-seeing heaven, what a world is this!

Buck. Look I so pale, lord Dorset, as the rest?

Dor. Ay, my good lord; and no man in the presence,

But his red-colour hath forsook his cheeks.

45 K. Edw. Is Clarence dead? the order was reversed.

Glo. But he, poor man, by your first order died,

And that a winged Mercury did bear;

Some tardy cripple bore the countermand¹,

50 That came too lag to see him buried:—

God grant, that some, less noble, and less loyal,

Nearer in bloody thoughts, and not in blood,

Deserve not worse than wretched Clarence did,

And yet go current from suspicion!

55 Enter Lord Stanley.

Stan. A boon, my sovereign, for my service done!

¹ This alludes to a proverbial expression, that "Ill news hath wings, and with the wind doth go; Comfort's a cripple, and comes ever slow."

K. Edw. I pr'ythee, peace; my soul is full of sorrow.

Stan. I will not rise, unless your highness hear me.

K. Edw. Then say at once, what is it thou request'st.

Stan. The forfeit¹, sovereign, of my servant's life; Who slew to-day a riotous gentleman, Lately attendant on the duke of Norfolk.

K. Edw. Have I a tongue to doom my brother's death,

And shall that tongue give pardon to a slave? My brother kill'd no man, his fault was thought, And yet his punishment was bitter death.

Who su'd to me for him? who, in my wrath, Kneel'd at my feet, and bid me be advis'd?

Who spoke of brotherhood? who spoke of love?

Who told me, how the poor soul did forsake

The mighty Warwick, and did fight for me?

Who told me, in the field at Tewksbury,

When Oxford had me down, he rescu'd me,

And said, Dear brother, live, and be a king?

Who told me, when we both lay in the field,

Frozen almost to death, how he did lap me

E'en in his garments; and did give himself,

All thin and naked, to the numb-cold night?

All this from my remembrance brutish wrath

Sinfully pluck'd, and not a man of you

Had so much grace to put it in my mind.

But, when your carters, or your waiting vassals,

Have done a drunken slaughter, and defac'd

The precious image of our dear Redeemer,

You straight are on your knees for pardon, pardon;

And I, unjustly too, must grant it you:—

But for my brother not a man would speak,—

Nor I (ungracious) speak unto myself

For him, poor soul.—The proudest of you all

Hath been beholden to him in his life;

Yet none of you would once plead for his life.—

O God! I fear, thy justice will take hold

On me, and you, and mine, and yours, for this.—

Come, Hastings, help me to my closet. Oh,

Poor Clarence! [Exeunt King and Queen, Hastings, Rivers, Dorset, and Grey.]

Glo. These are the fruits of rashness!—Mark'd

you not,

How that the guilty kindred of the queen [death?

Look'd pale, when they did hear of Clarence?

O! they did urge it still unto the king:

God will revenge it. Come, lords; will you go,

To comfort Edward with our company?

Buck. We wait upon your grace. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

The same.

Enter the Dutchess of York, with the two children of Clarence.

Son. Good grandam, tell us, is our father dead?

Dutch. No, boy. [breast?

Daugh. Why do you weep so oft? and beat your And cry,—O Clarence, my unhappy son! [head,

Son. Why do you look on us, and shake your

And call us,—orphans, wretches, cast-aways,

If that our noble father be alive?

Dutch. My pretty cousins, you mistake me I do lament the sickness of the king, [both: As loth to lose him; not your father's death; It were lost sorrow, to wail one that's lost.

5 Son. Then, grandam, you conclude that he is dead. The king mine uncle is to blame for this:

God will revenge it; whom I will importune With earnest prayers, all to that effect.

Daugh. And so will I. [love you well:

10 Dutch. Peace, children, peace! the king doth Incapable and shallow innocents,

You cannot guess who caus'd your father's death.

Son. Grandam, we can: for my good uncle Gloster

Told me, the king, provok'd to 't by the queen,

15 Devis'd impeachments to imprison him:

And when my uncle told me so, he wept,

And pitied me, and kindly kiss'd my cheek;

Bade me rely on him, as on my father,

And he would love me dearly as his child.

20 Dutch. Ah, that deceit should steal such gentle shapes,

And with a virtuous vizard hide deep vice!

He is my son, ay, and therein my shame,

Yet from my dugs he drew not this deceit.

25 Son. Think you, my uncle did dissemble, gran-

Dutch. Ay, boy. [dam?

Son. I cannot think it. Hark! what noise is this?

Enter the Queen, distractedly; Rivers, and Dorset, after her.

30 Queen. Ah! who shall hinder me to wail and weep?

To chide my fortune, and torment myself?

I'll join with black despair against my soul,

And to myself become an enemy.— [tience?

35 Dutch. What means this scene of rude impa-

Queen. To make an act of tragic violence:—

Edward, my lord, thy son, our king, is dead.—

Why grow the branches, when the root is gone?

Why wither not the leaves, that want their sap?—

40 If you will live, lament; if die, be brief;

That our swift-winged souls may catch the king's;

Or, like obedient subjects, follow him

To his new kingdom of perpetual rest.

Dutch. Ah, so much interest have I in thy sorrow,

45 As I had title in thy noble husband!

I have bewept a worthy husband's death,

And liv'd by looking on his images:

But now, two mirrors of his princely semblance

Are crack'd in pieces by malignant death;

50 And I for comfort have but one false glass,

That grieves me when I see my shame in him.

Thou art a widow; yet thou art a mother,

And hast the comfort of thy children left thee:

But death hath snatch'd my husband from mine arms,

And pluck'd two crutches from my feeble hands,

Clarence, and Edward. O, what cause have I

(Thine being but a moiety of my grief)

To over-go thy plaints, and drown thy cries!

60 Son. Ah, aunt! [To the Queen.] you wept not for our father's death;

How can we aid you with our kindred tears?

Daugh. Our fatherless distress was left unmoan'd,

Your widow dolours likewise be unwept!

¹ He means the remission of the forfeit.

T t 3

Queen.

Queen. Give me no help in lamentation,
I am not barren to bring forth laments:
All springs reduce their currents to mine eyes,
That I, being govern'd by the watry moon,
May send forth plenteous tears to drown the world!
Ah, for my husband, for my dear lord Edward!

Chil. Ah, for our father, for our dear lord Clarence!

Dutch. Alas, for both, both mine, Edward and Queen. What stay had I, but Edward? and he's gone.

Chil. What stay had we, but Clarence? and he's Dutch. What stays had I, but they? and they are gone.

Queen. Was never widow, had so dear a loss.

Chil. Were never orphans, had so dear a loss.

Dutch. Was never mother, had so dear a loss.

Alas! I am the mother of these griefs;
Their woes are parcell'd, mine are general.
She for an Edward weeps, and so do I;
I for a Clarence weep, so doth not she:
These babes for Clarence weep, and so do I;
I for an Edward weep, so do not they:—
Alas! you three, on me, threefold distress'd,
Pour all your tears; I am your sorrow's nurse,
And I will pamper it with lamentations.

Dor. Comfort, dear mother; God is much displeas'd,

That you take with unthankfulness his doing:
In common worldly things, 'tis call'd—ungrateful,
With dull unwillingness to pay a debt,
Which with a bounteous hand was kindly lent;
Much more, to be thus opposite with heaven,
For it requires the royal debt it lent you. [ther,

Riv. Madam, bethink you, like a careful mother
Of the young prince your son: send straight for him,

Let him be crown'd: in him your comfort lives:
Drown desp'rate sorrow in dead Edward's grave,
And plant your joys in living Edward's throne.

Enter Gloster, Buckingham, Stanley, Hastings, and Ratcliff.

Glo. Sister, have comfort: all of us have cause
To wail the dimming of our shining star;
But none can cure their harms by wailing them.—
Madam, my mother, I do cry you mercy,
I did not see your grace:—Humbly on my knee
I crave your blessing. [thy breast,

Dutch. God bless thee; and put meekness in Love, charity, obedience, and true duty!

Glo. Amen; and make me die a good old man!—
That is the butt-end of a mother's blessing! [Aside.
I marvel, that her grace did leave it out. [peers,

Buck. You cloudy princes, and heart-sorrowing
That bear this mutual heavy load of moan,
Now cheer each other in each other's love:
Though we have spent our harvest of this king,
We are to reap the harvest of his son.

The broken rancour of your high-swoln hearts,
But lately splinter'd, knitt and join'd together,
Must gently be preserv'd, cherish'd, and kept:
Me seemeth good, that, with some little train,
Forthwith from Ludlow¹ the young prince be fetch'd
Hither to London, to be crown'd our king.

Riv. Why with some little train, my lord of Buckingham?

Buck. Marry, my lord, lest, by a multitude,
The new-heal'd wound of malice should break out:
Which would be so much the more dangerous,
By how much the estate is green, and yet ungovern'd:
Where every horse bears his commanding rein,
And may direct his course as please himself:

As well the fear of harm, as harm apparent,
In my opinion, ought to be prevented.

Glo. I hope, the king made peace with all of us;
And the compact is firm, and true in me.

Riv. And so in me; and so, I think, in all:
Yet, since it is but green, it should be put
To no apparent likelihood of breach,
Which, haply, by much company might be urg'd:
Therefore, I say, with noble Buckingham,
That it is meet so few should fetch the prince.

Hast. And so say I.

Glo. Then be it so: and go we to determine
Who they shall be that straight shall post to Ludlow,
Madam,—and you my mother,—will you go
To give your censures² in this weighty business?

[Exeunt Queen, &c.

Manent Buckingham, and Gloster.

Buck. My lord, whoever journeys to the prince,
For God's sake, let not us two stay at home:
For, by the way, I'll sort occasion,
As index³ to the story we late talk'd of,
To part the queen's proud kindred from the prince.

Glo. My other self, my counsel's consistory,
My oracle, my prophet!—My dear cousin,
I, as a child, will go by thy direction.

Towards Ludlow then, for we'll not stay behind.
[Exeunt.

SCENE III.

A Street near the Court.

Enter two Citizens, meeting.

1 Cit. Good morrow, neighbour: Whither away so fast?

2 Cit. I promise you, I hardly know myself:
Hear you the news abroad?

1 Cit. Yes, that the king is dead. [better:

3 Cit. Doth the news hold of good king Edward's

2 Cit. Ay, sir, it is too true; God help, the while!

3 Cit. Then, masters, look to see a troublous world.

¹ Edward the young prince, in his father's life-time, and at his demise, kept his household at Ludlow, as prince of Wales, under the governance of Anthony Woodville, earl of Rivers, his uncle by the mother's side. The intention of his being sent thither was to see justice done in the Marches; and, by the authority of his presence, to restrain the Welchmen, who were wild, dissolute, and ill-disposed, from their accustomed murders and outrages.

1 Cit. So stood the state, when Henry the sixth Was crown'd in Paris but at nine months old.

3 Cit. Stood the state so? no, no, good friends, God wot;

For then this land was famously enrich'd With politick grave counsel; then the king Had virtuous uncles to protect his grace. [mother.]

3 Cit. Better it were, they all came by his father; Or, by his father, there were none at all:

When the sun sets, who doth not look for night? Untimely storms make men expect a dearth:

All may be well; but, if God sort it so, 'Tis more than we deserve, or I expect.

2 Cit. Truly, the hearts of men are full of fear: You cannot reason almost with a man

That looks not heavily, and full of dread.

3 Cit. Before the days of change, still is it so: By a divine instinct, men's minds mistrust

Ensuing danger; as, by proof, we see The water swell before a boist'rous storm.

But leave it all to God. Whither away?

2 Cit. Marry, we were sent for to the justices.

3 Cit. And so was I; I'll bear you company. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.

A Room in the Palace.

Enter Archbishop of York, the young Duke of York, the Queen, and the Dutchess of York.

Arch. Last night, I heard, they lay at Northamp- At Stony-Stratford they do rest to-night: [ton!]

To-morrow, or next day, they will be here.

Dutch. I long with all my heart to see the prince: I hope, he is much grown since last I saw him.

Queen. But I hear, no; they say, my son of York Has almost overta'en him in his growth.

York. Ay, mother, but I would not have it so.

Dutch. Why, my young cousin? it is good to grow.

York. Grandam, one night as we did sit at supper, My uncle Rivers talk'd how I did grow [ter,

More than my brother; Ay, quoth my uncle Glos- Small herbs have grace, great weeds do grow apace:

And since, methinks, I would not grow so fast,

Because sweet flowers are slow, and weeds make haste. [not hold]

Dutch. Good faith, good faith, the saying did In him that did object the same to thee: [young,

5 He was the wretched'st ' thing, when he was So long a growing, and so leisurely,

That, if his rule were true, he should be gracious.

Arch. And so, no doubt, he is, my gracious madam.

Dutch. I hope, he is; but yet let mothers doubt.

York. Now, by my troth, if I had been re- member'd²,

I could have given my uncle's grace a flout, To touch his growth, nearer than he touch'd mine.

Dutch. How, my young York? I pr'ythee, let me hear it.

York. Marry, they say, my uncle grew so fast, That he could gnaw a crust at two years old;

'Twas full two years ere I could get a tooth.

Grandam, this would have been a biting jest.

Dutch. I pr'ythee, pretty York, who told thee

York. Grandam, his nurse. [this?]

Dutch. His nurse! why, she was dead ere thou wast born. [me.]

York. If 'twere not she, I cannot tell who told

Queen. A parlous³ boy!—Go to, you are too shrewd. [child.]

Dutch. Good madam, be not angry with the Queen. Pitchers have ears.

Enter a Messenger.

Arch. Here comes a messenger: What news?

Mes. Such news, my lord, as grieves me to Queen. How doth the prince? [unfold,

Mes. Well, madam, and in health,

Dutch. What is thy news?

Mes. Lord Rivers, and lord Grey, Are sent to Pomfret, prisoners; and, with them,

Sir Thomas Vaughan.

Dutch. Who hath committed them? [ham.]

Mes. The mighty dukes, Gloster and Bucking-

Queen. For what offence?

Mes. The sum of all I can, I have disclos'd; Why, or for what, the nobles were committed,

Is all unknown to me, my gracious lady.

Queen. Ah me, I see the ruin of my house! The tyger now hath seiz'd the gentle hind;

Insulting tyranny begins to jut Upon the innocent and awless⁴ throne:—

Welcome destruction, blood, and massacre! I see, as in a map, the end of all.

Dutch. Accursed and unquiet wrangling days! How many of you have mine eyes beheld?

My husband lost his life to get the crown; And often up and down my sons were tost,

For me to joy, and weep, their gain, and loss: And being seated, and domestick broils

Clean over-blown, themselves, the conquerors, Make war upon themselves; brother to brother,

Blood to blood, self against self:—O, preposterous And frantick outrage, end thy damned spleen;

Or let me die, to look on death no more!

Dutch. Stay, I will go with you.

Queen. You have no cause.

Arch. My gracious lady, go.

And thither bear your treasure and your goods.

For my part, I'll resign unto your grace

The seal I keep: And so betide to me,

As well I tender you, and all of yours!

A C T III.

S C E N E I.

In London.

The trumpets sound. Enter the Prince of Wales, the Dukes of Gloster and Buckingham, Cardinal Bouchier, and others.

Buck. WELCOME, sweet prince, to London, to your chamber¹. [reign:

Glo. Welcome, dear cousin, my thoughts' sove-
The weary way hath made you melancholy.

Prince. No, uncle; but our crosses on the way
Have made it tedious, wearisome, and heavy:

I want more uncles here to welcome me. [years

Glo. Sweet prince, the untainted virtue of your
Hath not yet div'd into the world's deceit:

No more can you distinguish of a man,

Than of his outward shew; which, God he knows,
Seldom, or never, jumpeth with the heart.

Those uncles, which you want, were dangerous;

Your grace attended to their sugar'd words,

But look'd not on the poison of their hearts:

God keep you from them, and from such false
friends!

Prince. God keep me from false friends! but they were none. [greet you.

Glo. My lord, the mayor of London comes to Enter the Lord Mayor, and his Train.

Mayor. God bless your grace with health and happy days!

Prince. I thank you, good my lord:—and thank you all.

I thought, my mother, and my brother York,

Would long ere this have met us on the way:—

Fie, what a slug is Hastings! that he comes not

To tell us, whether they will come, or no.

Enter Hastings.

Buck. And, in good time, here comes the sweating lord. [mother come?

Prince. Welcome, my lord: What, will our

Hast. On what occasion, God he knows, not I,

The queen your mother, and your brother York,

Have taken sanctuary: The tender prince

Would fain have comewith me to meet your grace,

But by his mother was perforce withheld.

Buck. Fie! what an indirect and peevish course
Is this of hers?—Lord cardinal, will your grace

15 Perstade the queen to send the duke of York
Unto his princely brother presently?

If she deny,—lord Hastings, you go with him,

And from her jealous arms pluck him perforce.

Card. My lord of Buckingham, if my weak oratory

20 Can from his mother win the duke of York,

Anon expect him here: But if she be obdurate

To mild entreaties, God in heaven forbid

We should infringe the holy privilege

Of blessed sanctuary! not for all this land,

25 Would I be guilty of so deep a sin.

Buck. You are too senseless-obstinate, my lord,

Too ceremonious, and traditional²:

Weigh it but with the grossness of this age,

You break not sanctuary in seizing him.

30 The benefit thereof is always granted

To those whose dealings have deserv'd the place,

And those who have the wit to claim the place:

This prince hath neither claim'd it, nor deserv'd it;

Therefore, in mine opinion, cannot have it:

35 Then, taking him from thence, that is not there,

You break no privilege nor charter there.

Oft I have heard of sanctuary men;

But sanctuary children, ne'er till now.

Card. My lord, you shall o'errule my mind for once.—

Come on, lord Hastings, will you go with me?

Hast. I go, my lord.

Prince. Good lords, make all the speedy haste you may.

45 [Exeunt Cardinal, and Hastings.

Say, uncle Gloster, if our brother come,

Where shall we sojourn 'till our coronation?

Glo. Where it seems best unto your royal self.

If I may counsel you, some day, or two,

50 Your highness shall repose you at the Tower:

Then where you please, and shall be thought most fit

For your best health and recreation.

Prince. I do not like the Tower, of any place:—

55 Did Julius Cæsar build that place, my lord?

Glo. He did, my gracious lord, begin that place;

Which, since, succeeding ages have re-edify'd.

Prince. Is it upon record? or else reported

Successively from age to age, he built it?

60 Buck. Upon record, my gracious lord.

adherent to old customs,

² Ceremonious for superstitious; traditional for

Prince. But say, my lord; it were not register'd;
Methinks, the truth should live from age to age,
As 'twere retail'd¹ to all posterity,
Even to the general all-ending day.

Glo. So wise so young, they say, do ne'er live long².

Prince. What say you, uncle?

Glo. I say, without characters, fame lives long.
Thus, like the formal vice³, Iniquity, } Aside.
I moralize,—two meanings in one word.

Prince. That Julius Cæsar was a famous man;
With what his valour did enrich his wit,
His wit set down to make his valour live:
Death makes no conquest of this conqueror;
For now he lives in fame, though not in life.—
I'll tell you what, my cousin Buckingham.

Buck. What, my gracious lord?

Prince. An if I live until I be a man,
I'll win our ancient right in France again,
Or die a soldier, as I liv'd a king.

Glo. Short summers lightly⁴ have a forward spring. [Aside.

Enter York, Hastings, and the Cardinal.

Buck. Now, in good time, here comes the duke of York. [brother?

Prince. Richard of York, how fares our loving York. Well, my dread lord; so must I call you now.

Prince. Ay, brother; to our grief, as it is yours:
Too late⁵ he died, that might have kept that title,

Which by his death has lost much majesty.

Glo. How fares our cousin, noble lord of York?

York. I thank you, gentle uncle. O, my lord,
You said, that idle weeds are fast in growth:
The prince my brother hath outgrown me far.

Glo. He hath, my lord.

York. And therefore is he idle?

Glo. O my fair cousin, I must not say so.

York. Then is he more beholden to you, than I.

Glo. He may command me, as my sovereign;
But you have power in me, as in a kinsman.

York. I pray you, uncle, give me this dagger.

Glo. My dagger, little cousin? with all my heart.

Prince. A beggar, brother?

York. Of my kind uncle, that I know will give:
And, being but a toy, which is no gift to give.

Glo. A greater gift than that I'll give my cousin.

York. A greater gift! O, that's the sword to it?

Glo. Ay, gentle cousin, were it light enough.

York. O then, I see, you'll part but with light gifts;

In weightier things you'll say a beggar, nay.

Glo. It is too weighty for your grace to wear.

York. I weigh it lightly⁶, were it heavier.

Glo. What, would you have my weapon, little lord? [me.

York. I would, that I might thank you as you call

Glo. How?

York. Little.

Prince. My lord of York will still be cross in talk;—

Uncle, your grace knows how to bear with him.

York. You mean to bear me, not to bear with me:—

Uncle, my brother mocks both you and me;
Because that I am little, like an ape.

10 He thinks that you should bear me on your shoulders.

Buck. With what a sharp-provided wit he reasons!

To mitigate the scorn he gives his uncle,
He prettily and aptly taunts himself:

15 So cunning, and so young, is wonderful.

Glo. My lord, will 't please you pass along?

Myself, and my good cousin Buckingham,

Will to your mother; to entreat of her,

To meet you at the Tower, and welcome you.

20 York. What, will you go into the Tower, my
lord?

Prince. My lord protector needs will have it so.

York. I shall not sleep in quiet at the Tower.

Glo. Why, what should you fear?

York. Marry, my uncle Clarence' angry ghost;
My grandam told me, he was murther'd there.

Prince. I fear no uncles dead.

Glo. Nor none that live, I hope.

Prince. An if they live, I hope, I need not fear.

30 But come, my lord, and, with a heavy heart,
Thinking on them, go I unto the Tower.

[Exeunt Prince, York, Hastings, Cardinal, and Attendants.

Buck. Think you, my lord, this little prating
York

Was not incensed by his subtle mother,
To taunt and scorn you thus opprobriously?

Glo. No doubt, no doubt; O, 'tis a parlous boy;
Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable;

40 He's all the mother's, from the top to toe.

Buck. Well, let them rest.—Come hither, Catesby; thou art sworn

As deeply to effect what we intend,

As closely to conceal what we impart:

45 Thou know'st our reasons urg'd upon the way;—

What think'st thou? is it not an easy matter

To make William lord Hastings of our mind,

For the instalment of this noble duke

In the seat royal of this famous isle?

50 Cates. He for his father's sake so loves the prince,
That he will not be won to aught against him.

Buck. What think'st thou then of Stanley? will not he?

Cates. He will do all in all as Hastings doth.

55 Buck. Well then, no more but this: Go, gentle
Catesby,

And, as it were far off, sound thou lord Hastings,
How he doth stand affected to our purpose;

And summon him to-morrow to the Tower,

If thou dost find him tractable to us,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons:
If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,
Be thou so too; and so break off the talk,
And give us notice of his inclination:
For we to-morrow hold divided¹ councils,
Wherein thyself shalt highly be employ'd.

Glo. Commend me to lord William: tell him,
Catesby,
His ancient knot of dangerous adversaries
To-morrow are let blood at Pomfret-castle;
And bid my friend, for joy of this good news,
Give mistress Shore one gentle kiss the more.

Buck. Good Catesby, go, effect this business soundly. [can.]

Cates. My good lords both, with all the heed I

Glo. Shall we hear from you, Catesby, ere we Cates. You shall, my lord. [sleep?]

Glo. At Crosby-place, there you shall find us both. [Exit Catesby.]

Buck. Now, my lord, what shall we do, if we perceive

Lord Hastings will not yield to our complots?

Glo. Chop off his head, man;—somewhat we will do:—

And, look, when I am king, claim thou of me
The earldom of Hereford, and all the moveables
Whereof the king my brother was possess'd.

Buck. I'll claim that promise at your grace's hand.

Glo. And look to have it yielded with all kindness.

Come, let us sup betimes; that afterwards
We may digest our complots in some form.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

Before Lord Hastings' house.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. My lord, my lord,—

Hast. [Within.] Who knocks?

Mes. One from lord Stanley.

Hast. What is't o'clock?

Mes. Upon the stroke of four.

Enter Hastings.

Hast. Cannot thy master sleep these tedious nights?

Mes. So it should seem by that I have to say.

First, he commends him to your noble self.

Hast. And then,—

Mes. Then certifies your lordship, that this night
He dreamt, the boar had rased² off his helm:
Besides, he says, there are two councils held;
And that may be determin'd at the one,
Which may make you and him to rue at th' other.
Therefore he sends to know your lordship's plea—
If presently you will take horse with him, [sure,—
And with all speed post with him toward the north,
To shun the danger that his soul divines.

Hast. Go, fellow, go, return unto thy lord;
Bid him not fear the separated councils:
His honour, and myself, are at the one;
And, at the other, is my good friend Catesby;
Where nothing can proceed, that toucheth us,
Whereof I shall not have intelligence.

Tell him, his fears are shallow, wanting instance³:
And for his dreams,—I wonder, he's so fond
To trust the mockery of unquiet slumbers:

To fly the boar, before the boar pursues,
Were to incense the boar to follow us,
And make pursuit, where he did mean no chase.
Go, bid thy master rise and come to me;
And we will both together to the Tower,

Where, he shall see, the boar will use us kindly.

Mes. I'll go, my lord, and tell him what you say. [Exit.]

Enter Catesby.

Cates. Many good morrows to my noble lord!

Hast. Good morrow, Catesby; you are early stirring;

What news, what news, in this our tottering state?

Cates. It is a reeling world, indeed, my lord;

And, I believe, will never stand upright,

'Till Richard wear the garland of the realm.

Hast. How? wear the garland? dost thou mean

Cates. Ay, my good lord. [the crown?]

Hast. I'll have this crown of mine cut from my shoulders,

Before I'll see the crown so foul misplac'd.

But canst thou guess that he doth aim at it? [ward]

Cates. Ay, on my life; and hopes to find you for-

Upon his party, for the gain thereof:

And, thereupon, he sends you this good news,—

That, this same very day, your enemies,

The kindred of the queen, must die at Pomfret.

Hast. Indeed, I am no mourner for that news,

Because they have been still my adversaries:

But, that I'll give my voice on Richard's side,

To bar my master's heirs in true descent,

God knows, I will not do it, to the death. [mind!]

Cates. God keep your lordship in that gracious

Hast. But I shall laugh at this a twelve-month
hence,—

That they, who brought me in my master's hate,
I live to look upon their tragedy.

Well, Catesby, ere a fortnight make me older,

I'll send some packing, that yet think not on't.

Cates. 'Tis a vile thing to die, my gracious lord,

When men are unprepar'd, and look not for it.

Hast. O monstrous, monstrous! and so falls it out

With Rivers, Vaughan, Grey: and so 'twill do

With some men else, who think themselves as safe

As thou, and I; who, as thou know'st, are dear

To princely Richard, and to Buckingham.

Cates. The princes both make high account of you.—

For they account his head upon the bridge. [Aside.]

Hast. I know they do; and I have well deserv'd it.

¹ i. e. a private consultation, separate from the known and public council. ² This term raised or rashed is alway given to describe the violence inflicted by a boar. By a boar, throughout this scene, is meant Gloster, who was called the boar, or the hog, as has been before observed, from his having a boar for his cognizance, and one of the supporters of his coat of arms. ³ i. e. wanting some example or act of malevolence, by which they may be justified,

Enter

Enter Stanley.

[man?

Come on, come on, where is your boar-spear,
Fear you the boar, and go so unprovided?

Stanl. My lord, good morrow;—and good morrow, Catesby:—

You may jest on, but, by the holy rood¹,
I do not like these several councils, I.

Hast. My lord,
I hold my life as dear as you do yours;
And never, in my days, I do protest,
Was it more precious to me than 'tis now:
Think you, but that I know our state secure,
I would be so triumphant as I am? [London,

Stanl. The lords at Pomfret, when they rode from
Were jocund, and suppos'd their states were sure,
And they, indeed, had no cause to mistrust;
But yet, you see, how soon the day o'ercast.

This sudden stab of rancour I misdoubt;
Pray God, I say, I prove a needless coward!
What, shall we toward the Tower? the day is spent.

Hast. Come, come, have with you².—Wot you what, my lord?

To-day the lords you talk of are beheaded.

Stanl. They, for their truth³, might better wear their heads,

Than some, that have accus'd them, wear their

Enter a Pursuivant.

Hast. Go on before, I'll talk with this good fellow.
[Exeunt Lord Stanley, and Catesby.

Sirrah, how now? how goes the world with thee?

Purs. The better, that your lordship please to ask.

Hast. I tell thee, man, 'tis better with me now,
Than when thou met'st me last where now we meet:

Then I was going prisoner to the Tower,
By the suggestion of the queen's allies;
But now, I tell thee, (keep it to thyself)

This day those enemies are put to death,
And I in better state than ere I was. [tent!

Purs. God hold⁴ it, to your honour's good con-

Purs. I thank your honour. [Exit Pursuivant.

Enter a Priest.

Priest. Well met, my lord; I am glad to see your honour. [heart.

Hast. I thank thee, good Sir John, with all my
I am in your debt for your last⁵ exercise;

Come the next sabbath, and I will content you.
Enter Buckingham.

Buck. What, talking with a priest, lord chamberlain?

Your friends at Pomfret, they do need the priest;
Your honour hath no shriving work⁶ in hand.

Hast. Good faith, and when I met this holy man,
The men you talk of came into my mind.

What, go you toward the Tower? [there:

Buck. I do, my lord; but long I shall not stay
I shall return before your lordship thence.

Hast. Nay, like enough, for I stay dinner there.

Buck. And supper too, although thou know'st it not. [Aside.

Come, will you go?

Hast. I'll wait upon your lordship. [Exeunt.

S C E N E III.

Before Pomfret-castle.

Enter Sir Richard Ratcliff, conducting Lord Rivers, Lord Richard Grey, and Sir Thomas Vaughan to execution.

Rat. Come, bring forth the prisoners.

Riv. Sir Richard Ratcliff, let me tell thee this,—
To-day shalt thou behold a subject die,

For truth, for duty, and for loyalty. [you?

Grey. God keep the prince from all the pack of
A knot you are of damn'd blood-suckers. [after.

Vaugh. You live, that shall cry woe for this here—
Rat. Dispatch: the limit of your lives is out.

Riv. O Pomfret, Pomfret! O thou bloody prison,
Fatal and ominous to noble peers!

Within the guilty closure of thy walls,
Richard the second here was hack'd to death:

And, for more slander to thy dismal seat,
We give thee up our guiltless blood to drink. [heads.

Grey. Now Margaret's curse is fallen upon our
When she exclaim'd on Hastings, you, and I,

For standing by when Richard stabb'd her son.
Riv. Then curs'd she Hastings, curs'd she Buckingham,

Then curs'd she Richard:—O, remember, God,
To hear her prayer for them, as now for us!

As for my sister, and her princely sons,—
Be satisfied; dear God, with our true bloods,

Which, as thou know'st, unjustly must be spilt!

Rat. Make haste, the hour of death is now expir'd. [embrace:

Riv. Come, Grey,—come, Vaughan,—let us here
Farewell, until we meet again in heaven. [Exeunt.

S C E N E IV.

The Tower.

Buckingham, Stanley, Hastings, Bishop of Ely, Catesby, Lovel, with others at a table.

Hast. Now, noble peers, the cause why we are
Is—to determine of the coronation: [met

In God's name, speak, when is the royal day?

Buck. Are all things ready for that royal time?

Stanl. They are, and wants but nomination.

Ely. To-morrow then I judge a happy day.

Buck. Who knows the lord protector's mind here—
Who is most inward with the noble duke? [in?

Ely. Your grace, we think, should soonest know his mind. [hearts,—

Buck. We know each other's faces: for our
He knows no more of mine, than I of yours;

Nor I of his, my lord, than you of mine:—
Lord Hastings, you and he are near in love.

Hast. I thank his grace, I know he loves me
But, for his purpose in the coronation, [well;

I have not sounded him, nor he deliver'd

¹ i. e. the cross.² A familiar phrase in parting, as much as, *I have something to say to you.*³ i. e. honesty.⁴ i. e. continue it.⁵ i. e. performance of divine service.⁶ Shriving work is confession.

His gracious pleasure any way therein :
But you, my noble lord, may name the time :
And in the duke's behalf I'll give my voice,
Which, I presume, he'll take in gentle part.

Enter Gloster.

Ely. In happy time, here comes the duke himself.

Glo. My noble lords and cousins, all good mor-
I have been long a sleeper ; but I trust, [row,
My absence doth neglect no great design,
Which by my presence might have been concluded.

Buck. Had you not come upon your cue¹, my lord,

William lord Hastings had pronounc'd your part,—
I mean, your voice,—for crowning of the king.

Glo. Than my lord Hastings, no man might be bolder ;

His lordship knows me well, and loves me well.—
My lord of Ely, when I was last in Holborn,
I saw good strawberries in your garden there ;
I do beseech you, send for some of them.

Ely. Marry, and will, my lord, with all my heart.

[Exit Ely.]

Glo. Cousin of Buckingham, a word with you.
Catesby hath sounded Hastings in our business ;
And finds the testy gentleman so hot,
That he will lose his head, ere give consent,
His master's child, as worshipfully he terms it,
Shall lose the royalty of England's throne.

Buck. Withdraw yourself awhile, I'll go with you.

[Exeunt Gloster and Buckingham.]

Stanl. We have not yet set down this day of triumph.

To-morrow, in my judgement, is too sudden ;
For I myself am not so well provided,
As else I would be, were the day prolong'd.

Re-enter the Bishop of Ely.

Ely. Where is my lord protector ? I have sent
For these strawberries. [morning ;

Hast. His grace looks chearfully and smooth this
There's some conceit or other likes him well,
When he doth bid good morrow with such spirit.
I think there's ne'er a man in Christendom,
Can lesser hide his love, or hate, than he ;
For by his face straight shall you know his heart.

Stanl. What of his heart perceive you in his face,
By any likelihood² he shew'd to-day ? [ed ;

Hast. Marry, that with no man here he is offend-
For, were he, he had shewn it in his looks.

Re-enter Gloster and Buckingham.

Glo. I pray you all, tell me what they deserve,
That do conspire my death with devilish plots
Of damned witchcraft ; and that have prevail'd
Upon my body with their hellish charms ?

Hast. The tender love I bear your grace, my lord,
Makes me most forward in this noble presence
To doom the offenders : Whosoe'er they be,
I say, my lord, they have deserved death.

Glo. Then be your eyes the witness of their evil,
Look how I am bewitch'd ; behold, mine arm

Is, like a blasted sapling, wither'd up :
And this is Edward's wife, that monstrous witch,
Consorted with that harlot, strumpet Shore,
That by their withcraft thus have mark'd me.

Hast. If they have done this deed, my noble lord,— [pet,

Glo. If ! thou protector of this damned strum-
Talk'st thou to me of ifs ?—Thou art a traitor :—
Off with his head ;—now, by Saint Paul I swear,
I will not dine until I see the same.—

Lovel, and Catesby, look, that it be done ;—
The rest, that love me, rise, and follow me.

[Exit Council, with Richard and Buckingham.]

Hast. Woe, woe, for England ! not a whit for me ;

For I, too fond, might have prevented this :
Stanley did dream, the boar did rase his helm ;
But I disdain'd it, and did scorn to fly. [ble,
Three times to-day my foot-cloth horse³ did stum-

And started, when he look'd upon the Tower,
As loth to bear me to the slaughter-house.

O, now I need the priest that spake to me :

I now repent I told the pursuivant,
As too triumphing, how mine enemies

To-day at Pomfret bloodily were butcher'd,
And I myself secure in grace and favour.

O, Margaret, Margaret, now thy heavy curse
Is lighted on poor Hastings' wretched head.

Cates. Dispatch, my lord, the duke would be at dinner ;

Make a short shrift ; he longs to see your head.

Hast. O momentary grace of mortal men,
Which we more hunt for than the grace of God !
Who builds his hope in air of your fair looks,

Lives like a drunken sailor on a mast ;
Ready, with every nod, to tumble down

Into the fatal bowels of the deep.

Lov. Come, come, dispatch ; 'tis bootless to exclaim. [gland !

Hast. Oh, bloody Richard !—miserable En-
I prophesy the fearful'st time to thee,

That ever wretched age hath look'd upon.—

Come, lead me to the block, bear him my head ;
They smile at me, who shortly shall be dead.

[Exeunt.]

S C E N E V.

The Tower-Walls.

Enter Gloster, and Buckingham, in rusty armour, marvellous ill-favour'd.

Glo. Come, cousin, canst thou quake, and change thy colour ?

Murder thy breath in middle of a word,—
And then again begin, and stop again,

As if thou wert distraught, and mad with terror ?

Buck. Tut, I can counterfeit the deep tragedian ;
Speak, and look back, and pry on every side,

I remble and start at wagging of a straw,
Intending deep suspicion : ghastly looks

¹ This expression is borrowed from the theatre. The cue, queue, or tail of a speech, consists of the last words, which are the token for an entrance or answer. To come on the cue, therefore, is to come at the proper time. ² i.e. appearance. ³ The housings of a horse, and sometimes a horse himself, were anciently denominated a foot-cloth.

Are at my service, like enforced smiles;
And both are ready in their offices,
At any time, to grace my stratagems.
But what, is Catesby gone?

Glo. He is; and, see, he brings the mayor along.

Enter the Lord Mayor, and Catesby.

Buck. Let me alone to entertain him.—Lord mayor!

Glo. Look to the draw-bridge there.

Buck. Hark! a drum.

Glo. Catesby, o'erlook the walls. [you,—

Buck. Lord mayor, the reason we have sent for

Glo. Look back, defend thee, here are enemies.

Buck. God and our innocency defend and guard us!

Enter Lovel, and Ratcliff, with Hastings' head.

Glo. Be patient, they are friends; Ratcliff, and Lovel.

Lov. Here is the head of that ignoble traitor,
The dangerous and unsuspected Hastings.

Glo. So dear I lov'd the man, that I must weep.

I took him for the plainest harmless creature,
That breath'd upon the earth a christian;

Made him my book, wherein my soul recorded
The history of all her secret thoughts:

So smooth he daub'd his vice with shew of virtue,
That, his apparent open guilt omitted,—

I mean, his conversation with Shore's wife,—
He liv'd from all attainder of suspect. [traitor

Buck. Well, well, he was the covert'st shelter'd
That ever liv'd.—Look you, my lord mayor,

Would you imagine, or almost believe,
(Were't not, that by great preservation

We live to tell it you) the subtle traitor
This day had plotted, in the council-house,

To murder me, and my good lord of Gloster?
Mayor. What! had he so?

Glo. What! think you we are Turks, or infidels?
Or that we would, against the form of law,

Proceed thus rashly in the villain's death;
But that the extreme peril of the case,

The peace of England, and our persons' safety,
Enforc'd us to this execution? [death;

Mayor. Now, fair befall you! he deserv'd his
And your good graces both have well proceeded,

To warn false traitors from the like attempts.
I never look'd for better at his hands,

After he once fell in with mistress Shore.

Buck. Yet had we not determin'd he should Until your lordship came to see his end; [die,

Which now the loving haste of these our friends,
Somewhat against our meaning, hath prevented:

Because, my lord, we would have had you heard
The traitor speak, and timorously confess

The manner and the purpose of his treasons;
That you might well have signify'd the same

Unto the citizens, who, haply, may
Misconstrue us in him, and wail his death.

Mayor. But, my good lord, your grace's word shall serve,

As well as I had seen, and heard him speak:
And do not doubt, right noble princes both,

But I'll acquaint our duteous citizens
With all your just proceedings in this case. [here,
Glo. And to that end we wish'd your lordship
To avoid the censures of the carping world.

Buck. But since you came too late of our intent,
Yet witness what you hear we did intend:
And so, my good lord mayor, we bid farewell.

[Exit Mayor.

Glo. Go, after, after, cousin Buckingham.

10 The mayor towards Guildhall hies him in all post:
There, at your meetest vantage of the time,

Infer the bastardy of Edward's children:
Tell them, how Edward put to death a citizen¹,

Only for saying—he would make his son
Heir to the crown; meaning, indeed, his house,

15 Which, by the sign thereof, was termed so.
Moreover, urge his hateful luxury
And bestial appetite in change of lust; [wives,

Which stretch'd unto their servants, daughters,
20 Even where his ranging eye, or savage heart,
Without controul, list'd to make his prey.

Nay, for a need, thus far come near my person:
Tell them, when that my mother went with child

Of that insatiate Edward, noble York,
25 My princely father, then had wars in France;

And, by just computation of the time,
Found that the issue was not his begot;

Which well appeared in his lineaments,
Being nothing like the noble duke my father.

30 Yet touch this sparingly, as 'twere far off;
Because, my lord, you know, my mother lives.

Buck. Doubt not, my lord; I'll play the orator,
As if the golden fee, for which I plead,

Were for myself: and so, my lord, adieu.

35 Glo. If you thrive well, bring them to Bay-nard's castle;

Where you shall find me well accompanied,
With reverend fathers, and well-learned bishops.

Buck. I go; and towards three or four o'clock,
40 Look for the news that the Guildhall affords.

[Exit Buckingham.

Glo. Go, Lovel, with all speed to doctor Shaw,
Go thou to friar Penker;—bid them both

Meet me, within this hour, at Baynard's castle.

[Exit Lovel and Catesby.

Now will I in, to take some privy order
To draw the brats of Clarence out of sight;

And to give notice, that no manner of person
Have, any time, recourse unto the princes. [Exit.

SCENE VI.

A Street.

Enter a Scrivener.

Scriv. Here is the indictment of the good lord
Hastings;

55 Which in a set hand fairly is engross'd,
That it may be to-day read o'er in Paul's.

And mark how well the sequel hangs together:
Eleven hours I've spent to write it over,

60 For yesternight by Catesby was it sent me:
The precedent was full as long a doing:

And yet within these five hours Hastings liv'd,

¹ This person was one Walker, a substantial citizen and grocer at the Crown in Cheapside.
Untainted,

Untainted, unexamin'd, free, at liberty.
 Here's a good world the while!—Who is so gross,
 That cannot see this palpable device?
 Yet who so bold, but says—he sees it not?
 Bad is the world; and all will come to nought,
 When such bad dealing must be seen in thought¹.
 [Exit.]

Baynard's Castle.

Enter Gloster, and Buckingham, at several doors.

Glo. How now, how now? what say the citizens?

Buck. Now by the holy mother of our Lord,
 The citizens are mum, say not a word. [dren?

Glo. Touch'd you the bastardy of Edward's child?

Buck. I did; with his contract with lady Lucy,
 And his contract by deputy in France:
 The insatiate greediness of his desires,
 And his enforcement of the city wives;
 His tyranny for trifles; his own bastardy,—
 As being got, your father then in France,
 And his resemblance being not like the duke.
 Withal, I did infer your lineaments,—
 Being the right idea of your father,
 Both in your form and nobleness of mind:
 Laid open all your victories in Scotland,
 Your discipline in war, wisdom in peace,
 Your bounty, virtue, fair humility;
 Indeed, left nothing, fitting for your purpose,
 Untouch'd, or slightly handled, in discourse.
 And, when my oratory grew toward end,
 I bade them, that did love their country's good,
 Cry—"God save Richard, England's royal king!"

Glo. And did they so? [word:

Buck. No, so God help me, they spake not a
 But, like dumb statues, or unbreathing stones,
 Star'd on each other, and look'd deadly pale.
 Which when I saw, I reprehended them;
 And ask'd the mayor, what meant this wilful silence:

His answer was,—the people were not us'd
 To be spoke to, but by the recorder.
 Then he was urg'd to tell my tale again;—
 Thus saith the duke, thus hath the duke inferr'd;
 But nothing spoke in warrant from himself.
 When he had done, some followers of mine own,
 At lower end o' the hall, hurl'd up their caps,
 And some ten voices cry'd, God save king Richard!
 And thus I took the vantage of those few,— Thanks, gentle citizens, and friends, quoth I;
 This general applause, and chearful shout,
 Argues your wisdom, and your love to Richard:
 And even here brake off, and came away.

Glo. What tongueless blocks were they; would they not speak?

Will not the mayor then, and his brethren, come?

Buck. The mayor is here at hand; intend² some fear;

Be not you spoke with, but by mighty suit:
 And look you get a prayer-book in your hand,

And stand between two churchmen, good my lord;
 For on that ground I'll make a holy descant:
 And be not easily won to our requests;
 Play the maid's part, still answer nay, and take it.
Glo. I go; and if you plead as well for them,
 As I can say nay to thee for myself;
 No doubt we'll bring it to a happy issue.

Buck. Go, go, up to the leads; the lord mayor knocks. [Exit Gloster.]

Enter the Lord Mayor, and Citizens.

Welcome, my lord: I dance attendance here;
 I think, the duke will not be spoke withal.—

Enter Catesby.

Now, Catesby, what says your lord to my request?

Cates. He doth entreat your grace, my noble
 lord,

To visit him to-morrow, or next day:
 He is within, with two right reverend fathers,
 Divinely bent to meditation;
 And in no worldly suit would he be mov'd,
 To draw him from his holy exercise. [duke;

Buck. Return, good Catesby, to the gracious
 Tell him, myself, the mayor and aldermen,
 In deep designs, in matter of great moment,
 No less importing than our general good,
 Are come to have some conference with his grace.

Cates. I'll signify so much unto him straight.
 [Exit.]

Buck. Ah, ha, my lord, this prince is not an Edward!

He is not lolling on a lewd day-bed,
 But on his knees at meditation;
 Not dallying with a brace of courtezans,
 But meditating with two deep divines;
 Not sleeping, to engross³ his idle body,
 But praying, to enrich his watchful soul:
 Happy were England, would this virtuous prince
 Take on himself the sovereignty thereof:
 But, sure, I fear, we shall ne'er win him to it.

Mayor. Marry, God defend his grace should say us nay! [again:—

Buck. I fear, he will: here Catesby comes Re-enter Catesby.

Catesby, what says your lord? [sembled

Cates. He wonders to what end you have as-
 Such troops of citizens to come to him,
 His grace not being warn'd thereof before:
 He fears, my lord, you mean no good to him.

Buck. Sorry I am, my noble cousin should Suspect me, that I mean no good to him:
 By heaven, we come to him in perfect love;
 And so once more return and tell his grace.
 [Exit Catesby.]

When holy and devout religious men
 Are at their beads, 'tis hard to draw them thence:
 So sweet is zealous contemplation.

Enter Gloster above, between two Bishops. Catesby returns.

Mayor. See, where his grace stands 'tween two clergymen!

¹ i. e. seen in silence, without notice or detection.
 pimper.

² i. e. pretend.

³ i. e. to fatten; to

Buck. Two props of virtue for a christian prince,
To stay him from the fall of vanity:
And, see, a book of prayer in his hand;
True ornaments to know a holy man.—
Famous Plantagenet, most gracious prince,
Lend favourable ear to our requests;
And pardon us the interruption
Of thy devotion, and right-christian zeal.

Glo. My lord, there needs no such apology;
I rather do beseech you pardon me,
Who, earnest in the service of my God,
Deferr'd the visitation of my friends.

But, leaving this, what is your grace's pleasure?

Buck. Even that, I hope, which pleaseth God above,

And all good men of this ungovern'd isle.

Glo. I do suspect, I have done some offence,
That seems disgracious in the city's eye;

And that you come to reprehend my ignorance.

Buck. You have, my lord; would it might please your grace,

On our entreaties, to amend your fault!

Glo. Else wherefore breathe I in a christian land?

Buck. Know, then, it is your fault, that you re-

The supreme seat, the throne majestical, [sign]

The scepter'd office of your ancestors,

Your state of fortune, and your due of birth,

The lineal glory of your royal house,

To the corruption of a blemish'd stock:

Whilst, in the mildness of your sleepy thoughts,

(Which here we waken to our country's good)

The noble isle doth want her proper limbs;

Her face defac'd with scars of infamy,

Her royal stock graft with ignoble plants,

And almost shoulder'd¹ in the swallowing gulph

Of dark forgetfulness and deep oblivion.

Which to recure², we heartily solicit

Your gracious self to take on you the charge

And kingly government of this your land:

Not as protector, steward, substitute,

Or lowly factor for another's gain;

But as successively, from blood to blood,

Your right of birth, your empery, your own.

For this, consorted with the citizens,

Your very worshipful and loving friends,

And by their vehement instigation,

In this just suit come I to move your grace.

Glo. I cannot tell, if to depart in silence,

Or bitterly to speak in your reproof,

Best fitteth my degree, or your condition:

For, not to answer, you might haply think,

Tongue-ty'd ambition, not replying, yielded

To bear the golden yoke of sovereignty,

Which fondly you would here impose on me;

If to reprove you for this suit of yours,

So season'd with your faithful love to me,

Then, on the other side, I check'd my friends,

Therefore,—to speak, and to avoid the first;

And then, in speaking, not to incur the last,—

Definitively thus I answer you.

Your love deserves my thanks; but my desert

Unmeritable, shuns your high request.

First, if all obstacles were cut away,

And that my path were even to the crown,
As the ripe revenue and due of birth;
Yet so much is my poverty of spirit,
So mighty, and so many, my defects,

5 That I would rather hide me from my greatness,—
Being a bark to brook no mighty sea,—

Than in my greatness covet to be hid,

And in the vapour of my glory smother'd.

But God be thank'd, there is no need of me;

10 (And much I need to help you, if need were;)

The royal tree hath left us royal fruit,

Which, mellow'd by the stealing hours of time,

Will well become the seat of majesty,

And make, no doubt, us happy by his reign.

15 On him I lay what you would lay on me,

The right and fortune of his happy stars,—

Which God defend that I should wring from him!

Buck. My lord, this argues conscience in your grace;

20 But the respects thereof are nice and trivial,

All circumstances well considered.

You say, that Edward is your brother's son;

So say we too, but not by Edward's wife:

For first was he contract to lady Lucy,

25 Your mother lives a witness to his vow;

And afterwards by substitute betroth'd

To Bona, sister to the king of France.

These both put by, a poor petitioner,

A care-craz'd mother to a many sons,

30 A beauty-waning and distressed widow,

Even in the afternoon of her best days,

Made prize and purchase of his wanton eye,

Seduc'd the pitch and height of all his thoughts

To base declension and loath'd bigamy:

35 By her, in his unlawful bed, he got

This Edward, whom our manners call—the prince.

More bitterly could I expostulate,

Save that, for reverence to some alive,

I give a sparing limit to my tongue.

40 Then, good my lord, take to your royal self

This proffer'd benefit of dignity:

If not to bless us and the land withal,

Yet to draw forth your noble ancestry

From the corruption of abusing time,

45 Unto a lineal true-derived course. [you.

Mayor. Do, good my lord; your citizens entreat

Buck. Refuse not, mighty lord, this proffer'd love. [suit.

Cates. O, make them joyful, grant their lawful

50 Glo. Alas, why would you heap these cares on

I am unfit for state and majesty:— [me?

I do beseech you, take it not amiss;

I cannot, nor I will not, yield to you.

Buck. If you refuse it,—as in love and zeal,

55 Loth to depose the child, your brother's son;

(As well we know your tenderness of heart,

And gentle, kind, effeminate remorse³,

Which we have noted in you to your kindred.

And equally, indeed, to all estates;)

60 Yet know, whe'r you accept our suit or no,

Your brother's son shall never reign our king;

But we will plant some other in the throne,

To the disgrace and downfall of your house.

¹ i. e. immersed up to the shoulders.

² i. e. recover.

³ i. e. pity.

And, in this resolution, here we leave you;—
Come, citizens, we will entreat no more. [Exeunt.
Cates. Call them again, sweet prince, accept their suit;
If you deny them, all the land will rue it.
Glo. Will you enforce me to a world of cares?
Well, call them again; I am not made of stone,
[Exit Catesby.
But penetrable to your kind entreaties,
Albeit against my conscience and my soul.—
Re-enter Buckingham, and the rest.
Cousin of Buckingham,—and sage, grave men,—
Since you will buckle fortune on my back,
To bear her burden, whe'r I will or no,
I must have patience to endure the load:
But if black scandal, or foul-fac'd reproach,
Attend the sequel of your imposition,
Your meer enforcement shall acquittance me

From all the impure blots and stains thereof;
For God doth know, and you may partly see,
How far I am from the desire of this.
Mayor. God bless your grace! we see it, and will say it.
Glo. In saying so, you shall but say the truth.
Buck. Then I salute you with this royal title,—
Long live king Richard, England's worthy king!
All. Amen. [crown'd?
Buck. To-morrow may it please you to be
Glo. Even when you please, for you will have it so.
Buck. To-morrow then we will attend your grace;
And so, most joyfully, we take our leave.
Glo. [To the Clergymen.] Come, let us to our holy work again:—
Farewell, good cousin;—farewell, gentle friends, [Exeunt.

A C T IV.

S C E N E I.

Before the Tower.

Enter the Queen, Dutchess of York, and Marquis of Dorset, at one door; Anne Dutchess of Gloster, leading Lady Margaret Plantagenet, Clarence's young daughter, at the other.

Dutch. WH O meets us here?—my niece
Plantagenet,

Led in the hand of her kind aunt of Gloster?
Now, for my life, she's wand'ring to the Tower,
On pure heart's love, to greet the tender prince.—
Daughter, well met.

Anne. God give your graces both
A happy and a joyful time of day! [away?

Queen. As much to you, good sister! Whither

Anne. No further than the Tower; and, as I
Upon the like devotion as yourselves, [guess,
To gratulate the gentle princes there. [ther?

Queen. Kind sister, thanks; we'll enter all toge-

Enter Brakenbury.

And, in good time, here the lieutenant comes.—
Master lieutenant, pray you, by your leave,
How doth the prince, and my young son of York?

Brak. Right well, dear madam: By your patience,
I may not suffer you to visit them;
The king hath strictly charg'd the contrary.

Queen. The king! who's that?

Brak. I mean, the lord protector. [title?

Queen. The lord protect him from that kingly
Hath he set bounds between their love and me?
I am their mother, Who shall bar me from them?

Dutch. I am their father's mother, I will see them.

Anne. Their aunt am I in law, in love their mother:

Then bring me to their sights; I'll bear thy blame,
And take thy office from thee, on my peril.

Brak. No, madam, no, I may not leave it so;

I am bound by oath, and therefore pardon me.

[Exit Brakenbury.

Enter Stanley. [hence,

Stan. Let me but meet you, ladies, one hour
And I'll salute your grace of York as mother,
And reverend looker-on, of two fair queens.—
Come, madam, you must straight to Westminster,

[To the Dutchess of Gloster.

There to be crowned Richard's royal queen.

Queen. Ah, cut my lace asunder!

That my pent heart may have some scope to beat,
Or else I swoon with this dead-killing news.

Anne. Despightful tidings! O unpleasing news!

Dor. Be of good chear:—Mother, how fares your grace? [gone,

Queen. O Dorset, speak not to me, get thee
Death and destruction dog thee at the heels;
Thy mother's name is ominous to children:

If thou wilt out-strip death, go cross the seas,
And live with Richmond, from the reach of hell,
Go, hie thee, hie thee from this slaughter-house,
Lest thou increase the number of the dead;

And make me die the thrall of Margaret's curse,—
Nor mother, wife, nor England's counted queen.

Stanl. Full of wise care is this your counsel, madam:—

Take all the swift advantage of the hours:

You shall have letters from me to my son

In your behalf, to meet you on the way:

Be not ta'en tardy by unwise delay.

Dutch. O ill-dispersing wind of misery!—

O my accursed womb, the bed of death;

A cockatrice hast thou hatch'd to the world,

Whose unavowed eye is murderous! [sent.

Stan. Come, madam, come; I in all haste was Anne. And I with all unwillingness will go.—

O, would to God, that the inclusive verge

Of golden metal, that must round my brow,

Were

Were red-hot steel, to sear me to the brain!¹
 Anointed let me be with deadly venom;
 And die, ere men can say—God save the queen!

Queen. Go, go, poor soul, I envy not thy glory;

To feed my humour, wish thyself no harm:

Anne. No! why?—When he, that is my husband now,

Came to me, as I follow'd Henry's corse; [hands,
 When scarce the blood was well wash'd from his

Which issued from my other angel husband;

And that dead saint which then I weeping follow'd;

O, when, I say, I look'd on Richard's face,

This was my wish,—Be thou, quoth I, accurs'd,

For making me, so young, so old a widow!

And, when thou wed'st, let sorrow haunt thy bed;

And be thy wife (if any be so mad)

More miserable by the life of thee,

Than thou hast made me by my dear lord's death!

Lo; ere I can repeat this curse again;

E'en in so short a space, my woman's heart

Grossly grew captive to his honey words,

And prov'd the subject of mine own soul's curse:

Which ever since hath held mine eyes from rest;

For never yet one hour in his bed

Did I enjoy the golden dew of sleep,

But with his timorous dreams was still awak'd.

Besides, he hates me for my father Warwick;

And will, no doubt, shortly be rid of me:

Queen. Poor heart, adieu; I pity thy complaining.

Anne. No more than with my soul I mourn for yours.

Dor. Farewell, thou woeful welcomer of glory!

Anne. Adieu, poor soul, thou tak'st thy leave of it!

Dutch. Go thou to Richmond, and good fortune guide thee!— [To Dorset.

Go thou to Richard, and good angels tend thee!—

[To Anne.

Go thou to sanctuary; and good thoughts possess thee!

[To the Queen.

I to my grave, where peace and rest lie with me!

Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,

And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen².

Queen. Stay yet; look back, with me, unto the Tower.—

Pity, you ancient stones, those tender babes,

Whom envy hath immur'd within your walls!

Rough cradle for such little pretty ones!

Rude ragged nurse! old sullen play-fellow

For tender princes, use my babies well!

So foolish sorrow bids your stones farewell.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.

The Court.

Flourish of trumpets. Enter Richard, as King, Buckingham, Catesby, a Page, and others.

K. Rich. Stand all apart.—Cousin of Bucking-

Buck. My gracious sovereign. [ham,—

K. Rich. Give me thy hand. Thus high, by thy advice,

And thy assistance, is king Richard seated:—

But shall we wear these glories for a day?

Or shall they last, and we rejoice in them?

Buck. Still live they, and for ever let them last!

K. Rich. Ah, Buckingham, now do I play the touch³,

To try if thou be current gold indeed:— [speak.
 Young Edward lives;—Think now what I would

Buck. Say on, my loving lord.

K. Rich. Why, Buckingham, I say, I would be king. [liege.

Buck. Why, so you are, my thrice-renowned

K. Henry: Ha! am I king? 'tis so: but Edward

Buck. True, noble prince. [lives.

K. Rich. O bitter consequence, [prince!—

That Edward still should live—True! noble

Cousin, thou wast not wont to be so dull:—

Shall I be plain? I wish the bastards dead;

And I would have it suddenly perform'd.

What say'st thou now? speak suddenly, be brief.

Buck. Your grace may do your pleasure.

K. Rich. Tut, tut, thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes:

Say, have I thy consent, that they shall die?

Buck. Give me some breath, some little pause,

Before I positively speak in this: [dear lord,

I will resolve your grace immediately.

[Exit Buckingham.

Cates. The king is angry; see, he gnaws his lip.

K. Rich. I will converse with iron-witted fools,

And unrespective⁴ boys; none are for me,

That look into me with considerate eyes:—

High-reaching Buckingham grows circumspect.--

Boy!—

Page. My lord. [gold

K. Rich. Know'st thou not any, whom corrupting

Would tempt unto a close exploit⁵ of death?

Page. I know a discontented gentleman,

Whose humble means match not his haughty

Gold were as good as twenty orators, [mind:

And will, no doubt, tempt him to any thing.

K. Rich. What is his name?

Page. His name, my lord, is—Tyrrel.

K. Rich. I partly know the man: Go, call him hither, boy.— [Exit boy.

The deep-revolving witty⁶ Buckingham

No more shall be the neighbour to my counsels:

Hath he so long held out with me untir'd,

And stops he now for breath?—Well, be it so.—

Enter Stanley.

How now, lord Stanley? what's the news?

Stan. Know, my loving lord,

The marquis Dorset, as I hear, is fled

To Richmond, in the parts where he abides.

K. Rich. Come hither, Catesby: rumour is abroad,

That Anne my wife is very grievous sick;

I will take order for her keeping close.

Enquire me out some mean-born gentleman,

¹ This seems to allude to the ancient mode of punishing a regicide, viz. by placing a crown of iron heated red-hot, upon his head. ² i.e. sorrow. ³ To play the touch, means, to represent the touchstone.

⁴ i.e. inattentive, inconsiderate. ⁵ i.e. secret act. ⁶ Witty implies in this place judicious, or cunning. A wit was not in our author's time employed to signify a man of fancy, but was used for wisdom or judgement.

Whom I will marry straight to Clarence' daugh-
The boy is foolish, and I fear not him.— [ter:—
Look, how thou dream'st!—I say again, give out,
That Anne my queen is sick, and like to die:
About it; for it stands me much upon,
To stop all hopes, whose growth may damage
me. [Exit Catesby.]

I must be marry'd to my brother's daughter,
Or else my kingdom stands on brittle glass:—
Murder her brothers, and then marry her!
Uncertain way of gain! But I am in
So far in blood, that sin will pluck on sin.
Tear-falling pity dwells not in this eye.—

Enter Tyrrel.

Is thy name—Tyrrel? [subject.

Tyr. James Tyrrel, and your most obedient

K. Rich. Art thou, indeed?

Tyr. Prove me, my gracious lord. [mine?

K. Rich. Dar'st thou resolve to kill a friend of Tyr. Please you, but I had rather kill two enemies. [mies,

K. Rich. Why, then thou hast it; two deep ene-
Foes to my rest, and my sweet sleep's disturbers,
Are they that I would have thee deal upon:
Tyrrel, I mean those bastards in the Tower.

Tyr. Let me have open means to come to them,
And soon I'll rid you from the fear of them.

K. Rich. Thou sing'st sweet music. Hark,
come hither, Tyrrel;

Go, by this token:—Rise, and lend thine ear:

[Whispers.

There is no more but so:—Say, it is done,

And I will love thee, and prefer thee for it.

Tyr. I will dispatch it straight. [Exit.

Re-enter Buckingham.

Buck. My lord, I have consider'd in my mind
The late demand that you did sound me in.

K. Rich. Well, let that rest. Dorset is fled to Buck. I hear the news, my lord. [Richmond.

K. Rich. Stanley, he is your wife's son:—Well, look to it. [mise,

Buck. My lord, I claim the gift, my due by pro-
For which your honour and your faith is pawn'd;
The earldom of Hereford, and the moveables,
Which you have promised I shall possess.

K. Rich. Stanley, look to your wife, if she convey Letters to Richmond, you shall answer it.

Buck. What says your highness to my just request?

K. Rich. I do remember me,—Henry the sixth
Did prophesy, that Richmond should be king,
When Richmond was a little peevish boy.

A king!—perhaps—

Buck. My lord,— [that time

K. Rich. How chance, the prophet could not at
Have told me, I being by, that I should kill him?

Buck. My lord, your promise for the earldom,—

K. Rich. Richmond!—When last I was at Exeter,
The mayor in court'sy shew'd me the castle,
And call'd it—Rouge-mont: at which name, I started;

Because a bard of Ireland told me once,
I should not live long after I saw Richmond.

Buck. My lord,—

K. Rich. Ay, what's o'clock?

Buck. I am thus bold to put your grace in mind
Of what you promis'd me.

K. Rich. Well, but what's o'clock?

Buck. Upon the stroke of ten.

K. Rich. Well, let it strike.

Buck. Why let it strike?

K. Rich. Because that, like a Jack¹, thou keep'st the stroke

Betwixt thy begging and my meditation.

I am not in the giving vein to-day. [or no.

Buck. Why, then resolve me whe'r you will

K. Rich. Thou troublest me; I am not in the vein. [Exit.

Buck. Is it even so? repays he my deep service
With such contempt? made I him king for this?

O, let me think on Hastings; and be gone
I o Brecknock, while my fearful head is on. [Exit.

SCENE III.

Enter Tyrrel.

Tyr. The tyrannous and bloody act is done;
The most arch deed of piteous massacre,
That ever yet this land was guilty of!

Dighton, and Forrest, whom I did suborn
To do this piece of ruthless butchery,

Albeit they were flesh'd villains, bloody dogs,
Melting with tenderness and mild compassion,

Wept like two children, in their deaths' sad story,
O thus, quoth Dighton, lay the gentle babes;—

Thus, thus, quoth Forrest, girdling one another
Within their alabaster innocent arms:

Their lips were four red roses on a stalk,
Which, in their summer beauty, kiss'd each other.

A book of prayers on their pillow lay;
Which once, quoth Forrest, almost chang'd my mind:

But, O, the devil—there the villain stopp'd;
When Dighton thus told on,—we smothered

The most replenished sweet work of nature,
That, from the prime creation, ere she fram'd.—

Hence both are gone with conscience and remorse,
They could not speak; and so I left them both,

To bear these tidings to the bloody king.

Enter King Richard.

And here he comes:—All health, my sovereign
lord!

K. Rich. Kind Tyrrel! am I happy in thy news?

Tyr. If to have done the thing you gave in charge
Beget your happiness, be happy then,
For it is done.

K. Rich. But didst thou see them dead?

Tyr. I did, my lord.

K. Rich. And buried, gentle Tyrrel?

Tyr. The chaplain of the Tower hath buried them;
But where, to say the truth, I do not know.

K. Rich. Come to me, Tyrrel, soon after supper,
When thou shalt tell the process of their death.

¹ An image like those at St. Dunstan's church in Fleet-street, and at the market-houses at several towns in this kingdom, was usually called a Jack of the clock-house.—Perhaps these figures were called Jacks, because the engines of that name which turn the spit were anciently ornamented with such a puppet.

Mean time, but think how I may do thee good,
And be inheritor of thy desire.

Farewell, 'till then.

Tyr. I humbly take my leave. [Exit.]

K. Rich. The son of Clarence have I penn'd up close;

His daughter meanly have I match'd in marriage;
The sons of Edward sleep in Abraham's bosom,
And Anne my wife hath bid the world good night.
Now, for I know the Bretagne Richmond aims
At young Elizabeth, my brother's daughter,
And, by that knot, looks proudly on the crown,
To her go I, a jolly thriving wooer.

Enter Catesby.

Cates. My lord,—

K. Rich. Good news or bad, that thou com'st in so bluntly? [Richmond;]

Cates. Bad news, my lord: Morton is fled to
And Buckingham, back'd with the hardy Welsh-
Is in the field, and still his power increaseth. [men,]

K. Rich. Ely with Richmond troubles me more near,

Than Buckingham and his rash-levied strength.
Come,—I have learn'd, that fearful commenting
Is leaden servitor to dull delay¹;

Delay leads impotent and snail-pac'd beggary:

Then fiery expedition be my wing,

Jove's Mercury, and herald for a king!

Go, muster men; My counsel is my shield;

We must be brief, when traitors brave the field. [Exit.]

SCENE IV.

Enter Queen Margaret.

2. Mar. So, now prosperity begins to mellow,
And drop into the rotten mouth of death.
Here in these confines sily have I lurk'd,
To watch the waining of mine enemies.

A dire induction² am I witness to,
And will to France; hoping, the consequence
Will prove as bitter, black, and tragical.—[here?]
Withdraw thee, wretched Margaret! who comes

Enter the Queen and the Dutchess of York.

Queen. Ah, my poor princes! ah, my tender babes!
My unblown flowers, new-appearing sweets!
If yet your gentle souls fly in the air,
And be not fix'd in doom perpetual,
Hover about me with your airy wings,
And hear your mother's lamentation! [right³]

2. Mar. Hover about her; say, that right for Hath dimm'd your infant morn to aged night.

Dutch. So many miseries have craz'd my voice,
That my woe-wearied tongue is still and mute.—
Edward Plantagenet, why art thou dead?

2. Mar. Plantagenet doth quit Plantagenet,
Edward for Edward pays a dying debt. [lambs,]

Queen. Wilt thou, O God! fly from such gentle
And throw them in the entrails of the wolf?
Why didst thou sleep, when such a deed was done?

2. Mar. When holy Henry dy'd, and my sweet son! [ghost,]

Dutch. Dead life, blind sight, poor mortal living Woe's scene, world's shame, grave's due by life
usurp'd,

Brief abstract and record of tedious days,
Rest thy unrest on England's lawful earth,

[Sitting down.]

Unlawfully made drunk with innocent blood!

Queen. Ah, that thou wouldst as soon afford
As thou canst yield a melancholy seat; [grave,]
Then would I hide my bones, not rest them here!
Ah, who hath any cause to mourn, but we?

[Sitting down by her.]

2. Mar. If ancient sorrow be most reverent,
Give mine the benefit of⁴ signiory,
And let my griefs frown on the upper hand.

[Sitting down with them.]

If sorrow can admit society,

Tell o'er your woes again by viewing mine:—

I had an Edward, 'till a Richard kill'd him;

I had a husband, 'till a Richard kill'd him:

Thou hadst an Edward, 'till a Richard kill'd him;

Thou hadst a Richard, 'till a Richard kill'd him.

Dutch. I had a Richard too, and thou didst kill
him;

I had a Rutland too, thou help'st to kill him.

2. Mar. Thou hadst a Clarence too, and Richard kill'd him.

From forth the kennel of thy womb hath crept
A hell-hound, that doth hunt us all to death:

That dog that had his teeth before his eyes,

To worry lambs, and lap their gentle blood;

That foul defacer of God's handy-work;

That excellent grand tyrant of the earth,

That reigns in galled eyes of weeping souls,

Thy womb let loose, to chase us to our graves.—

O upright, just, and true-disposing God,

How do I thank thee, that this carnal cur

Preys on the issue of his mother's body,

And makes her⁵ pue-fellow with others' moan!

Dutch. O, Harry's wife, triumph not in my woes;

God witness with me, I have wept for thine!

2. Mar. Bear with me; I am hungry for revenge,

And now I cloy me with beholding it.

Thy Edward he is dead, that kill'd my Edward;

Thy other Edward dead, to quit my Edward;

Young York he is but boot⁶, because both they Match not the high perfection of my loss.

Thy Clarence he is dead, that stabb'd my Edward;

And the beholders of this tragic play,

The adulterate⁷ Hastings, Rivers, Vaughan, Grey,

Untimely smother'd in their dusky graves.

Richard yet lives, hell's black intelligencer;

Only reserv'd their factor, to buy souls,

And send them thither: But at hand, at hand,

Ensues his piteous and unpitied end:

⁴ Signiory is here used for seniority. ⁵ Pue-fellow seems to be companion.—We still say of persons in the same difficulties, that they are in the same box. ⁶ Boot is that which is thrown in to mend a purchase.

⁷ i.e. Faithless: or adulterate may be put for adulterer.

Earth gapes, hell burns, fiends roar, saints pray,
To have him suddenly convey'd from hence:—
Cancel his bond of life, dear God, I pray,
That I may live to say, The dog is dead! [come,

Queen. O, thou didst prophesy, the time would
That I should wish for thee to help me curse
That bottled spider, that foul hunch-back'd toad.

2. Mar. I call'd thee then vain flourish of my fortune;

I call'd thee then poor shadow, painted queen;
The presentation of but what I was,
The flatt'ring index of a direful pageant¹,
One heav'd a-high, to be hurl'd down below;
A mother only mock'd with two fair babes;
A dream of what thou wast; a garish flag,
To be the aim of every dangerous shot²;
A sign of dignity, a breath, a bubble;
A queen in jest, only to fill the scene.

Where is thy husband now? where be thy brothers?
Where be thy two sons? wherein dost thou joy?
Who sues, and kneels, and says—God save the queen?

Where be the bending peers that flatter'd thee?
Where be the thronging troops that follow'd thee?
Decline all this, and see what now thou art.

For happy wife, a most distressed widow;
For joyful mother, one that wails the name;
For one being su'd to, one that humbly sues;
For queen, a very caitiff crown'd with care;
For one that scorn'd at me, now scorn'd of me;
For one being fear'd of all, now fearing one;
For one commanding all, obey'd of none.

Thus hath the course of justice wheel'd about,
And left thee but a very prey to time;
Having no more but thought of what thou wert,
To torture thee the more, being what thou art.

Thou didst usurp my place: And dost thou not
Usurp the just proportion of my sorrow?

Now thy proud neck bears half my burden'd yoke;
From which even here I slip my wearied head,
And leave the burden of it all on thee.

Farewell, York's wife, and queen of sad mischance,
These English woes shall make me smile in France.

Queen. O thou well skill'd in curses! stay a while,
And teach me how to curse mine enemies.

2. Mar. Forbear to sleep the night, and fast
the day;

Compare dead happiness with living woe;
Think that thy babes were fairer than they were,
And he that slew them, fouler than he is:
Bettering thy loss makes the bad causer worse;
Revolving this will teach thee how to curse.

Queen. My words are dull; O, quicken them with thine!

2. Mar. Thy woes will make them sharp, and pierce like mine. [Exit Margaret.

Dutch. Why should calamity be full of words?

Queen. Windy attorneys to their client-woes,
Airy succeders of intestate³ joys,
Poor breathing orators of miseries! [part

Let them have scope: though what they do im-
Help nothing else, yet they do ease the heart. [me,

Dutch. If so, then be not tongue-ty'd: go with
And in the breath of bitter words let's smother
My damned son, that thy two sweet sons smo-ther'd. [Drum, within.

I hear his drum,—be copious in exclams.

Enter King Richard, and his train, marching.

K. Rich. Who intercepts me in my expedition?

Dutch. O, she, that might have intercepted thee,
By strangling thee in her accursed womb,
From all the slaughters, wretch, that thou hast
done. [crown,

Queen. Hid'st thou that forehead with a golden
Where should be branded, if that right were right,
The slaughter of the prince that ow'd that crown,
And the dire death of my poor sons, and brothers?
Tell me, thou villain-slave, where are my children?

Dutch. Thou toad, thou toad, where is thy brother Clarence?

And little Ned Plantagenet his son? [Grey?

Queen. Where is the gentle Rivers, Vaughan,
Dutch. Where is kind Hastings? [drums!

K. Rich. A flourish, trumpets! strike alarum,
Let not the heavens hear these tell-tale women
Rail on the Lord's anointed: Strike, I say.—

[Flourish. Alarums.
Either be patient, and entreat me fair,
Or with the clamorous report of war,
Thus will I drown your exclamations.

Dutch. Art thou my son? [self.

K. Rich. Ay, I thank God, my father, and your-

Dutch. Then patiently hear my impatience.

K. Rich. Madam, I have a touch⁴ of your condition,

That cannot brook the accent of reproof.

Dutch. O, let me speak.

K. Rich. Do, then; but I'll not hear.

Dutch. I will be mild and gentle in my words.

K. Rich. And brief, good mother; for I am in haste.

Dutch. Art thou so hasty? I have stay'd for thee,
God knows, in torment and in agony.

K. Rich. And came I not at last to comfort you?

Dutch. No, by the holy rood, thou know'st it
well,

Thou cam'st on earth to make the earth my hell.
A grievous burden was thy birth to me;

Tetchy and wayward was thy infancy;

More mild, but yet more harmful, kind in hatred:
What comfortable hour canst thou name,
That ever grac'd¹ me in thy company?

K. Rich. Faith, none, but Humphry Houre², that call'd your grace

To breakfast once, forth of my company.

If I be so disgracious in your sight,

Let me march on, and not offend you, madam.—

Strike up the drum.

Dutch. I pr'ythee, hear me speak.

K. Rich. You speak too bitterly.

Dutch. Hear me a word;

For I shall never speak to thee again.

K. Rich. So, [dinance,

Dutch. Either thou wilt die, by God's just or- 15

Ere from this war thou turn a conqueror;

Or I with grief and extreme age shall perish,

And never look upon thy face again.

Therefore, take with thee my most heavy curse;

Which, in the day of battle, tire thee more, 20

Than all the complete armour that thou wear'st!

My prayers on the adverse party fight;

And there the little souls of Edward's children

Whisper the spirits of thine enemies,

And promise them success and victory!

Bloody thou art, bloody will be thy end;

Shame serves³ thy life, and doth thy death attend. [Exit.

Queen. Though far more cause, yet much less spirit to curse

Abides in me; I say Amen to her. [Going.

K. Rich. Stay, madam, I must speak a word
with you.

Queen. I have no more sons of the royal blood,
For thee to murder: for my daughters, Richard, 35
They shall be praying nuns, not weeping queens;
And therefore level not to hit their lives.

K. Rich. You have a daughter call'd—Elizabeth,
Virtuous and fair, royal and gracious. [live,

Queen. And must she die for this? O, let her 40

And I'll corrupt her manners, stain her beauty;

Slander myself, as false to Edward's bed;

Throw over her the veil of infamy:

So she may live unscarr'd of bleeding slaughter,
I will confess she was not Edward's daughter. 45

K. Rich. Wrong not her birth, she is of royal blood.

Queen. To save her life, I'll say—she is not so.

K. Rich. Her life is safest only in her birth.

Queen. And only in that safety dy'd her brothers. 50

K. Rich. Lo, at their births good stars were Queen. No, to their lives bad friends were

K. Rich. All unavoided is the doom of destiny.

Queen. True, when avoided grace makes destiny: 55

My babes were destin'd to a fairer death,

If grace had bless'd thee with a fairer life.

K. Rich. You speak, as if that I had slain my cousins. [cozen'd

Queen. Cousins, indeed; and by their uncle 60

Of comfort, kingdom, kindred, freedom, life.

Whose hands soever lanc'd their tender hearts,

Thy head, all indirectly, gave direction:

No doubt the murderous knife was dull and blunt,

5 'Till it was whetted on thy stone-hard heart,

To revel in the entrails of my lambs.

But that still use of grief makes wild grief tame,

My tongue should to thy ears not name my boys,

'Till that my nails were anchor'd in thine eyes;

10 And I, in such a desperate bay of death,

Like a poor bark, of sails and tackling reft,

Rush all to pieces on thy rocky bosom.

K. Rich. Madam, so thrive I in my enterprize,

And dangerous success of bloody wars,

15 As I intend more good to you and yours,

Than ever you or yours by me were harm'd!

Queen. What good is cover'd with the face of heaven,

To be discover'd, that can do me good?

Tell me, what state, what dignity, what honour,

Canst thou demise to any child of mine? [all,

30 K. Rich. Even all I have; ay, and myself and Will I withal endow a child of thine;

So in the Lethè of thy angry soul

Thou drown the sad remembrance of those wrongs,
Which, thou supposest, I have done to thee.

Queen. Be brief, lest that the process of thy

And, from my heart's love, I do thank thee for it,

45 K. Rich. Be not so hasty to confound my meaning:

I mean, that with my soul I love thy daughter,

And do intend to make her queen of England.

Queen. Well then, who dost thou mean shall be her king?

K. Rich. Even he that makes her queen; Who else should be?

Queen. What, thou? [madam?

K. Rich. I, even I: What think you of it,

Queen. How canst thou woo her?

K. Rich. That I would learn of you,

As one being best acquainted with her humour.

Queen. And wilt thou learn of me?

K. Rich. Madam, with all my heart. [brothers,

Queen. Send to her, by the man that slew her

The purple sap from her sweet brothers' bodies,

K. Rich. You mock me, madam; this is not
To win your daughter.

Queen. There is no other way;
Unless thou could'st put on some other shape,
And not be Richard that hath done all this.

K. Rich. Say, that I did all this for love of her?

Queen. Nay, then indeed, she cannot chuse but hate thee,

Having bought love with such a bloody spoil¹.

K. Rich. Look, what is done cannot be now amended:

Men shall deal unadvisedly sometimes,
Which after-hours give leisure to repent.
If I did take the kingdom from your sons,
To make amends, I'll give it to your daughter.

If I have kill'd the issue of your womb,
To quicken your increase, I will beget
Mine issue of your blood upon your daughter.

A grandam's name is little less in love,

Than is the doting title of a mother;

They are as children, but one step below,

Even of your metal, of your very blood;

Of all one pain,—save for a night of groans

Endur'd of her, for whom you bid² like sorrow.

Your children were vexation to your youth,

But mine shall be a comfort to your age.

The loss you have, is but—a son being king,

And, by that loss, your daughter is made queen.

I cannot make you what amends I would,

Therefore accept such kindness as I can,

Dorset your son, that, with a fearful soul,

Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,

This fair alliance quickly shall call home

To high promotions and great dignity.

The king, that calls your beautiful daughter—wife,

Familiarly shall call thy Dorset—brother;

Again shall you be mother to a king,

And all the ruins of distressful times

Repair'd with double riches of content.

What! we have many goodly days to see:

The liquid drops of tears that you have shed,

Shall come again, transform'd to orient pearl;

Advantaging their loan, with interest

Of ten times double gain of happiness.

Go then, my mother, to thy daughter go;

Make bold her bashful years with your experience;

Prepare her ears to hear a wooer's tale;

Put in her tender heart the aspiring flame
Of golden sov'reignty; acquaint the princess
With the sweet silent hours of marriage joys;
And when this arm of mine hath chastised
The petty rebel, dull-brain'd Buckingham,
Bound with triumphant garlands will I come,
And lead thy daughter to a conqueror's bed;
To whom I will retail my conquest won,
And she shall be sole victress, Caesar's Caesar.

Queen. What were I best to say? her father's brother

Would be her lord? Or shall I say, her uncle?

Or, he that slew her brothers, and her uncles?

Under what title shall I woo for thee,

That God, the law, my honour, and her love,

Can make seem pleasing to her tender years?

Queen. But how long fairly shall her sweet life last? [it.]

K. Rich. As long as heaven, and nature, lengthens

Queen. By nothing; for this is no oath.

The george, profan'd, hath lost his holy honour;

The garter, blemish'd, pawn'd his knightly virtue;

K. Rich. The crown, usurp'd, disgrac'd his kingly glory;

If something thou wouldst swear to be believ'd,
Swear then by something that thou hast not wrong'd.

K. Rich. Now by the world,—

Queen. 'Tis full of thy foul wrongs.

² Bid is in the past sense from bide.

³ Alluding to the prohibition in the Levitical law. See Leviticus xviii. 14.

K. Rich. My father's death,—

Queen. Thy life hath that dishonour'd.

K. Rich. Then, by myself,—

Queen. Thyself is self-mis-us'd.

K. Rich. Why then, by heaven,—

Queen. Heaven's wrong is most of all.

If thou didst fear to break an oath with heaven,
The unity, the king my husband made,
Had not been broken, nor my brother slain.
If thou hadst fear'd to break an oath by him,
The imperial metal, circling now thy head,
Had grac'd the tender temples of my child,
And both the princes had been breathing here,
Which now, two tender bed-fellows for dust,
Thy broken faith hath made a prey for worms.
What canst thou swear by now?

K. Rich. By time to come. [o'erpast;

Queen. That thou hast wronged in the time
For I myself have many tears to wash
Hereafter time, for time past, wrong'd by thee.
The children live, whose parents thou hast
slaughter'd,
Ungovern'd youth, to wail it in their age.
The parents live, whose children thou hast butcher'd,

Old barren plants, to wail it with their age.
Swear not by time to come; for that thou hast
Misus'd ere us'd, by times ill-us'd o'er-past.

K. Rich. As I intend to prosper, and repent!
So thrive I in my dangerous attempt
Of hostile arms! myself myself confound!
Heaven, and fortune, bar me happy hours!
Day, yield me not thy light; nor, night, thy rest!
Be opposite all planets of good luck
To my proceeding, if, with pure heart's love,
Immaculate devotion, holy thoughts,
I tender not thy beauteous princely daughter!
In her consists my happiness, and thine;
Without her, follows to myself, and thee,
Herself, the land, and many a christian soul,
Death, desolation, ruin, and decay:
It cannot be avoided, but by this;
It will not be avoided, but by this;
Therefore, dear mother, (I must call you so)
Be the attorney of my love to her:
Plead what I will be, not what I have been;
Not my deserts, but what I will deserve:
Urge the necessity and state of times,
And be not peevish found in great designs.

Queen. Shall I be tempted of the devil thus?

K. Rich. Ay, if the devil tempt thee to do good.

Queen. Shall I forget myself, to be myself?

K. Rich. Ay, if yourself's remembrance wrong yourself.

Queen. But thou didst kill my children.

K. Rich. But in your daughter's womb I bury
them:

Where, in that nest of spicery¹, they shall breed
Selves of themselves, to your recomforture.

Queen. Shall I go win my daughter to thy will?

K. Rich. And be a happy mother by the deed.

Queen. I go.—Write to me very shortly,
And you shall understand from me her mind.

K. Rich. Bear her my true love's kiss, and so farewell. [Kissing her. Exit Queen.

5 Relenting fool, and shallow, changing woman!
How now? what news?

Enter Ratcliff, and Catesby.

Rat. Most mighty sovereign, on the western coast

10 Rideth a puissant navy; to the shore
Throng many doubtful hollow-hearted friends,
Unarm'd, and unresolv'd to beat them back;
'Tis thought, that Richmond is their admiral;
And there they hull, expecting but the aid
15 Of Buckingham, to welcome them ashore.

K. Rich. Some light-foot friend post to the duke of Norfolk;—

Ratcliff, thyself,—or Catesby; where is he?

20 Cates. Here, my good lord.

K. Rich. Catesby, fly to the duke.

Cates. I will, my lord, with all convenient haste.

K. Rich. Ratcliff, come hither; Post to Salisbury;
When thou com'st thither,—Dull unmindful villain,

25 [To Catesby.
Why stay'st thou here, and go'st not to the duke?

Cates. First, mighty liege, tell me your highness'
pleasure,

What from your grace I shall deliver to him.

30 K. Rich. O, true, good Catesby;—Bid him levy straight

The greatest strength and power he can make,
And meet me suddenly at Salisbury.

Cates. I go. [Exit.

35 Rat. What, may it please you, shall I do at Salisbury? [before I go?

K. Rich. Why, what wouldst thou do there,

Rat. Your highness told me, I should post
before.

40 Enter Lord Stanley.

K. Rich. My mind is chang'd.—Stanley, what news with you?

Stanl. None good, my liege, to please you with the hearing;

45 Nor none so bad, but well may be reported.

K. Rich. Heyday, a riddle! neither good, nor bad!
What need'st thou run so many miles about,
When thou may'st tell thy tale the nearest way?
Once more, what news?

50 Stanl. Richmond is on the seas.

K. Rich. There let him sink, and be the seas on him!

White-liver'd runagate, what doth he there?

Stanl. I know not, mighty sovereign, but by guess.

55 K. Rich. Well, as you guess? [Morton,

Stanl. Stir'd up by Dorset, Buckingham, and
He makes for England, here to claim the crown.

K. Rich. Is the chair empty? is the sword un-

60 sway'd?
Is the king dead? the empire unpossess'd?

What heir of York is there alive, but we?

And who is England's king, but great York's heir?

Then, tell me, what makes he upon the seas?

Stanl. Unless for that, my liege, I cannot guess.

K. Rich. Unless for that he comes to be your liege,
You cannot guess wherefore the Welshman comes.
Thou wilt revolt, and fly to him, I fear. [not.

Stanl. No, mighty liege; therefore mistrust me

K. Rich. Where is thy power, then, to beat him back?

Where be thy tenants, and thy followers?

Are they not now upon the western shore,
Safe-conducting the rebels from their ships?

Stanl. No, my good lord, my friends are in the north. [the north,

K. Rich. Cold friends to me; What do they in
When they should serve their sovereign in the west?

Stanl. They have not been commanded, mighty
king:

Pleaseth your majesty to give me leave,

I'll muster up my friends; and meet your grace,
Where, and what time, your majesty shall please.

K. Rich. Ay, ay, thou wouldst be gone to join with Richmond:

But I'll not trust you, sir,

Stanl. Most mighty sovereign,
You have no cause to hold my friendship doubtful;
I never was, nor never will be false.

K. Rich. Well, go, muster thy men. But, hear you, leave behind [firm,

Your son, George Stanley: look your heart be
Or else his head's assurance is but frail.

Stanl. So deal with him, as I prove true to you.

[Exit Stanley.]

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. My gracious sovereign, now in Devonshire,
As I by friends am well advertised,
Sir Edward Courtney, and the haughty prelate,
Bishop of Exeter, his elder brother,
With many more confederates, are in arms.

Enter a Messenger.

And every hour more competitors¹ [in arms;
Flock to the rebels, and their power grows strong.

ham—

K. Rich. Out on ye, owls! nothing but songs of death? [He strikes him.

There, take thou that, 'till thou bring better news.

3 Mes. The news I have to tell your majesty,
Is,—that, by sudden floods and fall of waters,
Buckingham's army is dispers'd and scatter'd;
And he himself wander'd away alone,
No man knows whither,

K. Rich. Oh, I cry you mercy:

There is my purse, to cure that blow of thine.

Hath any well-advised friend proclaim'd
Reward to him that brings the traitor in? [liege.

But this good comfort bring I to your highness,—

The Bretagne navy is dispers'd by tempest:

Richmond, in Dorsetshire, sent out a boat

Unto the shore, to ask those on the banks,

If they were his assistants, yea, or no;

Who answer'd him, they came from Buckingham

Upon his party; he, mistrusting them,

Hois'd sail, and made his course again for Bretagne.

K. Rich. March on, march on, since we are up

If not to fight with foreign enemies, [in arms;

Yet to beat down these rebels here at home.

Enter Catesby.

Cates. My liege, the duke of Buckingham is taken,

That is the best news: That the Earl of Richmond

Is with a mighty power landed at Milford,

Is colder news, but yet it must be told. [here,

K. Rich. Away towards Salisbury; while we reason

A royal battle might be won and lost:—

Some one take order, Buckingham be brought To Salisbury;—the rest march on with me.

Lord Stanley's House.

Enter Lord Stanley, and Sir Christopher Urswick.

Stanl. Sir Christopher², tell Richmond this from

That, in the sty of this most bloody boar [me;—

My son George Stanley is frank'd up in hold;

The fear of that withholds my present aid.

Stanl. What men of name resort to him? [Wales.

Chri. Sir Walter Herbert, a renown'd soldier;

Sir Gilbert Talbot, and Sir William Stanley;

And Rice ap Thomas, with a valiant crew;

And many other of great name and worth;

And towards London do they bend their course,

If by the way they be not fought withal. [to him;

Stanl. Well, hie thee to thy lord; commend me

Tell him, the queen hath heartily consented

He shall espouse Elizabeth her daughter.

These letters will resolve him of my mind.

Farewell.

¹ i. e. opponents. ² The person who is called Sir Christopher here, appears by the Chronicles to have been Christopher Urswick, a bachelor in divinity; and chaplain to the countess of Richmond, who had intermarried with the lord Stanley. This priest, the history tells us, frequently went backwards and forwards, unsuspected, on messages betwixt the countess of Richmond and her husband, and the young earl of Richmond, whilst he was preparing to make his descent on England. Dr. Johnson has observed, that Sir was anciently a title assumed by graduates.

K. Rich. Saw'st thou the melancholy lord Nor-

Rat. Thomas the earl of Surrey and himself,
Much about cock-shut time³, from troop to troop,
Went through the army, cheering up the soldiers.

K. Rich. I am satisfy'd. Give me a bowl of
I have not that alacrity of spirit, [wine:
Nor cheer of mind, that I was wont to have.—
So, set it down.—Is ink and paper ready?

Rat. It is, my lord.

K. Rich. Bid my guard watch, and leave me,
About the mid of night, come to my tent,

And help to arm me, Ratcliff.—Leave me, I say.
[Exit Ratcliff.]

Richmond's Tent opens, and discovers him, and his Officers, &c.

Enter Stanley.

Stanl. Fortune and victory sit on thy helm!

Richm. All comfort that the dark night can af-
Be to thy person, noble father-in-law! [ford,

Tell me, how fares our loving mother? [ther,

Stanl. I, by attorney⁴, bless thee from thy mo-
Who prays continually for Richmond's good:—
So much for that.—The silent hours steal on,
And flaky darkness breaks within the east.

In brief, for so the season bids us be,
Prepare thy battle early in the morning!

And put thy fortune to the arbitrement
Of bloody strokes, and mortal staring war⁵.

I, as I may, (that which I would, I cannot)
With best advantage will deceive the time,
And aid thee in this doubtful shock of arms:
But on thy side I may not be too forward,
Lest, being seen, thy tender brother George
Be executed in his father's sight.

Farewell: the leisure⁶, and the fearful time
Cuts off the ceremonious vows of love,

And ample enterchange of sweet discourse,
Which so-long-sundred friends should dwell upon;
God give us leisure for these rites of love!

Once more, adieu:—Be valiant, and speed well!

Richm. Good lords, conduct him to his regiment:
I'll strive, with troubled thoughts, to take a nap;
Lest leaden slumber peize⁷ me down to-morrow,
When I should mount with wings of victory:
Once more, good night, kind lords and gentlemen.

[Exeunt lords, &c.]

O Thou! whose captain I account myself,
Look on my forces with a gracious eye;
Put in their hands thy bruising irons of wrath,
That they may crush down with a heavy fall
The usurping helmets of our adversaries!

Make us thy ministers of chastisement,

That we may praise thee in thy victory!

To thee I do commend my watchful soul,

Ere I let fall the windows of mine eyes:

Sleeping, and waking, O, defend me still! [Sleeps.

Enter the Ghost of Prince Edward, Son to Henry the Sixth.

Ghost. Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow!

[To K. Rich.]

Think how thou stabb'dst me in the prime of youth
At Tewksbury; despair therefore, and die!—

Be cheerful, Richmond; for the wronged souls

[To Richm.]

Of butcher'd princes fight in thy behalf:

King Henry's issue, Richmond, comforts thee.

¹ That particular kind of candle is here meant, anciently called a watch, because, being marked out into sections, each of which was a certain proportion of time in burning, it supplied the place of the more modern instrument by which we measure the hours. ² Staves are the wood of the lances. As it was usual to carry more lances than one into the field, the lightness of them was an object of consequence. ³ i. e. twilight.—Cockshut is said to be a net to catch woodcocks; and as the time of taking them in this manner is in the twilight, either after sun-set or before its rising, cockshut light may very properly express the evening or the morning twilight. ⁴ i. e. by deputation, or by virtue of letter of attorney. ⁵ By staring war is probably meant war that looks big. ⁶ Leisure in this passage stands for want of leisure. ⁷ i. e. weigh me down; from peser, French.

Enter the Ghost of Henry the Sixth.

Ghost. When I was mortal, my anointed body

[To K. Rich.

By thee was punched full of deadly holes:

Think on the Tower and me; despair and die;

Henry the sixth bids thee despair and die!—

Virtuous and holy, be thou conqueror! [To Richm.

Harry, that prophesy'd thou shouldst be king,

Doth comfort thee in thy sleep; live, and flourish.

Enter the Ghost of Clarence.

Ghost. Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow!

[To K. Rich.

I, that was wash'd to death with fulsome wine,

Poor Clarence, by thy guile betray'd to death!

To-morrow in the battle think on me,

And fall thy edgeless sword; despair, and die!—

Thou offspring of the house of Lancaster,

[To Richm.

The wronged heirs of York do pray for thee;

Good angels guard thy battle! Live, and flourish!

Enter the Ghosts of Rivers, Grey, and Vaughan.

Riv. Let me sit heavy on thy soul to-morrow!

[To K. Rich.

Rivers, that dy'd at Pomfret; despair, and die!

Grey. Think upon Grey, and let thy soul despair!

[To K. Rich.

Vaugh. Think upon Vaughan; and, with guilty

fear,

Let fall thy lance! despair, and die!

[To K. Rich.

All. Awake! and think, our wrongs in Richard's bosom

Will conquer him;—awake, and win the day!

[To Richm.

Enter the Ghost of Lord Hastings.

Ghost. Bloody and guilty, guiltily awake;

[To K. Rich.

And in a bloody battle end thy days!

Think on lord Hastings; and despair, and die!—

Quiet untroubled soul, awake, awake! [To Richm.

Arm, fight, and conquer, for fair England's sake!

Enter the Ghosts of the two Young Princes.

Ghosts. Dream on thy cousins smother'd in the Tower!

Let us be lead within thy bosom, Richard,

[To K. Rich.

And weigh thee down to ruin, shame, and death!

Thy nephews' souls bid thee despair, and die.—

Sleep, Richmond, sleep in peace, and wake in

joy;

[To Richm.

Good angels guard thee from the boar's annoy!

Live, and beget a happy race of kings!

Edward's unhappy sons do bid thee flourish.

Enter the Ghost of Lady Anne.

Ghost. Richard, thy wife, that wretched Anne thy wife,

[To K. Rich.

That never slept a quiet hour with thee,

Now fills thy sleep with perturbations:

To-morrow in the battle think on me,

And fall thy edgeless sword; despair, and die!—

Thou, quiet soul, sleep thou a quiet sleep;

[To Richm.

Dream of success and happy victory;

Thy adversary's wife doth pray for thee.

Enter the Ghost of Buckingham.

Ghost. The first was I, that help'd thee to the crown; [To K. Rich.

5 The last was I, that felt thy tyranny:

O, in the battle think on Buckingham,

And die in terror of thy guiltiness!

Dream on, dream on, of bloody deeds and death;

Fainting, despair; despairing, yield thy breath!—

10 I dy'd for hope¹, ere I could lend thee aid:

[To Richm.

But cheer thy heart, and be thou not dismay'd:

God and good angels fight on Richmond's side;

And Richard falls in height of all his pride.

[The Ghosts vanish.

[K. Richard starts out of his dream.

K. Rich. Give me another horse,—bind up my wounds,—

Have mercy, Jesu!—Soft; I did but dream.—

20 O coward conscience, how dost thou afflict me!—

The lights burn blue.—Is it not dead midnight?

Cold fearful drops stand on my trembling flesh.

What do I fear? myself? there's none else by:

Richard loves Richard: that is, I am I.

25 Is there a murd'rer here? No;—Yes; I am:

Then fly,—What, from myself? Great reason: Why?

Lest I revenge. What? Myself on myself?

I love myself. Wherefore? for any good,

That I myself have done unto myself?

30 O, no; alas! I rather hate myself,

For hateful deeds committed by myself.

I am a villain: Yet I lye, I am not.

Fool, of thyself speak well:—Fool, do not flatter.

My conscience hath a thousand several tongues,

35 And every tongue brings in a several tale,

And every tale condemns me for a villain.

Perjury, perjury, in the highest degree,

Murder, stern murder, in the dir'st degree;

All several sins, all us'd in each degree,

40 Throng to the bar, crying all,—Guilty! guilty!

I shall despair,—There is no creature loves me;

And, if I die, no soul shall pity me:—

Nay, wherefore should they? since that I myself

Find in myself no pity to myself.

45 Methought, the souls of all that I had murder'd

Came to my tent; and every one did threat

To-morrow's vengeance on the head of Richard.

Enter Ratcliff.

Rat. My lord,—

50 K. Rich. Who's there?

Rat. My lord, 'tis I: The early village cock

Hath twice done salutation to the morn;

Your friends are up, and buckle on their armour.

K. Rich. O, Ratcliff, I have dream'd a fearful dream!—

What thinkest thou? will our friends prove all

Rat. No doubt, my lord.

[true?

K. Rich. Ratcliff, I fear, I fear,—

[dows.

Rat. Nay, good my lord, be not afraid of sha-

60 K. Rich. By the apostle Paul, shadows to-night

Have struck more terror to the soul of Richard,

Than can the substance of ten thousand soldiers,

Armed in proof, and led by shallow Richmond.

¹ i. e. I died for wishing well to you,

It is not yet near day. Come, go with me
Under our tents; I'll play the eaves-dropper,
To hear, if any mean to shrink from me.

[Exeunt K. Richard, and Ratcliff.]

Richmond wakes. Enter Oxford, and others.

Lords. Good morrow, Richmond. [men,

Richm. 'Cry mercy, lords, and watchful gentle-
That you have ta'en a tardy sluggard here.

Lords. How have you slept, my lord?

Richm. The sweetest sleep, and fairest-boding dreams,

That ever enter'd in a drowsy head,
Have I since your departure had, my lords. [der'd,
Methought, their souls, whose bodies Richard mur-
Came to my tent, and cry'd—On! victory!

I promise you, my heart is very jocund

In the remembrance of so fair a dream.

How far into the morning is it, lords?

Lords. Upon the stroke of four.

Richm. Why, then 'tis time to arm, and give direction.— [He advances to the troops.]

More than I have said, loving countrymen,
The leisure and enforcement of the time
Forbids to dwell upon; Yet remember this,—
God and our good cause fight upon our side;
The prayers of holy saints, and wronged souls,
Like high-rear'd bulwarks, stand before our faces;
Richard except, those, whom we fight against,
Had rather have us win, than him they follow.
For what is he they follow? truly, gentlemen,
A bloody tyrant, and a homicide;

One rais'd in blood, and one in blood establish'd;
One that made means¹ to come by what he hath,
And slaughter'd those that were the means to help
A base foul stone, made precious by the foil [him:
Of England's chair, where he is falsely set;
One that hath ever been God's enemy;

Then, if you fight against God's enemy,
God will, in justice, ward you as his soldiers;

If you do sweat to put a tyrant down,
You sleep in peace, the tyrant being slain:

If you do fight against your country's foes,
Your country's fat shall pay your pains the hire;

If you do fight in safeguard of your wives,
Your wives shall welcome home the conquerors;

If you do free your children from the sword,
Your children's children quit it in your age.

Then, in the name of God, and all these rights,
Advance your standards, draw your willing swords:

For me, the ransom of my bold attempt
Shall be this cold corpse on the earth's cold face;

But if I thrive, the gain of my attempt—
The least of you shall share his part thereof,

Sound, drums and trumpets, boldly and cheerfully;
God, and Saint George²! Richmond, and victory!

[Exeunt.]

Re-enter King Richard, Ratcliff, &c.

K. Rich. What said Northumberland, as touching Richmond?

Rat. That he was never trained up in arms.

K. Rich. He said the truth: And what said
Surrey then? [pose.

Rat. He smil'd and said, the better for our pur-

K. Rich. He was i' the right; and so, indeed, it is.

5 Tell the clock there.—Give me a kalendar.—
[Clock strikes.]

Who saw the sun to-day?

Rat. Not I, my lord. [book,

K. Rich. Then he disdains to shine; for, by the 10 He should have brav'd the east an hour ago:

A black day it will be to somebody.—

Ratcliff.—

Rat. My lord!

K. Rich. The sun will not be seen to-day;

15 The sky doth frown and lour upon our army.

I would, these dewy tears were from the ground,

Not shine to-day! Why, what is that to me,

More than to Richmond? for the self-same heaven,

That frowns on me, looks sadly upon him.

Enter Norfolk.

Nor. Arm, arm, my lord; the foe vaunts in the field. [horse:—

K. Rich. Come, bustle, bustle;—Caparison my
Call up lord Stanley, bid him bring his power:—

25 I will lead forth my soldiers to the plain,

And thus my battle shall be ordered.

My foreward shall be drawn out all in length,

Consisting equally of horse and foot;

Our archers shall be placed in the midst:

30 John duke of Norfolk, Thomas earl of Surrey,

Shall have the leading of this foot and horse.

They thus directed, we will follow

In the main battle; whose puissance on either side

Shall be well winged with our chiefest horse.

35 This, and Saint George to boot³!—what think'st thou, Norfolk?

Nor. A good direction, warlike sovereign.—
This found I on my tent this morning.

[Giving a scroll.]

40 K. Rich. Jocky of Norfolk, be not too bold, [Reads.
For Dickon⁴ thy master is bought and sold.

A thing devised by the enemy.—

Go, gentlemen, every man unto his charge:

Let not our babbling dreams affright our souls;

45 For conscience is but a word that cowards use,

Devis'd at first to keep the strong in awe;

Our strong arms be our conscience, swords our law.

March on, join bravely, let us to 't pell-mell;

If not to heaven, then hand in hand to hell.—

50 What shall I say more than I have inferr'd?

Remember whom you are to cope withal;

A sort⁵ of vagabonds, rascals, and run-aways,

A scum of Brittain, and base lackey peasants,

Whom their o'er-cloyed country vomits forth

55 To desperate ventures and assur'd destruction.

You sleeping safe, they bring you to unrest;

You having lands, and blest with beauteous wives,

They would distraint the one, distain the other,

And who doth lead them, but a paltry fellow,

60 Long kept in Brittain⁶ at our brother's cost?

¹ To make means, in our author's time, always signified—to come at any thing by indirect practices.

² Saint George was the common cry of the English soldiers when they charged the enemy. ³ To boot here would seem to mean to help. ⁴ The ancient abbreviation of Richard, ⁵ i. e. a company, ⁶ Bretagne.

A milk-sop, one that never in his life
Felt so much cold as over shoes in snow?
Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again;
Lash hence these over-weening rags of France,
These famish'd beggars, weary of their lives;
Who, but for dreaming on this fond exploit,
For want of means, poor rats, had hang'd themselves:
If we be conquer'd, let men conquer us,
And not these bastard Britains; whom our fathers
Have in their own land beaten, bobb'd, and thump'd,
And, on record, left them the heirs of shame.
Shall these enjoy our lands? lie with our wives?
Ravish our daughters?—Hark, I hear their drum.

[Drum afar off.]

Fight, gentlemen of England! fight, bold yeomen!
Draw, archers, draw your arrows to the head!
Spur your proud horses hard, and ride in blood;
Amaze the welkin with your broken staves!¹—

Enter a Messenger.

What says lord Stanley? will he bring his power?

Mes. My lord, he doth deny to come.

K. Rich. Off with his son George's head.

Nor. My lord, the enemy hath past the marsh;
After the battle let George Stanley die.

K. Rich. A thousand hearts are great within my bosom:

Advance our standards, set upon our foes;
Our ancient word of courage, fair Saint George,
Inspire us with the spleen of fiery dragons!
Upon them! Victory sits on our helms. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.

Another part of the Field.

Alarum. Excursions. Enter Catesby.

Cates. Rescue, my lord of Norfolk! rescue!
rescue!

The king enacts more wonders than a man,
Daring an opposite² to every danger;
His horse is slain, and all on foot he fights,
Seeking for Richmond in the throat of death:
Rescue, fair lord, or else the day is lost!

Alarum. Enter King Richard.

K. Rich. A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse!

Cates. Withdraw, my lord, I'll help you to a

K. Rich. Slave, I have set my life upon a cast,
And I will stand the hazard of the dye:
I think, there be six Richmonds in the field;
Five have I slain to-day, instead of him:—

A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse!

[Exeunt.]

Alarums. Enter King Richard and Richmond;
they fight, Richard is slain.

5 Retreat, and flourish. Enter Richmond, Stanley, bearing the crown, with divers other Lords.

Richm. God, and your arms, be prais'd, victorious friends;

The day is ours, the bloody dog is dead!

10 Stanl. Courageous Richmond, well hast thou acquit thee!

Lo, here, these long-usurped royalties
From the dead temples of this bloody wretch
Have I pluckt off, to grace thy brows withal;
15 Wear it, enjoy it, and make use of it!

Richm. Great God of heaven, say, Amen, to all!—
But tell me, is young George Stanley living?

Stanl. He is, my lord, and safe in Leicester town;
Whither, if it please you, we may now withdraw us.

20 Richm. What men of name are slain on either side?

Stanl. John duke of Norfolk, Walter lord Ferrers,
Sir Robert Brakenbury, and Sir William Brandon.

Richm. Inter their bodies as becomes their births.
Proclaim a pardon to the soldiers fled,

25 That in submission will return to us;

And then, as we have ta'en the sacrament,

We will unite the white rose and the red:

Smile heaven upon this fair conjunction,

That long hath frown'd upon their enmity!—

30 What traitor hears me, and says not,—Amen?

England hath long been mad, and scarr'd herself;

The brother blindly shed the brother's blood,

The father rashly slaughter'd his own son,

The son, compell'd, been butcher to the sire;

35 All this divided York and Lancaster,

Divided, in their dire division.—

O, now let Richmond and Elizabeth,

The true succeeders of each royal house,

By God's fair ordinance conjoin together!

40 And let their heirs (God, if thy will be so)

Enrich the time to come with smooth-fac'd peace,

With smiling plenty, and fair prosperous days!

Abate the edge of traitors, gracious Lord,

That would reduce these bloody days again,

45 And make poor England weep in streams of blood!

Let them not live to taste this land's increase,

That would with treason wound this fair land's peace!

Now civil wounds are stopp'd, peace lives again;

That she may long live here, God say—Amen!

50 [Exeunt.]

¹ That is, fright the skies with the shivers of your lances. ² i. e. an adversary. ³ i. e. don't abuse it like the tyrant you have destroyed.

P R O L O G U E .

I COME no more to make you laugh; things now,
 That bear a weighty and a serious brow,
 Sad, high, and working, full of state and woe,
 Such noble scenes as draw the eye to flow,
 We now present. Those that can pity, here
 May, if they think it well, let fall a tear;
 The subject will deserve it. Such, as give Their money out of hope they may believe,
 May here find truth too. Those, that come to see
 Only a show or two, and so agree,
 The play may pass; if they be still and willing,
 I'll undertake, may see away their shilling
 Richly in two short hours. Only they,
 That come to hear a merry, bawdy play;
 A noise of targets; or to see a fellow
 In a long motley coat², guarded with yellow,

Will be deceiv'd: for, gentle hearers, know,
 To rank our chosen truth with such a show
 As fool and fight is, (beside forfeiting
 Our own brains, and the opinion that we bring
 5 To make that only true we now intend³)
 Will leave us never an understanding friend.
 Therefore, for goodness' sake, and as you are known
 The first and happiest hearers of the town,
 Be sad, as we could make ye: Think, ye see
 10 The very persons of our noble story,
 As they were living; think, you see them great,
 And follow'd with the general throng, and sweat
 Of thousand friends; then, in a moment, see
 How soon this mightiness meets misery!
 15 And, if you can be merry then, I'll say,
 A man may weep upon his wedding-day.

A C T I .

S C E N E I .

London.

An antichamber in the Palace.

Enter the Duke of Norfolk, at one door; at the other,
 the Duke of Buckingham, and the Lord Abergavenny.

Buck. GOOD morrow, and well met. How have you done,
 Since last we saw in France?

Nor. I thank your grace:

Healthful; and ever since a fresh⁴ admirer
 Of what I saw there.

Buck. An untimely ague

Stay'd me a prisoner in my chamber, when
 Those sons of glory, those two lights of men,
 Met in the vale of Arde.

Nor. 'Twixt Guines and Arde:

¹ Mr. Steevens observes, that Sir William Sands was created Lord Sands about this time, but is here introduced among the persons of the drama, as a distinct character. Sir William has not a single speech assigned to him; and, to make the blunder the greater, is brought on after Lord Sands has already made his appearance. ² Alluding to the fools and buffoons, introduced for the generality in the plays a little before our author's time; and of whom he has left us a small taste in his own.

³ i. e. pretend. ⁴ i. e. an untired admirer.

I was then present, saw them salute on horseback;
Beheld them, when they lighted, how they clung
In their embracement, as they grew together;
Which had they, what four thron'd ones could have weigh'd

Such a compounded one?

Buck. All the whole time
I was my chamber's prisoner.

Nor. Then you lost
The view of earthly glory: Men might say,
'Till this time, pomp was single; but now marry'd
To one above itself. Each following day
Became the next day's master, 'till the last
Made former wonders it's: To-day, the French,
All clinquant¹, all in gold, like heathen gods,
Shone down the English; and, to-morrow, they Made Britain, India: every man, that stood, Shew'd like a mine. Their dwarfish pages were
As cherubims, all gilt: the madams too,
Not us'd to toil, did almost sweat to bear
The pride upon them, that their very labour
Was to them as a painting: now this mask
Was cry'd incomparable; and the ensuing night
Made it a fool, and beggar. The two kings,
Equal in lustre, were now best, now worst,
As presence did present them; him in eye,
Still him in praise: and, being present both,
'Twas said, they saw but one: and no discerners Durst wag his tongue in censure². When these suns,

(For so they phrase 'em) by their heralds challeng'd
The noble spirits to arms, they did perform
Beyond thought's compass; that former fabulous story,

Being now seen possible enough, got credit,
That Bevis³ was believ'd.

Buck. Oh, you go far.

Nor. As I belong to worship, and affect
In honour honesty, the tract of every thing
Would by a good discourser lose some life,
Which action's self was tongue to. All was royal;
To the disposing of it nought rebell'd,
Order gave each thing view; the office did
Distinctly his full function⁴.

Buck. Who did guide,
I mean, who set the body and the limbs
Of this great sport together, as you guess?

Nor. One, certes, that promises no element⁵
In such a business.

Buck. I pray you, who, my lord?

Nor. All this was order'd by the good discretion
Of the right reverend cardinal of York.

Buck. The devil speed him! no man's pye is freed

From his ambitious finger. What had he
To do in these fierce⁶ vanities? I wonder,
That such a keech⁷ can with his very bulk
Take up the rays o' the beneficial sun,
And keep it from the earth.

Nor. Surely, sir,
There's in him stuff that puts him to these ends;
For, being not propt by ancestry, (whose grace Chalk'd successors their way) nor call'd upon
For high feats done to the crown; neither ally'd
To eminent assistants, but, spider-like,
Out of his self-drawing web, he gives us note,
The force of his own merit makes his way;
A gift that heaven gives for him, which buys
A place next to the king.

Aber. I cannot tell
What heaven hath given him, let some graver eye
Pierce into that; but I can see his pride Peep through each part of him; Whence has he
that?

If not from hell, the devil is a niggard;
Or has given all before, and he begins
A new hell in himself.

Buck. Why the devil,
Upon this French going-out, took he upon him,
Without the privity o' the king to appoint
Who should attend on him? He makes up the file⁸
Of all the gentry; for the most part such
Too, whom as great a charge as little honour
He meant to lay upon: and his own letter,
The honourable board of council out⁹,
Must fetch in him he papers¹⁰.

Aber. I do know
Kinsmen of mine, three at the least, that have
By this so sicken'd their estates, that never
They shall abound as formerly.

Buck. O, many [them]
Have broke their backs with laying manors on
For this great journey. What did this vanity,
But minister communication of
A most poor issue¹¹?

Nor. Grievingly I think,
The peace between the French and us not values
The cost that did conclude it.

Buck. Every man,
After the hideous storm that follow'd, was
A thing inspir'd; and, not consulting, broke
Into a general prophecy,—That this tempest,
Dashing the garment of this peace, aboarded
The sudden breach on't.

¹ i. e. all glittering, all shining. ² Censure for the determination of which had the noblest appearance.

³ The old romantic legend of Bevis of Southampton. This Bevis (or Bevois) a Saxon, was for his prowess created by William the Conqueror earl of Southampton. ⁴ i. e. the commission for regulating this festivity was well executed. ⁵ No initiation, no previous practices. ⁶ i. e. proud. ⁷ A keech is a solid lump or mass. A cake of wax or tallow formed in a mould is called yet in some places a keech.—There may, perhaps, be a singular propriety in this term of contempt. Wolsey was the son of a butcher, and in the Second Part of King Henry IV. a butcher's wife is called—Goody Ketch.

⁸ i. e. the list. ⁹ That is, all mention of the board of council being left out of his letter. ¹⁰ i. e. His own letter, by his own single authority, and without the concurrence of the council, must fetch in him whom he papers down. ¹¹ i. e. Issue here refers to the wretched conclusion of this pompous shew, as also to the poverty of their families, occasioned by laying manors on their backs.

Nor. Which is budded out;
For France hath flaw'd the league, and hath attach'd
Our merchants' goods at Bourdeaux.

Aber. Is it therefore
The ambassador is silenc'd¹?

Nor. Marry, is't.

Aber. A proper title of a peace²; and purchas'd
At a superfluous rate!

Buck. Why, all this business
Our reverend cardinal carry'd.

Nor. Like it your grace,
The state takes notice of the private difference
Betwixt you and the cardinal. I advise you,
(And take it from a heart that wishes towards you Honour and plenteous safety) that you read
The cardinal's malice and his potency
Together: to consider further, that
What his high hatred would effect, wants not
A minister in his power: You know his nature,
That he's revengeful; and I know, his sword
Hath a sharp edge: it's long, and, it may be said,
It reaches far; and where 'twill not extend,
Thither he darts it. Bosom up my counsel, [rock, You'll find it wholesome. Lo, where comes that
That I advise your shunning.

Enter Cardinal Wolsey, the purse borne before him, certain of the guard, and two Secretaries with papers. The Cardinal in his passage fixeth his eye on Buckingham, and Buckingham on him, both full of disdain.

Wol. The duke of Buckingham's surveyor? ha?
Where's his examination?

Secr. Here, so please you.

Wol. Is he in person ready?

Secr. Ay, please your grace: [ingham

Wol. Well, we shall then know more; and Buck-
Shall lessen this big look.

[Exeunt Cardinal, and his train.

Buck. This butcher's cur's venom-mouth'd, and I
Have not the power to muzzle him; therefore, best
Not wake him in his slumber. A beggar's book
Out-worths a noble's blood⁴.

Nor. What, are you chaf'd?
Ask God for temperance; that's the appliance
Which your disease requires. [only,

Buck. I read in his looks
Matter against me; and his eye revil'd
Me, as his abject object: at this instant [king;
He bores' me with some trick: He's gone to the I'll follow, and out-stare him.

Nor. Stay, my lord,
And let your reason with your choler question
What 'tis you go about: To climb steep hills,
Requires slow pace at first: Anger is like
A full-hot horse; who being allow'd his way,
Self-mettle tires him. Not a man in England
Can advise me like you: be to yourself
As you would to your friend.

Buck. I'll to the king;
And from a mouth of honour quite cry down
This Ipswich fellow's insolence; or proclaim,
There's difference in no persons.

5 Nor. Be advis'd;
Heat not a furnace for your foe so hot
That it do singe yourself: We may out-run,
By violent swiftness, that which we run at,
And lose by over-running. Know you not,
10 The fire, that mounts the liquor 'till it run o'er,
In seeming to augment it, wastes it? Be advis'd;
I say again, there is no English soul
More stronger to direct you than yourself;
If with the sap of reason you would quench,
15 Or but allay, the fire of passion.

Buck. Sir,
I am thankful to you; and I'll go along
By your prescription:—but this top-proud fellow, (Whom from the flow of gall I name not, but 20 From sincere motions⁶) by intelligence,
And proofs as clear as founts in July, when
We see each grain of gravel, I do know
To be corrupt and treasonous.

Nor. Say not, treasonous. [as strong
25 Buck. To the king I'll say't; and make my vouch
As shore of rock. Attend. This holy fox,
Or wolf, or both, (for he is equal ravenous
As he is subtle; and as prone to mischief
As able to perform't: his mind and place
30 Infecting one another, yea, reciprocally)
Only to shew his pomp as well in France
As here at home, suggests' the king our master
To this last costly treaty, the interview,
That swallow'd so much treasure, and like a glass
35 Did break i' the rinsing.

Nor. 'Faith, and so it did. [cardinal
Buck. Pray, give me favour, sir. This cunning
The articles o' the combination drew,
As himself pleas'd; and they were ratify'd,
40 As he cry'd, Thus let be: to as much end,
As give a crutch to the dead: But our court cardinal
Has done this, and 'tis well; for worthy Wolsey,
Who cannot err, he did it. Now this follows,
(Which, as I take it, is a kind of puppy
45 To the old dam, treason)—Charles the emperor,
Under pretence to see the queen his aunt,
(For 'twas, indeed, his colour; but he came
To whisper Wolsey) here makes visitation:
His fears were, that the interview betwixt
50 England and France might, through their amity,
Breed him some prejudice; for, from this league
Peep'd harms that menac'd him: He privily
Deals with our cardinal; and, as I trow,—
Which I do well; for, I am sure, the emperor
55 Pay'd ere he promis'd; whereby his suit was granted,
Ere it was ask'd:—but when the way was made,
And pay'd with gold, the emperor thus desir'd;—
That he would please to alter the king's course,

¹ Silenc'd for recalled. ² A fine name of a peace! spoken ironically. ³ Wolsey, as has been before observed, is said to have been the son of a butcher. ⁴ That is, the literary qualifications of a bookish beggar are more prized than the high descent of hereditary greatness. This is a contemptuous exclamation very naturally put into the mouth of one of the ancient, unletter'd, martial nobility. ⁵ i. e. he stabs or wounds me by some artifice or fiction. ⁶ i. e. from honest indignation; warmth of integrity. ⁷ i. e. excites.

And break the foresaid peace. Let the king know,
(As soon he shall by me) that thus the cardinal
Does buy and sell his honour as he pleases,
And for his own advantage.

Nor. I am sorry
To hear this of him; and could wish, he were Something mistaken in't.

Buck. No, not a syllable;
I do pronounce him in that very shape,
He shall appear in proof.

*Enter Brandon; a Serjeant at Arms before him,
and two or three of the guard.*

Bran. Your office, serjeant; execute it.

Serj. Sir,
My lord the duke of Buckingham, and earl
Of Hereford, Stafford, and Northampton, I
Arrest thee of high treason, in the name
Of our most sovereign king.

Buck. Lo you, my lord,
The net has fallen upon me; I shall perish
Under device and practice.

Bran. I am sorry
To see you ta'en from liberty, to look on
'The business present: 'Tis his highness' pleasure,
You shall to the Tower.

Buck. It will help me nothing,
To plead mine innocence; for that dye is on me,
Which makes my whitest part black. The will of heaven

Be done in this and all things!—I obey.—
O my lord Aberga'ny, fare you well.

Bran. Nay, he must bear you company:—The king [To Aberg.
Is pleas'd, you shall to the Tower, 'till you know
How he determines further.

Aber. As the duke said,
The will of heaven be done, and the king's pleasure
By me obey'd!

Bran. Here is a warrant from
The king, to attach lord Montacute; and the bodies
Of the duke's confessor, John de la Court,
One Gilbert Peck, his chancellor,—

Buck. So, so;
These are the limbs of the plot: No more, I hope.

Bran. A monk o' the Chartreux.

Buck. O, Nicholas Hopkins?

Bran. He. [dinal

Buck. My surveyor is false; the o'er-great car-
Hath shewn him gold: my life is spann'd already:
I am the shadow of poor Buckingham;
Whose figure even this instant cloud puts on,
By dark'ning my clear sun.—My lord, farewell.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.

The Council Chamber.

Cornet. Enter King Henry, leaning on the Cardinal's shoulder; the Nobles, and Sir Thomas Lovel.
The Cardinal places himself under the King's feet, on his right side.

King. My life itself, and the best heart of it,
Thanks you for this great care: I stood i' the level

Of a full-charg'd confederacy; and give thanks
To you that choak'd it.—Let be call'd before us
That gentleman of Buckingham's: in person
I'll hear him his confessions justify;

5 And point by point the treasons of his master
He shall again relate.

*A noise within, crying, Room for the Queen.
Enter the Queen, ushered by the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk: she kneels. The king riseth from his state, takes her up, kisses, and places her by him.*

Queen. Nay, we must longer kneel; I am a suitor.

King. Arise, and take your place by us:—Half your suit

15 Never name to us; you have half our power:

The other moiety, ere you ask, is given;

Repeat your will, and take it.

Queen. Thank your majesty.

That you would love yourself; and, in that love,

20 Not unconsider'd leave your honour, nor

The dignity of your office, is the point

Of my petition.

King. Lady mine, proceed.

Queen. I am solicited, not by a few,

25 And those of true condition, that your subjects

Are in great grievance: There have been commissions [heart

Sent down among them, which have flaw'd the
Of all their loyalties:—wherein, although,

30 [To Wolsey.

My good lord cardinal, they vent reproaches

Most bitterly on you, as putter-on

Of these exactions, yet the king our master,

(Whose honour heaven shield from soil!) even he escapes not

35 Language unmannerly, yea, such which breaks

The sides of loyalty, and almost appears

In loud rebellion.

Nor. Not almost appears,

40 It doth appear: for, upon these taxations,

The clothiers all, not able to maintain

The many¹ to them² longing, have put off

The spinsters, carders, fullers, weavers, who,

Unfit for other life, compell'd by hunger

45 And lack of other means, in desperate manner

Daring the event to the teeth, are all in uproar,

And Danger serves among them.

King. Taxation!

Wherein? and what taxation?—My lord cardinal,

50 You that are blam'd for it alike with us,

Know you of this taxation?

Wol. Please you, sir,

I know but of a single part, in aught

Pertains to the state; and front but in that file²

55 Where others tell steps with me.

Queen. No, my lord,

You know no more than others: but you frame Things, that are known alike; which are not wholesome

60 To those which would not know them, and yet must

Perforce be their acquaintance. These exactions,

Whereof my sovereign would have note, they are

Most pestilent to the hearing; and, to bear them,

² i. e. I am but first in the row of counsellors.

The back is sacrifice to the load. They say,
They are devis'd by you; or else you suffer
Too hard an exclamation.

King. Still exaction!
The nature of it? In what kind, let's know,
Is this exaction?

Queen. I am much too venturous
In tempting of your patience; but am bolden'd
Under your promis'd pardon. The subject's grief Comes through commissions, which compel from each

The sixth part of his substance, to be levy'd
Without delay; and the pretence for this Is nam'd, your wars in France: This makes bold mouths: [freeze

Tongues spit their duties out, and cold hearts
Allegiance in them; their curses now,
Live where their prayers did; and it's come to pass,
That tractable obedience is a slave
To each incensed will. I would, your highness
Would give it quick consideration, for
There is no primer business¹.

King. By my life,
This is against our pleasure.

Wol. And for me,
I have no further gone in this, than by
A single voice; and that not past me, but
By learned approbation of the judges. If I am
Traduc'd by ignorant tongues, which neither know
My faculties, nor person, yet will be
The chronicles of my doing,—let me say,
'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake
That virtue must go through. We must not stint²
Our necessary actions, in the fear
To cope³ malicious censurers; which ever,
As ravenous fishes, do a vessel follow
That is new trimm'd; but benefit no further Than vainly longing. What we oft do best,
By sick interpreters, once⁴ weak ones, is
Not ours, or not allow'd; what worst, as oft
Hitting a grosser quality, is cry'd up
For our best act. If we shall stand still,
In fear our motion will be mock'd or carp'd at,
We should take root here where we sit, or sit
State statues only.

King. Things done well,
And with a care, exempt themselves from fear:
Things done without example, in their issue
Are to be fear'd. Have you a precedent
Of this commission? I believe, not any.
We must not rend our subjects from our laws,
And stick them in our will. Sixth part of each?
A trembling contribution! Why, we take,
From every tree, lop⁵, bark, and part o' the timber;
And, though we leave it with a root, thus hack'd,
The air will drink the sap. To every county,
Where this is question'd, send our letters, with Free pardon to each man that has deny'd
The force of this commission: Pray, look to't;
I put it to your care.

Wol. A word with you. [To the Secretary.]

Let there be letters writ to every shire,
Of the king's grace and pardon. The griev'd commons

Hardly conceive of me; let it be nois'd,
5 That, through our intercession, this revokement
And pardon comes: I shall anon advise you Further in the proceeding. [Exit Secretary.]

Enter Surveyor.

Queen. I am sorry, that the duke of Buckingham
10 Is run in your displeasure.

King. It grieves many:
The gentleman is learn'd, a most rare speaker,
To nature none more bound; his training such,
That he may furnish and instruct great teachers,
15 And never seek for aid out of himself. Yet see,
When these so noble benefits shall prove
Not well dispos'd, the mind growing once corrupt,
They turn to vicious forms, ten times more ugly
Than ever they were fair. This man, so complete, 20 Who was enroll'd 'mongst wonders, and when we,
Almost with ravish'd list'ning, could not find
His hour of speech a minute; he, my lady,
Hath into monstrous habits put the graces
That once were his, and is become as black 25 As if besmear'd in hell. Sit by us; you shall hear
(This was his gentleman in trust) of him
Things to strike honour sad.—Bid him recount
The fore-recited practices; whereof
We cannot feel too little, hear too much.

30 Wol. Stand forth; and with bold spirit relate what you,

Most like a careful subject, have collected
Out of the duke of Buckingham.

King. Speak freely.

35 Surv. First, it was usual with him, every day
It would infect his speech, That if the king
Should without issue die, he'd carry it so
To make the sceptre his: These very words
I have heard him utter to his son-in-law,
40 Lord Aberga'ny; to whom by oath he menac'd
Revenge upon the cardinal.

Wol. Please your highness, note
This dangerous conception in this point.
Not friended by his wish, to your high person
45 His will is most malignant; and it stretches
Beyond you, to your friends.

Queen. My learn'd lord cardinal,
Deliver all with charity.

King. Speak on:

50 How grounded he his title to the crown,
Upon our fail? to this point hast thou heard him
At any time speak ought?

Surv. He was brought to this
By a vain prophecy of Nicholas Hopkins.

55 King. What was that Hopkins?

Surv. Sir, a Chartreux friar,
His confessor; who fed him every minute
With words of sovereignty.

King. How know'st thou this? [France,

60 Surv. Not long before your highness sped to
The duke being at the Rose, within the parish

¹ i. e. no matter of state that more earnestly presses a dispatch. ² i. e. stop. ³ i. e. to encounter with. ⁴ Once is not unfrequently used for sometime, or at one time or other, among our ancient writers. ⁵ Lop signifies the branches.

Saint Lawrence Poultney, did of me demand
 What was the speech among the Londoners
 Concerning the French journey? I reply'd,
 Men fear'd, the French would prove perfidious,
 To the king's danger. Presently the duke
 Said, 'Twas the fear, indeed; and that he doubted,
 'Twould prove the verity of certain words
 Spoke by a holy monk; *that oft, says he,
 Hath sent to me, wishing me to permit
 John de la Court, my chaplain, a choice hour
 To hear from him a matter of some moment:
 Who (after under the confession's seal
 He solemnly had sworn, that, what he spoke,
 My chaplain to no creature living, but
 To me, should utter) with demure confidence [heirs,
 Thus pausingly ensu'd,—Neither the king, nor his (Tell you the duke) shall prosper: bid him strive
 For the love of the commonalty; the duke
 Shall govern England.—*

Queen. If I know you well,
 You were the duke's surveyor, and lost your office
 On the complaint o' the tenants: Take good heed,
 You charge not in your spleen a noble person,
 And spoil your nobler soul; I say, take heed;
 Yes, heartily beseech you.

King. Let him on:—
 Go forward.

Surv. On my soul, I'll speak but truth.
 I told my lord the duke, By the devil's illusions
 The monk might be deceiv'd; and that 'twas dang'rous for him

To ruminate on this so far, until
 It forg'd him some design, which, being believ'd,
 It was much like to do: He answer'd, Tush!
It can do me no damage: adding further,
 That, had the king in his last sickness fail'd,
 The cardinal's and Sir Thomas Lovel's heads
 Should have gone off.

King. Ha! what, so rank¹? Ah, ha! [further?
 There's mischief in this man:—Canst thou say

Surv. I can, my liege.

King. Proceed.

Surv. Being at Greenwich,
 After your highness had reprov'd the duke
 About Sir William Blomer,—

King. I remember
 Of such a time:—Being my sworn servant,
 The duke retain'd him his.—But on; What hence?

Surv. If, quoth he, *I for this had been committed,
 As to the Tower, I thought, I would have play'd
 The part my father meant to act upon
 The usurper Richard: who, being at Salisbury,
 Made suit to come in his presence; which, if granted,
 As he made semblance of his duty, would
 Have put his knife into him.*

King. A giant traitor!

[freedom,

Wol. Now, madam, may his highness live in
 And this man out of prison?

Queen. God mend all!

King. There's something more would out of thee; What say'st? [knife,—

Surv. After—the duke his father,—with—the
 He stretch'd him, and, with one hand on his dagger,
 Another spread on his breast, mounting his eyes,
 He did discharge a horrible oath; whose tenour
 Was—Were he evil-us'd, he would out-go
 His father, by as much as a performance
 Does an irresolute purpose.

King. There's his period,
 To sheath his knife in us. He is attach'd;
 Call him to present trial: If he may Find mercy in the law, 'tis his; if none,
 Let him not seek 't of us: By day and night,
 He's traitor to the height. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.

An Apartment in the Palace.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain, and Lord Sands.

Cham. Is it possible, the spells of France should Men into such strange mysteries? [juggle

Sands. New customs,
 Though they be never so ridiculous,
 Nay, let them be unmanly, yet are follow'd.

Cham. As far as I see, all the good our English
 Have got by the late voyage, is but merely
 A fit or two o' the face²; but they are shrew'd ones;
 For, when they hold them, you would swear direct-
 Their very noses had been counsellors [ly,
 To Pepin, or Clotharius, they keep state so.

Sands. They have all new legs, and lame ones;
 one would take it,
 That never saw them pace before, the spavin
 And springhalt³ reign'd among 'em.

Cham. Death! my lord,
 Their clothes are after such a pagan cut too,
 That, sure, they have worn out Christendom. How What news, Sir Thomas Lovel? [now?

Enter Sir Thomas Lovel.

Lov. Faith, my lord,
 I hear of none, but the new proclamation
 That's clapp'd upon the court gate.

Cham. What is 't for?

Lov. The reformation of our travell'd gallants,
 That fill the court with quarrels, talk, and tailors.

Cham. I am glad 'tis there; now I would pray our monsieurs
 To think an English courtier may be wise,
 And never see the Louvre.

Lov. They must either
 (For so run the conditions) leave these remnants
 Of fool, and feather⁴, that they got in France,

¹ Rank weeds are weeds that are grown up to great height and strength.—What, says the king, was he advanced to this pitch? ² Mysteries were allegorical shews, which the munimers of those times exhibited in odd and fantastic habits. Mysteries are used, by an easy figure, for those that exhibited mysteries; and the sense is only, that the travelled Englishmen were metamorphosed, by foreign fashions, into such an uncouth appearance, that they looked like munimers in a mystery. ³ A fit of the face seems to be what we now term a grimace, an artificial cast of the countenance. ⁴ The stringhalt, or springhalt, is a disease incident to horses, which gives them a convulsive motion in their paces. ⁵ This does not allude to the feathers anciently worn in the hats and caps of our countrymen (a circumstance to which no ridicule could justly belong), but to an effeminate fashion of young gentlemen carrying fans of feathers in their hands.

With all their honourable points of ignorance
 Pertaining thereunto, (as fights, and fireworks;
 Abusing better men than they can be,
 Out of a foreign wisdom) renouncing clean
 The faith they have in tennis, and tall stockings,
 Short blister'd breeches', and those types of travel,
 And understand again like honest men;
 Or pack to their old play-fellows: there, I take it,
 They may, cum privilegio, wear away
 The lag end of their lewdness, and be laugh'd at.

Sands. 'Tis time to give them physick, their
 Are grown so catching. [diseases]

Cham. What a loss our ladies
 Will have of these trim vanities!

Lov. Ay, marry, [sons]
 There will be woe indeed, lords: the sly whore-
 Have got a speeding trick to lay down ladies;
 A French song, and a fiddle, has no fellow. [going;

Sands. The devil fiddle 'em! I am glad, they're (For, sure, there's no converting of 'em) now
 An honest country lord, as I am, beaten
 A long time out of play, may bring his plain song,
 And have an hour of hearing; and, by 'r lady,
 Held current music too.

Cham. Well said, lord Sands;
 Your colt's tooth is not cast yet.

Sands. No, my lord;
 Nor shall not, while I have a stump.

Cham. Sir Thomas,
 Whither were you a-going?

Lov. To the cardinal's;
 Your lordship is a guest too.

Cham. O, 'tis true;
 This night he makes a supper, and a great one,
 To many lords and ladies; there will be
 The beauty of this kingdom, I'll assure you.

Lov. That churchman bears a bounteous mind
 indeed;

A hand as fruitful as the land that feeds us;
 His dew falls every where.

Cham. No doubt, he's noble;
 He had a black mouth, that said other of him.

Sands. He may, my lord, he has wherewithal;
 in him,

Sparing would shew a worse sin than ill doctrine:
 Men of his way should be most liberal,
 They are set here for examples.

Cham. True, they are so;
 But few now give so great ones. My barge stays;
 Your lordship shall along:—Come, good Sir
 Thomas,

We shall be late else; which I would not be,
 For I was spoke to, with Sir Henry Guilford,
 This night to be comptrollers.

Sands. I am your lordship's. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.

Changes to York-Place.

Hautboys. A small table under a state for the Cardinal, a longer table for the guests. Then enter Anne Bullen, and divers other Ladies and Gentlewomen, as guests, at one door; at another door, enter Sir Henry Guilford.

Guil. Ladies, a general welcome from his grace

Salutes you all: This night he dedicates
 To fair content, and you: none here, he hopes,
 In all this noble bevy, has brought with her
 One care abroad; he would have all as merry
 As first-good company, good wine, good welcome,
 Can make good people.—O, my lord, you are tardy;
Enter Lord Chamberlain, Lord Sands, and Sir Thomas Lovel.

The very thought of this fair company
 Clapp'd wings to me.

Cham. You are young, Sir Harry Guilford,

Sands. Sir Thomas Lovel, had the cardinal
 But half my lay-thoughts in him, some of these Should find a running banquet ere they rested,

I think, would better please 'em: By my life,
 They are a sweet society of fair ones. [fessor

Lov. O, that your lordship were but now con-
 To one or two of these!

Sands. I would, I were;

They should find easy penance.

Lov. 'Faith, how easy?

Sands. As easy as a down-bed would afford it.

Cham. Sweet ladies, will it please you sit? Sir
 Harry,

Place you that side, I'll take the charge of this:
 His grace is ent'ring.—Nay, you must not freeze;
 Two women plac'd together make cold weather:—
 My lord Sands, you are one will keep 'em waking;
 Pray, sit between these ladies.

Sands. By my faith,
 And thank your lordship.—By your leave, sweet ladies: [Sits.]

If I chance to talk a little wild, forgive me;
 I had it from my father.

Anne. Was he mad, sir? [too:]

Sands. O, very mad, exceeding mad, in love
 But he would bite none; just as I do now,
 He would kiss you twenty with a breath. [Kisses her.]

Cham. Well said, my lord.—
 So, now you are fairly seated:—Gentlemen,
 The penance lies on you, if these fair ladies
 Pass away frowning.

Sands. For my little cure,

Let me alone.

Hautboys. Enter Cardinal Wolsey, and takes his state.

Wol. You are welcome, my fair guests; that noble lady,

Or gentleman, that is not freely merry,
 Is not my friend: This, to confirm my welcome;
 And to you all good health. [Drinks.]

Sands. Your grace is noble:—
 Let me have such a bowl may hold my thanks,

And save me so much talking.

Wol. My lord Sands,
 I am beholden to you:—cheer your neighbours:—
 Ladies, you are not merry;—Gentlemen,
 Whose fault is this?

Sands. The red wine first must rise
 In their fair cheeks, my lord; then we shall have 'em
 Talk us to silence.

Anne. You are a merry gamester,

i. e. breeches puff'd, swell'd out like blisters.

X x 3

My

My lord Sands.

Sands. Yes, if I make my play¹.
Here's to your ladyship: and pledge it, madam,
For 'tis to such a thing,—

Anne. You cannot shew me.

Sands. I told your grace, they would talk anon.

[Drum and trumpets, chambers² discharg'd.]

Wol. What's that?

Cham. Look out there, some of you.

[Exit Servant.]

Wol. What warlike voice?

And to what end is this?—Nay, ladies, fear not;
By all the laws of war you are privileg'd.

Re-enter Servant.

Cham. How now? what is't?

Serv. A noble troop of strangers;
For so they seem: they have left their barge, and landed;

And hither make, as great ambassadors
From foreign princes.

Wol. Good lord chamberlain,
Go, give 'em welcome, you can speak the French
tongue;

And, pray, receive 'em nobly, and conduct 'em
Into our presence, where this heaven of beauty
Shall shine at full upon them:—Some attend him.—

[All arise, and tables removed.]

You have now a broken banquet; but we'll mend it.
A good digestion to you all: and, once more,
I shower a welcome on you;—Welcome all.

Hautboys, Enter the King, and others, as Maskers, habited like Shepherds, usher'd by the Lord Chamberlain. They pass directly before the Cardinal, and gracefully salute him.

A noble company! What are their pleasures?

Cham. Because they speak no English, thus they pray'd

To tell your grace;—That, having heard by fame
Of this so noble and so fair assembly

This night to meet here, they could do no less,
Out of the great respect they bear to beauty,
But leave their flocks; and, under your fair conduct,
Crave leave to view these ladies, and entreat
An hour of revels with them.

Wol. Say, lord chamberlain, [I pay them
They have done my poor house grace; for which A thousand thanks, and pray them take their pleasures.

[Chuse ladies for the dance. King, and Anne Bullen.]

King. The fairest hand I ever touch'd! O, beauty,

'Till now I never knew thee. [Musick. Dance.]

Wol. My lord,—

Cham. Your Grace?

Wol. Pray, tell 'em thus much as from me:

5 There should be one amongst them, by his person,
More worthy this place than myself; to whom,
If I but knew him, with my love and duty
I would surrender it.

Cham. I will, my lord.

[Cham. goes to the company, and returns.]

Wol. What say they?

Cham. Such a one, they all confess,

There is indeed; which they would have your grace
Find out, and he will take it³.

Wol. Let me see then.—

[make]

By all your good leaves, gentlemen;—Here I'll
My royal choice.

King. You have found him, cardinal:

You hold a fair assembly; you do well, lord:

20 You are a churchman, or, I'll tell you, cardinal,
I should judge now⁴ unhappily.

Wol. I am glad,

Your grace is grown so pleasant.

King. My lord chamberlain,

25 Pr'ythee, come hither: What fair lady's that?

Cham. An't please your grace, Sir Thomas Bullen's daughter,

The viscount Rochford, one of her highness' women.

King. By heaven, she is a dainty one.—Sweet
heart,

I were unmannerly, to take you out,

[To Anne Bullen.]

And not to kiss you⁵.—A health, gentlemen,
Let it go round.

35 Wol. Sir Thomas Lovel, is the banquet ready
I' the privy chamber?

Lov. Yes, my lord.

Wol. Your grace,

I fear, with dancing is a little heated.

40 King. I fear, too much.

Wol. There's fresher air, my lord,

In the next chamber.

[partner,]

King. Lead in your ladies, every one.—Sweet

I must not yet forsake you:—Let's be merry;—

45 Good my lord cardinal, I have half a dozen healths

To drink to these fair ladies, and a measure

To lead them once again; and then let's dream

Who's best in favour.—Let the musick knock it.

[Exeunt, with trumpets.]

¹ i. e. if I make my party. ² A chamber is a gun (used only on occasions of rejoicing) which stands erect on its breech, and so contrived as to carry great charges, and thereby to make a noise more than proportioned to its bulk. They are called chambers, because they are mere chambers to lodge powder; a chamber being the technical term for that cavity in a piece of ordnance which contains the combustibles. Chambers are still fired in the Park, and at the places opposite to the Parliament-house, when the king goes thither. ³ i. e. take the chief place. ⁴ i. e. unluckily, mischievously. ⁵ A kiss was anciently the established fee of a lady's partner.

*A Street.Enter two Gentlemen at several doors.1 Gent. *W*HITHER away so fast?2 Gent. O,—God save you!Even to the hall, to hear what shall become
Of the great duke of Buckingham.*1 Gent. I'll save youThat labour, sir. All's now done, but the ceremony
Of bringing back the prisoner.*2 Gent. Were you there?1 Gent. Yes, indeed, was I.2 Gent. Pray, speak, what has happen'd?1 Gent. You may guess quickly what.2 Gent. Is he found guilty?1 Gent. Yes, truly, is he, and condemn'd upon it.2 Gent. I am sorry for't.1 Gent. So are a number more.2 Gent. But, pray, how pass'd it?1 Gent. I'll tell you in a little. The great duke
Came to the bar; where, to his accusations,
He pleaded still, not guilty, and alledg'd
Many sharp reasons to defeat the law.
The king's attorney, on the contrary,
Urg'd on the examinations, proofs, confessions
Of divers witnesses; which the duke desir'd
To have brought, viva voce, to his face:
At which appear'd against him, his surveyor;
Sir Gilbert Peck his chancellor; and John Court,
Confessor to him; with that devil monk
Hopkins, that made this mischief.2 Gent. That was he,
That fed him with his prophecies?1 Gent. The same.All these accus'd him strongly; which he fain
Would have flung from him, but, indeed, he could
And so his peers, upon this evidence, [not:
Have found him guilty of high treason. Much
He spoke, and learnedly, for life; but all
Was either pitied in him, or forgotten.*2 Gent. After all this, how did he bear himself?1 Gent. When he was brought again to the bar,
—to hearHis knell rung out, his judgement,—he was stirr'd
With such an agony, he sweat extremely,¹
And something spoke in choler, ill, and hasty;
But he fell to himself again, and, sweetly,
In all the rest shew'd a most noble patience,*2 Gent. I do not think, he fears death.1 Gent. Sure, he does not,He never was so womanish; the cause
He may a little grieve at.*2 Gent. Certainly,The cardinal is the end of this.*1 Gent. 'Tis likely,By all conjectures: First, Kildare's attainder,*Then deputy of Ireland; who remov'd,
Earl Surrey was sent thither, and in haste too,
Lest he should help his father.*2 Gent. That trick of stateWas a deep envious one.*1 Gent. At his return,No doubt, he will requite it. This is noted,
And generally; whoever the king favours,
The cardinal instantly will find employment,
And far enough from court too.*2 Gent. All the commonsHate him perniciously, and, o' my conscience,
Wish him ten fathom deep: this duke as much
They love and doat on; call him, bounteous Buck-
The mirror of all courtesy;— [ingham,*1 Gent. Stay there, sir,And see the noble ruin'd man you speak of.Enter Buckingham from his arraignment, (Tipstaves before him, the axe with the edge toward him; halberds on each side,) accompanied with Sir Thomas Lovel, Sir Nicholas Vaux, Sir William Sands, and common people, &c.2 Gent. Let's stand close, and behold him.Buck. All good people,25 You that thus far have come to pity me, Hear what I say, and then go home and lose me.
I have this day receiv'd a traitor's judgement,
And by that name must die; Yet, Heaven bear witness,*30 And, if I have a conscience, let it sink me,
Even as the axe falls, if I be not faithful!
The law I bear no malice for my death,
'T has done, upon the premises, but justice;
But those, that sought it, I could wish more 35 christians:*Be what they will, I heartily forgive 'em:
Yet let 'em look they glory not in mischief,
Nor build their evils on the graves of great men;
For then my guiltless blood must cry against 'em.
40 For further life in this world I ne'er hope,
Nor will I sue, although the king have mercies
More than I dare make faults. You few that lov'd me,*And dare be bold to weep for Buckingham,
His noble friends, and fellows, whom to leave
Is only bitter to him, only dying,
Go with me, like good angels, to my end;
And, as the long divorce of steel falls on me,
Make of your prayers one sweet sacrifice,
50 And lift my soul to heaven.—Lead on, o' God's name.*Lov. I do beseech your grace, for charity,
If ever any malice in your heartWere hid against me, now to forgive me frankly.*55 Buck. Sir Thomas Lovel, I as free forgive you,
As I would be forgiven: I forgive all;
There cannot be those numberless offences¹ This circumstance is taken from Holinshed.

'Gainst me, that I can't take peace with: no
black envy
Shall makemygrave¹.—Commendmetohis grace;
And, if he speak of Buckingham, pray, tell him,
You met him half in heaven: my vows and prayers
Yet are the king's; and, 'till my soul forsake me,
Shall cry for blessings on him: May he live
Longer than I have time to tell his years!
Ever belov'd, and loving, may his rule be!
And, when old time shall lead him to his end,
Goodness and he fill up one monument! [grace;
Lov. To the water-side I must conduct your
Then give my charge up to Sir Nicholas Vaux,
Who undertakes you to your end.
Vaux. Prepare there,
The duke is coming; see, the barge be ready;
And fit it with such furniture, as suits
The greatness of his person.
Buck. Nay, Sir Nicholas,
Let it alone; my state now will but mock me.
When I came hither, I was lord high constable,
And duke of Buckingham; now, poor Edward Bohun:
Yet I am richer than my base accusers,
That never knew what truth meant: I now seal it;
And with that blood, will make 'em one day
groan for't.
My noble father, Henry of Buckingham,
Who first rais'd head against usurping Richard,
Flying for succour to his servant Banister,
Being distress'd, was by that wretch betray'd,
And without trial fell; God's peace be with him!
Henry the seventh succeeding, truly pitying
My father's loss, like a most royal prince,
Restor'd me to my honours, and, out of ruins,
Made my name once more noble. Now his son,
Henry the eighth, life, honour, name, and all
That made me happy, at one stroke has taken
For ever from the world. I had my trial,
And, must needs say, a noble one; which makes me
A little happier than my wretched father:
Yet thus far we are one in fortunes,—both Fell by our servants, by those men we loved most;
A most unnatural and faithless service!
Heaven has an end in all: Yet, you that hear me,
This from a dying man receive as certain:—
Where you are liberal of your loves and counsels,
Be sure, you be not loose; for those you make
friends,
And give your hearts to, when they once perceive
The least rub in your fortunes, fall away
Like water from ye, never found again
But where they mean to sink ye. All good people, Pray for me! I must now forsake you; the last hour
Of my long weary life is come upon me.
Farewell:
And when ye would say something that is sad,
Speak how I fell.—I have done; and God forgive me! [Exeunt Buckingham, and Train.]

1 Gent. O, this is full of pity!—Sir, it calls,
I fear, too many curses on their heads,
That were the authors.
2 Gent. If the duke be guiltless,
'Tis full of woe: yet I can give you inkling
Of an ensuing evil, if it fall,
Greater than this.
1 Gent. Good angels keep it from us!
What may it be? You do not doubt my faith, sir?
10 2 Gent. This secret is so weighty, 'twill require
A strong faith² to conceal it.
1 Gent. Let me have it;
I do not talk much.
2 Gent. I am confident;
15 You shall, sir: Did you not of late days hear
A buzzing, of a separation
Between the king and Katharine?
1 Gent. Yes, but it held not:
For when the king once heard it, out of anger
20 He sent command to the lord mayor, straight
To stop the rumour, and allay those tongues
That durst disperse it.
2 Gent. But that slander, sir,
Is found a truth now: for it grows again
25 Fresher than e'er it was; and held for certain,
The king will venture at it. Either the cardinal,
Or some about him near, have, out of malice
To the good queen, possess'd him with a scruple
That will undo her: To confirm this too,
30 Cardinal Campeius is arriv'd, and lately;
As all think, for this business.
1 Gent. 'Tis the cardinal;
And merely to revenge him on the emperor,
For not bestowing on him, at his asking,
35 The archbishoprick of Toledo, this is purpos'd.
2 Gent. I think, you have hit the mark: But is't not cruel,
That she should feel the smart of this? The cardinal
40 Will have his will, and she must fall.
1 Gent. 'Tis woeful.
We are too open here to argue this;
Let's think in private more. [Exeunt.]

S C E N E II.

An Antichamber in the Palace.Enter the Lord Chamberlain, reading a letter.

*My lord, the horses your lordship sent for, with all the care I had, I saw well chosen, ridden, and furnished. They were young, and handsome; and of the best breed in the north. When they were ready to set out for London, a man of my lord cardinal's, by commission, and main power, took 'em from me;
with this reason,—His master would beserv'd before a subject, if not before the king: which stopp'd our mouths, sir.*

*I fear, he will, indeed: Well, let him have them;
He will have all, I think.*

Enter the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk.Nor. Well met, my lord chamberlain.Cham. Good day to both your graces.¹ Meaning, that envy should not procure or advance his death.² i. e. great fidelity.

Suf. How is the king employ'd?
Cham. I left him private,
 Full of sad thoughts and troubles.
Nor. What's the cause? [wife
Cham. It seems, the marriage with his brother's
 Has crept too near his conscience.
Suf. No, his conscience
 Has crept too near another lady.
Nor. 'Tis so;
 This is the cardinal's doing, the king-cardinal:
 That blind priest, like the eldest son of fortune,
 Turns what he lists. This king will know him
 one day. [else.
Suf. Pray God, he do! he'll never know himself
Nor. How holily he works in all his business!
 And with what zeal! For, now he has crack'd the league
 Between us and the emperor, the queen's great nephew,
 He dives into the king's soul; and there scatters
 Doubts, dangers, wringing of the conscience,
 Fears, and despairs, and all these for his marriage:
 And, out of all these to restore the king,
 He counsels a divorce: a loss of her,
 That, like a jewel, has hung twenty years
 About his neck, yet never lost her lustre;
 Of her, that loves him with that excellence
 That angels love good men with; even of her,
 That, when the greatest stroke of fortune falls,
 Will bless the king: And is not this course pious?
Cham. Heaven keep me from such counsel!
 'Tis most true, [em,
 These news are every where; every tongue speaks
 And every true heart weeps for 't: All, that dare
 Look into these affairs, see his main end, [open
 The French king's sister. Heaven will one day
 The king's eyes, that so long have slept upon
 This bold bad man.
Suf. And free us from his slavery.
Nor. We had need pray,
 And heartily, for our deliverance;
 Or this imperious man will work us all
 From princes into pages: all men's honours
 Lie like one lump before him, to be fashion'd
 Into what pitch¹ he please.
Suf. For me, my lords,
 I love him not, nor fear him; there's my creed:
 As I am made without him, so I'll stand,
 If the king please; his curses and his blessings
 Touch me alike, they are breath I not believe in.
 I knew him, and I know him; so I leave him
 To him that made him proud,—the pope.
Nor. Let's in;
 And, with some other business, put the king
 From these sad thoughts, that work too much upon him:
 My lord, you'll bear us company?
Cham. Excuse me;
 The king hath sent me other-where: besides,
 You'll find a most unfit time to disturb him:
 Health to your lordships.

Nor. Thanks, my good lord chamberlain.
 [Exit Lord Chamberlain.
 A door opens, and discovers the King sitting and reading pensively.
Suf. How sad he looks! sure, he is much afflicted.
King. Who's there? ha?
Nor. Pray God, he be not angry!
King. Who's there, I say? How dare you thrust yourselves
 Into my private meditations?
 Who am I? ha?
Nor. A gracious king, that pardons all offences,
 Malice ne'er meant: our breach of duty, this way,
 Is business of estate; in which, we come
 To know your royal pleasure.
King. You are too bold:
 Go to; I'll make ye know your times of business:
 Is this an hour for temporal affairs? ha?
Enter Wolsey, and Campeius with a Commission.
 Who's there? my good lord cardinal?—O my Wolsey,
 The quiet of my wounded conscience,
 Thou art a cure fit for a king,—You're welcome,
 [To Campeius.
 Most learned reverend sir, into our kingdom;
 Use us, and it:—My good lord, have great care
 I be not found a talker. [To Wolsey.
Wol. Sir, you cannot.
 I would, your grace would give us but an hour
 Of private conference.
King. We are busy; go. [To Norf. and Suf.
Nor. This priest has no pride in him?
Suf. Not to speak of;
 I would not be so sick though², for his place: } Aside.
 But this cannot continue.
Nor. If it do,
 I'll venture one heave at him.
Suf. I another. [Exeunt Norf. and Suf.
Wol. Your grace has given a precedent of wisdom
 Above all princes, in committing freely
 Your scruple to the voice of Christendom:
 Who can be angry now? what envy reach you?
 The Spaniard, ty'd by blood and favour to her,
 Must now confess, if he have any goodness,
 The trial just and noble. All the clerks,
 I mean, the learned ones, in christian kingdoms,
 Have their free voices: Rome, the nurse of judgement,
 Invited by your noble self, hath sent
 One general tongue unto us, this good man,
 This just and learned priest, cardinal Campeius;
 Whom, once more, I present unto your highness.
King. And, once more, in mine arms I bid him
 welcome,
 And thank the holy conclave for their loves;
 They have sent me such a man I would have wish'd for. [gers' loves,
Cam. Your grace must needs deserve all stran-

¹ The duchess of Alençon. ² Meaning, that the cardinal can, as he pleases, make high or low.
Pitch here implies height. ³ i. e. so sick as he is proud.

You are so noble: To your highness' hand
I tender my commission; by whose virtue,
(The court of Rome commanding)—you, my lord
Cardinal of York, are join'd with me their servant,
In the impartial judging of this business.

King. Two equal men. The queen shall be acquainted [diner?

Forthwith, for what you come:—Where's Gar-

Wol. I know, your majesty has always lov'd
So dear in heart, not to deny her that [her

A woman of less place might ask by law,
Scholars, allow'd freely to argue for her.

King. Ay, and the best, she shall have; and my favour

To him that does best, God forbid else. Cardinal, 15
Pr'ythee, call Gardiner to me, my new secretary;
I find him a fit fellow.

Cardinal goes out, and re-enters with Gardiner.

Wol. Give me your hand: much joy and favour
You are the king's now. [to you; 20

Gard. But to be commanded [me.
For ever by your grace, whose hand has raised

[Aside.
King. Come hither, Gardiner. [Walks and whispers.

Cam. My lord of York, was not one doctor Pace 25
In this man's place before him?

Wol. Yes, he was.

Cam. Was he not held a learned man?

Wol. Yes, surely. [then

Cam. Believe me, there's an ill opinion spread 30
Even of yourself, lord cardinal.

Wol. How! of me? [him;

Cam. They will not stick to say, you envy'd
And, fearing he would rise, he was so virtuous,
Kept him a foreign man¹ still: which so griev'd 35
That he ran mad, and dy'd. [him,

Wol. Heaven's peace be with him!

That's christian care enough for living murmurers,
There's places of rebuke. He was a fool;

For he would needs be virtuous: that good fellow, 40
If I command him, follows my appointment;

I will have none so near else. Learn this, brother,
We live not to be grip'd by meaner persons.

King. Deliver this with modesty to the queen.
[Exit Gardiner. 45

The most convenient place that I can think of,
For such receipt of learning, is Black-friars;

There ye shall meet about this weighty business:—
My Wolsey, see it furnish'd.—O my lord,

Would it not grieve an able man, to leave
So sweet a bedfellow? but, conscience, conscience,—

O, 'tis a tender place, and I must leave her. [Exeunt.
S C E N E III.

An Antichamber of the Queen's Apartments.

Enter Anne Bullen, and an old Lady.

Anne. Not for that neither;—Here's the pang that pinches:

His highness having liv'd so long with her; and she
So good a lady, that no tongue could ever
Pronounce dishonour of her,—by my life,
She never knew harm-doing;—O now, after

5 So many courses of the sun enthron'd,
Still growing in a majesty and pomp,—the which

To leave is a thousand-fold more bitter, than
'Tis sweet at first to acquire,—after this process,

To give her the avaunt!² it is a pity
10 Would move a monster.

Old L. Hearts of most hard temper
Melt and lament for her.

Anne. O, God's will! much better,
She ne'er had known pomp: though it be temporal,

15 Yet, if that quarrel³, fortune, do divorce
It from the bearer, 'tis a sufferance, panging
As soul and body's severing.

Old L. Alas, poor lady!

She's stranger now again⁴.

Anne. So much the more

Must pity drop upon her. Verily,

I swear, 'tis better to be lowly born,

And range with humble livers in content,

Than to be perk'd up in a glistening grief,

25 And wear a golden sorrow.

Old L. Our content,

Is our best having⁵.

Anne. By my troth, and maidenhead,

I would not be a queen.

Old L. Beshrew me, I would,

And venture maidenhead for't; and so would you,

For all this spice of your hypocrisy:

You, that have so fair parts of woman on you,

Have too a woman's heart; which ever yet

35 Affected eminence, wealth, sovereignty;

Which, to say sooth, are blessings; and which

(Saving your mincing) the capacity [gifts

Of your soft cheveril⁶ conscience would receive,

If you might please to stretch it.

Anne. Nay, good troth.— [be a queen?

Old L. Yes, troth and troth,—You would not

Anne. No, not for all the riches under heaven.

Old L. 'Tis strange; a three-pence bow'd would hire me,

45 Old as I am, to queen it: but, I pray you,

What think you of a dutchess? have you limbs

To bear that load of title?

Anne. No, in truth. [a little?

Old L. Then you are weakly made: pluck off

50 I would not be a young count in your way,

For more than blushing comes to: if your back

Cannot vouchsafe this burden, 'tis too weak

Ever to get a boy.

Anne. How you do talk!

55 I swear again, I would not be a queen

For all the world.

Old L. In faith, for little England

¹ i. e. kept him out of the king's presence, by employing him in foreign embassies. ² i. e. to send her away contemptuously. ³ Dr. Warburton says, "she calls fortune a quarrel or arrow, from her striking so deep and suddenly. Quarrel was a large arrow so called."—Dr. Johnson, however, thinks the poet may be easily supposed to use quarrel for quarreller, as murder for murderer, the act for the agent. ⁴ i. e. she is again an alien; not only no longer queen, but no longer an English-woman. ⁵ i. e. our best possession. ⁶ Cheveril, kid-skin, soft leather. ⁷ i. e. let us descend still lower, and more upon a level with your own quality.

You'd venture an emballing¹: I myself
Would for Carnarvonshire, although there 'long'd
No more to the crown but that. Lo, who comes here?

Enter the Lord Chamberlain.

Cham. Good morrow, ladies. What were't worth, to know
The secret of your conference?

Anne. My good lord,
Not your demand; it values not your asking;
Our mistress' sorrows we were pitying.

Cham. It was a gentle business, and becoming
The action of good women; there is hope,
All will be well.

Anne. Now I pray God, Amen! [blessings]

Cham. You bear a gentle mind, and heavenly Follow such creatures. That you may, fair lady,
Perceive I speak sincerely, and high notes
Ta'en of your many virtues, the king's majesty
Commends his good opinion to you, and Does purpose honour to you no less flowing
Than marchioness of Pembroke; to which title
A thousand pounds a year, annual support,
Out of his grace he adds.

Anne. I do not know,
What kind of my obedience I should tender:
More than my all is nothing: nor my prayers
Are not words duly hallow'd, nor my wishes
More worth than empty vanities; yet prayers,
and wishes,

Are all I can return. 'Beseech your lordship,
Vouchsafe to speak my thanks, and my obedience,
As from a blushing handmaid, to his highness;
Whose health, and royalty, I pray for.

Cham. Lady,
I shall not fail to approve the fair conceit
The king hath of you.—I have perus'd her well;
Beauty and honour in her are so mingled, [Aside.
That they have caught the king: and who knows yet,

But from this lady may proceed a gem,
To lighten all this isle²?—I'll to the king,
And say, I spoke with you.

Anne. My honour'd lord. [Exit Lord Chamber-

Old L. Why, this it is; see, see! [lain. 45
I have been begging sixteen years in court, (Am yet a courtier beggarly) nor could Come pat betwixt too early and too late,
For any suit of pounds: and you, (O, fate!)

A very fresh fish here, (fye, fye upon
This compell'd fortune!) have your mouth fill'd
Before you open it. [up,

Anne. This is strange to me. [no.

5 Old L. How tastes it? is it bitter? forty pence³,
There was a lady once, ('tis an old story)
That would not be a queen, that would she not,
For all the mud in Ægypt:—Have you heard it?

Anne. Come, you are pleasant.

10 Old L. With your theme, I could O'er-mount the lark. The marchioness of Pembroke!

A thousand pounds a year! for pure respect;
No other obligation; by my life,

15 That promises more thousands: honour's train
Is longer than his fore-skirt. By this time,
I know, your back will bear a dutchess;—say,
Are you not stronger than you were?

Anne. Good lady,

20 Make yourself mirth with your particular fancy,
And leave me out on't. 'Would I had no being,
If this salute my blood a jot; it faints me,
To think what follows.

The queen is comfortless, and we forgetful
25 In our long absence: pray, do not deliver
What here you have heard, to her.

Old L. What do you think me? [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.

A Hall in Black-Fryars.

30 Trumpets, Sennet, and Cornets. Enter two Vergers, with short Silver Wands; next them, two Scribes, in the habits of Doctors; after them, the Archbishop of Canterbury alone; after him, the Bishops 35 of Lincoln, Ely, Rochester, and Saint Asaph;
next them, with some small distance, follows a Gentleman bearing the Purse, with the Great Seal, and a Cardinal's Hat; then two Priests, bearing each a Silver Cross; then a Gentleman-usher bare-40 headed, accompanied with a Serjeant at Arms, bearing a Silver Mace; then two Gentlemen, bearing two great Silver Pillars⁵; after them, side by side, the two Cardinals; two Noblemen with the Sword and Mace. The King takes place under 45 the Cloth of State; the two Cardinals sit under him, as Judges. The Queen takes place some distance from the King. The Bishops place themselves on each side the Court, in manner of a Consistory; below them, the Scribes. The Lords sit next the ¹ The meaning, according to Dr. Johnson, is, "You would venture to be distinguished by the ball, the ensign of royalty." Mr. Tollet, however, says, "Dr. Johnson's explanation cannot be right, because a queen-consort, such as Anne Bullen was, is not distinguished by the ball, the ensign of royalty, nor has the poet expressed that she was so distinguished." ² From this and many other artful strokes of address, the poet has thrown in upon queen Elizabeth and her mother, it should seem, that this play was written and performed in his royal mistress's time; if so, some lines were added by him in the last scene, after the accession of her successor, king James. ³ Mr. Steevens on this passage remarks, "Forty pence was in those days the proverbial expression of a small wager, or a small sum. Money was then reckoned by pounds, marks, and nobles. Forty pence is half a noble, or the sixth part of a pound. Forty pence, or three and four pence, still remains in many offices the legal and established fee." ⁴ Dr. Burney in his General History of Music conjectures, that sennet may mean a flourish for the purpose of assembling chiefs, or apprizing the people of their approach. Mr. Steevens adds, that he has been informed that seneste is the name of an antiquated French tune. ⁵ Pillars were some of the ensigns of dignity carried before cardinals. Wolsey had two great silver pillars usually borne before him by two of the tallest priests that he could get within the realm. This remarkable piece of pageantry did not escape the notice of Shakspeare.

Bishops. The rest of Attendants stand in convenient order about the Stage.

Wol. Whilst our commission from Rome is read,
Let silence be commanded.

King. What's the need?
It hath already publicly been read,
And on all sides the authority allow'd;
You may then spare that time.

Wol. Be't so:—Proceed.

Scribe. Say, Henry king of England, come into
the court.

Crier. Henry king of England, &c.

King. Here.

Scribe. Say, Katharine queen of England, come into the court.

Crier. Katharine, queen of England, &c.

[The Queen makes no answer, rises out of her chair, goes about the Court, comes to the King, and kneels at his feet; then speaks.]

Queen. Sir, I desire you, do me right and justice;
And to bestow your pity on me: for
I am a most poor woman, and a stranger,
Born out of your dominions: having here
No judge indifferent, nor no more assurance
Of equal friendship and proceeding. Alas, sir,
In what have I offended you? what cause
Hath my behaviour given to your displeasure,
That thus you should proceed to put me off,
And take your good grace from me? Heaven wit-
I have been to you a true and humble wife, [ness,
At all times to your will conformable:
Ever in fear to kindle your dislike,
Yea, subject to your countenance; glad, or sorry,
As I saw it inclin'd. When was the hour,
I ever contradicted your desire,
Or made it not mine too? Or which of your friends
Have I not strove to love, although I knew
He were mine enemy? what friend of mine,
That had to him deriv'd your anger, did I Continue in my liking? nay, gave not notice
He was from thence discharg'd? Sir, call to mind,
That I have been your wife, in this obedience,
Upwards of twenty years, and have been blest
With many children by you: If, in the course
And process of this time, you can report,
And prove it too, against mine honour aught,
My bond to wedlock, or my love and duty
Against your sacred person, in God's name,
Turn me away; and let the foul'st contempt
Shut door upon me, and so give me up
To the sharpest kind of justice. Please you, sir,
The king, your father, was reputed for
A prince most prudent, of an excellent
And unmatched wit and judgement: Ferdinand,
My father, king of Spain, was reckon'd one
The wisest prince, that there had reign'd by many
A year before: It is not to be question'd
That they had gather'd a wise council to them
Of every realm, that did debate this business,
Who deem'd our marriage lawful; Wherefore I humbly

Beseech you, sir, to spare me, 'till I may
Be by my friends in Spain advis'd; whose counsel
I will implore: If not; i' the name of God,
Your pleasure be fulfill'd!

5 Wol. You have here, lady,
(And of your choice) these reverend fathers; men
Of singular integrity and learning,
Yea, the elect of the land, who are assembled
To plead your cause: It shall be therefore bootless,
10 That longer you defer the court; as well
For your own quiet, as to rectify
What is unsettled in the king.

Cam. His grace
Hath spoken well, and justly: Therefore, madam,
15 It's fit this royal session do proceed;
And that, without delay, their arguments
Be now produc'd, and heard.

Queen. Lord cardinal,—
To you I speak.

20 Wol. Your pleasure, madam?

Queen. Sir,
I am about to weep; but, thinking that
We are a queen, (or long have dream'd so) certain,
The daughter of a king, my drops of tears
25 I'll turn to sparks of fire.

Wol. Be patient yet.

Queen. I will, when you are humble; nay, be-
Or God will punish me. I do believe, [fore, Induc'd by potent circumstances, that 30 You are mine enemy; and make my challenge¹,
You shall not be my judge; for it is you
Have blown this coal betwixt my lord and me.—
Which God's dew quench!—Therefore, I say
I utterly abhor, yea, from my soul [again,
35 Refuse you for my judge; whom, yet once more,
I hold my most malicious foe, and think not
At all a friend to truth.

Wol. I do profess,
You speak not like yourself; who ever yet
40 Have stood to charity, and display'd the effects
Of disposition gentle, and of wisdom [wrong;
O'er-topping woman's power, Madam, you do me
I have no spleen against you; nor injustice
For you, or any: how far I have proceeded,
45 Or how far further shall, is warranted
By a commission from the consistory,
Yea, the whole consistory of Rome. You charge
That I have blown this coal; I do deny it: [me,
The king is present: If it be known to him,
50 That I gainsay² my deed, how may he wound,
And worthily, my falsehood? yea, as much
As you have done my truth. If he know
That I am free of your report, he knows,
I am not of your wrong. Therefore in him
55 It lies, to cure me; and the cure is, to [before Remove these thoughts from you: The which
His highness shall speak in, I do beseech
You, gracious madam, to unthink your speaking,
And to say so no more.

60 Queen. My lord, my lord,
I am a simple woman, much too weak

challenge him. ² i. e. deny.

The criminal, when he refuses a juryman, says, I

To oppose your cunning. You are meek, and humble-mouth'd ;
You sign¹ your place and calling, in full seeming,
With meekness and humility : but your heart
Is cramm'd with arrogancy, spleen, and pride.
You have, by fortune, and his highness' favours,
Goneslightly o'er low steps ; and now are mounted,
Where powers are your retainers : and your words,
Domestics to you, serve your will, as 't please
Yourself pronounce their office². I must tell you,
You tender more your person's honour, than
Your high profession spiritual : That again
I do refuse you for my judge ; and here,
Before you all, appeal unto the Pope,
To bring my whole cause 'fore his holiness,
And to be judg'd by him,

[She curt'sies to the King, and offers to depart.]

Cam. The queen is obstinate,
Stubborn to justice, apt to accuse it, and Disdainful to be try'd by it ; 'tis not well.
She's going away.

King. Call her again.

[the court.]

Crier. Katharine, queen of England, come into Usher. Madam, you are call'd back.

Queen. What need you note it ? pray you, keep your way :

When you are call'd, return.—Now the Lord help,
They vex me past my patience !—pray you, pass
I will not tarry ; no, nor ever more, [on :
Upon this business, my appearance make
In any of their courts.

[Exeunt Queen and her Attendants.]

King. Go thy ways, Kate :

That man i' the world, who shall report he has
A better wife, let him in nought be trusted,
For speaking false in that : Thou art, alone,
(If thy rare qualities, sweet gentleness,
Thy meekness saint-like, wife-like government,—
Obeying in commanding,—and thy parts
Sovereign and pious else, could speak thee out³)
The queen of earthly queens :—She is noble born ;
And like her true nobility, she has Carried herself towards me.

Wol. Most gracious sir,
In humblest manner I require your highness,
That it shall please you to declare, in hearing
Of all these ears, (for where I am robb'd and bound,
There must I be unloos'd ; although not there
At once and fully satisfied⁴) whether ever I Did broach this business to your highness ; or Lay'd any scruple in your way, which might Induce you to the question on't ? or ever
Have to you,—but with thanks to God for such A royal lady,—spake one the least word, that might Be to the prejudice of her present state,

Or touch of her good person ?

King. My lord cardinal,

I do excuse you ; yea, upon mine honour,
I free you from 't. You are not to be taught
That you have many enemies, that know not
Why they are so, but, like to village curs,
Bark when their fellows do : by some of these
The queen is put in anger. You are excus'd :
But will you be more justified ? you ever
Have wish'd the sleeping of this business ; never Desir'd it to be stirr'd : but oft have hindred, oft,
The passages made toward it :—⁵ on my honour,
I speak my good lord cardinal to this point,
And thus far clear him. Now, what mov'd me to 't,—

I will be bold with time, and your attention :—
Then mark the inducement. Thus it came ;— give heed to 't :—

My conscience first receiv'd a tenderness, scruple, and prick⁶, on certain speeches utter'd
By the bishop of Bayonne, then French ambassa-
Who had been hither sent on the debating [dor ;
A marriage, 'twixt the duke of Orleans and
Our daughter Mary : I the progress of this business,
Ere a determinate resolution, he
(I mean the bishop) did require a respite ;
Wherein he might the king his lord advertise
Whether our daughter were legitimate,
Respecting this our marriage with the dowager,
Sometime our brother's wife. This respite shook
The bosom of my conscience, enter'd me,
Yea, with a splitting power, and made to tremble
The region of my breast ; which forc'd such way
That many maz'd considerings did throng,
And press'd in with this caution. First, methought,
I stood not in the smile of heaven ; who had Commanded nature, that my lady's womb,
If it conceiv'd a male child by me, should Do no more offices of life to 't, than
The grave does to the dead : for her male-issue
Or died where they were made, or shortly after
This world had air'd them : Hence I took a thought
This was a judgement on me ; that my kingdom,
Well worthy the best heir o' the world, should not Be gladdened in't by me : Then follows, that I weigh'd the danger which my realms stood in
By this my issue's fail ; and that gave to me
Many a groaning throe. Thus hulling⁷ in
The wild sea of my conscience, I did steer Toward this remedy, whereupon we are Now present here together ; that's to say,
I meant to rectify my conscience,—which
I then did feel full sick, and yet not well,—
By all the reverend fathers of the land,
And doctors learn'd.—First, I began in private
With you, my lord of Lincoln ; you remember

¹ i. e. you shew or denote.

² That is, Having now got power, you do not regard your word.

³ i. e. if thy several qualities could speak thy praise.

⁴ The sense is, "I owe so much to my own innocence, as to clear up my character, though I do not expect my wrongers will do me justice."

⁵ The king, having first addressed Wolsey, breaks off ; and declares upon his honour to the whole court, that he speaks the cardinal's sentiments upon the point in question ; and clears him from any attempt, or wish, to stir that business.

⁶ i. e. prick of conscience, which was the term in confession.

⁷ A ship is said to hull, when she is dismasted, and only her hull, or hulk, is left at the direction and mercy of the waves.

How under my oppression I did reek,
When I first mov'd you.

Lin. Very well, my liege. [say,

King. I have spokè long; be pleas'd yourself to How far you satisfy'd me.

Lin. So please your highness,
The question did at first so stagger me,—
Bearing a state of mighty moment in't,
And consequence of dread,—that I committed
The daring'st counsel which I had, to doubt;
And did entreat your highness to this course,
Which you are running here.

King. I then mov'd you,
My lord of Canterbury; and got your leave
To make this present summons:—Unsolicited
I left no reverend person in this court;
But by particular consent proceeded,
Under your hands and seals. Therefore, go on;
For no dislike i' the world against the person
Of our good queen, but the sharp thorny points

Of my alledged reasons, drive this forward:
Prove but our marriage lawful, by my life,
And kingly dignity, we are contented
To wear our mortal state to come, with her,
Katharine our queen, before the primest creature
That's paragon'd o' the world.

Cam. So please your highness,
The queen being absent, 'tis a needful fitness
That we adjourn this court to further day:
Mean while must be an earnest motion
Made to the queen, to call back her appeal
She intends unto his holiness. [They rise to depart.

King. I may perceive,
These cardinals trifle with me: I abhor
This dilatory sloth, and tricks of Rome.
My learn'd and well-beloved servant, Cranmer,
Pr'ythee, return! with thy approach, I know,
My comfort comes along. Break up the court:
I say, set on.

[Exeunt in manner as they entered.]

A C T III.

S C E N E I.

The Queen's Apartments.

The Queen and her Women, as at work.

Queen. TAKE thy lute, wench: my soul grows sad with troubles;
Sing, and disperse them, if thou canst; leave working.

S O N G.

*Orpheus with his lute made trees,
And the mountain-tops, that freeze,
Bow themselves, when he did sing:
To his musick, plants and flowers
Ever sprung; as sun, and showers,
There had made a lasting spring.*

*Every thing that heard him play,
Even the billows of the sea,
Hung their heads, and then lay by.
In sweet musick is such art;
Killing care, and grief of heart,
Fall asleep, or, hearing, die.*

Enter a Gentleman.

Queen. How now? [dinals

Gent. An't please your grace, the two great car-
Wait in the presence¹.

Queen. Would they speak with me?

Gent. They will'd me say so, madam.

Queen. Pray their graces [business
To come near. [Exit Gent.] What can be their
With me, a poor weak woman, fallen from favour?

I do not like their coming, now I think on't.
They should be good men; their affairs² are righteous:

But, all hoods make not monks.

Enter Wolsey and Campeius.

Wol. Peace to your highness! [wife:

Queen. Your graces find me here part of a house-
I would be all, against the worst may happen.

What are your pleasures with me, reverend lords?
Wol. May it please you, noble madam, to withdraw

Into your private chamber, we shall give you
The full cause of our coming.

Queen. Speak it here;
There's nothing I have done yet, o' my conscience,
Deserves a corner: Would, all other women
Could speak this with as free a soul as I do!
My lords, I care not, (so much I am happy Above a number) if my actions
Were try'd by every tongue, every eye saw 'em,
Envy and base opinion set against 'em,
I know my life so even: If your business
Seek me out, and that way I am wife in,
Out with it boldly; Truth loves open dealing.

Wol. *Tanta est erga te mentis integritas, regina
serenissima,—*

Queen. O, good my lord, no Latin;
I am not such a truant since my coming,
As not to know the language I have liv'd in:
A strange tongue makes my cause more strange,
suspicious;

Pray, speak in English: here are some will thank
you,

If you speak truth, for their poor mistress' sake;
Believe me, she has had much wrong: Lord
cardinal,

The willing'st sin I ever yet committed,
May be absolv'd in English.

Wol. Noble lady,
I am sorry, my integrity should breed

² Affairs for professions.

(And service to his majesty and you)
So deep suspicion, where all faith was meant.
We come not by the way of accusation,
To taint that honour every good tongue blesses;
Nor to betray you any way to sorrow;
You have too much, good lady: but to know
How you stand minded in the weighty difference
Between the king and you; and to deliver,
Like free and honest men, our just opinions,
And comforts to your cause.

Cam. Most honour'd madam,
My lord of York,—out of his noble nature,
Zeal and obedience he still bore your grace;
Forgetting, like a good man, your late censure
Both of his truth and him, (which was too far)—
Offers, as I do, in a sign of peace,
His service, and his counsel.—

Queen. To betray me. [Aside.
My lords, I thank you both for your good wills,
Yespeak like honest men, (pray God, ye prove so!)
But how to make ye suddenly an answer,
In such a point of weight, so near mine honour,
(More near my life, I fear) with my weak wit,
And to such men of gravity and learning,
In truth, I know not. I was set at work
Among my maids; full little, God knows, looking Either for such men, or such business.
For her sake that I have been¹, (for I feel
The last fit of my greatness) good your graces,
Let me have time, and counsel, for my cause;
Alas! I am a woman, friendless, hopeless.

Wol. Madam, you wrong the king's love with these fears;
Your hopes and friends are infinite.

Queen. In England,
But little for my profit: Can you think, lords,
That any Englishman dare give me counsel?
Or be a known friend, 'gainst his highness' pleasure,

(Though he be grown so desp'rate to be honest)
And live a subject? Nay, forsooth, my friends,
They that must weigh out² my afflictions,
They that my trust must grow to, live not here;
They are, as all my other comforts, far hence,
In mine own country, lords.

Cam. I would, your grace
Would leave your griefs, and take my counsel.

Queen. How, sir? [tection;

Cam. Put your main cause into the king's pro-
He's loving, and most gracious: 'twill be much
Both for your honour better, and your cause;
For, if the trial of the law o'ertake you,
You'll part away disgrac'd.

Wol. He tells you rightly. [ruin:

Queen. Ye tell me what ye wish for both, my
Is this your christian counsel? out upon ye!
Heaven is above all yet; there sits a Judge,
That no king can corrupt.

Cam. Your rage mistakes us. [thought ye,

Queen. The more shame for ye; holy men

Upon my soul, two reverend cardinal virtues;
But cardinal sins, and hollow hearts, I fear ye:
Mend 'em for shame, my lords. Is this your comfort?

5 The cordial that ye bring a wretched lady?
A woman lost among ye, laugh'd at, scorn'd?
I will not wish ye half my miseries,
I have more charity: But say, I warn'd ye;
Take heed, for heaven's sake, take heed, lest at 10 once

The burdens of my sorrows fall upon ye.

Wol. Madam, this is a mere distraction;
You turn the good we offer into envy.

Queen. Ye turn me into nothing: Woe upon ye,
15 And all such false professors! Would ye have me
(If you have any justice, any pity;
If you be any thing but churchmen's habits)
Put my sick cause into his hands that hates me?
Alas! he has banish'd me his bed already;
20 His love, too long ago; I am old, my lords,
And all the fellowship I hold now with him
Is only my obedience. What can happen
To me, above this wretchedness? all your studies
Make me a curse like this.

25 Cam. Your fears are worse. [myself,

Queen. Have I liv'd thus long,—let me speak
Since virtue finds no friends,—a wife, a true one?
A woman, (I dare say, without vain-glory)
Never yet branded with suspicion?

30 Have I with all my full affections [him?
Still met the king? lov'd him next heaven? obey'd
Been, out of fondness, superstitious³ to him?
Almost forgot my prayers to content him?
And am I thus rewarded? 'tis not well, lords.

35 Bring me a constant woman to her husband,
One that ne'er dream'd a joy beyond his pleasure;
And to that woman, when she has done most,
Yet will I add an honour,—a great patience.

Wol. Madam, you wander from the good we aim at. [guilty,

Queen. My lord, I dare not make myself so
To give up willingly that noble title
Your master wed me to: nothing but death
Shall e'er divorce my dignities.

45 Wol. Pray, hear me. [earth,

Queen. 'Would I had never trod this English
Or felt the flatteries that grow upon it!
Ye have angels'⁴ faces, but heaven knows your hearts.

50 What will become of me now! wretched lady!
I am the most unhappy woman living.—
Alas! poor wenches, where are now your fortunes? [To her women.

Shipwreck'd upon a kingdom, where no pity,
No friends, no hope; no kindred weep for me;
Almost, no grave allow'd me:—Like the lily,
That once was mistress of the field, and flourished,
I'll hang my head, and perish.

Wol. If your grace [nest,
60 Could but be brought to know, our ends are ho-

You'd feel more comfort: why should we, good lady,
Upon what cause, wrong you? alas! our places,
The way of our profession is against it;
We are to cure such sorrows, not to sow 'em.
For goodness' sake, consider what you do;
How you may hurt yourself, ay, utterly
Grow from the king's acquaintance, by this car-

So much they love it; but, to stubborn spirits,
They swell, and grow as terrible as storms.

Cam. Madam, you'll find it so. You wrong your
With these weak woman's fears. A noble spirit,
As yours was put into you, ever casts
Such doubts, as false coin, from it. The king loves you;

Beware, you lose it not: For us, if you please
To trust us in your business, we are ready
To use our utmost studies in your service.

Queen. Do what ye will, my lords: And, pray,
forgive me,
If I have us'd myself unmannerly;
You know, I am a woman, lacking wit
To make a seemly answer to such persons.
Pray, do my service to his majesty:
He has my heart yet; and shall have my prayers,
While I shall have my life. Come, reverend fathers,

Bestow your counsels on me: she now begs,
That little thought, when she set footing here,
She should have bought her dignities so dear.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

Antichamber to the King's Apartment.

Enter Duke of Norfolk, Duke of Suffolk, the Earl of Surrey, and the Lord Chamberlain.

Nor. If you will now unite in your complaints,
And force¹ them with a constancy, the cardinal
Cannot stand under them: If you omit
The offer of this time, I cannot promise,
But that you shall sustain more new disgraces,
With these you bear already.

Sur. I am joyful
To meet the least occasion, that may give me
Remembrance of my father-in-law, the duke,
To be reveng'd on him.

Suf. Which of the peers
Have uncontain'd gone by him, or at least
Strangely neglected? when did he regard
The stamp of nobleness in any person,
Out of himself²?

Cham. My lords, you speak your pleasures:
What he deserves of you and me, I know;
What we can do to him, (though now the time Gives way to us) I much fear. If you cannot Bar his access to the king, never attempt

Any thing on him; for he hath a witchcraft
Over the king in his tongue.

Nor. O, fear him not;
His spell in that is out: the king hath found
Matter against him, that for ever mars
The honey of his language. No, he's settled,
Not to come off, in his displeasure.

Sur. Sir,
I should be glad to hear such news as this Once every hour.

Nor. Believe it, this is true.
In the divorce, his³ contrary proceedings
Are all unfolded; wherein he appears,
As I would wish mine enemy.

Sur. How came
His practices to light?

Suf. Most strangely.

Sur. O, how, how?

Suf. The cardinal's letter to the pope miscarried,
And came to the eye o' the king: wherein was read,
How that the cardinal did entreat his holiness
To stay the judgement o' the divorce; For if
It did take place, I do, quoth he, perceive,
My king is tangled in affection to
A creature of the queen's, lady Anne Bullen.

Sur. Has the king this?

Suf. Believe it.

Sur. Will this work?

Cham. The king in this perceives him, how he
And hedges⁴, his own way. But in this point
All his tricks founder, and he brings his physick
After his patient's death; the king already Hath married the fair lady.

Sur. Would he had!

Suf. May you be happy in your wish, my lord;
For, I profess, you have it.

Sur. Now all my joy
Trace⁵ the conjunction!

Suf. My amen to't!

Nor. All men's.

Suf. There's order given for her coronation:
Marry, this is yet but young, and may be left
To some ears unrecounted.—But, my lords,
She is a gallant creature, and complete
In mind and feature: I persuade me, from her
Will fall some blessing to this land, which shall
In it be memoriz'd⁶.

Sur. But, will the king
Digest this letter of the cardinal's?
The Lord forbid!

Nor. Marry, Amen!

Suf. No, no;

There be more wasps that buz about his nose,
Will make this sting the sooner. Cardinal Campeius
Is stol'n away to Rome; hath ta'en no leave;
Has left the cause of the king unhandled; and
Is posted, as the agent of our cardinal,

¹ i. e. enforce, urge. ² i. e. except in himself. ³ i. e. his private practices opposite to his public procedure. ⁴ To hedge, is to creep along by the hedge: not to take the direct and open path. ⁵ To trace is to follow. ⁶ To memorize is to make memorable.

To second all his plot. I do assure you,
The king cry'd ha! at this.

Cham. Now, God incense him,
And let him cry ha! louder.

Nor. But, my lord,
When returns Cranmer?

Suf. He is return'd, in his opinions¹; which
Have satisfy'd the king for his divorce,
Together with all famous colleges
Almost in Christendom: shortly, I believe,
His second marriage shall be publish'd, and
Her coronation. Katharine no more
Shall be call'd queen; but princess dowager,
And widow to prince Arthur.

Nor. This same Cranmer's
A worthy fellow, and hath ta'en much pain
In the king's business.

Suf. He has; and we shall see him
For it, an archbishop.

Nor. So I hear.

Suf. 'Tis so.

The cardinal——

Enter Wolsey, and Cromwell.

Nor. Observe, observe, he's moody.

Wol. The packet, Cromwell,
Gave't you the king?

Crom. To his own hand, in his bed-chamber.

Wol. Look'd he o' the inside of the paper?

Crom. Presently
He did unseal them: and the first he view'd,
He did it with a serious mind; a heed
Was in his countenance: You, he bade
Attend him here this morning.

Wol. Is he ready
To come abroad?

Crom. I think, by this he is.

Wol. Leave me a while.— [Exit Cromwell.]
It shall be to the dutchess of Alençon,
The French king's sister: he shall marry her.—
Anne Bullen! No; I'll no Anne Bullens for him:
There's more in't than fair visage.—Bullen!
No, we'll no Bullens!—Speedily I wish
To hear from Rome.—The marchioness of Pembroke!—

Nor. He's discontented.

Suf. May be, he hears the king
Does whet his anger to him.

Sur. Sharp enough,
Lord, for thy justice! [daughter,

Wol. The late queen's gentlewoman; a knight's
To be her mistress' mistress! the queen's queen!—
This candle burns not clear: 'tis I must snuff it;
Then, out it goes.—What though I know her virtuous,

And well-deserving? yet I know her for
A spleeny Lutheran; and not wholesome to
Our cause, that she should lie i' the bosom of
Our hard-ru'd king. Again, there is sprung up
An heretic, an arch one, Cranmer; one

Hath crawl'd into the favour of the king,
And is his oracle.

Nor. He is vex'd at something.

Sur. I would, 'twere something that would fret the string,
The master-cord of his heart!

Enter the King, reading a schedule²; and Lovel.

Suf. The king, the king.

King. What piles of wealth hath he accumulated
To his own portion! and what expence by the hour Seems to flow from him! How, i' the name of thrift,

Does he rake this together!—Now, my lords;
Saw you the cardinal?

Nor. My lord, we have [tion
Stood here observing him: Some strange commo-
Is in his brain: he bites his lip, and starts;
Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground,
Then, lays his finger on his temple; straight,
Springs out into fast gait; then, stops again,
Strikes his breast hard; and anon, he casts
His eye against the moon: in most strange postures
We have seen him set himself.

King. It may well be;
There is a mutiny in his mind. This morning,
Papers of state he sent me to peruse,
As I requir'd; And, wot you, what I found
There; on my conscience, put unwittingly?
Forsooth, an inventory, thus importing,—
The several parcels of his plate, his treasure, Rich stuffs, and ornaments of household; which
I find at such proud rate, that it out-speaks
Possession of a subject.

Nor. It is heaven's will;
Some spirit put this paper in the packet,
To bless your eye withal.

King. If we did think
His contemplations were above the earth,
And fix'd on spiritual objects, he should still Dwell in his musings; but, I am afraid,
His thinkings are below the moon, not worth
His serious considering.

[He takes his seat; and whispers Lovel, who goes to Wolsey.

Wol. Heaven forgive me!—
Ever God bless your highness!

King. Good my lord, [tory
You are full of heavenly stuff, and bear the inven-
Of your best graces in your mind; the which
You were now running o'er: you have scarce
time

To steal from spiritual leisure a brief span,
To keep your earthly audit: sure, in that
I deem you an ill husband; and am glad
To have you therein my companion.

Wol. Sir,
For holy offices I have a time; a time
To think upon the part of business, which I bear i' the state; and nature does require

¹ I. e. with the same sentiments he entertained before he went abroad, which sentiments justify the king's divorce. ² Mr. Steevens on this passage remarks thus: "That the cardinal gave the king an inventory of his own private wealth, by mistake, and thereby ruined himself, is a known variation from the truth of history. Shakspeare, however, has not injudiciously represented the fall of that great man, as owing to a similar incident which he had once improved to the destruction of another." See Holinshed, vol. ii. p. 796.

Her times of preservation, which, perforce,
I her frail son, amongst my brethren mortal,
Must give my tendance to.

King. You have said well.

Wol. And ever may your highness yoke together,
As I will lend you cause, my doing well
With my well saying!

King. 'Tis well said again;
And 'tis a kind of good deed, to say well:
And yet words are no deeds. My father lov'd you:
He said, he did; and with his deed did crown
His word upon you. Since I had my office,
I have kept you next my heart; have not alone
Employ'd you where high profits might come home,

But par'd my present havings, to bestow
My bounties upon you.

Wol. What should this mean? [Aside.

Sur. The Lord increase this business! [Aside.

King. Have I not made you
The prime man of the state? I pray you, tell me,
If what I now pronounce, you have found true:
And, if you may confess it, say withal,
If you are bound to us, or no. What say you?

Wol. My sovereign, I confess, your royal graces, Shower'd on me daily, have been more than could
My studied purposes requite; which went Beyond all man's endeavours¹: my endeavours
Have ever come too short of my desires,
Yet, fil'd² with my abilities: Mine own ends
Have been mine so, that evermore they pointed
To the good of your most sacred person, and
The profit of the state. For your great graces
Heap'd upon me, poor undeserver, I
Can nothing render but allegiant thanks;
My prayers to heaven for you; my loyalty,
Which ever has, and ever shall be growing,
'Till death, that winter, kill it.

King. Fairly answer'd:
A loyal and obedient subject is
Therein illustrated: the honour of it
Does pay the act of it; as, i³ the contrary,
The foulness is the punishment. I presume,
That, as my hand has open'd bounty to you,
My heart dropp'd love, my power rain'd honour,
more

On you, than any; so your hand, and heart,
Your brain, and every function of your power,
Should, notwithstanding that your bond of duty,
As 'twere in love's particular, be more
'To me, your friend, than any.

Wol. I do profess,
That for your highness' good I ever labour'd
More than mine own; that am, have, and will be.
Though all the world should crack their duty
to you,

And throw it from their soul; though perils did Abound, as thick as thought could make 'em, and Appear in forms more horrid; yet my duty,
As doth a rock against the chiding flood,
Should the approach of this wild river break,
And stand unshaken yours.

King. 'Tis nobly spoken:

Take notice, lords, he has a loyal breast,
For you have seen him open't.—[Read o'er this;
[Giving him papers.

And, after, this: and then to breakfast, with
What appetite you have.

[Exit King, frowning upon Cardinal Wolsey;
the Nobles throng after him, whispering and smiling.

Wol. What should this mean?

What sudden anger's this? how have I reap'd it?
He parted frowning from me, as if ruin
Leap'd from his eyes: So looks the chafed lion
Upon the daring huntsman that has gall'd him;
Then makes him nothing. I must read this paper;

I fear, the story of his anger.—'Tis so:
This paper has undone me:—'Tis the account
Of all that world of wealth I've drawn together
For mine own ends: indeed, to gain the popedom,
And fee my friends in Rome. O negligence,
Fit for a fool to fall by! What cross devil
Made me put this main secret in the packet
I sent the king? Is there no way to cure this?

No new device to beat this from his brains?
I know, 'twill stir him strongly; yet I know
A way, if it take right, in spite of fortune,
Will bring me off again. What's this—To the Pope?
The letter, as I live, with all the business
I writ to his holiness. Nay then, farewell!
I have touch'd the highest point of all my greatness;
And, from that full meridian of my glory,
I haste now to my setting: I shall fall
Like a bright exhalation in the evening,
And no man see me more.

35 Re-enter the Dukes of Norfolk, and Suffolk, the Earl of Surrey, and the Lord Chamberlain.

Nor. Hear the king's pleasure, cardinal: who commands you

To render up the great seal presently
40 Into our hands; and to confine yourself
To Esher house, my lord of Winchester's,
'Till you hear further from his highness.

Wol. Stay, [carry
Where's your commission, lords? words cannot Authority so mighty.

Suf. Who dare cross 'em?
Bearing the king's will from his mouth expressly?

Wol. 'Till I find more than will, or words, to do it,

50 (I mean your malice) know, officious lords,
I dare, and must deny it. Now I feel
Of what coarse metal ye are moulded,—envy.
How eagerly ye follow my disgrace,
As if it fed 'ye! and how sleek and wanton
Ye appear in every thing may bring my ruin!
Follow your envious courses, men of malice;
You have christian warrant for them, and no doubt,
In time will find their fit rewards. That seal,
You ask with such a violence, the king [me;
60 (Mine, and your master) with his own hand gave Bade me enjoy it, with the place and honours,
During my life; and, to confirm his goodness,

¹ The sense is, my purposes went beyond all human endeavour. ² i. e. ranked, or have gone an equal pace with my abilities

Ty'd it by letters patents : Now, who'll take it?

Sur. The king, that gave it.

Wol. It must be himself then.

Sur. Thou art a proud traitor, priest.

Wol. Proud lord, thou liest ;

Within these forty hours Surrey durst better
Have burnt that tongue, than said so.

Sur. Thy ambition,

Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land
Of noble Buckingham, my father-in-law :

The heads of all thy brother cardinals
(With thee, and all thy best parts bound together)
Weigh'd not a hair of his. Plague of your policy !
You sent me deputy for Ireland ;

Far from his succour, from the king, from all
That might have mercy on the fault thou gav'st him ;
Whilst your great goodness, out of holy pity,
Absolv'd him with an axe :

Wol. This, and all else

This talking lord can lay upon my credit,

I answer, is most false : The duke by law

Found his deserts : how innocent I was

From any private malice in his end,

His noble jury and foul cause can witness.

If I lov'd many words, lord, I should tell you,

You have as little honesty as honour ;

That I, in the way of loyalty and truth

Toward the king, my ever royal master,

Dare mate a sounder man than Surrey can be,

And all that love his follies.

Sur. By my soul,

[feel

Your long coat, priest, protects you : thou should'st

My sword i' the life-blood of thee else.—My lords,

Can ye endure to hear this arrogance ?

And from this fellow ? If we live thus tamely,

To be thus jaded by a piece of scarlet,

Farewell nobility ; let his grace go forward,

And dare us with his cap, like larks¹.

Wol. All goodness

Is poison to thy stomach.

Sur. Yes, that goodness

Of gleaning all the land's wealth into one,

Into your own hands, cardinal, by extortion ;

The goodness of your intercepted packets,

You writ to the pope, against the king : your goodness,

Since you provoke me, shall be most notorious.—

My lord of Norfolk,—as you are truly noble,

As you respect the common good, the state

Of your despis'd nobility, our issues,

Who, if he live, will scarce be gentlemen,—

Produce the grand sum of his sins, the articles

Collected from his life :—I'll startle you [wench

Worse than the saering bell², when the brown

Lay kissing in your arms, lord cardinal. [man,

Wol. How much, methinks, I could despise this

But that I am bound in charity against it !

Nor. Those articles, my lord, are in the king's hand :

But, thus much, they are foul ones.

Wol. So much fairer,

5 And spotless, shall mine innocence arise,
When the king knows my truth.

Sur. This cannot save you :

I thank my memory, I yet remember

Some of these articles ; and out they shall.

10 Now, if you can blush, and cry guilty, cardinal,
You'll shew a little honesty.

Wol. Speak on, sir ;

I dare your worst objections : if I blush,

It is, to see a nobleman want manners. [at you.

15 Sur. I'd rather want those, than my head. Have

First, that, without the king's assent, or knowledge,

You wrought to be a legate ; by which power

You maim'd the jurisdiction of all bishops.

Nor. Then, that, in all you writ to Rome, or else

20 To foreign princes, Ego et Rex meus

Was still inscrib'd ; in which you brought the king

To be your servant.

Suf. Then, that, without the knowledge

Either of king or council, when you went

25 Ambassador to the emperor, you made bold

To carry into Flanders the great seal.

Sur. Item, you sent a large commission

To Gregory de Cassalis, to conclude,

Without the king's will, or the state's allowance,

30 A league between his highness and Ferrara.

Suf. That, out of mere ambition, you have caus'd

Your holy hat to be stamp'd on the king's coin.

Sur. Then, that you have sent innumerable substance

35 (By what means got, I leave to your own conscience)

To furnish Rome, and to prepare the ways

You have for dignities ; to the mere undoing

Of all the kingdom. Many more there are ;

Which, since they are of you, and odious,

40 I will not taint my mouth with.

Cham. O my lord,

Press not a falling man too far ; 'tis virtue :

His faults lie open to the laws ; let them,

Not you, correct him. My heart weeps to see him

45 So little of his great self.

Sur. I forgive him.

[is,—

Suf. Lord cardinal, the king's further pleasure

Because all those things, you have done of late

By your power legatine within this kingdom,

50 Fall into the compass of a Præmunire,—

That therefore such a writ be su'd against you ;

To forfeit all your goods, lands, tenements,

Castles, and whatsoever, and to be

Out of the king's protection⁴ :—This is my charge.

55 Nor. And so we'll leave you to your meditations

How to live better. For your stubborn answer,

About the giving back the great seal to us,

¹ The hat of a cardinal was scarlet ; and the method of daring larks was by small mirrors fastened on scarlet cloth, which engaged the attention of these birds while the fowler drew his net over them.

² The little bell, which is rung to give notice of the Host approaching when it is carried in procession, as also in other offices of the Romish church, is called the sacring or consecration bell ; from the French word, sacrer. ³ i. e. absolute. ⁴ The judgement in a writ of Præmunire is, that the defendant shall be out of the king's protection ; and his lands and tenements, goods and chattels, forfeited to the king ; and that his body shall remain in prison at the king's pleasure.

The king shall know it, and, no doubt, shall thank you.

So fare you well, my little good lord cardinal.

[Exeunt all but Wolsey.]

Wol. So farewell to the little good you bear me.
Farewell, a long farewell, to all my greatness!
This is the state of man; To-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hope, to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him:
The third day, comes a frost, a killing frost;
And,—when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a-ripening,—nips his root,
And then he falls, as I do. I have ventur'd,
Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,
These many summers in a sea of glory;
But far beyond my depth: my high-blown pride
At length broke under me; and now has left me,
Weary, and old with service, to the mercy
Of a rude stream, that must for ever hide me.
Vain pomp, and glory of this world! I hate ye;
I feel my heart new open'd: O, how wretched
Is that poor man, that hangs on princes' favours!
There is, betwixt that smile we would aspire to,
That sweet aspect of princes, and our ruin,
More pangs and fears than wars or women have;
And when he falls, he falls like Lucifer,
Never to hope again.—

Enter Cromwell, amazedly.

Why, how now, Cromwell?

Crom. I have no power to speak, sir.

Wol. What, amaz'd

At my misfortunes? can thy spirit wonder,
A great man should decline? Nay, an you weep,
I am fallen indeed.

Crom. How does your grace?

Wol. Why, well;

Never so truly happy, my good Cromwell.
I know myself now; and I feel within me
A peace above all earthly dignities, [me,
A still and quiet conscience. The king has cur'd
I humbly thank his grace; and from these shoulders,
These ruin'd pillars, out of pity, taken
A load would sink a navy, too much honour:
O, 'tis a burden, Cromwell, 'tis a burden,
Too heavy for a man that hopes for heaven.

Crom. I am glad your grace has made that right use of it.

Wol. I hope, I have: I am able now, methinks, (Out of a fortitude of soul I feel)
To endure more miseries, and greater far,
Than my weak-hearted enemies dare offer.
What news abroad?

Crom. The heaviest and the worst,
Is your displeasure with the king.

Wol. God bless him!

Crom. The next is, that Sir Thomas More is chosen
Lord chancellor in your place.

Wol. That's somewhat sudden:

But he's a learned man. May he continue
Long in his highness' favour, and do justice
For truth's sake and his conscience; that his bones,
When he has run his course, and sleeps in blessings,
May have a tomb of orphans' tears wept on him!
What more?

Crom. That Crammer is return'd with welcome,

Install'd lord archbishop of Canterbury.

Wol. That's news indeed.

Crom. Last, that the lady Anne,
Whom the king hath in secrecy long marry'd,
This day was view'd in open, as his queen,
Going to chapel; and the voice is now
Only about her coronation.

Wol. There was the weight that pull'd me down.

O Cromwell,

The king has gone beyond me, all my glories
In that one woman I have lost for ever:
No sun shall ever usher forth mine honours,
Or gild again the noble troops that waited
Upon my smiles. Go, get thee from me, Cromwell;
I am a poor fallen man, unworthy now
To be thy lord and master: Seek the king;
That sun, I pray, may never set! I have told him
What, and how true thou art: he will advance
Some little memory of me will stir him, [thee;
I know his noble nature, not to let
Thy hopeful service perish too: Good Cromwell,
Neglect him not; make use now, and provide
For thine own future safety.

Crom. O my lord,

Must I then leave you? must I needs forego
So good, so noble, and so true a master?—
Bear witness, all that have not hearts of iron,
With what a sorrow Cromwell leaves his lord.—
The king shall have my service; but my prayers
For ever, and for ever, shall be yours.

Wol. Cromwell, I did not think to shed a tear
In all my miseries; but thou hast forc'd me,
Out of thy honest truth, to play the woman.
Let's dry our eyes: And thus far hear me, Cromwell;
And,—when I am forgotten, as I shall be;
And sleep in dull cold marble, where no mention
Of me more must be heard of,—say, I taught thee,
Say, Wolsey,—that once trod the ways of glory,
And sounded all the depths and shoals of honour,—
Found thee a way, out of his wreck, to rise in;
A sure and safe one, though thy master miss'd it.
Mark but my fall, and that that ruin'd me.
Cromwell, I charge thee, fling away ambition;
By that sin fell the angels, how can man then,
The image of his Maker, hope to win by 't? [thee;
Love thyself last: cherish those hearts that hate
Corruption wins not more than honesty.

Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace,
To silence envious tongues. Be just, and fear not:
Let all the ends, thou aim'st at, be thy country's,
Thy God's, and truth's; then if thou fall'st, O
Cromwell,

Thou fall'st a blessed martyr. Serve the king;
And,—Pr'ythee, lead me in:

There take an inventory of all I have,
To the last penny; 'tis the king's: my robe,
And my integrity to heaven, is all
I dare now call mine own. O Cromwell, Cromwell,
Had I but serv'd my God with half the zeal
I serv'd my king, He would not in mine age
Have left me naked to mine enemies².

Crom. Good sir, have patience.

Wol. So I have. Farewell

The hopes of court! my hopes in heaven do dwell.

[Exeunt.]

¹ The chancellor is the general guardian of orphans.

² This sentence was really uttered by Wolsey.

A C T IV.

S C E N E I.

*A Street in Westminster.Enter two Gentlemen, meeting one another.*1 Gent. YOU are well met¹ once again.

2 Gent. So are you. [behold]

1 Gent. You come to take your stand here, and
The lady Anne pass from her coronation?2 Gent. 'Tis all my business. At our last encounter,
The duke of Buckingham came from his trial.1 Gent. 'Tis very true: but that time offer'd sor-
This, general joy. [row;2 Gent. 'Tis well: the citizens,
I am sure, have shewn at full their loyal minds;
As, let'em have their rights, they are ever forward,
In celebration of this day with shews,
Pageants, and sights of honour.1 Gent. Never greater,
Nor, I'll assure you, better taken, sir.2 Gent. May I be bold to ask what that contains,
That paper in your hand?1 Gent. Yes; 'tis the list
Of those, that claim their offices this day,
By custom of the coronation.
The duke of Suffolk is the first, and claims
To be high steward; next the duke of Norfolk,
To be earl marshal: you may read the rest.2 Gent. I thank you, sir; had I not known those customs,I should have been beholden to your paper.
But, I beseech you, what's become of Katharine,
The princess dowager? how goes her business?1 Gent. That I can tell you too. The archbishop Of Canterbury, accompanied with other
Learn'd and reverend fathers of his order,
Held a late court at Dunstable, six miles off
From Ampthill, where the princess lay; to which
She oft was cited by them, but appear'd not:
And, to be short, for not appearance, and
The king's late scruple, by the main assent
Of all these learned men, she was divorc'd,
And the late marriage made of none effect:
Since which, she was remov'd to Kimbolton,
Where she remains now, sick.1 Gent. Alas, good lady!—
The trumpets sound: stand close; the queen is com-ming. [Hautboys.

THE ORDER OF THE CORONATION.

1. *A lively flourish of trumpets.*2. *Then two Judges.*3. *Lord Chancellor, with the purse and mace before him.*4. Choristers singing. [Music.5. *Mayor of London, bearing the mace. Then Garter, in his coat of arms, and on his head a gilt copper crown.*6. *Marquis Dorset, bearing a sceptre of gold, on his head a demi-coronal of gold. With him, the Earl of Surrey, bearing the rod of silver with the dove, crown'd with an earl's coronet. Collars of SS.*7. *Duke of Suffolk, in his robe of estate, his coronet on his head, bearing a long white wand, as high steward. With him the Duke of Norfolk, with the rod of marshalship, a coronet on his head. Collars of SS.*8. *A canopy borne by four of the Cinque-ports;
under it the Queen in her robe; her hair richly adorn'd with pearl, crown'd. On each side her, the bishops of London and Winchester.*9. *The old dutchess of Norfolk, in a coronal of gold, wrought with flowers, bearing the Queen's train.*10. *Certain Ladies or Countesses, with plain circlets of gold without flowers.
They pass over the stage in order and state.*2 Gent. A royal train, believe me.—These I
Who's that, that bears the sceptre? [know;—

1 Gent. Marquis Dorset:

And that the earl of Surrey, with the rod.

2 Gent. A bold brave gentleman. That should be
The duke of Suffolk.

1 Gent. 'Tis the same, high-steward.

2 Gent. And that my lord of Norfolk.

1 Gent. Yes.

2 Gent. Heaven bless thee! [Looking on the Queen.

Thou hast the sweetest face I ever look'd on.—

Sir, as I have a soul, she is an angel;

35 Our king has all the Indies in his arms,
And more, and richer, when he strains that lady:
I cannot blame his conscience.

1 Gent. They, that bear

The cloth of honour over her, are four barons

Of the Cinque-ports. [her.

2 Gent. Those men are happy; so are all are near

I take it, she that carries up the train,

Is that old noble lady, dutchess of Norfolk.

1 Gent. It is; and all the rest are countesses.

2 Gent. Their coronets say so. These are stars,

And, sometimes, falling ones, [indeed;

1 Gent. No more of that. [pets.

[Exit Procession, with a great flourish of trum-

Enter a third Gentleman.

50 God save you, sir! Where have you been broiling?

3 Gent. Among the crowd i' the abbey; where a

Could not be wedg'd in more: I am stifled [finger

With the mere rankness of their joy.

2 Gent. You saw the ceremony?

3 Gent. That I did.

1 Gent. How was it?

3 Gent. Well worth the seeing.

2 Gent. Good sir, speak it to us.

¹ Alluding to their former meeting, in the second act.

3 Gent. As well as I am able. The rich stream
Of lords, and ladies, having brought the queen
To a prepar'd place in the choir, fell off
A distance from her: while her grace sat down
To rest awhile, some half an hour, or so,
In a rich chair of state, opposing freely
The beauty of her person to the people.
Believe me, sir, she is the goodliest woman
That ever lay by man: which when the people
Had the full view of, such a noise arose
As the shrouds make at sea in a stiff tempest,
As loud, and to as many tunes: Hats, cloaks,
(Doublets, I think) flew up; and had their faces
Been loose, this day they had been lost. Such joy
I never saw before. Great-belly'd women,
That had not half a week to go, like rams¹
In the old time of war, would shake the press,
And make 'em reel before 'em. No man living
Could say, This is my wife, there; all were woven
So strangely in one piece.

2 Gent. But what follow'd? [paces]

3 Gent. At length her grace rose, and with modest Came to the altar; where she kneel'd, and, saint-like,

Cast her fair eyes to heaven, and pray'd devoutly.
Then rose again, and bow'd her to the people:
When by the archbishop of Canterbury,
She had all the royal makings of a queen;
As holy oil, Edward Confessor's crown,
The rod, and bird of peace, and all such emblems
Lay'd nobly on her: which perform'd, the choir,
With all the choicest music of the kingdom,
Together sung Te Deum. So she parted,
And with the same full state pac'd back again
To York place, where the feast is held.

1 Gent. You must no more call it York place,
that's past:

For, since the cardinal fell, that title's lost;
'Tis now the king's, and call'd—Whitehall.

3 Gent. I know it;

But 'tis so lately alter'd, that the old name
Is fresh about me.

2 Gent. What two reverend bishops

Were those that went on each side of the queen?

3 Gent. Stokesly, and Gardiner; the one, of Winchester,

(Newly prefer'd from the king's secretary)

The other, London.

2 Gent. He of Winchester

Is held no great good lover of the archbishop,
The virtuous Cranmer.

3 Gent. All the land knows that: [comes,
However, yet there's no great breach; when it
Cranmer will find a friend will not shrink from him.

2 Gent. Who may that be, I pray you?

3 Gent. Thomas Cromwell;

A man in much esteem with the king, and truly
A worthy friend. The king has made him
Master o' the jewel-house,

And one, already, of the privy-council.

2 Gent. He will deserve more.

3 Gent. Yes, without all doubt.

Come, gentlemen, ye shall go my way, which
Is to the court, and there shall be my guests;
Something I can command. As I walk thither,
I'll tell ye more.

Both. You may command us, sir. [Exeunt,

SCENE II.

Kimbolton.

Enter Katharine, Dowager, sick, led between Griffith her Gentleman-usher, and Patience her woman.

Grif. How does your grace?

15 Kath. O, Griffith, sick to death:

My legs, like loaded branches, bow to the earth,
Willing to leave their burden: Reach a chair;—
So,—now, methinks, I feel a little ease.

Did'st thou not tell me, Griffith, as thou led'st me,
That the great child of honour, cardinal Wolsey,
Was dead?

Grif. Yes, madam: but, I think your grace,
Out of the pain you suffer'd, gave no ear to't.

Kath. Pr'ythee, good Griffith, tell me how he dy'd:
If well, he stepp'd before me, happily²,
For my example.

Grif. Well, the voice goes, madam:
For after the stout earl Northumberland
Arrested him at York, and brought him forward
(As a man sorely tainted) to his answer,
He fell sick suddenly, and grew so ill,
He could not sit his mule,

Kath. Alas, poor man! [cester,

Grif. At last, with easy roads³ he came to Lei-35 Lodg'd in the abbey; where the reverend abbot,
With all his convent, honourably receiv'd him;
To whom he gave these words—"O father abbot,
"An old man, broken with the storms of state,
"Is come to lay his weary bones among ye;
40 "Give him a little earth for charity!"

So went to bed: where eagerly his sickness
Pursu'd him still; and, three nights after this,
About the hour of eight, (which he himself
Foretold should be his last) full of repentance,

Continual meditations, tears, and sorrows,
He gave his honours to the world again,
His blessed part to heaven, and slept in peace. [him!

Kath. So may he rest; his faults lie gently on
Yet thus far, Griffith, give me leave to speak him,
50 And yet with charity;—He was a man

Of an unbounded stomach, ever ranking
Himself with princes; one, that by suggestion
Ty'd⁴ all the kingdom; simony was fair play;
His own opinion was his law: I' the presence

55 He would say untruths; and be ever double,
Both in his words and meaning: He was never,
But where he meant to ruin, pitiful:

His promises were, as he then was, mighty;
But his performance, as he is now, nothing.

¹ i. e. like battering-rams. ² Happily seems to mean on this occasion—peradventure, haply. ³ i. e. by short stages. ⁴ i. e. (says Mr. Tollet) He was a man of an unbounded stomach, or pride, ranking himself with princes, and, by suggestion to the king and the pope, he ty'd, i. e. limited, circumscribed, and set bounds to the liberties and properties of all persons in the kingdom. That he did so, appears from various passages in the play.

Of his own body he was ill¹, and gave
The clergy ill example.

Grif. Noble madam,
Men's evil manners live in brass; their virtues
We write in water². May it please your highness 5
To hear me speak his good now?

Kath. Yes, good Griffith;
I were malicious else.

Grif. This cardinal,
Though from an humble stock, undoubtedly 10
Was fashion'd to much honour. From his cradle,
He was a scholar, and a ripe and good one:
Exceeding wise, fair spoken, and persuading:
Lofty and sour, to them that lov'd him not;
But, to those men that sought him, sweet as sum- 15
And though he were unsatisfy'd in getting, [mer.
(Which was a sin) yet in bestowing, madam,
He was most princely: Ever witness for him
Those twins of learning, that he rais'd in you,
Ipswich, and Oxford! one of which fell with him, 20
Unwilling to out-live the good he did it;
The other, though unfinish'd, yet so famous,
So excellent in art, and still so rising,
That Christendom shall ever speak his virtue.
His overthrow heap'd happiness upon him;
For then, and not 'till then, he felt himself,
And found the blessedness of being little:
And, to add greater honours to his age

Than man could give him, he dy'd, fearing God. 30
Kath. After my death, I wish no other herald,
No other speaker of my living actions,
To keep mine honour from corruption,
But such an honest chronicler as Griffith.
Whom I most hated living, thou hast made me,
With thy religious truth, and modesty,
Now in his ashes honour: Peace be with him!—
Patience, be near me still; and set me lower:
I have not long to trouble thee.—Good Griffith,
Cause the musicians play me that sad note
I nam'd my knell, whilst I sit meditating
On that celestial harmony I go to.

Sad and solemn musick.

Grif. She is asleep: Good wench, let's sit down quiet,

For fear we wake her:—Softly, gentle Patience. 45
The vision. Enter, solemnly tripping, one after another, six personages, clad in white robes, wearing on their heads garlands of bays, and golden vizards on their faces; branches of bays, or palm, in their hands. They first congee unto her, 50 then dance; and, at certain changes, the first two hold a spare garland over her head; at which, the other four make reverend curtsies; then the two, that held the garland, deliver the same to the other next two, who observe the same order in 55 their changes, and holding the garland over her head; which done, they deliver the same garland to the last two, who likewise observe the same order: at which, (as it were by inspiration) she makes in her sleep signs of rejoicing, and holdeth up her hands to heaven; and so, in their dancing, they vanish, carrying the garland with them. The musick continues.

Kath. Spirits of peace, where are ye? Are ye all gone?

And leave me here in wretchedness behind ye?

Grif. Madam, we are here.

Kath. It is not you I call for:
Saw you none enter, since I slept?

Grif. None, madam.

Kath. No? Saw you not, even now, a blessed troop

15 Invite me to a banquet; whose bright faces
Cast thousand beams upon me, like the sun?
They promis'd me eternal happiness;
And brought me garlands, Griffith, which I feel
I am not worthy yet to wear: I shall, 20
Assuredly. [dreams

Grif. I am most joyful, madam, such good
Possess your fancy.

Kath. Bid the musick leave,
They are harsh and heavy to me. [Musick ceases.

25 Pat. Do you note,
How much her grace is alter'd on the sudden?
How long her face is drawn? how pale she looks,
And of an earthy cold? Mark her eyes.

Grif. She is going, wench; pray, pray.

Pat. Heaven comfort her! 30
Enter a Messenger.

Mes. An't like your grace,—

Kath. You are a sawcy fellow;
Deserve we no more reverence?

35 Grif. You are to blame,
Knowing, she will not lose her wonted greatness,
To use so rude behaviour: go to, kneel.

Mes. I humbly do entreat your highness' pardon;
My haste made me unmannerly: There is staying 40
A gentleman, sent from the king, to see you.

Kath. Admit him entrance, Griffith: But this
Let me ne'er see again. [fellow

[Exeunt Griffith, and Messenger.

Re-enter Griffith, with Capucius.

45 If my sight fail not,
You should be lord ambassador from the emperor
My royal nephew, and your name Capucius.

Cap. Madam, the same, your servant.

Kath. O my lord,
The times, and titles, now are alter'd strangely
With me, since first you knew me. But, I pray 50
What is your pleasure with me? [you,

Cap. Noble lady,
First, mine own service to your grace; the next,
The king's request that I would visit you;
Who grieves much for your weakness, and by me
Sends you his princely commendations,
And heartily entreats you take good comfort.

¹ A criminal connection with women was anciently call'd the vice of the body. So, in Holinshed, p. 1258, "he labour'd by all means to cleare mistresse Sanders of committing evill of her bodie with him." ² Dr. Percy remarks, that "this reflection bears a great resemblance to a passage in Sir Thomas More's History of Richard III. where, speaking of the ungrateful turns which Jane Shore experienced from those whom she had served in her prosperity; More adds, "Men use, if they have an evil turne, to write it in marble, and whoso doeth us a good turne, we write it in duste."

Kath. O my good lord, that comfort comes too late;
'Tis like a pardon after execution:
That gentle physick, given in time, had cur'd me;
But now I'm past all comforts here, but prayers.
How does his highness?

Cap. Madam, in good health.

Kath. So may he ever do: and ever flourish,
When I shall dwell with worms, and my poor name

Banish'd the kingdom!—Patience, is that letter,
I caus'd you write, yet sent away?

Pat. No, madam.

Kath. Sir, I most humbly pray you to deliver
This to my lord the king.

Cap. Most willing, madam.

Kath. In which I have commended to his good-
The model of our chaste loves, his young daughter:
The dews of heaven fall thick in blessings on her!
Beseeching him, to give her virtuous breeding;
(She is young, and of a noble modest nature;
I hope, she will deserve well) and a little
To love her for her mother's sake, that lov'd him, Heaven knows how dearly. My next poor petition

Is, that his noble grace would have some pity
Upon my wretched women, that so long
Have follow'd both my fortunes faithfully:
Of which there is not one, I dare avow,
(And now I should not lye) but will deserve,
For virtue, and true beauty of the soul,

For honesty, and decent carriage,
A right good husband; let him be a noble:
And, sure, those men are happy that shall have 'em.
The last is, for my men;—they are the poorest,
But poverty could never draw 'em from me;—
That they may have their wages duly paid 'em,
And something over to remember me by:
If heaven had pleas'd to have given me longer life,
And able means, we had not parted thus. [lord,
These are the whole contents:—And, good my
By that you love the dearest in this world,
As you wish christian peace to souls departed,
Stand these poor people's friend, and urge the king
To do me this last right.

Cap. By heaven, I will;

Or let me lose the fashion of a man!

Kath. I thank you, honest lord. Remember
In all humility unto his highness:

Say, his long trouble now is passing

Out of this world: tell him, in death I blest him,
For so I will.—Mine eyes grow dim.—Farewell,
My lord.—Griffith, farewell.—Nay, Patience,
You must not leave me yet. I must to bed;—
Call in more women.—When I am dead, good wench,

Let me be us'd with honour; strew me over
With maiden flowers, that all the world may know
I was a chaste wife to my grave: embalm me,
Then lay me forth: although unqueen'd, yet like
A queen, and daughter to a king, interr me.
I can no more.— [Exeunt, leading Katharine.

SCENE I.

Some Part of the Palace.

Enter Gardiner, Bishop of Winchester, a Page with a torch before him, met by Sir Thomas Lovel.

Gard. 'T's one a'clock, boy, is't not?

Boy. It hath struck.

Gard. These should be hours for necessities,
Not for delights; times to repair our nature
With comforting repose, and not for us [Thomas!
To waste these times.—Good hour of night, sir
Whither so late?

Lov. Came you from the king, my lord?

Gard. I did, Sir Thomas; and left him at pri-
With the duke of Suffolk.

Lov. I must to him too,
Before he go to bed. I'll take my leave.

Gard. Not yet, Sir Thomas Lovel. What's
the matter?

It seems, you are in haste: an if there be
No great offence belongs to't, give your friend

Some touch of your late business: Affairs, that walk

(As, they say, spirits do) at midnight, have
In them a wilder nature, than the business
That seeks dispatch by day.

Lov. My lord, I love you;

And durst commend a secret to your ear Much weightier than this work. The queen's in labour,

They say, in great extremity; and fear'd,
She'll with the labour end.

Gard. The fruit she goes with,
I pray for heartily; that it may find [mas,
Good time, and live; but for the stock, Sir Tho-
I wish it grubb'd up now.

Lov. Methinks, I could

Cry the Amen; and yet my conscience says
She's a good creature, and, sweet lady, does Deserve our better wishes.

Gard. But, sir, sir,—

Hear me, Sir Thomas: You are a gentleman
Of mine own way²; I know you wise, religious;

¹ Primero and primavista, two games at cards, that is, first, and first seen: because he that can shew such an order of cards first, wins the game. ² i. e. of mine own opinion in religion.

And,

And, let me tell you, it will ne'er be well,—
'Twill not, Sir Thomas Lovel, take 't of me,—
'Till Cranmer, Cromwell, her two hands, and she,
Sleep in their graves.

Lov. Now, sir, you speak of two [well,— 5
The most remark'd i' the kingdom. As for Crom-
Beside that of the jewel-house, he's made master
O' the rolls, and the king's secretary; further, sir,
Stands in the gap and trade¹ of more preferments,
With which the time will load him: The arch- 10
bishop [speak
Is the king's hand, and tongue: And who dare
One syllable against him?

Gard. Yes, yes, Sir Thomas,
'There are that dare; and I myself have ventur'd 15
To speak my mind of him: and, indeed, this day,
Sir, (I may tell it you) I think, I have Incens'd the lords o' the council, that he is (For so I know he is, they know he is)
A most arch-heretick, a pestilence
That does infect the land: with which they mov'd,
Have broken² with the king; who hath so far
Given ear to our complaint, (of his great grace
And princely care; foreseeing those fell mischiefs
Our reasons laid before him) he hath commanded, 25
To-morrow morning to the council-board [mas,
He be convented³. He's a rank weed, Sir Tho-
And we must root him out. From your affairs
I hinder you too long: good night, Sir Thomas!

Lov. Many good nights, my lord! I rest your 30 servant. [Exeunt Gardiner and Page.
As Lovel is going out, enter the King, and the Duke of Suffolk.

King. Charles, I will play no more to-night;
My mind's not on't, you are too hard for me.

Suf. Sir, I did never win of you before.

King. But little, Charles;
Nor shall not, when my fancy's on my play.—
Now, Lovel, from the queen what is the news?

Lov. I could not personally deliver to her 40
What you commanded me, but by her woman
I sent your message; who return'd her thanks
In the greatest humbleness, and desired your high-
Most heartily to pray for her. [ness

King. What say'st thou? ha!
To pray for her? what, is she crying out? [made

Lov. So said her woman; and that her sufferance
Almost each pang a death.

King. Alas, good lady!

Suf. God safely quit her of her burden, and 50
With gentle travail, to the gladdening of
Your highness with an heir!

King. 'Tis midnight, Charles;
Pr'ythee to bed; and in thy prayers remember
The estate of my poor queen. Leave me alone; 55
For I must think of that, which company
Would not be friendly to.

Suf. I wish your highness
A quiet night, and my good mistress will Remember in my prayers.

King. Charles, good night.— [Exit Suffolk.

Enter Sir Anthony Denny.

Well, sir, what follows? [bishop,
Denny. Sir, I have brought my lord the arch-
As you commanded me.

King. Ha! Canterbury?

Denny. Ay, my good lord.

King. 'Tis true: Where is he, Denny?

Denny. He attends your highness' pleasure.

King. Bring him to us. [Exit Denny.

Lov. This is about that which the bishop spake;
I am happily come hither. [Aside.

Re-enter Denny, with Cranmer.

King. Avoid the gallery. [Lovel seemeth to stay.
Ha!—I have said.—Be gone.

What!— [Exeunt Lovel, and Denny.

Cran. I am fearful:—Wherefore frowns he thus?
'Tis his aspect of terror. All's not well. [know

King. How now, my lord? You do desire to Wherefore I sent for you.

Cran. It is my duty,
To attend your highness' pleasure.

King. Pray you, arise,
My good and gracious lord of Canterbury.
Come, you and I must walk a turn together;
I have news to tell you: Come, come, give me 25
your hand.

Ah, my good lord, I grieve at what I speak,
And am right sorry to repeat what follows:
I have, and most unwillingly, of late
Heard many grievous, I do say, my lord,
Grievous complaints of you; which, being con-
sider'd,

Have mov'd us and our council, that you shall
This morning come before us; where, I know, 35
You cannot with such freedom purge yourself,
But that, 'till further trial, in those charges
Which will require your answer, you must take
Your patience to you, and be well contended
To make your house our Tower: You a brother of us⁴,

It fits we thus proceed, or else no witness
Would come against you.

Cran. I humbly thank your highness;
And am right glad to catch this good occasion
Most thoroughly to be winnow'd, where my chaff 45
And corn shall fly asunder: for, I know,
There's no nest stands under more calumnious tongues,
Than I myself, poor man.

King. Stand up, good Canterbury;
Thy truth, and thy integrity, is rooted 50
In us, thy friend: Give me thy hand, stand up;
Pr'ythee, let's walk. Now, by my holy dame,
What manner of man are you? My lord, I look'd
You would have given me your petition, that I should have ta'en some pains to bring together
Yourself and your accusers; and to have heard you Without indurance, further.

Cran. Most dread liege,
The good I stand on is my truth and honesty;
If they shall fail, I, with mine enemies, 60
Will triumph o'er my person! which I weigh not,

minds to the king.

² i.e. summon'd, conven'd.

³ i.e. they have broken silence, and told their
⁴ i.e. you being one of the council.

Being of those virtues vacant. I fear nothing
What can be said against me.

King. Know you not [world?
How your state stands i' the world, with the whole
Your enemies are many, and not small; their practices

Must bear the same proportion: and not ever
The justice and the truth o' the question carries
The due o' the verdict with it: At what ease
Might corrupt minds procure knaves as corrupt
To swear against you? Such things have been done.
You are potently oppos'd; and with a malice
Of as great size. Ween' you of better luck,
I mean, in perjur'd witness, than your Master,
Whose minister you are, whiles here he liv'd Upon this naughty earth? Go to, go to;
You take a precipice for no leap of danger,
And woo your own destruction.

Cran. God, and your majesty,
Protect mine innocence, or I fall into
The trap is laid for me!

King. Be of good cheer;
They shall no more prevail, than we give way to.
Keep comfort to you; and this morning see
You do appear before them: if they shall chance,
In charging you with matters, to commit you,
The best persuasions to the contrary
Fail not to use, and with what vehemency
The occasion shall instruct you: if entreaties
Will render you no remedy, this ring
Deliver them, and your appeal to us
There make before them.—Look, the good man weeps!

He's honest, on mine honour. God's blest mother!
I swear, he is true-hearted; and a soul
None better in my kingdom. Get you gone,
And do as I have bid you.—He has strangled
His language in his tears. [Exit Cranmer.

Enter an Old Lady.

Gent. [within.] Come back; what mean you?

Lady. I'll not come back; the tidings that I bring [angels

Will make my boldness manners. Now, good
Fly o'er thy royal head, and shade thy person
Under their blessed wings!

King. Now, by thy looks
I guess thy message. Is the queen deliver'd?
Say, ay; and of a boy.

Lady. Ay, ay, my liege;
And of a lovely boy: The God of heaven
Both now and ever bless her! 'tis a girl,
Promises boys hereafter. Sir, your queen
Desires your visitation, and to be Acquainted with this stranger; 'tis as like you,
As cherry is to cherry.

King. Lovel,—

Enter Lovel.

Lov. Sir.

King. Give her an hundred marks. I'll to the queen. [Exit King.

Lady. An hundred marks! by this light, I'll have more.

An ordinary groom is for such payment.
I will have more, or scold it out of him.
Said I for this, the girl was like to him?
I will have more, or else unsay't; and now,
While it is hot, I'll put it to the issue. [Exit.

SCENE II.

Before the Council Chamber.

Cranmer, Servants, Door-keeper, &c. attending.

Cran. I hope, I'm not too late; and yet the gentleman,
That was sent to me from the council, pray'd me
To make great haste. All fast? what means this?—Ho!

Who waits there?—Sure, you know me?

D. Keep. Yes, my lord;
But yet I cannot help you.

Cran. Why?

D. Keep. Your grace must wait 'till you be called for.

Enter Doctor Butts.

Cran. So.—

Butts. This is a piece of malice. I am glad,
I came this way so happily: The king
Shall understand it presently. [Exit Butts.

Cran. [Aside.] 'Tis Butts,
The king's physician: As he pass'd along,
How earnestly he cast his eyes upon me!
Pray heaven he sound not my disgrace! For certain,
This is of purpose lay'd, by some that hate me,
(God turn their hearts! I never sought their malice)
To quench mine honour: they would shame to make me

Wait else at door; a fellow counsellor, [sures
Among boys, grooms, and lackeys. But their plea-
Must be fulfill'd, and I attend with patience.

Enter the King, and Butts, at a window above.

Butts. I'll shew your grace the strangest sight,—

King. What's that, Butts?

Butts. I think, your highness saw this many a day.

King. Body o' me, where is it?

Butts. There, my lord:

The high promotion of his grace of Canterbury;
Who holds his state at door, 'mongst pursuivants,
Pages, and foot-boys.

King. Ha! 'Tis he, indeed:

Is this the honour they do one another?

'Tis well, there's one above 'em yet. I had thought,
They had parted so much honesty among 'em,
(At least, good manners) as not thus to suffer
A man of his place, and so near our favour,
To dance attendance on their lordships' pleasures,
And at the door too, like a post with packets.

By holy Mary, Butts, there's knavery:
Let 'em alone, and draw the curtain close:
We shall hear more anon.—

Enter the Lord Chancellor, places himself at the upper end of the table on the left hand; a seat being left void above him, as for the Archbishop of Canterbury. Duke of Suffolk, Duke of Norfolk, Surrey, Lord Chamberlain, and Gardiner, seat them-

! To ween is to think, to imagine. Obsolete.

selves

selves in order on each side, Cromwell at the lower end, as Secretary.

Chan. Speak to the business, master Secretary:
Why are we met in council?

Crom. Please your honours,
The chief cause concerns his grace of Canterbury.

Gard. Has he had knowledge of it?

Crom. Yes.

Nor. Who waits there?

D. Keep. Without, my noble lords?

Gard. Yes.

D. Keep. My lord archbishop:
And has done half an hour, to know your pleasures.

Chan. Let him come in.

D. Keep. Your grace may enter now.

[Cromwell approaches the council table.]

Chan. My good lord archbishop, I am very sorry
To sit here at this present, and behold
That chair stand empty: But we all are men,
In our own natures frail; and capable
Of our flesh, few are angels¹: out of which frailty,
And want of wisdom, you, that best should teach us,
Have misdeemean'd yourself, and not a little,
Toward the king first, then his laws, in filling [lains],
The whole realm, by your teaching, and your chap-
(For so we are inform'd) with new opinions,
Divers, and dangerous; which are heresies,
And, not reform'd, may prove pernicious.

Gard. Which reformation must be sudden too,
My noble lords: for those, that tame wild horses,
Pace'em not in their hands to make 'em gentle;
But stop their mouths with stubborn bits, and spur
'Till they obey the manage. If we suffer [em], (Out of our easiness, and childish pity
To one man's honour) this contagious sickness,
Farewell all physic: And what follows then?
Commutations, uproars, with a general taint
Of the whole state: as, of late days, our neighbours,
The upper Germany, can dearly witness,
Yet freshly pitied in our memories.

Cran. My good lords, hitherto, in all the progress
Both of my life and office, I have labour'd,
And with no little study, that my teaching,
And the strong course of my authority,
Might go one way, and safely; and the end
Was ever, to do well: nor is there living
(I speak it with a single heart, my lords,)
A man, that more detests, more stirs against,
Both in his private conscience, and his place,
Defacers of a public peace, than I do.
Pray heaven, the king may never find a heart
With less allegiance in it! Men, that make Envy, and crooked malice, nourishment,
Dare bite the best. I do beseech your lordships,
That, in this case of justice, my accusers,
Be what they will, may stand forth face to face,
And freely urge against me.

Suf. Nay, my lord,
That cannot be; you are a counsellor,

And, by that virtue, no man dare accuse you.

Gard. My lord, because we have business of more moment, [pleasure,

We will be short with you. 'Tis his highness'

5 And our consent, for better trial of you,

From hence you be committed to the Tower;

Where, being but a private man again,

You shall know many dare accuse you boldly,

More than, I fear, you are provided for. [thank you,

10 Cran. Ah, my good lord of Winchester, I

You are always my good friend; if your will pass,

I shall both find your lordship judge and juror,

You are so merciful: I see your end,

'Tis my undoing: Love, and meekness, lord,

15 Become a churchman better than ambition;

Win straying souls with modesty again,

Cast none away. That I shall clear myself,

Lay all the weight ye can upon my patience,

I make as little doubt, as you do conscience

20 In doing daily wrongs. I could say more,

But reverence to your calling makes me modest.

Gard. My lord, my lord, you are a sectary,

That's the plain truth; your painted gloss discovers,

To men that understand you, words and weakness.

25 Crom. My lord of Winchester, you are a little,

By your good favour, too sharp; men so noble,

However faulty, yet should find respect

For what they have been: 'tis a cruelty,

To load a falling man.

30 Gard. Good master Secretary,

I cry your honour mercy; you may, worst

Of all this table, say so.

Crom. Why, my lord?

Gard. Do not I know you for a favourer

35 Of this new sect? ye are not sound.

Crom. Not sound?

Gard. Not sound, I say.

Crom. 'Would you were half so honest!

Men's prayers then would seek you, not their fears.

40 Gard. I shall remember this bold language.

Crom. Do:

Remember your bold life too.

Chan. This is too much;

Forbear, for shame, my lords.

45 Gard. I have done.

Crom. And I.

Chan. Then thus for you, my lord,—[agreed,

I take it, by all voices, that forthwith

You be conveyed to the Tower a prisoner;

50 There to remain, 'till the king's further pleasure

Be known unto us: Are you all agreed, lords?

All. We are.

Cran. Is there no other way of mercy,

But I must needs to the Tower, my lords?

55 Gard. What other [some:

Would you expect? You are strangely trouble-

Let some o' the guard be ready there.

Enter Guard.

Cran. For me?

¹ This lord chancellor, though a character, has hitherto had no place in the Dramatis Personæ. In the last scene of the fourth act, we heard that Sir Thomas More was appointed lord chancellor: but it is not he, whom the poet here introduces. Wolsey, by command, delivered up the seals on the 18th of November, 1529; on the 25th of the same month, they were delivered to Sir Thomas More, who surrender'd them on the 16th of May, 1532. Now the conclusion of this scene taking notice of queen Elizabeth's birth (which brings it down to the year 1534), Sir Thomas Audley must necessarily be our poet's chancellor; who succeeded Sir Thomas More, and held the seals many years. ² Meaning, perhaps, Few are perfect, while they remain in their mortal capacity. ³ i. e. your fair outside.

Must I go like a traitor thither?

Gard. Receive him,
And see him safe i' the Tower.

Cran. Stay, good my lords,
I have a little yet to say. Look there, my lords;
By virtue of that ring, I take my cause
Out of the gripes of cruel men, and give it
To a most noble judge, the king my master.

Cham. This is the king's ring.

Sur. 'Tis no counterfeit.

Suf. 'Tis the right ring, by heaven: I told ye all,
When we first put this dangerous stone a-rolling,
'T would fall upon ourselves.

Nor. Do you think, my lords,
The king will suffer but the little finger
Of this man to be vex'd?

Cham. 'Tis now too certain:
How much more is his life in value with him?
'Would I were fairly out on't.

Crom. My mind gave me,
In seeking tales, and informations,
Against this man, (whose honesty the devil
And his disciples only envy at,)
Ye blew the fire that burns ye: Now have at ye.

Enter King, frowning on them; takes his seat.

Gard. Dread sovereign, how much are we bound to heaven

In daily thanks, that gave us such a prince;
Not only good and wise, but most religious:
One that, in all obedience, makes the church
The chief aim of his honour; and, to strengthen
That holy duty, out of dear respect,
His royal self in judgement comes to hear
The cause betwixt her and this great offender!

King. You were ever good at sudden commendations,

Bishop of Winchester. But know, I come not
To hear such flatteries now, and in my presence;
They are too thin and base to hide offences.
To me you cannot reach: You play the spaniel,
And think with wagging of your tongue to win me;
But, whatsoe'er thou tak'st me for, I'm sure,
Thou hast a cruel nature, and a bloody.—
Good man, sit down. Now let me see the proudest

[To Cranmer.]

He, that dares most, but wag his finger at thee:
By all that's holy, he had better starve,
Than but once think this place becomes thee not.

Sur. May it please your grace,—

King. No, sir, it does not please me.
I had thought, I had men of some understanding
And wisdom, of my council; but I find none.
Was it discretion, lords, to let this man,
This good man, (few of you deserve that title)
This honest man, wait like a lousy foot-boy
At chamber door? and one as great as you are?
Why, what a shame was this! Did my commission
Bid ye so far forget yourselves? I gave ye Power as he was a counsellor to try him,

Not as a groom: There's some of ye, I see,
More out of malice than integrity,
Would try him to the utmost, had ye mean;
Which ye shall never have, while I live.

Chan. Thus far,

My most dread sovereign, may it like your grace
To let my tongue excuse all. What was purpos'd, Concerning his imprisonment, was rather
(If there be faith in men) meant for his trial,
And fair purgation to the world, than malice:
I am sure, in me.

King. Well, well, my lords, respect him;
Take him and use him well, he's worthy of it.
I will say thus much for him, If a prince
May be beholden to a subject, I
Am, for his love and service, so to him.
Make me no more ado, but all embrace him;
Be friends, for shame, my lords.—My lord of Canterbury,

I have a suit which you must not deny me:
There is a fair young maid, that yet wants baptism;
You must be godfather, and answer for her.

Cran. The greatest monarch now alive may glory
In such an honour; How may I deserve it,
That am a poor and humble subject to you?

King. Come, come, my lord, you'd spare your spoons¹: you shall have [Norfolk,
Two noble partners with you: the old dutchess of
And lady marquis Dorset; Will these please you?—
Once more, my lord of Winchester, I charge you,
Embrace and love this man.

Gard. With a true heart,
And brother's love, I do it.

Cran. And let heaven
Witness how dear I hold this confirmation.

King. Good man, those joyful tears shew thy
The common voice, I see, is verified [true heart,
Of thee, which says thus, *Do my lord of Canterbury
A shrewd turn, and he is your friend for ever.*—

Come, lords, we trifle time away; I long
To have this young one made a christian.
As I have made ye one, lords, one remain;
So I grow stronger, you more honour gain. [Exeunt.]

S C E N E III.

The Palace Yard.

Noise and tumult within: Enter Porter and his Man.

Port. You'll leave your noise anon, ye rascals:
Do you take the court for² Paris-garden? ye rude slaves, leave your gaping.

Within. Good master porter, I belong to the larder.

Port. Belong to the gallows, and be hang'd, you rogue. Is this a place to roar in?—Fetch me a dozen crab-tree staves, and strong ones; these are but switches to 'em.—I'll scratch your heads;
You must be seeing christenings? Do you look for ale and cakes here, you rude rascals?

Man. Pray, sir, be patient; 'tis as much impossible

¹ Mr. Steevens says, "It was the custom, long before the time of Shakspeare, for the sponsors at christenings to offer gilt spoons as a present for the child. These spoons were called apostle spoons, because the figures of the apostles were carved on the tops of the handles. Such as were at once opulent and generous, gave the whole twelve; those who were either more moderately rich or liberal, escaped at the expence of the four evangelists; or even sometimes contented themselves with presenting one spoon only, which exhibited the figure of any saint in honour of whom the child received its name." ² The bear-garden of that time, and in a line with Bridewell.

(Unless we sweep them from the door with cannons)
To scatter 'em, as 'tis to make 'em sleep
On May-day morning¹; which will never be:
We may as well push against Paul's, as stir 'em.

Port. How got they in, and be hang'd?

Man. Alas, I know not; How gets the tide in?
As much as one sound cudgel of four foot
(You see the poor remainder) could distribute,
I made no spare, sir.

Port. You did nothing, sir.

Man. I am not Sampson, nor Sir Guy, nor Colbrand², to mow 'em down before me: but, if I spar'd any, that had a head to hit, either young or old, he or she, cuckold or cuckold-maker, let me never hope to see a chine again; and that I would not for a cow, God save her.

Within. Do you hear, master Porter?

Port. I shall be with you presently, good master puppy.—Keep the door close, sirrah.

Man. What would you have me do?

Port. What should you do, but knock 'em down by the dozens? Is this Morefields to muster in? or have we some strange Indian with the great tool come to court, the women so besiege us? Bless me, what a cry of fornication is at door! O' my christian conscience, this one christening will beget a thousand: here will be father, godfather, and all together.

Man. The spoons will be the bigger, sir. There is a fellow somewhat near the door, he should be a brasier³ by his face, for, o' my conscience, twenty of the dog-days now reign in's nose; all that stand about him are under the line, they need no other penance: that fire-drake⁴ did I hit three times on the head, and three times was his nose discharg'd against me; he stands there like a mortar-piece, to blow us up. There was a haberdasher's wife of small wit near him, that rail'd upon me 'till her pink'd porringer fell off her head, for kindling such a combustion in the state. I miss'd the meteor⁵ once, and hit that woman, who cry'd out, clubs! when I might see from far some forty trunchioneers draw to her succour, which were the hope of the strand, where she was quarter'd. They fell on; I made good my place; at length they came to the broomstaff with me, I defy'd 'em still; when suddenly a file of boys behind 'em, loose shot, deliver'd such a shower of pebbles, that I was fain to draw mine honour in, and let 'em win the work: the devil was amongst 'em, I think, surely.

Port. These are the youths that thunder at a play-house, and fight for bitten apples⁶; that no audience, but the tribulation of Tower-hill⁷, or the limbs of Limehouse, their dear brothers, are able to endure. I have some of 'em in Limbo Patrum, and there they are like to dance these three days; besides the⁸ running banquet of two beades, that is to come.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain.

Cham. Mercy o' me, what a multitude are here! They grow still too; from all parts they are coming, As if we kept a fair! Where are these porters, These lazy knaves?—Ye have made a fine hand, fellows.

There's a trim rabble let in: Are all these [have Your faithful friends o' the suburbs? We shall Great store of room, no doubt, left for the ladies, When they pass back from the christening.

Port. Please your honour,
We are but men; and what so many may do,
Not being torn a-pieces, we have done:
An army cannot rule 'em.

Cham. As I live,

If the king blame me for't, I'll lay ye all By the heels, and suddenly; and on your heads Clap round fines, for neglect: You are lazy knaves; And here ye lie baiting of bumbards⁹, when Ye should do service. Hark, the trumpet sound; They are come already from the christening: Go, break among the press, and find a way out To let the troop pass fairly; or I'll find A Marshalsea, shall hold you play these two months.

Port. Make way there for the princess!

Man. You great fellow, stand close up, or I'll make your head ake.

Port. You i' the camblet, get up o' the rail; I'll peck you o'er the pales else. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.

The Palace.

Enter Trumpets, sounding; then two Aldermen, Lord Mayor, Garter, Cranmer, Duke of Norfolk with his Marshal's staff, Duke of Suffolk, two Noblemen bearing two great standing bowls for the christening gifts; then four Noblemen bearing a canopy, under which the Dutchess of Norfolk, godmother, bearing the child richly habited in a mantle, &c. Train borne by a Lady: then follow the Marchioness of Dorset, the other godmother, and Ladies. The troop pass once about the stage, and Garter speaks.—

Gar. Heaven, from thy endless goodness, send prosperous life, long, and ever happy, to the high and mighty princess of England, Elizabeth!

Flourish. Enter King, and Train.

Cran. [Kneeling]. And to your royal grace, and the good queen,

My noble partners, and myself, thus pray;—

All comfort, joy, in this most gracious lady,

Heaven ever laid up to make parents happy,

¹ It was anciently the custom for all ranks of people to go out a-maying on the first of May. ² Of Guy of Warwick every one has heard.—Colbrand was the Danish giant, whom Guy subdued at Winchester. ³ A brasier signifies a man that manufactures brass, and a reservoir for charcoal occasionally heated to convey warmth. Both these senses are here understood. ⁴ A fire-drake is both a serpent, anciently called a brenning-drake, or dipsas, and a name formerly given to a Will o' th' Wisp, or ignis fatuus. A fire-drake was likewise an artificial firework. ⁵ i.e. the brasier. ⁶ The prices of seats for the vulgar in our ancient theatres were so very low (viz. a penny, two-pence, and six-pence, each, for the ground, gallery, and rooms:—the boxes were somewhat higher, being a shilling and half-a-crown), that we cannot wonder if they were filled with the tumultuous company described by Shakspeare in this scene; especially when it is added, that tobacco was smoked, and ale drunk in them. ⁷ Dr. Johnson suspects the Tribulation to have been a puritanical meeting-house. ⁸ A public whipping. ⁹ To bait bumbards is to tittle, to lie at the spigot. Bumbards were large vessels in which the beer was carried to soldiers upon duty: they resembled black jacks of leather.

May hourly fall upon ye!

King. Thank you, good lord archbishop:
What is her name!

Cran. Elizabeth.

King. Stand up, lord.—[The King kissethe child.
With this kiss take my blessing: God protect thee!
Into whose hand I give thy life.

Cran. Amen.

[digal:

King. My noble gossips, ye have been too pro-
I thank ye heartily; so shall this lady,
When she has so much English.

Cran. Let me speak, sir,
For heaven now bids me; and the words I utter
Let none think flattery, for they'll find 'em truth.
This royal infant, (heaven still move about her!)
Though in her cradle, yet now promises
Upon this land a thousand thousand blessings,
Which time shall bring to ripeness: She shall be (But few now living can behold that goodness)
A pattern to all princes living with her,
And all that shall succeed: Sheba was never
More covetous of wisdom, and fair virtue,
Than this pure soul shall be: all princely graces,
That mould up such a mighty piece as this is,
With all the virtues that attend the good,
Shall still be doubled on her: truth shall nurse her,
Holy and heavenly thoughts still counsel her:
She shall be lov'd, and fear'd: Her own shall bless
Her foes shake like a field of beaten corn, [her,
And hang their heads with sorrow: Good grows with her:

In her days, every man shall eat in safety,
Under his own vine, what he plants; and sing
The merry songs of peace to all his neighbours:
God shall be truly known; and those about her
From her shall read the perfect way of honour,
And by those claim their greatness, not by blood.
[¹ Nor shall this peace sleep with her: But as when
The bird of wonder dies, the maiden phoenix,
Her ashes new create another heir,

As great in admiration as herself;
So shall she leave her blessedness to one,
(When heaven shall call her from this cloud of darkness)

5 Who, from the sacred ashes of her honour,
Shall star-like rise, as great in fame as she was,
And so stand fix'd: Peace, plenty, love, truth, terror,
That were the servants to this chosen infant,
Shall then be his, and like a vine grow to him;
10 Wherever the bright sun of heaven shall shine,
His honour, and the greatness of his name,
Shall be, and make new nations: He shall flourish,
And, like a mountain cedar, reach his branches
To all the plains about him:—Our children's chil-
15 Shall see this, and bless heaven. [dren

King. Thou speakest wonders.]

Cran. She shall be, to the happiness of England,
An aged princess²; many days shall see her,
And yet no day without a deed to crown it.
20 Would I had known no more! but she must die,
She must, the saints must have her; yet a virgin,
A most unspotted lily shall she pass
To the ground, and all the world shall mourn her.

King. O lord archbishop,
25 Thou hast made me now a man; never, before
This happy child, did I get any thing:
This oracle of comfort has so pleas'd me,
That, when I am in heaven, I shall desire
To see what this child does, and praise my Maker.—
30 I thank ye all.—To you, my good lord mayor,
And your good brethen, I am much beholden;
I have receiv'd much honour by your presence,
And ye shall find me thankful. Lead the way,
lords;—

35 Ye must all see the queen, and she must thank ye,
She will be sick else. This day, no man think
He has business at his house; for all shall stay,
This little one shall make it holy-day.

[Exeunt.

EPILOGUE.³

⁴ *T*IS ten to one this play can never please
All that are here: Some come to take their ease,
And sleep an act or two; but those, we fear,
We've frighted with our trumpets; so, 'tis clear,
They'll say, 'tis naught: others, to hear the city
Abus'd extremely, and to cry,—that's witty!
Which we have not done neither: that, I fear,
All the expected good we are like to hear

For this play at this time, is only in
The merciful construction of good women;
For such a one we shew'd 'em⁴: If they smile,
50 And say, 'twill do, I know, within a while
All the best men are ours; for 'tis ill hap,
If they hold, when their ladies bid 'em clap.

¹ These lines, to the interruption by the king, seem to have been inserted at some revisal of the play, after the accession of king James.

² Theobald remarks, that the transition here from the complimentary address to king James the first is so abrupt, that it seems to him, that compliment was inserted after the accession of that prince. If this play was written, as in his opinion it was, in the reign of queen Elizabeth, we may easily determine where Cranmer's eulogium of that princess concluded. He makes no question but the poet rested here:

And claim by those their greatness, not by blood.

All that the bishop says after this, was an occasional homage paid to her successor, and evidently inserted after her demise.

³ Dr. Johnson is of opinion, with other Critics, that both the Prologue and Epilogue to Henry VIII. were written by Ben Jonson.

⁴ In the character of Katharine.

A C T I.

SCENE I.

A Street in Rome.

Enters a Company of mutinous Citizens, with staves, clubs, and other weapons.

1 Cit. BEFORE we proceed any further, hear me speak.

All. Speak, speak.

1 Cit. You are resolv'd rather to die, than to famish?

All. Resolv'd, resolv'd.

1 Cit. First, you know, Caius Marcius is chief enemy to the people.

All. We know 't, we know 't,

1 Cit. Let us kill him, and we'll have corn at our own price. Is 't a verdict?

All. No more talking on't; let it be done: away, away.

2 Cit. One word, good² citizens.

1 Cit. We are accounted poor citizens; the patricians, good; What authority surfeits on, would relieve us: If they would yield us but the superfluity, while it were wholesome, we might guess, they relieved us humanely: but they think, we are too dear: the leanness that afflicts us, the object of our misery, is as an inventory to particularize their abundance; our sufferance is a gain to them.—Let us revenge this with our pikes, ere we become rakes³: for the gods know, I speak this in hunger for bread, not in thirst for revenge.

2 Cit. Would you proceed especially against Caius Marcius?

5 All. Against him first: he's a very dog to the commonalty.

2 Cit. Consider you what services he has done for his country?

10 1 Cit. Very well; and could be content to give him good report for 't, but that he pays himself with being proud.

All. Nay, but speak not maliciously.

1 Cit. I say unto you, what he hath done famously, he did it to that end: though soft-conscienc'd men can be content to say, it was for his country, he did it to please his mother, and to be partly proud; which he is even to the altitude of his virtue.

2 Cit. What he cannot help in his nature, you account a vice in him: You must in no way say, he is covetous.

1 Cit. If I must not, I need not be barren of accusations; he hath faults, with surplus, to tire in repetition. [Shouts within.] What shouts are these? The other side o' the city is risen: Why stay we prating here? to the Capitol—

All. Come, come.

1 Cit. Soft; who comes here?

¹ The whole history is exactly followed, and many of the principal speeches exactly copied from the Life of Coriolanus in Plutarch. ² Good is here used in the mercantile sense. ³ Alluding to the proverb, as lean as a rake; which perhaps owes its origin to the thin taper form of the instrument made use of by hay-makers. Dr. Johnson observes, that Rakel, in Islandick, is said to mean a cur-dog, and this was probably the first use among us of the word rake.—As lean as a rake is, therefore, as lean as a dog too worthless to be fed.

Enter Menenius Agrippa.

2 Cit. Worthy Menenius Agrippa; one that hath always lov'd the people.

1 Cit. He's one honest enough; 'Would, all the rest were so!

Men. What work's, my countrymen, in hand? Where go you

With bats and clubs? The matter? Speak, I pray you.

2 Cit. Our business is not unknown to the senate; they have had inkling, this fortnight, what we intend to do, which now we'll shew 'em in deeds. They say, poor suitors have strong breaths; they shall know, we have strong arms too.

Men. Why, masters, my good friends, mine honest neighbours,

Will you undo yourselves?

2 Cit. We cannot, sir, we are undone already.

Men. I tell you, friends, most charitable care Have the patricians of you. For your wants, Your suffering in this dearth, you may as well Strike at the heaven with your staves, as lift them Against the Roman state; whose course will on The way it takes, cracking ten thousand curbs Of more strong link asunder, than can ever Appear in your impediment: For the dearth, The gods, not the patricians, make it: and Your knees to them, not arms, must help. Alack, You are transported by calamity Thither where more attends you; and you slander The helms o' the state, who care for you like fathers, When you curse them as enemies.

2 Cit. Care for us!—True, indeed!—They ne'er car'd for us yet. Suffer us to famish, and their store-houses cramm'd with grain; make edicts for usury, to support usurers; repeal daily any wholesome act established against the rich; and provide more piercing statutes daily; to chain up and restrain the poor. If the wars eat us not up, they will; and there's all the love they bear us.

Men. Either you must Confess yourselves wond'rous malicious, Or be accus'd of folly. I shall tell you A pretty tale; it may be, you have heard it; But, since it serves my purpose, I will venture To scale't¹ a little more.

2 Cit. Well, I'll hear it, sir; yet you must not think to fob off our disgrace² with a tale: but, an't please you, deliver.

Men. There was a time, when all the body's members

Rebell'd against the belly; thus accus'd it:—

That only like a gulf it did remain

I³ the midst o' the body, idle and unactive,

Still cupboarding the viand, never bearing

Like labour with the rest; where⁴ the other instruments

Did see, and hear, devise, instruct, walk, feel,

And mutually participate, did minister Unto the appetite and affection common Of the whole body. The belly answer'd,—

2 Cit. Well, sir, what answer made the belly?

5 Men. Sir, I shall tell you.—With a kind of smile,

Which ne'er came from the lungs⁵, but even thus—

(For, look you, I may make the belly smile

As well as speak) it tauntingly reply'd

10 I⁶ to the discontented members, the mutinous parts

That envy'd his receipt; even so most fitly⁷

As you malign our senators, for that

They are not such as you.

2 Cit. Your belly's answer—What!

15 The kingly-crowned head, the vigilant eye,

The counsellor heart⁸, the arm our soldier,

Our steed the leg, the tongue our trumpeter,

With other muniments and petty helps

In this our fabrick, if that they—

20 Men. What then?—

'Fore me, this fellow speaks!—what then? what then?

2 Cit. Should by the cormorant belly be restrain'd,

Who is the sink o' the body,—

25 Men. Well, what then?

2 Cit. The former agents, if they did complain,

What could the belly answer?

Men. I will tell you;

If you'll bestow a small (of what you have little)

30 Patience, a while, you'll hear the belly's answer.

2 Cit. You are long about it.

Men. Note me this, good friend;

Your most grave belly was deliberate,

Not rash like his accusers, and thus answer'd:

35 "True is it, my incorporate friends," quoth he,

"That I receive the general food at first,

"Which you do live upon; and fit it is;

"Because I am the store-house, and the shop

"Of the whole body: But, if you do remember,

40 "I send it through the rivers of your blood,

"Even to the court, the heart, to the seat⁹ o' the brain;

"And, through the cranks and offices of man,

"The strongest nerves, and small inferior veins,

45 "From me receive that natural competency

"Whereby they live: And though that all at once

"You, my good friends," (this says the belly) mark

2 Cit. Ay, sir; well, well.

Men. "Though all at once cannot

50 "See what I do deliver out to each;

"Yet I can make my audit up, that all

"From me do back receive the flour of all,

"And leave me but the bran." What say you to't?

2 Cit. It was an answer: How apply you this?

55 Men. The senators of Rome are this good belly,

And you the mutinous members: For examine

Their counsels, and their cares; digest things rightly,

¹ To scale is to disperse. The word is still used in the North. The meaning is, Though some of you have heard the story, I will spread it yet wider, and diffuse it among the rest. ² Disgraces are hardships, injuries. ³ Where for whereas. ⁴ i.e. with a smile not indicating pleasure, but contempt.

⁵ i.e. exactly. ⁶ The heart was anciently esteemed the seat of prudence. ⁷ Seat for throne.

Touching the weal o' the common; you shall
No public benefit, which you receive, [find,
But it proceeds, or comes, from them to you,
And no way from yourselves:—What do you think?
You, the great toe of this assembly?—

2 Cit. I the great toe? Why the great toe?

Men. For that, being one o' the lowest, basest, poorest,

Of this most wise rebellion, thou go'st foremost:
Thou rascal, that art worst in blood to run,
Lead'st first, to win some vantage¹.—
But make you ready your stiff bats and clubs;
Rome and her rats are at the point of battle,
The one side must have bale².—Hail, noble
Marcius!

Enter Caius Marcius.

Mar. Thanks.—What's the matter, you dissentious rogues,

That, rubbing the poor itch of your opinion,
Make yourselves scabs?

2 Cit. We have ever your good word. [flatter

Mar. He that will give good words to thee, will Beneath abhorring.—What would have, you curs,
That like nor peace, nor war? the one affrights you,
The other makes you proud. He that trusts to you,
Where he should find you lions, finds you hares;
Where foxes, geese: You are no surer, no,
Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,
Or hailstone in the sun. Your virtue is,
To make him worthy, whose offence subdues him,
And curse that justice did it. Who deserves great-
Deserves your hate: and your affections are [ness,
A sick man's appetite, who desires most that
Which would increase his evil. He that depends Upon your favours, swims with fins of lead, [ye?
And hews down oaks with rushes. Hang ye! Trust
With every minute you do change a mind;
And call him noble, that was now your hate,
Him vile, that was your garland. What's the matter,
That in these several places of the city
You cry against the noble senate, who,
Under the gods, keep you in awe, which else
Would feed on one another?—What's their seeking?

Men. For corn at their own rates; whereof,
The city is well stor'd. [they say,

Mar. Hang 'em! They say?

They'll sit by the fire, and presume to know
What's done i' the Capitol: who's like to rise,
Who thrives, and who declines: side factions, and give out

Conjectural marriages; making parties strong,
And feebling such as stand not in their liking,
Below their cobbled shoes. They say, there's grain
Would the nobility lay aside their ruth³, [enough!
And let me use my sword, I'd make a quarry
With thousands of these quarter'd slaves, as high
As I could pitch⁴ my lance.

Men. Nay, these are almost thoroughly persuaded;
For though abundantly they lack discretion,
Yet are they passing cowardly. But, I beseech
What says the other troop? [you,

5 Mar. They are dissolv'd: Hang 'em! [verbs;
They said, they were an-hungry; sigh'd forth pro-
That, hunger broke stone walls; that, dogs must eat;— [sent not

That, meat was made for mouths; that, the gods
10 Corn for the rich men only:—With these shreds
They vented their complainings; which being answer'd,

And a petition granted them, a strange one,
(To break the heart of generosity⁵, [caps
And make bold power look pale) they threw their
As they would hang them on the horns o' the Shouting their emulation. [moon,

Men. What is granted them? [doms,

20 Mar. Five tribunes, to defend their vulgar wis-
Of their own choice: One's Junius Brutus,
Sicinius Velutus, and I know not — s' death!
The rabble should have first unroof'd the city,
Ere so prevail'd with me: it will in time
Win upon power, and throw forth greater themes
25 For insurrection's arguing.

Men. This is strange.

Mar. Go, get you home, you fragments!

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Where's Caius Marcius?

Mar. Here: What's the matter?

Mes. The news is, sir, the Volces are in arms.

Mar. I am glad on't; then we shall have means to vent

Our musty superfluity:—See, our best elders.

Enter Cominius, Titus Lartius, with other Senators; Junius Brutus, and Sicinius Velutus.

1 Sen. Marcius, 'tis true, that you have lately
The Volces are in arms. [told⁶ us;

40 Mar. They have a leader,
Tullus Aufidius, that will put you to 't.
I sin in envying his nobility:
And were I any thing but what I am,
I would wish me only he.

45 Com. You have fought together. [and he

Mar. Were half to half the world by the ears,
Upon my party, I'd revolt, to make
Only my wars with him: He is a lion
That I am proud to hunt.

50 1 Sen. Then, worthy Marcius,
Attend upon Cominius to these wars.

Com. It is your former promise.

Mar. Sir, it is;

55 And I am constant.—Titus Lartius, thou
Shalt see me once more strike at Tullus' face:
What, art thou stiff? stand'st out?

Tit. No, Caius Marcius;

I'll lean upon one crutch, and fight with the other,
Ere stay behind this business.

¹ The meaning is, Thou art a hound, or running dog of the lowest breed, lead'st the pack, when any thing is to be gotten. ² Bale is an old Saxon word for misery or calamity. ³ i. e. their pity, compassion. ⁴ The old copy reads—picke my lance; and so the word is still pronounced in Staffordshire, where they say—picke me such a thing, that is, throw any thing that the demander wants.

⁵ Meaning, To give the final blow to the nobles. Generosity is high birth. ⁶ viz. that the Volces are in arms. Z z Men.

Men. O, true bred! [know,
 1 Sen. Your company to the Capitol; where, I
 Our greatest friends attend us.
Tit. Lead you on:—
 Follow, Cominius: we must follow you;
 Right worthy your priority.
Com. Noble Lartius!
 1 Sen. Hence! To your homes, be gone.
 [To the Citizens.
Mar. Nay, let them follow: [ther,
 The Volces have much corn; take these rats thi-
 To gnaw their garners:—Worshipful mutineers,
 Your valour puts well forth: pray, follow.—
 [Exeunt.
Citizens steal away. Manent Sicinius, and Brutus.

The Senate-House in Corioli.Enter Tullus Aufidius, with Senators.

1 Sen. So, your opinion is, Aufidius,
 That they of Rome are enter'd in our counsels,
 And know how we proceed.

Auf. Is it not yours?
 What ever hath been thought on in this state,

That could be brought to bodily act ere Rome
 Had circumvention? 'Tis not four days gone,
 Since I heard thence; these are the words: I think,
 I have the letter here; yes, here it is:
 5 "They have press'd a power, but it is not known [Reading.
 "Whether for east, or west: The dearth is great;
 "The people mutinous: and it is rumour'd,
 "Cominius, Marcius your old enemy,
 10 " (Who is of Rome worse hated than of you)
 "And Titus Lartius, a most valiant Roman,
 "These three lead on this preparation
 "Whither 'tis bent: most likely, 'tis for you:
 "Consider of it."
 15 1 Sen. Our army's in the field:
 We never yet made doubt but Rome was ready
 To answer us.
Auf. Nor did you think it folly,
 To keep your great pretences veil'd, 'till when 20 They needs must shew themselves; which in the hatching,
 It seem'd, appear'd to Rome. By the discovery,
 We shall be shorten'd in our aim; which was,
 To take in many towns, ere, almost, Rome
 25 Should know we were afoot.
 2 Sen. Noble Aufidius,
 Take your commission; hie you to your bands;
 Let us alone to guard Corioli:
 If they set down before us, for the remove 30 Bring up your army⁴; but, I think, you'll find
 They have not prepar'd for us.
Auf. O, doubt not that;
 I speak from certainties. Nay, more,
 Some parcels of their power are forth already,
 35 And only hitherward. I leave your honours.
 If we and Caius Marcius chance to meet,
 'Tis sworn between us, we shall ever strike
 'Till one can do no more.
All. The gods assist you!
 40 Auf. And keep your honours safe!
 1 Sen. Farewell.
 2 Sen. Farewell.
All. Farewell. [Exeunt.

Caius Marcius' House in Rome.Enter Volumnia, and Virgilia: They sit down on two low stools, and sew.

Vol. I pray you, daughter, sing; or express 50 yourself in a more comfortable sort: If my son were my husband, I should freelier rejoice in that absence wherein he won honour, than in the embracements of his bed, where he would shew most love. When yet he was but tender-body'd, and 55 the only son of my womb; when youth with comeliness pluck'd all gaze his way; when, for a day of king's entreaties, a mother should not sell him an hour from her beholding; I,—considering how honour would become such a person; that it

¹ To sneer, to gibe. ² The sense is, that the present wars annihilate his gentler qualities. ³ Merits and demerits had anciently the same meaning. ⁴ i. e. We will learn what he is to do, besides going himself; what are his powers, and what is his appointment. ⁵ That is, If the Romans besiege us, bring up your army to remove them.

was no better than picture-like to hang by the wall, if renown made it not stir,—was pleas'd to let him seek danger where he was like to find fame. To a cruel war I sent him; from whence he returned, his brows bound with oak¹: I tell thee, daughter,—I sprang not more in joy at first hearing he was a man-child, than now in first seeing he had proved himself a man.

Vir. But had he died in the business, madam; how then?

Vol. Then his good report should have been my son; I therein would have found issue. Hear me profess sincerely:—Had I a dozen sons,—each in my love alike, and none less dear than thine and my good Marcius,—I had rather had eleven die nobly for their country, than one voluptuously surfeit out of action.

Enter a Gentlewoman.

Gent. Madam, the lady Valeria is come to visit you.

Vir. Beseech you, give me leave to retire myself.

Vol. Indeed, you shall not.

Methinks, I hither hear your husband's drum; See him pluck down Aufidius by the hair; As children from a bear, the Volces shunning him: Methinks, I see him stamp thus, and call thus,—Come on, you cowards; you were got in fear, Though you were born in Rome: His bloody brow With his mail'd hand then wiping, forth he goes; Like to a harvest-man, that's task'd to mow Or all, or lose his hire.

Vir. His bloody brow! O, Jupiter, no blood!

Vol. Away, you fool! it more becomes a man, Than gilt² his trophy: The breasts of Hecuba, When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier Than Hector's forehead, when it spit forth blood At Grecian swords' contending.—Tell Valeria, We are fit to bid her welcome. [Exit Gent.]

Vir. Heavens bless my lord from fell Aufidius!

Vol. He'll beat Aufidius' head below his knee, And tread upon his neck.

Enter Valeria, with an Usher, and a Gentlewoman.

Val. My ladies both, good day to you.

Vol. Sweet madam,—

Vir. I am glad to see your ladyship.

Val. How do you both? you are manifest house-keepers. What, are you sewing here? A fine spot, in good faith.—How does your little son?

Vir. I thank your ladyship; well, good madam.

Vol. He had rather see the swords, and hear a drum,

Than look upon his school-master.

Val. O' my word, the father's son: I'll swear, 'tis a very pretty boy. O' my troth, I look'd upon him o' Wednesday half an hour together: he has such a confirm'd countenance. I saw him run after a gilded butterfly; and when he caught it, he let it go again; and after it again; and over and over he comes, and up again; catch'd it again: or whether his fall enrag'd him, or how 'twas, he did so set his teeth, and tear it; O, I warrant, how he mammock'd³ it!

Vol. One of his father's moods.

Val. Indeed la, 'tis a noble child.

Vir. A crack⁴, madam.

Val. Come, lay aside your stitchery; I must have you play the idle huswife with me this afternoon.

Vir. No, good madam; I will not out of doors.

Val. Not out of doors!

Vol. She shall, she shall.

Vir. Indeed, no, by your patience: I will not over the threshold, 'till my lord return from the wars.

Val. Fie, you confine yourself most unreasonably: Come, you must go visit the good lady that lies in.

Vir. I will wish her speedy strength, and visit her with my prayers; but I cannot go thither.

Vol. Why, I pray you?

Vir. 'Tis not to save labour, nor that I want love.

Val. You would be another Penelope: yet, they say, all the yarn, she spun in Ulysses' absence, did but fill Ithaca full of moths. Come; I would, your cambrick were sensible as your finger, that you might leave pricking it for pity. Come, you shall go with us.

Vir. No, good madam, pardon me; indeed, I will not forth.

Val. In truth la, go with me; and I'll tell you excellent news of your husband.

Vir. O, good madam, there can be none yet.

Val. Verily, I do not jest with you; there came news from him last night.

Vir. Indeed, madam?

Val. In earnest, it's true; I heard a senator speak it. Thus it is:—The Volces have an army forth; against whom Cominius the general is gone, with one part of our Roman power: your lord and Titus Lartius are set down before their city Corioli; they nothing doubt prevailing, and to make it brief wars. This is true, on mine honour; and so, I pray, go with us.

Vir. Give me excuse, good madam; I will obey you in every thing hereafter.

Vol. Let her alone, lady; as she is now, she will but disease our better mirth.

Val. In troth, I think, she would:—Fare you well then.—Come, good sweet lady.—Pr'ythee, Virgilia, turn thy solemnness out o' door, and go along with us.

Vir. No: at a word, madam; indeed, I must not. I wish you much mirth.

Val. Well, then farewell.

[Exeunt.]

¹ The crown given by the Romans to him that saved the life of a citizen, and was accounted more honourable than any other. ² Gilt is an obsolete word, meaning a superficial display of gold.

³ To mammock is a phrase still used in Staffordshire, and implies to cut in pieces, or to tear. ⁴ Crack signifies a boy child.

SCENE IV.

Before Corioli.

Enter Marcius, Titus Lartius, with drum and colours, Captains, and Soldiers. To them a Messenger.

Mar. Yonder comes news:—A wager, they have met.

Lart. My horse to yours, no.

Mar. 'Tis done.

Lart. Agreed.

Mar. Say, has our general met the enemy?

Mes. They lie in view; but have not spoke as Lart. So, the good horse is mine. [yet.

Mar. I'll buy him of you.

Lart. No, I'll not sell, nor give him: lend you him, I will,

For half a hundred years.—Summon the town.

Mar. How far off lie these armies?

Mes. Within this mile and half. [ours.

Mar. Then shall we hear their 'larum, and they Now, Mars, I pr'ythee, make us quick in work; That we with smoking swords may march from hence,

To help our fielded friends!—Come, blow thy

They sound a parley. Enter Senators, with others, on the walls.

Tullus Aufidius, is he within your walls?

1 Sen. No, nor a man that fears you less than he, That's lesser than a little. Hark, our drums [Drum afar off.

Are bringing forth our youth: We'll break our walls,

Rather than they shall pound us up: our gates, Which yet seem shut, we have but pinn'd with rushes;

They'll open of themselves. Hark you, far off;

[Alarum far off.

There is Aufidius: list, what work he makes Amongst your cloven army.

Mar. O, they are at it! [ho!

Lart. Their noise be our instruction.—Ladders, Enter the Volces.

Mar. They fear us not, but issue forth their city. Now put your shields before your hearts, and fight With hearts more proof than shields.—Advance, brave Titus:

They do disdain as much beyond our thoughts, Which makes me sweat with wrath.—Come on, my fellows;

He that retires, I'll take him for a Volce, And he shall feel mine edge.

[Alarum; the Romans beat back to their trenches. Re-enter Marcius.

Mar. All the contagion of the south light on you, You shames of Rome, you! Herds of boils and plagues

Plaster you o'er; that you may be abhorr'd Farther than seen, and one infect another Against the wind a mile! You souls of geese, That bear the shapes of men, how have you run From slaves that apes would beat? Pluto and hell! All hurt behind; backs red, and faces pale

With flight and agued fear! Mend, and charge Or, by the fires of heaven, I'll leave the foe, [home, And make my wars on you: look to't: Come on; If you'll stand fast, we'll beat them to their wives, As they us to our trenches followed.

[Another alarum, and Marcius follows them to the gates.

So, now the gates are ope:—Now prove good seconds:

10 'Tis for the followers fortune widens them, Not for the fliers: Mark me, and do the like.

[He enters the gates.

1 Sol. Fool-hardiness; not I.

2 Sol. Nor I.

15 3 Sol. See, they have shut him in.

[Alarum continues.

All. To the pot, I warrant him.

Enter Titus Lartius.

Lart. What is become of Marcius?

All. Slain, sir, doubtless.

1 Sol. Following the fliers at the very heels, With them he enters: who, upon the sudden, Clapt-to their gates; he is himself alone, To answer all the city.

Lart. O noble fellow!

Who, sensible, out-dares his senseless sword, And, when it bows, stands up! Thou art left, Marcius:

A carbuncle entire, as big as thou art, Were not so rich a jewel. Thou wast a soldier Even to Cato's wish: not fierce and terrible Only in strokes; but, with thy grim looks, and The thunder-like percussion of thy sounds, Thou mad'st thine enemies shake, as if the world Were feverous, and did tremble.

Re-enter Marcius bleeding, assaulted by the enemy.

1 Sol. Look, Sir.

Lart. O, 'tis Marcius:

Let's fetch him off, or make remain¹ alike.

[They fight, and all enter the city.

SCENE V.

Within the Town.

Enter certain Romans, with spoils.

1 Rom. This will I carry to Rome.

2 Rom. And I this.

3 Rom. A murrain on't! I took this for silver.

[Alarum continues still afar off.

50 Enter Marcius, and Titus Lartius, with a trumpet.

Mar. See here these movers, that do prize their hours

At a crack'd drachm! Cushions, leaden spoons, Irons of a doit, doublets that hangmen would Bury with those that wore them, these base slaves, Ere yet the fight be done, pack up:—Down with them.—

And hark, what noise the general makes!—To There is the man of my soul's hate, Aufidius, Piercing our Romans: Then, valiant Titus, take Convenient numbersto make good the city; [haste Whilst I, with those that have the spirit, will To help Cominius.

¹ Make remain is an old manner of speaking, which means no more than remain.

Lart. Worthy sir, thou bleed'st;
Thy exercise hath been too violent for
A second course of fight.

Mar. Sir, praise me not:
My work hath yet not warm'd me: Fare you well. 5
The blood I drop is rather physical Than dangerous to me: To Aufidius thus
I will appear, and fight.

Lart. Now the fair goddess, Fortune,
Fall deep in love with thee; and her great charms 10
Misguide thy opposers' swords! Bold gentleman, Prosperity be thy page!

Mar. Thy friend no less Than those she places highest! So, farewell.

Lart. Thou worthiest Marcius!—
Go, sound thy trumpet in the market-place;
Call thither all the officers of the town,
Where they shall know our mind: Away.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.

The Roman Camp.

Enter Cominius retreating, with Soldiers.

Com. Breathe you, my friends; well fought: 25
we are come off

Like Romans, neither foolish in our stands,
Nor cowardly in retire: believe me, sirs,
We shall be charg'd again. Whiles we have struck,
By interims, and conveying gusts, we have heard
The charges of our friends:—Ye Roman gods,
Lead their successes as we wish our own;
That both our powers, with smiling fronts encountering,

Enter a Messenger.

May give you thankful sacrifice!—Thy news?

Mes. The citizens of Corioli have issued,
And given to Lartius and to Marcius battle:
I saw our party to the trenches driven,
And then I came away.

Com. Though thou speak'st truth, [since?
Methinks, thou speak'st not well. How long is't

Mes. Above an hour, my lord. [drums:

Com. 'Tis not a mile; briefly we heard their
How could'st thou in a mile confound¹ an hour, 45
And bring thy news so late?

Mes. Spies of the Volces
Held me in chase, that I was forc'd to wheel
Three or four miles about; else had I, sir,
Half an hour since brought my report.

Enter Marcius.

Com. Who's yonder,
That does appear as he were flay'd? O gods!
He has the stamp of Marcius; and I have Before-time seen him thus.

Mar. Come I too late? [tabor,

Com. The shepherd knows not thunder from a
More than I know the sound of Marcius' tongue
From every meaner man's.

Mar. Come I too late?

Com. Ay, if you come not in the blood of others,
But mantled in your own.

Mar. O! let me clip you
In arms as sound, as when I woo'd; in heart
As merry, as when our nuptial day was done,
And tapers burnt to bedward.

Com. Flower of warriors,
How is't with Titus Lartius?

Mar. As with a man busied about decrees:
Condemning some to death, and some to exile;
Ransoming him², or pitying, threatening the other;
Holding Corioli in the name of Rome,
Even like a fawning greyhound in the leash,
To let him slip at will.

Com. Where is that slave,
Which told me they had beat you to your trenches?
15 Where is he? Call him hither.

Mar. Let him alone,
He did inform the truth: But for our gentlemen,
The common file, (A plague! Tribunes for them!)
The mouse ne'er shunn'd the cat, as they did budge 20 From rascals worse than they.

Com. But how prevail'd you? [think—

Mar. Will the time serve to tell? I do not Where is the enemy? Are you lords o' the field?
If not, why cease you 'till you are so?

Com. Marcius, we have a disadvantage fought,
And did retire, to win our purpose. [side

Mar. How lies their battle? Know you on what They have plac'd their men of trust?

Com. As I guess, Marcius,
Their bands i' the vaward are the Antiates,
Of their best trust: o'er them Aufidius,
Their very heart of hope.

Mar. I do beseech you,
By all the battles wherein we have fought,
35 By the blood we have shed together, by the vows
We have made to endure friends, that you directly
Set me against Aufidius, and his Antiates:
And that you not delay³ the present; but,
Filling the air with swords advanc'd⁴, and darts,
40 We prove this very hour.

Com. Though I could wish
You were conducted to a gentle bath,
And balms applied to you, yet dare I never Deny your asking; take your choice of those 45 That best can aid your action.

Mar. Those are they
That most are willing:—If any such be here,
(As it were sin to doubt) that love this painting
Wherein you see me smear'd; if any fear
50 Lesser his person than an ill report;

If any think, brave death outweighs bad life,
And that his country's dearer than himself;
Let him, alone, or so many, so minded,
Wave thus, to express his disposition,

55 And follow Marcius. [Waving his hand.
[They all shout, and wave their swords, take him up in their arms, and cast up their caps.

O me, alone! Make you a sword of me?
If these shews be not outward, which of you 60 But is four Volces? None of you, but is Able to bear against the great Aufidius
A shield as hard as his. A certain number

(Though thanks to all,) must I select from all:
The rest shall bear the business in some other fight,
As cause will be obey'd. Please you to march;
And four¹ shall quickly draw out my command,
Which men are best inclin'd.

Com. March on, my fellows;
Make good this ostentation, and you shall Divide in all with us. [Exeunt.]

The Gates of Corioli.

Titus Lartius, having set a guard upon Corioli, going with a drum and trumpet toward Cominius and Caius Marcius, enters with a Lieutenant, other Soldiers, and a Scout.

Lart. So, let the ports² be guarded: Keep your duties,
As I have set them down. If I do send, dispatch
Those centuries to our aid: the rest will serve
For a short holding: if we lose the field,
We cannot keep the town.

Lieut. Fear not our care, sir.

Lart. Hence, and shut your gates upon us.—
Our guider, come; to the Roman camp conduct us. [Exeunt.]

The Field of Battle.

Alarum. Enter Marcius and Aufidius.

Mar. I'll fight with none but thee; for I do hate thee
Worse than a promise-breaker.

Auf. We hate alike;
Not Africk owns a serpent I abhor
More than thy fame, and envy: Fix thy foot.

Mar. Let the first budger die the other's slave,
And the gods doom him after!

Auf. If I fly, Marcius,
Halloo me like a hare.

Mar. Within these three hours, Tullus,
Alone I fought in your Corioli walls, [blood,
And made what work I pleas'd: 'Tis not my Wrench up thy power to the highest.

Auf. Wert thou the Hector,
That was the whip of your bragg'd progeny,
Thou should'st not 'scape me here.—

[Here they fight, and certain Volces come to the aid of Aufidius. Marcius fights till they be driven in breathless.]

Officious, and not valiant!—you have sham'd me
In your condemned seconds. [Exeunt fighting.]

S C E N E IX.

The Roman Camp.

Flourish. Alarum. A retreat is sounded. Enter at one door, Cominius with the Romans; at another door, Marcius, with his arm in a scarf, &c.

Com. If I should tell thee o'er this thy day's work,

Thou'lt not believe thy deeds: but I'll report it,
Where senators shall mingle tears with smiles;
Where great patricians shall attend, and shrug,
I' the end, admire; where ladies shall be frightened,
And, gladly quak'd³, hear more; where the dull
Tribunes,

That, with the fusty plebeians, hate thine honours,
Shall say, against their hearts,—“We thank the “ gods,

10 “Our Rome hath such a soldier!”—
Yet cam'st thou to a morsel of this feast,
Having fully din'd before.

Enter Titus Lartius, with his power, from the pursuit.

15 Lart. O general,
Here is the steed, we the caparisons⁴!
Had'st thou beheld—

Mar. Pray now, no more: my mother,
20 Who has a charter to extol her blood,
When she does praise me, grieves me.
I have done as you have done; that's, what I can;
Induc'd, as you have been; that's for my country:
He, that has but effected his good will,
25 Hath overta'en mine act.

Com. You shall not be
The grave of your deserving; Rome must know
The value of her own: 'twere a concealment
Worse than a theft, no less than a traducement, 30 To hide your doings; and to silence that,
Which to the spire and top of praises vouch'd,
Would seem but modest: Therefore, I beseech
you,

(In sign of what you are, not to reward
35 What you have done) before our army hear me.

Mar. I have some wounds upon me, and they
To hear themselves remember'd. [smart

Com. Should they not⁵,
Well might they fester 'gainst ingratitude,
40 And tent themselves with death. Of all the horses, (Whereof we have ta'en good, and good store)
of all

The treasure, in the field atchiev'd, and city,
We render you the tenth; to be ta'en forth,
45 Before the common distribution, at
Your only choice.

Mar. I thank you, general;
But cannot make my heart consent to take
A bribe, to pay my sword: I do refuse it;
50 And stand upon my common part with those
That have beheld the doing.

[A long flourish. They all cry, Marcius!
Marcius! cast up their caps and lances:
Cominius and Lartius stand bare.]

55 Mar. May these same instruments, which you profane, [shall Never sound more! When drums and trumpets

¹ Coriolanus may mean, that as all the soldiers have offered to attend him on this expedition, and he wants only a part of them, he will submit the selection to four indifferent persons, that he himself may escape the charge of partiality. ² i. e. the gates. ³ i. e. thrown into grateful trepidation. The meaning is,—This man performed the action, and we only filled up the shew. ⁴ That is, of be remembered. Soft

Soft as the parasite's silk, let him¹ be made
A coverture for the wars!—No more, I say;
For that I have not wash'd my nose that bled,
Or foil'd some debile wretch,—which, without note,
Here's many else have done,—you shout me forth
In acclamations hyperbolical;
As if I lov'd my little should be dieted
In praises sauc'd with lyes.

Com. Too modest are you;
More cruel to your good report, than grateful
To us that give you truly: by your patience,
If 'gainst yourself you be incens'd, we'll put you (Like one that means his proper harm) in manacles,
Then reason safely with you.—Therefore, be it known,

As to us, to all the world, that Caius Marcius
Wears this war's garland: in token of the which,
My noble steed, known to the camp, I give him,
With all his trim belonging; and, from this time,
For what he did before Corioli, call him,
With all the applause and clamour of the host,
Caius Marcius Coriolanus.—

Bear the addition nobly ever!

[Flourish. Trumpets sound, and drums.]

Omnes. Caius Marcius Coriolanus!

Cor. I will go wash;
And when my face is fair, you shall perceive
Whether I blush, or no: Howbeit, I thank you:—
I mean to stride your steed; and, at all times,
To undercrest your good addition²,
To the fairness of my power³.

Com. So, to our tent:
Where, ere we do repose us, we will write
To Rome of our success.—You, Titus Lartius,
Must to Corioli back: send us to Rome
The best⁴, with whom we may articulate⁵,
For their own good, and ours.

Lart. I shall, my lord.

Cor. The gods begin to mock me. I that now
Refus'd most princely gifts, am bound to beg
Of my lord general.

Com. Take it: 'tis yours.—What is't?

Cor. I sometime lay, here in Corioli,
At a poor man's house; he us'd me kindly:
He cry'd to me; I saw him prisoner;
But then Aufidius was within my view,
And wrath o'erwhelm'd my pity: I request you
To give my poor host freedom.

Com. O, well begg'd!
Were he the butcher of my son, he should Be free, as is the wind. Deliver him, Titus.

Lart. Marcius, his name?

Cor. By Jupiter, forgot:—

I am weary: yea, my memory is tir'd.—

Have we no wine here?

Com. Go we to our tent:

The blood upon your visage dries; 'tis time
It should be look'd to: come. [Exeunt.]

The Camp of the Volces.

A flourish. Cornets. Enter Tullus Aufidius bloody, with two or three Soldiers.

Auf. The town is ta'en!

Sol. 'Twill be deliver'd back on good condition.

Auf. Condition!—

I would, I were a Roman; for I cannot,
Being a Volce, be that I am.—Condition!
What good condition can a treaty find
P' the part that is at mercy? Five times, Marcius,
I have fought with thee; so often hast thou beat me;
And would'st do so, I think, should we encounter
As often as we eat.—By the elements,
If e'er again I meet him beard to beard,
He is mine, or I am his: Mine emulation
Hath not that honour in't, it had; for where
I thought to crush him in an equal force,
True sword to sword, I'll potch⁶ at him some way;
Or wrath, or craft, may get him.

Sol. He's the devil. [poison'd,

Auf. Bolder, though not so subtle: My valour's
With only suffering stain by him; for him
Shall flie out of itself: nor sleep nor sanctuary,
Being naked, sick; nor fane, nor capitol,
The prayers of priests, nor times of sacrifice,
Embarquements⁷ all of fury, shall lift up
Their rotten privilege and custom 'gainst
My hate to Marcius: where I find him, were it
At home, upon my brother's guard, even there,
Against the hospitable canon, would I [city;
Wash my fierce hand in his heart. Go you to the

Be hostages for Rome.

Sol. Will not you go?

Auf. I am attended⁸ at the cypress grove:
I pray you,
(Tis south the city mills) bring me word thither
How the world goes; that to the pace of it
I may spur on my journey.

Sol. I shall, sir. [Exeunt.]

¹ Him for it. A C T II.

S C E N E I.

Rome.

Enter Menenius, with Sicinius, and Brutus.

Men. THE augurer tells me, we shall have 5
news to-night.

Bru. Good, or bad?

Men. Not according to the prayer of the people, for they love not Marcius.

Sic. Nature teaches beasts to know their friends. 10

Men. Pray you, who does the wolf love?

Sic. The lamb.

Men. Ay, to devour him; as the hungry plebeians would the noble Marcius.

Bru. He's a lamb indeed, that baes like a bear. 15

Men. He's a bear indeed that lives like a lamb.
You two are old men; tell me one thing that I shall ask you.

Both. Well, sir.

Men. In what enormity is Marcius poor, that 20 you two have not in abundance?

Bru. He's poor in no one fault, but stor'd with all.

Sic. Especially, in pride.

Bru. And topping all others in boasting. 25

Men. This is strange now: Do you two know how you are censur'd here in the city, I mean of us o' the right-hand file? Do you?

Bru. Why, how are we censur'd?

Men. Because you talk of pride now,—Will 30 you not be angry?

Both. Well, well, sir, well.

Men. Why, 'tis no great matter; for a very little thief of occasion will rob you of a great deal of patience; give your dispositions the reins, 35 and be angry at your pleasures; at the least, if you take it as a pleasure to you, in being so.
You blame Marcius for being proud?

Bru. We do it not alone, sir.

Men. I know, you can do very little alone; for 40 your helps are many; or else your actions would grow wondrous single: your abilities are too infant-like, for doing much alone. You talk of pride: Oh, that you could turn your eyes towards the napes of your necks¹, and make but an interiorsurvey of your good selves! O, that you could! 45

Bru. What then, sir?

Men. Why, then you should discover a brace of as unmeriting, proud, violent, testy magistrates, (aliàs, fools) as any in Rome. 50

Sic. Menenius, you are known well enough too.

Men. I am known to be a humourous patrician, and one that loves a cup of hot wine with not a drop of allaying Tiber in't: said to be something imperfect, in favouring the first complaint; hasty, 55 and tinder-like, upon too trivial motion: one that converses more with the buttock of the night, than with the forehead of the morning². What I think, I utter; and spend my malice in my breath: Meeting two such wealsmen as you are,

(I cannot call you Lycurgusses) if the drink you give me, touch my palate adversely, I make a crooked face at it. I can't say, your worships have deliver'd the matter well, when I find the ass in compound with the major part of your syllables:
and though I must be content to bear with those that say you are reverend grave men; yet they lye deadly, that tell you you have good faces. If you see this in the map of my microcosm, follows it, that I am known well enough too? What harm can your bisson³ conspectuities glean out of this character, if I be known well enough too?

Bru. Come, sir, come, we know you well enough.

Men. You know neither me, yourselves, nor any thing. You are ambitious for poor knaves' caps and legs: you wear out a good wholesome forenoon, in hearing a cause between an orange-wife and a fasset-seller; and then rejoin the controversy of three-pence to a second day of audience.—When you are hearing a matter between party and party, if you chance to be pinch'd with the cholic, you make faces like mummers: set up the bloody flag against all patience⁴, and, in roaring for a chamber-pot, dismiss the controversy bleeding, the more entangled by your hearing:
all the peace you make in their cause, is, calling both the parties knaves: you are a pair of strange ones.

Bru. Come, come, you are well understood to be a perfecter giber for the table, than a necessary benchman in the Capitol.

Men. Our very priests must become mockers, if they shall encounter such ridiculous subjects as you are. When you speak best unto the purpose, it is not worth the wagging of your beards; and your beards deserve not so honourable a grave, as to stuff a botcher's cushion, or to be entomb'd in an ass's pack-saddle. Yet you must be saying, Marcius is proud; who, in a cheap estimation, is worth all your predecessors, since Deucalion;
though, peradventure, some of the best of them were hereditary hangmen. Good-e'en to your worships: more of your conversation would infect my brain, being the herdsmen of the beastly plebeians: I will be bold to take my leave of you.

Enter Volumnia, Virgilia, and Valeria.

How now, my fair as noble ladies, (and the moon, were she earthly, no nobler) whither do you follow your eyes so fast?

Vol. Honourable Menenius, my boy Marcius approaches; for the love of Juno, let's go.

Men. Ha! Marcius coming home?

¹ Alluding to the fable, which says, that every man has a bag hanging before him, in which he puts his neighbour's faults, and another behind him, in which he stows his own. ² Rather a late lier-down than an early riser. ³ i. e. blind. ⁴ i. e. declare war against patience.

Vol. Ay, worthy Menenius; and with 'most prosperous approbation.

Men. Take my cap, Jupiter, and I thank thee:—Hoo! Marcius coming home!

Both. Nay, 'tis true.

Vol. Look, here's a letter from him; the state hath another, his wife another; and, I think, there's one at home for you.

Men. I will make my very house reel to-night:—A letter for me?

Vir. Yes, certain, there's a letter for you; I saw it.

Men. A letter for me? It gives me an estate of seven years' health; in which time, I will make a lip at the physician: the most sovereign prescription in Galen is but empiric quique, and, to this preservative, of no better report than a horse-drench. Is he not wounded? he was wont to come home wounded.

Vir. O, no, no, no.

Vol. O, he is wounded, I thank the gods for't.

Men. So do I too, if it be not too much:—Brings 'a victory in his pocket?—The wounds become him.

Vol. On's brows, Menenius; he comes the third time home with the oaken garland.

Men. Has he disciplin'd Aufidius soundly?

Vol. Titus Lartius writes,—they fought together, but Aufidius got off.

Men. And it was time for him too, I'll warrant him that: an' he had staid by him, I would not have been so fidius'd for all the chests in Corioli, and the gold that's in them. Is the senate possess'd¹ of this?

Vol. Good ladies, let's go:—Yes, yes, yes: the senate has letters from the general, wherein he gives my son the whole name of the war: he hath in this action outdone his former deeds doubly.

Val. In troth, there's wondrous things spoke of him.

Men. Wondrous? ay, I warrant you, and not without his true purchasing.

Vir. The gods grant them true!

Vol. True? pow, wow.

Men. True? I'll be sworn they are true;—Where is he wounded?—God save your good worships! [To the Tribunes.] Marcius is coming home: he has more cause to be proud.—Where is he wounded?

Vol. I' the shoulder, and i' the left arm: There will be large cicatrices to shew the people, when he shall stand for his place. He receiv'd, in the repulse of Tarquin, seven hurts i' the body.

Men. One i' the neck, and one too i' the thigh:—There's nine that I know.

Vol. He had, before this last expedition, twenty-five wounds upon him.

Men. Now 'tis twenty-seven: every gash was an enemy's grave: Hark, the trumpets.

[A shout, and flourish.]

Vol. These are th' ushers of Marcius: before him

He carries noise, and behind him he leaves tears; Death, that dark spirit, in's nervy arm doth lie; Which being advanc'd, declines, and then men die.

5 A Senate. Trumpets sound. Enter Cominius the General, and Titus Lartius; between them, Coriolanus, crown'd with an oaken garland; with Captains and Soldiers, and a Herald.

Her. Know, Rome, that all alone Marcius did fight
10 Within Corioli' gates: where he hath won,
With fame, a name to Caius Marcius; these
In honour follows, Coriolanus:—
Welcome to Rome, renown'd Coriolanus!

[Sound. Flourish.]

15 All. Welcome to Rome, renown'd Coriolanus!
Cor. No more of this, it does offend my heart;
Pray now, no more.

Com. Look, sir, your mother,—

Cor. O!

20 You have, I know, petition'd all the gods
For my prosperity.

Vol. Nay, my good soldier, up;
My gentle Marcius, worthy Caius, and
By deed-atchieving honour newly nam'd,
25 What is it? Coriolanus, must I call thee?
But O, thy wife—

Cor. My gracious silence², hail!

Would'st thou have laugh'd, had I come coffin'd home,

30 That weep'st to see me triumph? Ah, my dear,
Such eyes the widows in Corioli wear,
And mothers that lack sons.

Men. Now the gods crown thee!

Cor. And live you yet? O my sweet lady, pardon.
35 [To Valeria.]

Vol. I know not where to turn:—O, welcome home:
[all.]

And welcome, general;—And you are welcome
Men. A hundred thousand welcomes: I could 40 weep, [come:
And I could laugh; I am light and heavy. Wel-

A curse begin at very root of's heart,
That is not glad to see thee!—You are three,
That Rome should dote on: yet by the faith of 45 men, [will not

We have some old crab-trees here at home, that
Be gra ted to your relish. Yet welcome, warriors:
We call a nettle, but a nettle; and
The faults of fools but folly.

50 Com. Ever right.

Cor. Menenius, ever, ever.

Her. Give way there, and go on.

Cor. Your hand, and yours:

[To his Wife and Mother.]

55 Ere in our own house I do shade my head,
The good patricians must be visited;
From whom I have receiv'd not only greetings,
But with them change of honours.

Vol. I have liv'd

60 To see inherited my very wishes,
And the buildings of my fancy:

¹ i. e. informed. ² i. e. according to Mr. Steevens, "Thou whose silent tears are more eloquent and grateful to me, than the clamorous applause of the rest."

Only there's one thing wanting, which I doubt
But our Rome will cast upon thee. [not,

Cor. Know, good mother,
I had rather be their servant in my way,
Than sway with them in theirs.

Com. On, to the Capitol. [Flourish. Cornets.
[Exeunt in state, as before.

Brutus and Sicinius come forward.

Bru. All tongues speak of him, and the bleared sights

Are spectacl'd to see him: Your prattling nurse
Into a rapture¹ lets her baby cry,
While she chats him: the kitchen-malkin² pins
Her richest lockram³ 'bout her reeky neck,
Clambering the walls to eye him: Stalls, bulks,

windows,
Are smother'd up, leads fill'd, and ridges hors'd
With variable complexions; all agreeing
In earnestness to see him: seld-shown flamens⁴
Do press among the popular throngs, and puff
To win a vulgar station: our veil'd dames
Commit the war of white and damask, in
Their nicely gawded cheeks, to the wanton spoil
Of Phœbus' burning kisses: such a pothor,
As if that whatsoever god, who leads him⁵,
Were sily crept into his human powers,
And gave him graceful posture.

Sic. On the sudden,
I warrant him consul.

Bru. Then our office may,
During his power, go sleep.

Sic. He cannot temperately transport his honours
From where he should begin, and end; but will Lose those he hath won.

Bru. In that there's comfort.

Sic. Doubt not,
The commoners, for whom we stand, but they,
Upon their ancient malice, will forget,
With the least cause, these his new honours; which
That he will give them, make I as little question
As he is proud to do't.

Bru. I heard him swear,
Were he to stand for consul, never would he Appear i' the market-place, nor on him put
The napless vesture of humility:
Nor shewing (as the manner is) his wounds
To the people, beg their stinking breaths.

Sic. 'Tis right.

Bru. It was his word: O, he would miss it, rather Than carry it, but by the suit o' the gentry to him,
And the desire of the nobles.

Sic. I wish no better,
Than have him hold that purpose, and to put it
In execution.

Bru. 'Tis most like, he will.

Sic. It shall be to him then, as our good will's,
A sure destruction.

Bru. So it must fall out
To him, or our authorities. For an end,
We must suggest the people, in what hatred

He still hath held them; that, to his power, he would
Have made them mules, silenc'd their pleaders,
Disproperty'd their freedoms: holding them,
5 In human action and capacity,
Of no more soul, nor fitness for the world,
Than camels in their war: who have their provender
Only for bearing burdens, and sore blows
For sinking under them.

10 Sic. This, as you say, suggested
At some time when his soaring insolence
Shall reach the people, (which time shall not want,
If he be put upon't; and that's as easy,
As to set dogs on sheep) will be the fire
15 To kindle their dry stubble; and their blaze
Shall darken him for ever.

Enter a Messenger.

Bru. What's the matter? [thought,

Mess. You are sent for to the Capitol. 'Tis
20 That Marcius shall be consul: I have seen
The dumb men throng to see him, and the blind
To hear him speak: Matrons flung gloves,
Ladies and maids their scarfs and handkerchiefs,
Upon him as he pass'd: the nobles bended,
25 As to Jove's statue; and the commons made
A shower, and thunder, with their caps, and
I never saw the like. [shouts;

Bru. Let's to the Capitol;
And carry with us ears and eyes for the time,
30 But hearts for the event.

Sic. Have with you. [Exeunt,

SCENE II.

The Capitol.

Enter two Officers, to lay cushions.

1 Off. Come, come, they are almost here: How many stand for consulships?

2 Off. Three, they say: but 'tis thought of every one, Coriolanus will carry it.

1 Off. That's a brave fellow; but he's vengeance proud, and loves not the common people.

2 Off. Faith, there have been many great men that have flatter'd the people, who ne'er lov'd them; and there be many that they have lov'd, 45 they know not wherefore: so that, if they love they know not why, they hate upon no better a ground: Therefore, for Coriolanus neither to care whether they love, or hate him, manifests
the true knowledge he has in their disposition;
and, out of his noble carelessness, lets them plainly see't.

1 Off. If he did not care whether he had their love or no, he wou'd indifferently 'twixt doing them neither good, nor harm; but he seeks their hate with greater devotion than they can render it him; and leaves nothing undone, that may fully discover him their opposite. Now, to seem to affect the malice and displeasure of the people, is as bad as that which he dislikes, to flatter them
60 for their love.

¹ Rapture was a common term at that time used for a fit simply. ² A kind of mop made of clouts for the use of sweeping ovens: thence a dirty wench.—Maukin in some parts of England signifies a figure of clouts set up to fright birds in gardens; a scarecrow. ³ Lockram was some kind of cheap linen. ⁴ i. e. priests who seldom exhibit themselves to public view.—Seld is often used by ancient writers for seldom. ⁵ i. e. as if that god who leads him, whatsoever god he be.

2 Off. He hath deserved worthily of his country :
And his ascent is not by such easy degrees as those,
who have been supple and courteous to the people;
bonneted¹, without any further deed to heave them at all into their estimation and report: but he hath so planted his honours in their eyes, and his actions in their hearts, that for their tongues to be silent, and not confess so much, were a kind of ingrateful injury; to report otherwise, were a malice, that, giving itself the lye, would pluck reproof and rebuke from every ear
that heard it.

1 Off. No more of him; he is a worthy man:
Make way, they are coming.

A Senate. Enter the Patricians, and the Tribunes of the people, Lictors before them; Coriolanus, Menenius, Cominius the Consul: Sicinius and Brutus, as Tribunes, take their places by themselves.

Men. Having determin'd of the Volces, and
To send for Titus Lartius, it remains,
As the main point of this our after-meeting,
To gratify his noble service, that [you,
Hath thus stood for his country: Therefore, please
Most reverend and grave elders, to desire
The present consul, and last general
In our well-found successes, to report
A little of that worthy work perform'd
By Caius Marcius Coriolanus; whom
We meet here, both to thank, and to remember
With honours like himself.

1 Sen. Speak, good Cominius:
Leave nothing out for length; and make us think,
Rather our state's defective for requital,
Than we to stretch it out.—Masters o' the people,
We do request your kindest ear; and, after,
Your loving motion toward the common body,
To yield what passes here.

Sic. We are convented
Upon a pleasing treaty; and have hearts
Inclinable to honour and advance
The theme of our assembly.

Bru. Which the rather
We shall be blest to do, if he remember
A kinder value of the people, than
He hath hereto priz'd them at.

Men. That's off, that's off²;
I would you rather had been silent: Please you
To hear Cominius speak?

Bru. Most willingly;
But yet my caution was more pertinent,
Than the rebuke you give it.

Men. He loves your people;
But tye him not to be their bed-fellow.—
Worthy Cominius, speak.—Nay, keep your place.

[Coriolanus rises, and offers to go away.]

1 Sen. Sit, Coriolanus: never shame to hear
What you have nobly done.

Cor. Your honours' pardon;
I had rather have my wounds to heal again,

Than hear say how I got them.

Bru. Sir, I hope,
My words dis-bench'd you not?

Cor. No, sir: yet oft,
5 When blows have made me stay, I fled from words.
You sooth'd not, therefore hurt not: But, your people,

I love them as they weigh.

Men. Pray now, sit down. [sun,

Cor. I had rather have one scratch my head i' the
When the alarum was struck, than idly sit
To hear my nothings monster'd. [Exit Coriolanus.

Men. Masters o' the people,
Your multiplying spawn how can he flatter,
15 (That's thousand to one good one) when you now see,

He had rather venture all his limbs for honour,
Than one of his ears to hear it?—Proceed, Cominius.

20 Com. I shall lack voice: the deeds of Coriolanus
Should not be utter'd feebly.—It is held,
That valour is the chiefest virtue, and
Most dignifies the haver; if it be,

The man I speak of cannot in the world
25 Be singly counterpois'd. At sixteen years,
When Tarquin made a head for Rome³, he fought
Beyond the mark of others: our then dictator,
Whom with all praise I point at, saw him fight,
When with his Amazonian⁴ chin he drove

30 The bristled lips before him: he bestrid
An o'er-prest Roman, and i' the consul's view
Slew three opposers; Tarquin's self he met,
And struck him on his knee: in that day's feats,
When he might act the woman in the scene,

35 He prov'd best man i' the field, and for his meed
Was brow-bound with the oak. His pupil age
Man enter'd thus, he waxed like a sea;

And, in the brunt of seventeen battles since,
He lurch'd all swords o' the garland. For this last,
40 Before and in Corioli, let me say,

I cannot speak him home: He stopt the fliers;
And, by his rare example, made the coward
Turn terror into sport: as waves before
A vessel under sail, so men obey'd, [stamp)

45 And fell below his stem: his sword (death's
Where it did mark, it took; from face to foot
He was a thing of blood, whose every motion
Was tim'd with dying cries: alone he enter'd
The mortal gate⁶ o' the city, which he painted

50 With shunless destiny; aidless came off,
And with a sudden re-inforcement struck
Corioli, like a planet: Now all's his:

When by-and-by the din of war 'gan pierce
His ready sense: then straight his doubled spirit

55 Re-quickened what in flesh was fatigate,
And to the battle came he; where he did Run reeking o'er the lives of men, as if
'Twere a perpetual spoil: and, 'till we call'd
Both field and city ours, he never stood

¹ Bonnetter, Fr. is, to pull off one's cap. ² i. e. that is nothing to the purpose. ³ i. e. raised a power to recover Rome. ⁴ i. e. his chin on which there was no beard. ⁵ The parts of women were, in Shakspeare's time, represented by the most smooth-faced young men to be found among the players. ⁶ i. e. the gate was made the scene of death.

To ease his breast with panting.

Men. Worthy man! [nours

1 Sen. He cannot but with measure fit the ho-
Which we devise him.

Com. Our spoils he kick'd at;
And look'd upon things precious, as they were
The common muck o' the world: he covets less
Than misery¹ itself would give; rewards
His deeds with doing them; and is content
To spend his time, to end it.

Men. He's right noble;
Let him be call'd for.

1 Sen. Call Coriolanus.

Off. He doth appear.

Re-enter Coriolanus.

Men. The senate, Coriolanus, are well pleas'd
To make thee consul.

Cor. I do owe them still
My life, and services.

Men. It then remains,
That you do speak to the people.

Cor. I do beseech you,
Let me o'erleap that custom; for I cannot
Put on the gown, stand naked, and entreat them
For my wounds' sake, to give their suffrage:
please you,

That I may pass this doing.

Sic. Sir, the people
Must have their voices; neither will they bate
One jot of ceremony.

Men. Put them not to't:
Pray you, go fit you to the custom; and Take to you, as your predecessors have,
Your honour with your form.

Cor. It is a part
That I shall blush in acting, and might well
Be taken from the people.

Bru. Mark you that?

Cor. To brag unto them,—Thus I did, and thus;
Shew them the unaking scars, which I should hide,
As if I had receiv'd them for the hire
Of their breath only:—

Men. Do not stand upon 't.—
We recommend to you, tribunes of the people,
Our purpose to them;—and to our noble consul
Wish we all joy and honour.

Sen. To Coriolanus come all joy and honour!

[Flourish. Cornets. Then Exeunt.

Manent Sicinius, and Brutus.

Bru. You see how he intends to use the people. [quire them,

Sic. May they perceive his intent! He will re-
As if he did condemn what he requested
Should be in them to give.

Bru. Come, we'll inform them
Of our proceedings here: on the market place,
I know they do attend us. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.

The Forum.

Enter seven or eight Citizens.

1 Cit. Once², if he do require our voices, we ought not to deny him.

2 Cit. We may, sir, if we will.

3 Cit. We have power in ourselves to do it, but it is a power that we have no power to do: for if he shew us his wounds, and tell us his deeds, we are to put our tongues into those wounds, and speak for them; so, if he tell us his noble deeds, we must also tell him our noble acceptance of them. Ingratitude is monstrous: and for the multitude to be ingrateful, were to make a monster of the multitude; of the which, we being members, should bring ourselves to be monstrous members.

1 Cit. And to make us no better thought of, a little help will serve: for once, when we stood up about the corn, he himself stuck not to call us—
the many-headed multitude.

3 Cit. We have been call'd so of many; not that our heads are some brown, some black, some auburn, some bald, but that our wits are so diversely colour'd: and truly, I think, if all our wits were to issue out of one scull, they would fly east, west, north, south; and their consent of one direct way should be at once to all the points
o' the compass.

2 Cit. Think you so? Which way, do you judge, my wit would fly?

3 Cit. Nay, your wit will not so soon out as another man's will, 'tis strongly wedg'd up in a block-head: but if it were at liberty, 'twould, sure, southward.

2 Cit. Why that way?

3 Cit. To lose itself in a fog; where being three parts melted away with rotten dews, the fourth would return for conscience-sake, to help to get thee a wife.

2 Cit. You are never without your tricks:—
You may, you may—

3 Cit. Are you all resolv'd to give your voices?
But that's no matter, the greater part carries it.
I say, if he would incline to the people, there was never a worthier man.

Enter Coriolanus, and Menenius.

Here he comes, and in the gown of humility:
mark his behaviour. We are not to stay all together, but to come by him where he stands, by ones, by twos, and by threes. He's to make his requests by particulars; wherein every one of us has a single honour, in giving him our own voices with our own tongues: therefore follow me, and I'll direct you how you shall go by him.

All. Content, content. [known

Men. O sir, you are not right; have you not
The worthiest men have done 't?

Cor. What must I say?
1 Cit. I pray, sir,—Plague upon 't! I cannot bring My tongue to such a pace: Look, sir;—my wounds;—

I got them in my country's service, when
Some certain of your brethren roar'd, and ran
From the noise of our own drums.

Men. O me, the gods!
You must not speak of that; you must desire them
To think upon you.

² Once here means the same as when we say once for all.

Cor. Think upon me? Hang 'em!
I would they would forget me, like the virtues
Which our divines lose by 'em.

Men. You'll mar all; [you,
I'll leave you: Pray you, speak to 'em, I pray 5
In wholesome manner. [Exit.

Citizens approach.

Cor. Bid them wash their faces,
And keep their teeth clean.—So, here comes a brace.

You know the cause, sirs, of my standing here.

1 Cit. We do, sir; tell us what hath brought you to 't.

Cor. Mine own desert.

2 Cit. Your own desert?

Cor. Ay, not mine own desire.

1 Cit. How! not your own desire?

Cor. No, sir; 'Twas never my desire yet
To trouble the poor with begging.

1 Cit. You must think, if we give you any 20 thing, we hope to gain by you.

Cor. Well then, I pray, your price o' the consulship?

1 Cit. The price is, to ask it kindly.

Cor. Kindly?

Sir, I pray, let me ha't: I have wounds to shew you,
Which shall be yours in private.—Your good voice, sir;

What say you?

Both Cit. You shall have it, worthy sir.

Cor. A match, sir:—There's in all two worthy voices begg'd:—

I have your alms; adieu.

1 Cit. But this is something odd.

2 Cit. An 'twere to give again—But 'tis no 35 matter. [Exeunt.

Enter two other Citizens.

Cor. Pray you now, if it may stand with the tune of your voices, that I may be consul, I have here
the customary gown.

1 Cit. You have deserv'd nobly of your country, and you have not deserv'd nobly.

Cor. Your anigma?

1 Cit. You have been a scourge to her enemies, you have been a rod to her friends; you have 45
not, indeed, loved the common people.

Cor. You should account me the more virtuous, that I have not been common in my love. I will, sir, flatter my sworn brother the people, to earn a dearer estimation of them; 'tis a condition 50 they account gentle: and since the wisdom of their choice is rather to have my hat than my heart, I will practise the insinuating nod, and be off to them most counterfeitedly; that is, sir, I will counterfeit the bewitchment of some popular 55 man, and give it bountifully to the desirers.
Therefore, beseech you, I may be consul.

2 Cit. We hope to find you our friend; and therefore give you our voices heartily.

1 Cit. You have received many wounds for 60 your country.

Cor. I will not seal¹ your knowledge with shew-ing them. I will make much of your voices, and so trouble you no further.

Both. The gods give you joy, sir, heartily!
[Exeunt.

Cor. Most sweet voices!—

Better it is to die, better to starve,
Than crave the hire which first we do deserve.
Why in this woolvish² gown should I stand here,
10 To beg of Hob, and Dick, that do appear,
Their needless voucher? Custom calls me to 't:—
What custom wills, in all things should we do 't.
The dust on antique time would lie unswept,
And mountainous error be too highly heap'd
15 For truth to over-peer.—Rather than fool it so,
Let the high office and the honour go
To one that would do thus.—I am half through;
The one part suffer'd, the other will I do.

Enter three Citizens more.

Here come more voices.—

Your voices; for your voices I have fought;
Watch'd for your voices; for your voices bear
Of wounds two dozen odd; battles thrice six
I have seen, and heard of; for your voices, have 25 Done many things, some less, some more: your Indeed, I would be consul. [voices:]

1 Cit. He has done nobly, and cannot go without any honest man's voice.

2 Cit. Therefore let him be consul: The gods 30 give him joy, and make him good friend to the people!

All. Amen, amen.—God save thee, noble consul!
[Exeunt.

Cor. Worthy voices!

Enter Menenius, with Brutus, and Sicinius.

Men. You have stood your limitation; and the tribunes

Endue you with the people's voice: Remains,
That, in the official marks invested, you
40 Anon do meet the senate.

Cor. Is this done?

Sic. The custom of request you have discharg'd:
The people do admit you; and are summon'd
To meet anon, upon your approbation.

Cor. Where? at the senate-house?

Sic. There, Coriolanus.

Cor. May I change these garments?

Sic. You may, sir. [again,

Cor. That I'll straight do; and, knowing myself
50 Repair to the senate-house.

Men. I'll keep you company.—Will you along?

Bru. We stay here for the people.

Sic. Fare you well. [Exeunt Coriol. and Men.
He has it now; and by his looks, methinks,
55 'Tis warm at his heart.

Bru. With a proud heart he wore
His humble weeds: Will you dismiss the people?

Re-enter Citizens.

Sic. How now, my masters? have you chose

1 Cit. He has our voices, sir. [this man?

Bru. We pray the gods, he may deserve your loves.

¹ I will not strengthen or complete your knowledge.—The seal is that which gives authenticity to a writing. ² i. e. this rough hirsute gown.

2 Cit. Amen, sir: To my poor unworthy notice,
He mock'd us, when he begg'd our voices.

3 Cit. Certainly, he flouted us down-right.

1 Cit. No, 'tis his kind of speech, he did not mock us. [says,

2 Cit. Not one amongst us, save yourself, but
He us'd us scornfully: he should have shew'd us
His marks of merit, wounds receiv'd for his coun-

Sic. Why, so he did, I am sure. [try.

All. No, no man saw 'em.

3 Cit. He said, he had wounds, which he could shew in private;

And with his hat, thus waving it in scorn,
I would be consul, says he: aged custom,
But by your voices, will not so permit me:
Your voices therefore: When we granted that,
Here was,—I thank you for your voices, thank you,—
Your most sweet voices: now you have left your voices,
*I have nothing further with you:—*Was not this mockery?

Sic. Why, either, were you ignorant to see 't?¹
Or, seeing it, of such childish friendliness
To yield your voices?

Bru. Could you not have told him,
As you were lesson'd,—When he had no power,
But was a petty servant to the state,
He was your enemy; ever spake against
Your liberties, and the charters that you bear
I' the body of the weal: and now, arriving
A place of potency, and sway o' the state,
If he should still malignantly remain
Fast foe to the plebeii, your voices might
Be curses to yourselves: You should have said,
That, as his worthy deeds did claim no less
Than what he stood for; so his gracious nature
Would think upon you for your voices, and Translate his malice towards you into love,
Standing your friendly lord.

Sic. Thus to have said,
As you were fore-advis'd, had touch'd his spirit,
And try'd his inclination; from him pluck'd
Either his gracious promise, which you might,
As cause had call'd you up, have held him to;
Or else it would have gall'd his surly nature,
Which easily endures not article,
Tying him to aught; so, putting him to rage,
You should have ta'en the advantage of his choler,
And pass'd him unelected.

Bru. Did you perceive,
He did solicit you in free contempt²,
When he did need your loves; and do you think,
This his contempt shall not be bruising to you,
When he hath power to crush? Why, had your bodies

No heart among you? Or had you tongues, to cry
Against the rectorship of judgement?

Sic. Have you,
Ere now, deny'd the asker? and, now again,
On him, that did not ask, but mock, bestow
Your su'd-for tongues?

3 Cit. He's not confirm'd, we may deny him yet.

2 Cit. And will deny him:
I'll have five hundred voices of that sound.

1 Cit. I twice five hundred, and their friends to piece 'em. [friends,—

Bru. Get you hence instantly; and tell those
They have chose a consul, that will from them take
Their liberties; make them of no more voice
Than dogs, that are as often beat for barking,
As therefore kept to do so.

Sic. Let them assemble;

And, on a safer judgement, all revoke
Your ignorant election: Enforce³ his pride,
And his old hate unto you: besides, forget not
With what contempt he wore the humble weed;
How in his suit he scorn'd you: but your loves,
Thinking upon his services, took from you
The apprehension of his present portance⁴,
Which most gibingly, ungravely, he did fashion
After the inveterate hate he bears you.

Bru. Lay

A fault on us, your tribunes; that we labour'd, (No impediment between) but that you must
Cast your election on him.

Sic. Say, you chose him

More after our commandment, than as guided
By your own true affections: and that, your minds
Pre-occupy'd with what you rather must do
Than what you should, made you against the grain
To voice him consul: Lay the fault on us. [you,

Bru. Ay, spare us not. Say, we read lectures to How youngly he began to serve his country,
How long continued: and what stock he springs of,
The noble house o' the Marcians; from whence came

That Ancus Marcius, Numa's daughter's son,
Who, after great Hostilius, here was king:
Of the same house Publius and Quintus were,
That our best water brought by conduits hither;
And Censorinus, darling of the people,
And noble nam'd so, twice being censor,
Was his great ancestor.

Sic. One thus descended,
That hath beside well in his person wrought
To be set high in place, we did commend
To your remembrances: but you have found,
Scaling his present bearing with his past⁵,
That he's your fixed enemy, and revoke
Your sudden approbation.

Bru. Say, you ne'er had done 't,
(Harp on that still) but by our putting on:
And presently, when you have drawn your number,
Repair to the Capitol.

All. We will so; almost all
Repent in their election. [Exeunt Citizens.

Bru. Let them go on;
This mutiny were better put in hazard,
Than stay, past doubt, for greater:
If, as his nature is, he fall in rage
With their refusal, both observe and answer
The vantage of his anger⁶.

Sic. To the Capitol, come;
We will be there before the stream o' the people;
And this shall seem, as partly 'tis, their own,
Which we have goaded onward. [Exeunt.

¹ i. e. did you want knowledge to discern it?

² i. e. with contempt open and unrestrained.

³ Object his pride. ⁴ i. e. carriage. ⁵ i. e. weighing his past and present behaviour. ⁶ i. e. mark, catch, and improve the opportunity which his hasty anger will afford us.

[To Lartius.]

Enter Sicinius, and Brutus.

Behold! these are the tribunes of the people, The tongues o' the commonmouth. I do despise them;

For they do prank¹ them in authority, Against all noble sufferance.Sic. Pass no further.Cor. Ha! what is that?Bru. It will be dangerous to go on: no further.Cor. What makes this change?Men. The matter? [commons?]Com. Hath he not pass'd the nobles, and the*Bru.* Cominius, no.Cor. Have I had children's voices?Sen. Tribunes, give way; he shall to the market-place.Bru. The people are incens'd against him.Sic. Stop,

Men. Be calm, be calm.Cor. It is a purpos'd thing, and grows by plot, To curb the will of the nobility:—

5 Suffer 't, and live with such as cannot rule, Nor ever will be rul'd.

Bru. Call 't not a plot:

The people cry, you mock'd them; and, of late, When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd; Scandal'd the suppliants for the people; call'd them

Time-pleasers, flatterers, foes to nobleness.

Cor. Why, this was known before.Bru. Not to them all.15 Cor. Have you inform'd them since?Bru. How! I inform them!Cor. You are like to do such business.Bru. Not unlike,

20 Cor. Why then should I be consul? By you Let me deserve so ill as you, and make me Your fellow-tribune.Sic. You shew too much of that,

For which the people stir: If you will pass

25 To where you are bound, you must enquire your way,

Which you are out of, with a gentler spirit;

Or never be so noble as a consul,

Nor yoke with him for tribune.

30 Men. Let's be calm. [palt'ring³]Com. The people are abus'd:—Set on.—This Becomes not Rome; nor has Coriolanus Deserv'd this so dishonour'd rub, laid falsely⁴ P' the plain way of his merit.35 Cor. Tell me of corn!

This was my speech, and I will speak 't again;—

Men. Not now, not now.Sen. Not in this heat, sir, now.40 Cor. Now, as I live, I will.—My nobler friends, I crave their pardons:

For the mutable, rank-scented many, let them

Regard me as I do not flatter, and

Therein behold themselves: I say again,

45 In soothing them, we nourish 'gainst our senate

The cockle⁵ of rebellion, insolence, sedition,

Which we ourselves have plough'd for, sow'd, and scatter'd,

By mingling them with us, the honour'd number;

Who lack not virtue, no, nor power, but that

50 Which they have given to beggars.

Men. Well, no more.Sen. No more words, we beseech you.Cor. How! no more?

As for my country I have shed my blood,

55 Not fearing outward force, so shall my lungs, up with the corn.

⁴ Mesell is used, in Pierce Plowman's Vision, for a leper.⁵ Cockle is a weed which grows

Which we disdain should tetter us, yet sought
The very way to catch them.

Bru. You speak o' the people,
As if you were a god to punish, not
A man of their infirmity.

Sic. 'Twere well,
We let the people know 't.

Men. What, what? his choler?

Cor. Choler!

Were I as patient as the midnight sleep,
By Jove, 'twould be my mind.

Sic. It is a mind

That shall remain a poison where it is,
Not poison any further.

Cor. Shall remain!—

Hear you this Triton of the minnows¹? mark you
His absolute shall?

Com. 'Twas from the canon.

Cor. Shall!

O gods!—But most unwise patricians, why,
You grave, but reckless senators, have you thus
Given Hydra here to choose an officer,
That with his peremptory shall, being but [rit
The horn and noise o' the monsters; wants not spi-
To say, he'll turn your current in a ditch,
And make your channel his? If he have power,
Then vail your ignorance; if none, awake
Your dangerous lenity. If you are learned,
Be not as common fools; if you are not,
Let them have cushions by you. You are plebeians,
If they be senators: and they are no less,
When both your voices blended, the greatest taste
Most palates theirs². They choose their magistrate;
And such a one as he, who puts his shall,
His popular shall, against a graver bench
Than ever frown'd in Greece! By Jove himself,
It makes the consuls base: and my soul aches,
To know, when two authorities are up,
Neither supreme, how soon confusion
May enter 'twixt the gap of both, and take
The one by the other!

Com. Well,—on to the market-place.

Cor. Whoever gave that counsel, to give forth
The corn o' the store-house gratis, as 'twas us'd
Sometime in Greece,—

Men. Well, well, no more of that.

Cor. (Though there the people had more absolute power)

I say, they nourish'd disobedience, fed
The ruin of the state.

Bru. Why, shall the people give
One, that speaks thus, their voice?

Cor. I'll give my reasons, [the corn
More worthier than their voices. They know,
Was not our recompence; resting well assur'd
They ne'er did service for 't: Being press'd to the war,

Even when the navel of the state was touch'd,

They would not thread the gates⁴: this kind of service

Did not deserve corn gratis: Being i' the war,
Their mutinies and revolts, wherein they shew'd

5 Most valour, spoke not for them: The accusation
Which they have often made against the senate,

All cause unborn, could never be the native⁵
Of our so frank donation. Well, what then?

How shall this bosom multiplied digest

10 The senate's courtesy? Let deeds express

What's like to be their words:—"We did request it;—

"We are the greater poll, and in true fear

"They gave us our demands:"—Thus we debase

15 The nature of our seats, and make the rabble

Call our cares, fears: which will in time break ope

The locks o' the senate, and bring in the crows

To peck the eagles—

Men. Come, enough.

20 Bru. Enough, with over-measure.

Cor. No, take more:

What may be sworn by, both divine and human,
Seal what I end withal!—This double worship,—

Where one part does disdain with cause, the other

25 Insult without all reason; where gentry, title,
wisdom,

Cannot conclude, but by the yea and no

Of general ignorance,—it must omit

Real necessities, and give way the while [lows

For the ill which doth controul it.

whose name, myself

A foe to the public weal: Obey, I charge thee,
And follow to thine answer.

Men. On both sides more respect.

Sic. Here's he, that would Take from you all your power.

Bru. Seize him, ædiles.

All. Down with him, down with him!

2 Sen. Weapons, weapons, weapons!

[They all bustle about Coriolanus.]

Tribunes, patricians, citizens!—what, ho!—

Sicinius, Brutus, Coriolanus, citizens!

All. Peace, peace, peace: stay, hold, peace!

Men. What is about to be?—I am out of breath; [bones]

Confusion's near; I cannot speak:—You, tri-
To the people,—Coriolanus, patience:—
Speak, good Sicinius.

Sic. Hear me, people:—Peace.

All. Let's hear our tribunes:—Peace. Speak, 30 speak, speak.

Sic. You are at point to lose your liberties:
Marcius would have all from you; Marcius,
Whom late you nam'd for consul.

Men. Fie, fie, fie!

This is the way to kindle, not to quench.

1 Sen. To unbuild the city, and to lay all flat.

Sic. What is the city, but the people?

All. True,

The people are the city.

Bru. By the consent of all, we were establish'd
The people's magistrates.

All. You so remain.

Men. And so are like to do.

Cor. That is the way to lay the city flat;
To bring the roof to the foundation;
And bury all, which yet distinctly ranges,
In heaps and piles of ruin.

Sic. This deserves death.

Bru. Or let us stand to our authority,
Or let us lose it: We do here pronounce,
Upon the part o' the people, in whose power
We were elected theirs, Marcius is worthy
Of present death.

Sic. Therefore, lay hold of him;
Bear him to the rock Tarpeian, and from thence
Into destruction cast him.

Bru. Ædiles, seize him.

All. Yield, Marcius, yield.

Men. Hear me one word.

Beseech you, tribunes, hear me but a word.

Ædiles. Peace, peace. [friends,]

Men. Be that you seem, truly your country's
And temperately proceed to what you would

Thus violently redress.

Bru. Sir, those cold ways,
That seem like prudent helps, are very poisonous
Where the disease is violent:—Lay hands upon
And bear him to the rock. [him,]

[Coriolanus draws his sword.]

Cor. No; I'll die here.

15 There's some among you have beheld me fighting;
Come, try upon yourselves what you have seen me.

Men. Down with that sword;—Tribunes, with-

Bru. Lay hands upon him. [draw a while.]

Men. Help, Marcius! help,

20 You that be noble; help him, young and old!

All. Down with him, down with him! [Exeunt.]

[In this mutiny, the Tribunes, the Ædiles, and the People are beat in.]

Men. Go, get you to your house; be gone, away,

25 All will be naught else.

2 Sen. Get you gone,

Cor. Stand fast;

We have as many friends as enemies.

Men. Shall it be put to that?

1 Sen. The gods forbid!

I pr'ythee, noble friend, home to thy house;
Leave us to cure this cause.

Men. For 'tis a sore upon us,

You cannot tent yourself: Be gone, 'beseech you.

35 Com. Come, sir, along with us.

Cor. I would they were barbarians, (as they are,
Though in Rome litter'd;) not Romans, (as they are not, [gone.])

40 Though calv'd i' the porch o' the Capitol.)—Be
Men. Put not your worthy rage into your tongue;

One time will owe¹ another.

Cor. On fair ground,

I could beat forty of them.

Men. I could myself [tribunes.]

45 Take up a brace of the best of them; yea, the two

Com. But now 'tis odds beyond arithmetick;

And manhood is call'd foolery, when it stands

Against a falling fabrick.—Will you hence,

Before the tag² return? whose rage doth rend

50 Like interrupted waters, and o'erbear

What they are us'd to bear.

Men. Pray you, be gone:

I'll try whether my old wit be in request

With those that have but little; this must be

55 With cloth of any colour. [patch'd]

Com. Nay, come away.

[Exeunt Coriolanus and Cominius.]

¹ Dr. Johnson on this passage, remarks, that he knows not whether to owe in this place means to possess by right, or to be indebted. Either sense may be admitted. One time, in which the people are seditious, will give us power in some other time: or, this time of the people's predominance will run them in debt; that is, will lay them open to the law, and expose them hereafter to more servile subjection.

² The lowest of the populace are still denominated by those a little above them, Tag, rag, and bobtail.

1 Sen. This man has marr'd his fortune.
Men. His nature is too noble for the world:
 He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,
 Or Jove for his power to thunder. His heart's his mouth:

What his breast forges, that his tongue must vent;
 And, being angry, doth forget that ever
 He heard the name of death. [A noise within.
 Here's goodly work!

2 Sen. I would they were a-bed! [vengeance,

Men. I would they were in Tiber!—What, the
 Could he not speak 'em fair?

Enter Brutus and Sicinius, with the rabble again.

Sic. Where is this viper,
 That will depopulate the city, and
 Be every man himself?

Men. You worthy tribunes,—

Sic. He shall be thrown down the Tarpeian rock
 With rigorous hands; he hath resisted law,
 And therefore law shall scorn him further trial
 Than the severity of publick power,
 Which he so sets at nought.

1 Cit. He shall well know,
 The noble tribunes are the people's mouths,
 And we their hands.

All. He shall sure out.

Men. Sir, sir,—

Sic. Peace.

[but hunt

Men. Do not cry, havock¹, where you should
 With modest warrant.

Sic. Sir, how comes it, that you
 Have help to make this rescue?

Men. Hear me speak:—

As I do know the consul's worthiness,
 So can I name his faults:—

Sic. Consul!—what consul?

Men. The consul Coriolanus.

Bru. He consul!

All. No, no, no, no, no.

[people,

Men. If, by the tribunes' leave, and yours, good
 I may be heard, I'd crave a word or two;
 The which shall turn you to no further harm,
 Than so much loss of time.

Sic. Speak briefly then;
 For we are peremptory, to dispatch
 This viperous traitor: to eject him hence,
 Were but one danger; and, to keep him here,
 Our certain death; therefore, it is decreed,
 He dies to-night.

Men. Now the good gods forbid,
 That our renowned Rome, whose gratitude
 Towards her deserved children is enroll'd
 In Jove's own book, like an unnatural dam
 Should now eat up her own!

Sic. He's a disease that must be cut away.

Men. O, he's a limb, that has but a disease;
 Mortal, to cut it off; to cure it, easy.
 What has he done to Rome, that's worthy death?
 Killing our enemies? The blood he hath lost,
 (Which, I dare vouch, is more than that he hath,

By many an ounce) he dropp'd it for his country:
 And, what is left, to lose it by his country,
 Were to us all, that do't, and suffer it,
 A brand to the end o' the world.

5 Sic. This is clean kam².

[try,

Bru. Merely awry: When he did love his coun-
 It honour'd him.

Men. The service of the foot
 Being once gangren'd, is not then respected
 For what before it was.—

Bru. We'll hear no more:—

Pursue him to his house, and pluck him thence;
 Lest his infection, being of catching nature,
 Spread further.

15 Men. One word more, one word.

This tyger-footed rage, when it shall find
 The harm of unscann'd swiftness, will, too late,
 Tie leaden pounds to his heels. Proceed by process;
 Lest parties (as he is belov'd) break out,
 And sack great Rome with Romans.

Bru. If it were so—

Sic. What do ye talk?

Have we not had a taste of his obedience?
 Our ædiles smote? ourselves resisted?—Come—

25 Men. Consider this;—He hath been bred i' the wars

Since he could draw a sword, and is ill school'd
 In boulded language; meal and bran together
 He throws without distinction. Give me leave,
 I'll go to him, and undertake to bring him
 Where he shall answer, by a lawful form,
 (In peace) to his utmost peril.

1 Sen. Noble tribunes,
 It is the humane way: the other course
 35 Will prove too bloody; and the end of it
 Unknown to the beginning.

Sic. Noble Menenius,
 Be you then as the people's officer:
 Masters, lay down your weapons.

Bru. Go not home.

[you there:

Sic. Meet on the market-place:—We'll attend
 Where, if you bring not Marcius, we'll proceed
 In our first way.

Men. I'll bring him to you:— [must come,
 45 Let me desire your company. [To the Senators.] He
 Or what is worst will follow.

1 Sen. Pray you, let's to him. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.

Coriolanus's House.

Enter Coriolanus, with Patricians.

Cor. Let them pull all about mine ears; present
 me

Death on the wheel, or at wild horses' heels;
 55 Or pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock,
 That the precipitation might down stretch
 Below the beam of sight, yet will I still
 Be thus to them.

Enter Volumnia.

Pat. You do the nobler.

¹ i. e. Do not give the signal for unlimited slaughter, &c.—To cry havock, was, I believe, originally a sporting phrase, from hafoc, which in Saxon signifies a hawk.—It was afterwards used in war, and seems to have been the signal for general slaughter. ² i. e. Awry. Hence a kambrel for a crooked stick, or the bend in a horse's hinder leg.—The Welch word for crooked is kam.

Cor. I muse¹, my mother
Does not approve me further, who was wont
To call them woollen vassals, things created
To buy or sell with groats; to shew bare heads
In congregations, to yawn, be still, and wonder,
When one but of my ordinance² stood up
To speak of peace, or war. [To Vol.] I talk of you;
Why did you wish me milder? Would you have False to my nature? Rather say, I play [me]
The man I am.

Vol. O, sir, sir, sir,
I would have had you put your power well on,
Before you had worn it out.

Cor. Let go. [are,

Vol. You might have been enough the man you
With striving less to be so: Lesser had been
The thwartings of your dispositions, if
You had not shew'd them how you were dispos'd
Ere they lack'd power to cross you.

Cor. Let them hang.

Vol. Ay, and burn too.

Enter Menenius, with the Senators.

Men. Come, come, you have been too rough,
something too rough;
You must return and mend it.

Sen. There's no remedy;
Unless, by not so doing, our good city
Cleave in the midst, and perish.

Vol. Pray, be counsell'd:
I have a heart as little apt as yours,
But yet a brain, that leads my use of anger,
To better vantage.

Men. Well said, noble woman:
Before he should thus stoop to the herd³, but that
The violent fit o' the time craves it as physick
For the whole state, I would put mine armour on,
Which I can scarcely bear.

Cor. What must I do?

Men. Return to the tribunes.

Cor. Well, what then? what then?

Men. Repent what you have spoke.

Cor. For them?—I cannot do it to the gods;
Must I then do't to them?

Vol. You are too absolute;
Though therein you can never be too noble.
But when extremities speak, I have heard you say,
Honour and policy, like unsever'd friends,
P' the war do grow together: Grant that, and tell me,

In peace, what each of them by the other lose,
That they combine not there?

Cor. Tush, tush!

Men. A good demand.

Vol. If it be honour, in your wars, to seem
The same you are not, (which, for your best ends,
You adopt your policy) how is it less, or worse,
That it shall hold companionship in peace
With honour, as in war; since that to both
It stands in like request?

Cor. Why force⁴ you this?

Vol. Because,

That now it lies on you to speak to the people:
Not by your own instruction, nor by the matter
5 Which your heart prompts you to; but with such words

That are but roated in your tongue, but bastards, and syllables

Of no allowance⁵, to your bosom's truth.

10 Now, this no more dishonours you at all,
Than to take in a town with gentle words,
Which else would put you to your fortune, and
The hazard of much blood.—

I would dissemble with my nature, where 15 My fortunes, and my friends, at stake, required,
I should do so in honour: I am in this,

Your wife, your son, these senators, the nobles;—
And you will rather shew our general lowts⁶
How you can frown, than spend a fawn upon 'em,
20 For the inheritance of their loves, and safeguard
Of what that want⁷ might ruin.

Men. Noble lady!—

Come, go with us; speak fair: you may salve so,
Not⁸ what is dangerous present, but the loss
25 Of what is past.

Vol. I pr'ythee now, my son,
Go to them, with this bonnet in thy hand;
And thus far having stretch'd it, (here be with them)

30 Thy knee bussing the stones, (for in such business
Action is eloquence, and the eyes of the ignorant
More learned than the ears) waving thy head,
With often, thus, correcting thy stout heart,
Now humble as the ripest mulberry,

35 That will not hold the handling: Or, say to them,
Thou art their soldier, and being bred in broils,
Hast not the soft way, which, thou dost confess,
Were fit for thee to use, as they to claim,
In asking their good loves; but thou wilt frame
40 Thyself, forsooth, hereafter theirs, so far
As thou hast power and person.

Men. This but done,
Even as she speaks, why, their hearts were yours:
For they have pardons, being ask'd, as free
45 As words to little purpose.

Vol. Pr'ythee now, [rather
Go, and be rul'd: although, I know, thou hadst
Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulf,
Than flatter him in a bower. Here is Cominius.

50 Enter Cominius.

Com. I have been i' the market-place: and, sir,
'tis fit

You make strong party, or defend yourself
55 By calmness, or by absence; all's in anger.

Men. Only fair speech.

Com. I think, 'twill serve, if he
Can thereto frame his spirit.

Vol. He must, and will:—

60 Pr'ythee, now, say, you will, and go about it.

¹ i. e. I wonder. ² i. e. my rank.
no established rank, or settled authority.

³ i. e. the people. ⁴ i. e. urge. ⁵ i. e. of ⁶ i. e. our common clowns. ⁷ i. e. the want of their loves. ⁸ In this place, not seems to signify not only.

Cor. Must I go shew them my unbarb'd¹ sconce?
Must I,
With my base tongue, give to my noble heart
A lie, that it must bear? Well, I will do't:
Yet were there but this single plot² to lose, [it, 5
This mould of Marcius, they to dust should grind
And throw it against the wind.—To the marketplace:—

You have put me now to such a part, which never
I shall discharge to the life.

Com. Come, come, we'll prompt you.

Vol. I pr'ythee now, sweet son; as thou hast said,

My praises made thee first a soldier, so,
To have my praise for this, perform a part
Thou hast not done before.

Cor. Well, I must do't:—

Away, my disposition, and possess me
Some harlot's spirit! My throat of war be turn'd,
Which quired³ with my drum, into a pipe 20
Small as an eunuch, or the virgin voice
That babies lulls asleep! The smiles of knaves
Tent⁴ in my cheeks; and school-boys' tears take up
The glasses of my sight! A beggar's tongue
Make motion through my lips; and my arm'd 25 knees,

Who bow'd but in my stirrup, bend like his
That hath receiv'd an alms!—I will not do't;
Lest I surcease to honour mine own truth,
And, by my body's action, teach my mind
A most inherent baseness.

Vol. At thy choice then:

To beg of thee, it is my more dishonour,
Than thou of them. Come all to ruin; let Thy mother rather feel thy pride, than fear
Thy dangerous stoutness: for I mock at death
With as big heart as thou. Do as thou list.
Thy valiantness was mine, thou suck'dst it from
But own thy pride thyself. [me;

Cor. Pray, be content;

Mother, I am going to the market-place;
Chide me no more. I'll mountebank their loves, Cog their hearts from them, and come home be-lov'd

Of all the trades in Rome. Look, I am going: 45
Commend me to my wife. I'll return consul;
Or never trust to what my tongue can do
I' the way of flattery, further.

Vol. Do your will. [Exit Volumnia.

Com. Away; the tribunes do attend you: arm 50
yourself

To answer mildly; for they are prepar'd
With accusations, as I hear, more strong
Than are upon you yet.

Cor. The word is mildly:—Pray you, let us go:
Let them accuse me by invention, I
Will answer in mine honour.

Men. Ay, but mildly.

Cor. Well, mildly be it then; mildly.—

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.

The Forum.

Enter Sicinius, and Brutus.

Bru. In this point charge him home, that he affects

Tyrannical power: If he evade us there,
Inforce him with his envy to the people;
And that the spoil, got on the Antiates,
Was ne'er distributed.—What, will he come?

Enter an Ædile.

Æd. He's coming.

Bru. How accompanied?

Æd. With old Menenius, and those senators
That always favour'd him.

Sic. Have you a catalogue
Of all the voices that we have procur'd,
Set down by the poll?

Æd. I have; 'tis ready.

Sic. Have you collected them by tribes?

Æd. I have.

Sic. Assemble presently the people hither;
And when they hear me say, It shall be so,
I' the right and strength o' the commons, be it either
For death, for fine, or banishment, then let them,
If I say fine, cry fine; if death, cry death;
Insisting on the old prerogative
And power i' the truth o' the cause.

Æd. I shall inform them. [to cry,

Bru. And when such time they have begun
Let them not cease, but with a din confus'd
Inforce the present execution
Of what we chance to sentence.

Æd. Very well.

Sic. Make them be strong, and ready for this hint,

When we shall hap to give't them.

Bru. Go about it.— [Exit Ædile.

Put him to choler straight: He hath been us'd
Ever to conquer, and to have his worth⁵
Of contradiction: Being once chaf'd, he cannot
Be rein'd again to temperance; then he speaks
What's in his heart; and that is there, which looks⁶
With us to break his neck.

Enter Coriolanus, Menenius, and Cominius,
with others.

Sic. Well, here he comes.

¹ Mr. Hawkins explains unbarbed by bare, uncovered; and adds, that in the times of chivalry, when a horse was fully armed and accoutered for the encounter, he was said to be barbed; probably from the old word barbe, which Chaucer uses for a veil or covering. Mr. Steevens, however, says, unbarbed sconce is untrimm'd or unshaven head.—To barb a man was to shave him. ² i. e. piece, portion; applied to a piece of earth, and here elegantly transferred to the body, carcass. ³ i. e. which played in concert with my drum. ⁴ To tent is to take up residence. ⁵ i. e. according to Mr. Malone, He has been used to his worth, or (as we should now say) his pennyworth of contradiction; his full quota or proportion. ⁶ To look is to wait or expect.—The sense, I believe, is, What he has in his heart, is waiting there to help us to break his neck.

Men. Calmly, I do beseech you.

Cor. Ay, as an ostler, that for the poorest piece
Will bear the knave by the volume¹.—The honour'd gods

Keep Rome in safety, and the chairs of justice
Supply'd with worthy men! plant love among us!
Throng our large temples with the shews of peace,
And not our streets with war!

1 Sen. Amen, amen!

Men. A noble wish.

Re-enter the Ædile with the Plebeians.

Sic. Draw near, ye people. [say,

Æd. List to your tribunes; audience: Peace, I

Cor. First, hear me speak.

Both Tri. Well, say.—Peace, ho. [sent?

Cor. Shall I be charg'd no further than this pre-
Must all determine here?

Sic. I do demand,

If you submit you to the people's voices,
Allow their officers, and are content
To suffer lawful censure for such faults
As shall be prov'd upon you?

Cor. I am content.

Men. Lo, citizens, he says he is content:
The warlike service he has done, consider; think
Upon the wounds his body bears, which shew
Like graves i' the holy church-yard. [only.

Cor. Scratches with briers, scars to move laughter

Men. Consider further,

That when he speaks not like a citizen,
You find him like a soldier: Do not take
His rougher accents for malicious sounds;
But, as I say, such as become a soldier,
Rather than envy² you.

Com. Well, well, no more.

Cor. What's the matter,
That being past for consul with full voice,
I am so dishonour'd, that the very hour
You take it off again?

Sic. Answer to us.

Cor. Say then: 'tis true, I ought so. [take

Sic. We charge you, that you have contriv'd to
From Rome all season'd³ office, and to wind
Yourself into a power tyrannical;
For which, you are a traitor to the people.

Cor. How! Traitor?

Men. Nay; temperately: Your promise.

Cor. The fires i' the lowest hell fold in the people!
Call me their traitor!—Thou injurious tribune!
Within thine eyes sat twenty thousand deaths,
In thine hands clutch'd as many millions, in Thy lying tongue both numbers; I would say,
Thou liest, unto thee, with a voice as free
As I do pray the gods.

Sic. Mark you this, people?

All. To the rock with him! to the rock with him!

Sic. Peace.

We need not lay new matter to his charge:

What you have seen him do, and heard him speak,
Beating your officers, cursing yourselves,
Opposing laws with strokes, and here defying
Those whose great power must try him; even this,
So criminal, and in such capital kind,
Deserves the extremest death.

Bru. But since he hath Serv'd well for Rome,—

Cor. What do you prate of service?

Bru. I talk of that, that know it.

Cor. You? [mother?

Men. Is this the promise that you made your

Com. Know, I pray you—

Cor. I'll know no further:

15 Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,
Vagabond exile, flaying: Pent to linger
But with a grain a day, I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word;
Nor check my courage for what they can give,
20 To have't with saying, Good morrow.

Sic. For that he has

(As much as in him lies) from time to time
Envy'd⁴ against the people, seeking means
To pluck away their power; as⁵ now at last
Given hostile strokes, and that not⁶ in the presence
Of dreaded justice; but on the ministers
That do distribute it; In the name o' the people,
And in the power of us the tribunes, we,
Even from this instant, banish him our city;
30 In peril of precipitation
From off the rock Tarpeian, never more
To enter our Rome gates: I' the people's name,
I say, it shall be so.

All. It shall be so, it shall be so; let him away:
35 He's banish'd, and it shall be so. [friends;—

Com. Hear me, my masters, and my common

Sic. He's sentenc'd: no more hearing.

Com. Let me speak:

I have been consul, and can shew from Rome,
40 Her enemies' marks upon me. I do love
My country's good, with a respect more tender,
More holy, and profound, than mine own life,
My dear wife's estimate⁷; her womb's increase,
And treasure of my loins: then if I would 45 Speak that—

Sic. We know your drift: Speak what?

Bru. There's no more to be said, but he is banish'd
As enemy to the people, and his country:
It shall be so.

50 All. It shall be so, it shall be so. [hate

Cor. You common cry of curs! whose breath I
As reek o' the rotten fens, whose loves I prize
As the dead carcasses of unburied men
That do corrupt my air, I banish you;

55 And here remain with your uncertainty!

Let every feeble rumour shake your hearts!

Your enemies, with nodding of their plumes,

Fan you into despair! have the power still

¹ i. e. would bear being called a knave as often as would fill out a volume. ² Envy is here taken at large for malignity, or ill intention. ³ i. e. all office established and settled by time. ⁴ i. e. behaved with signs of hatred to the people. ⁵ As, in this instance, would seem to have the power of as well as. ⁶ Not stands again for not only. ⁷ i. e. I love my country beyond the rate at which I value my dear wife.

To banish your defenders: 'till, at length,
Your ignorance (which finds not 'till it feels;
Making but reservation of yourselves,
Still your own foes) deliver you, as most Abated captives¹, to some nation
That won you without blows! Despising,
For you, the city, thus I turn my back:
There is a world elsewhere.

[Exeunt Coriolanus, Cominius, and others.
The people shout, and throw up their caps. 10]

Æd. The people's enemy is gone, is gone!

All. Our enemy is banish'd! he is gone! Hoo!
hoo!

Sic. Go, see him out at gates, and follow him,
5 As he hath follow'd you, with all despight;
Give him deserv'd vexation. Let a guard
Attend us through the city. [come:—

All. Come, come, let us see him out at gates;
The gods preserve our noble tribunes!—Come.
[Exeunt.

A C T IV.

S C E N E I.

Before the Gates of Rome.

Enter Coriolanus, Volumnia, Virgilia, Menenius, Cominius, with the young Nobility of Rome.

Cor. COME, leave your tears: a brief farewell!
—the beast

With many heads butts me away.—Nay, mother, 25
Where is your ancient courage? You were us'd
To say, extremity was the trier of spirits;
That common chances common men could bear:
That, when the sea was calm, all boats alike
Shew'd mastership in floating: fortune's blows,
When most struck home, being gentle wounded,
craves

A noble cunning²: you were us'd to load me
With precepts, that would make invincible
The heart that conn'd them.

Vir. O heavens! O heavens!

Cor. Nay, I pr'ythee, woman,—— [Rome,

Vol. Now the red pestilence strike all trades in
And occupations perish!

Cor. What, what, what!

I shall be lov'd, when I am lack'd. Nay, mother,
Resume that spirit, when you were wont to say,
If you had been the wife of Hercules,
Six of his labours you'd have done, and sav'd
Your husband so much sweat.—Cominius, 45
Droop not; adieu!—Farewell, my wife! my mother!
I'll do well yet.—Thou old and true Menenius,
Thy tears are salter than a younger man's, [ral,
And venomous to thine eyes.—My sometime gene-
I have seen thee stern, and thou hast oft beheld 50
Heart-hard'ning spectacles; tell these sad women,
'Tis fond³ to wail inevitable strokes, [well,
As 'tis to laugh at them.—My mother, you wot
My hazards still have been your solace: and Believe 't not lightly, (though I go alone,
Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen [sor
Makes fear'd, and talk'd of more than seen) you
Will, or exceed the common, or be caught

With cautelous baits and practice⁴.

Vol. My first⁵ son,

20 Whither wilt thou go! Take good Cominius
With thee a while: Determine on some course,
More than a wild exposure to each chance
That starts the way before thee.

Cor. O the gods!

Com. I'll follow thee a month, devise with thee
Where thou shalt rest, that thou may'st hear of us,
And we of thee: so, if the time thrust forth
A cause for thy repeal, we shall not send O'er the vast world, to seek a single man;
30 And lose advantage, which doth ever cool
I' the absence of the needer.

Cor. Fare ye well:—

Thou hast years upon thee; and thou art too full
Of the war's surfeits, to go rove with one
35 That's yet unbruise'd: bring me but out at gate.—
Come, my sweet wife, my dearest mother, and
My friends of noble touch⁶: when I am forth,
Bid me farewell, and smile. I pray you, come.
While I remain above the ground, you shall 40 Hear from me still; and never of me aught
But what is like me formerly.

Men. That's worthily

As any ear can hear.—Come, let's not weep.—
If I could shake off but one seven years
45 From these old arms and legs, by the good gods,
I'd with thee every foot.

Cor. Give me thy hand;—Come. [Exeunt.

S C E N E II.

A Street.

Enter Sicinius, and Brutus, with an Ædile.

Sic. Bid them all home; he's gone, and we'll no further.—

The nobility are vex'd, who, we see, have sided
55 In his behalf.

Bru. Now we have shewn our power,
Let us seem humbler after it is done,
Than when it was a-doing,

¹ Abated is dejected, subdued, depressed in spirits. ² The sense is, When fortune strikes her hardest blows, to be wounded, and yet continue calm, requires a generous policy. He calls this calmness cunning, because it is the effect of reflection and philosophy. ³ i. e. foolish. ⁴ i. e. by artful and false tricks, and treason. ⁵ First, i. e. noblest, and most eminent of men. ⁶ i. e. of true metal unallay'd; a metaphor taken from trying gold on the touchstone.

Sic. Bid them home:

Say, their great enemy is gone, and they Stand in their ancient strength.

Bru. Dismiss them home. [Exit Ædile.

Enter Volumnia, Virgilia, and Menenius.
Here comes his mother.

Sic. Let's not meet her.

Bru. Why?

Sic. They say she's mad.

Bru. They have ta'en note of us:
Keep on your way. [o' the gods

Vol. O, you're well met: The hoarded plague
Requite your love!

Men. Peace, peace; be not so loud. [hear;—

Vol. If that I could for weeping, you should Nay, and you shall hear some.—Will you be gone?
[To Brutus.

Vir. [To Sicin.] You shall stay too: I would,
I had the power
To say so to my husband.

Sic. Are you mankind¹? [fool.—

Vol. Ay, fool; Is that a shame?—Note but this Was not a man my father? Hadst thou foxship²
To banish him that struck more blows for Rome,
Than thou hast spoken words?

Sic. O blessed heavens! [words;

Vol. More noble blows, than ever thou wise
And for Rome's good.—I'll tell thee what;—Yet go;—

Nay, but thou shalt stay too:—I would my son
Were in Arabia, and thy tribe before him,
His good sword in his hand.

Sic. What then?

Vir. What then?

He'd make an end of thy posterity.

Vol. Bastards, and all.—

Good man, the wounds that he does bear for Rome!

Men. Come, come, peace.

Sic. I would he had continu'd to his country,
As he began; and not unknit himself
The noble knot he made.

Bru. I would he had. [rabble:

Vol. I would he had?—'Twas you incens'd the Cats, that can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries which heaven
Will not have earth to know.

Bru. Pray, let us go.

Vol. Now, pray, sir, get you gone:
You have done a brave deed. Ere you go, hear this:
As far as doth the Capitol exceed
The meanest house in Rome; so far, my son,
(This lady's husband here, this, do you see)
Whom you have banish'd, does exceed you all.

Bru. Well, well, we'll leave you.

Sic. Why stay we to be baited
With one that wants her wits?

Vol. Take my prayers with you.—
I would the gods had nothing else to do,
[Exit Tribunes.

But to confirm my curses! Could I meet 'em
But once a-day, it would unclog my heart
Of what lies heavy to 't.

Men. You have told them home, [with me?
And, by my troth, you have cause. You'll sup

Vol. Anger's my meat; I sup upon myself,
And so shall starve with feeding.—Come, let's go:
Leave this faint puling, and lament as I do,
In anger, Juno-like. Come, come, come.

Men. Fie, fie, fie! [Exit.

SCENE III.

Between Rome and Antium.

Enter a Roman, and a Volce.

Rom. I know you well, sir, and you know me:
your name, I think, is Adrian.

Vol. It is so, sir: truly, I have forgot you.

Rom. I am a Roman; and my services are, as you are, against 'em: Know you me yet?

Vol. Nicanor? No.

Rom. The same, sir.

Vol. You had more beard, when I last saw you;
but your favour is well appear'd by your tongue.
What's the news in Rome? I have a note from the Volcian state, to find you out there: You have well saved me a day's journey.

Rom. There hath been in Rome strange insurrection: the people against the senators, patricians, and nobles.

Vol. Hath been! Is it ended then? Our state thinks not so; they are in a most warlike preparation, and hope to come upon them in the heat of their division.

Rom. The main blaze of it is past, but a small thing would make it flame again. For the nobles receive so to heart the banishment of that worthy Coriolanus, that they are in a ripe aptness, to take all power from the people, and to pluck from them their tribunes for ever. This lies glowing, I can tell you, and is almost mature for the violent breaking out.

Vol. Coriolanus banish'd?

Rom. Banish'd, sir.

Vol. You will be welcome with this intelligence, Nicanor.

Rom. The day serves well for them now. I have heard it said, The fittest time to corrupt a man's wife, is when she's fallen out with her husband. Your noble Tullus Aufidius will appear well in these wars, his great opposer Coriolanus being now in no request of his country.

Vol. He cannot choose. I am most fortunate, thus accidentally to encounter you: You have ended my business, and I will merrily accompany you home.

Rom. I shall, between this and supper, tell you more strange things from Rome; all tending to the good of their adversaries. Have you an army ready, say you?

¹ Dr. Johnson here remarks, that the word mankind is used maliciously by the first speaker, and taken perversely by the second. A mankind woman is a woman with the roughness of a man, and, in an aggravated sense, a woman ferocious, violent, and eager to shed blood. In this sense Sicinius asks Volumnia, if she be mankind. She takes mankind for a human creature, and accordingly cries out; "Note but this fool.—Was not a man my father?" ² i. e. cunning enough.

Vol. A most royal one: the centurions, and their charges, distinctly billeted, already in the entertainment¹, and to be on foot at an hour's warning.

Rom. I am joyful to hear of their readiness, and am the man, I think, that shall set them in present action. So, sir, heartily well met, and most glad of your company.

Vol. You take my part from me, sir; I have the most cause to be glad of yours.

Rom. Well, let us go together. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.

Antium.

Before Aufidius's House.

Enter Coriolanus, in mean apparel, disguis'd and muffled.

Cor. A goodly city is this Antium: City, 'Tis I that made thy widows; many an heir Of these fair edifices for my wars Have I heard groan, and drop: then know me not; Lest that thywives with spits, and boys with stones,

Enter a Citizen.

In puny battle slay me.—Save you, sir.

Cit. And you.

Cor. Direct me, if it be your will, Where great Aufidius lies: Is he in Antium?

Cit. He is, and feasts the nobles of the state At his house this night.

Cor. Which is his house, 'beseech you?

Cit. This, here, before you.

Cor. Thank you, sir; farewell. [Exit Citizen.] O, world, thy slippery turns! Friends now fast sworn,

Whose double bosoms seem to wear one heart,
Whose hours, whose bed, whose meal, and exercise,
Are still together, who twin, as 'twere, in love
Inseparable, shall within this hour,
On a dissention of a doit, break out
To bitterest enmity: So, fellest foes, [sleep
Whose passions and whose plots have broke their
To take the one the other, by some chance,
Some trick notworth an egg, shall grow dear friends,
And interjoin their issues. So with me:
My birth-place hate I, and my love's upon
This enemy town.—I'll enter: if he slay me,
He does fair justice; if he give me way,
I'll do his country service. [Exit.]

SCENE V.

A Hall in Aufidius's House.

Music plays. Enter a Serving-man.

1 Serv. Wine, wine, wine! What service is here! I think our fellows are asleep. [Exit.]

Enter another Serving-man.

2 Ser. Where's Cotus? my master calls for him. Cotus! [Exit.]

Enter Coriolanus.

Cor. A goodly house: The feast smells well: but I Appear not like a guest.

Re-enter the first Serving-man.

1 Serv. What would you have, friend? Whence are you? Here's no place for you: Pray go to the door. [Exit.]

Cor. I have deserv'd no better entertainment, In being Coriolanus.

Re-enter second Servant.

2 Serv. Whence are you, sir? Has the porter his eyes in his head, that he gives entrance to such companions²? Pray, get you out.

Cor. Away!

2 Serv. Away? Get you away.

Cor. Now thou art troublesome.

2 Serv. Are you so brave? I'll have you talk'd with anon.

Enter a third Servant. The first meets him.

3 Serv. What fellow's this?

1 Serv. A strange one as ever I look'd on: I cannot get him out o' the house: Pr'ythee, call my master to him.

3 Serv. What have you to do here, fellow? Pray you, avoid the house. [hearth.

Cor. Let me but stand; I will not hurt your

3 Serv. What are you?

Cor. A gentleman.

3 Serv. A marvellous poor one.

Cor. True, so I am.

3 Serv. Pray you, poor gentleman, take up some other station: here's no place for you; pray you, avoid: come.

Cor. Follow your function, go, And batten on cold bits. [Pushes him away.]

3 Serv. What, will you not? Pr'ythee, tell my master what a strange guest he has here.

2 Serv. And I shall. [Exit.]

3 Serv. Where dwell'st thou?

Cor. Under the canopy.

3 Serv. Under the canopy?

Cor. Ay.

3 Serv. Where's that?

Cor. I' the city of kites and crows.

3 Serv. I' the city of kites and crows?—What an ass it is!—Then thou dwell'st with daws too?

Cor. No, I serve not thy master. [ter?

3 Serv. How, sir! Do you meddle with my mas-

Cor. Ay; 'tis an honest service, than to meddle with thy mistress:

Thou prat'st, and prat'st; serve with thy trencher, hence! [Beats him away.]

Enter Aufidius, with the second Serving-man.

Auf. Where is this fellow?

2 Serv. Here, sir; I'd have beaten him like a dog, but for disturbing the lords within.

Auf. Whence comest thou? what wouldest thou? Thy name?

Whyspeak'st not? Speak, man: What's thy name?

Cor. If, Tullus,

Not yet thou know'st me, and seeing me, dost not Think me for the man I am, necessity

Commands me name myself.

¹ That is, though not actually encamped, yet already in pay.—To entertain an army is to take them into pay. ² Companion was formerly used in the same sense as we now use the word fellow.

Auf. What is thy name?

Cor. A name unmusical to the Volces' ears,
And harsh in sound to thine.

Auf. Say, what's thy name?

Thou hast a grim appearance, and thy face
Bears a command in't: though thy tackle's torn,
Thou shew'st a noble vessel: What's thy name?

Cor. Prepare thy brow to frown: Know'st thou

Auf. I know thee not:—Thy name? [me yet?

Cor. My name is Caius Marcius, who hath done
To thee particularly, and to all the Volces,
Great hurt and mischief; thereto witness may
My surname, Coriolanus: The painful service,
The extreme dangers, and the drops of blood
Shed for my thankless country, are requited
But with that surname; a good memory¹,
And witness of the malice and displeasure [mains:
Which thou shouldst bear me, only that name re-
The cruelty and envy of the people,
Permitted by our dastard nobles, who
Have all forsook me, hath devour'd the rest;
And suffer'd me by the voice of slaves to be Whoop'd out Rome. Now, this extremity
Hath brought me to thy hearth: Not out of hope, Mistake me not, to save my life; for if
I had fear'd death, of all the men i' the world
I would have voided thee: but in mere spite,
To be full quit of those my banishers,
Stand I before thee here. Then if thou hast
A heart of wreak² in thee, that wilt revenge
Thine own particular wrongs, and stop those maims
Of shame³ seen through thy country, speed thee
straight,

And make my misery serve thy turn; so use it,
That my revengeful services may prove
As benefits to thee; for I will fight
Against my canker'd country with the spleen
Of all the under fiends. But if so be [tunes
Thou dar'st not this, and that to prove more for-
Thou art tir'd, then, in a word, I also am
Longer to live most weary, and present
My throat to thee, and to thy ancient malice:
Which not to cut would shew thee but a fool;
Since I have ever follow'd thee with hate,
Drawn tuns of blood out of thy country's breast,
And cannot live but to thy shame, unless
It be to do thee service.

Auf. O Marcius, Marcius, [heart
Each word thou hast spoke hath weeded from my
A root of ancient envy. If Jupiter [say,
Should from yon cloud speak divine things, and
'Tis true; I'd not believe them more than thee,
All-noble Marcius.—Let me twine
Mine arms about that body, where against
My grained ash an hundred times hath broke,
And scarr'd the moon with splinters! Here I clip
The anvil of my sword; and do contest
As hotly and as nobly with thy love,
As ever in ambitious strength I did
Contend against thy valour. Know thou first,
I lov'd the maid I marry'd; never man

Sigh'd truer breath; but that I see thee here,
Thou noble thing! more dances my rapt heart,
Than when I first my wedded mistress saw Bestride my threshold. Why, thou Mars! I tell
thee,

5 We have a power on foot; and I had purpose
Once more to hew thy target from thy brawn,
Or lose mine arm for't: Thou hast beat me out
Twelve several times, and I have nightly since Dreamt of encounters 'twixt thyself and me;
10 We have been down together in my sleep,
Unbuckling helms, fisting each other's throat,
And wak'd half dead with nothing. Worthy
Marcius,

15 Had we no quarrel else to Rome, but that Thou art thence banish'd, we would muster all
From twelve to seventy; and, pouring war
Into the bowels of ungrateful Rome,
Like a bold flood o'er-beat. O, come, go in,
20 And take our friendly senators by the hands;
Who now are here, taking their leaves of me,
Who am prepar'd against your territories,
Though not for Rome itself.

Cor. You bless me, gods! [have

25 Auf. Therefore, most absolute sir, if thou wilt
The leading of thine own revenges, take
The one half of my commission, and set down,—
As best thou art experienc'd, since thou know'st
Thy country's strength and weakness,—thine own ways:

30 Whether to knock against the gates of Rome,
Or rudely visit them in parts remote,
To fright them, ere destroy. But come in:
Let me commend thee first to those, that shall 35 Say, yea, to thy desires. A thousand welcomes!
And more a friend than e'er an enemy;
Yet, Marcius, that was much. Your hand: Most welcome! [Exeunt.

1 Serv. Here's a strange alteration!

40 2 Serv. By my hand, I had thought to have struck him with a cudgel; and yet my mind gave me, his clothes made a false report of him.

1 Serv. What an arm he has! He turn'd me about with his finger and his thumb, as one would 45 set up a top.

2 Serv. Nay, I knew by his face that there was something in him: He had, sir, a kind of face, methought,—I cannot tell how to term it.

1 Serv. He had so; looking, as it were,— 50 Would I were hang'd, but I thought there was more in him than I could think.

2 Serv. So did I, I'll be sworn: He is simply the rarest man i' the world.

1 Serv. I think he is: but a greater soldier
55 than he, you wot one.

2 Serv. Who?—my master?

1 Serv. Nay, it's no matter for that.

2 Serv. Worth six of him.

1 Serv. Nay, not so neither: but I take him to 60 be the greater soldier.

2 Serv. Faith, look you, one cannot tell how

¹ Memory for memorial,
territory,

² i. e. resentment or revenge.

³ i. e. disgraceful diminutions of to say that: for the defence of a town, our general is excellent.

1 Serv. Ay, and for an assault too.

Enter a third Servant.

3 Serv. O, slaves, I can tell you news; news, you rascals.

Both. What, what, what? let's partake.

3 Serv. I would not be a Roman, of all nations, I had as lieve be a condemn'd man.

Both. Wherefore? wherefore?

3 Serv. Why, here's he that was wont to thwack our general; Caius Marcius.

1 Serv. Why do you say, thwack our general?

3 Serv. I do not say, thwack our general; but he was always good enough for him.

2 Serv. Come, we are fellows, and friends: he was ever too hard for him; I have heard him say so himself.

1 Serv. He was too hard for him directly, to say the truth on't: before Corioli, he scotch'd him and notch'd him like a carbonado.

2 Serv. An he had been cannibally given, he might have broil'd and eaten him too.

1 Serv. But, more of thy news?

3 Serv. Why, he is so made on here within, as if he were son and heir to Mars: set at upper end o' the table: no question ask'd him by any of the senators, but they stand bald before him: Our general himself makes a mistress of him; sanctifies himself with 's hand¹, and turns up the white o' the eye to his discourse. But the bottom of the news is, our general is cut i' the middle, and but one half of what he was yesterday: for the other has half, by the intreaty and grant of the whole table. He will go, he says, and sowle² the porter of Rome gates by the ears: He will mow down all before him, and leave his passage poll'd³.

2 Serv. And he's as like to do't, as any man I can imagine.

3 Serv. Do't? he will do't: For, look you, sir, he has as many friends as enemies; which friends, sir, (as it were) durst not (look you, sir,) shew themselves (as we term it) his friends, whilst he's in directitude.

1 Serv. Directitude! What's that?

3 Serv. But when they shall see, sir, his crest up again, and the man in blood, they will out of their burrows, like conies after rain, and revel all with him.

1 Serv. But when goes this forward?

3 Serv. To-morrow; to-day; presently. You shall have the drum struck up this afternoon: 'tis, as it were, a parcel of their feast, and to be executed ere they wipe their lips.

2 Serv. Why, then we shall have a stirring world again. This peace is nothing, but to rust iron, increase tailors, and breed ballad-makers.

1 Serv. Let me have war, say I; it exceeds peace, as far as day does night; it's sprightly, waking, audible, and full of vent⁴. Peace is a very apoplexy, lethargy; mull'd⁵, deaf, sleepy, insensible; a getter of more bastard children, than war's a destroyer of men.

2 Serv. 'Tis so; and as war, in some sort, may be said to be a ravisher; so it cannot be denied, but peace is a great maker of cuckolds.

1 Serv. Ay, and it makes men hate one another.

3 Serv. Reason; because they then less need one another. The wars, for my money. I hope to see Romans as cheap as Volces.—They are rising, they are rising.

All. In, in, in, in.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.

A public Place in Rome.

Enter Sicinius, and Brutus.

Sic. We hear not of him, neither need we fear him;

His remedies are tame⁶ in the present peace And quietness o' the people, which before Were in wild hurry. Here do we make his friends Blush, that the world goes well; who rather had, Though they themselves did suffer by't, behold Dissentious numbers pestering streets, than see Our tradesmen singing in their shops, and going About their functions friendly.

Enter Menenius.

Bru. We stood to't in good time. Is this Menenius?

Sic. 'Tis he, 'tis he: O, he is grown most kind Of late.—Hail, sir!

Men. Hail to you both!

Sic. Your Coriolanus is not much miss'd, But with his friends: the common-wealth doth stand;

And so would do, were he more angry at it.

Men. All's well; and might have been much He could have temporiz'd. [better, if

Sic. Where is he, hear you? [wife

Men. Nay, I hear nothing; his mother and his Hear nothing from him.

Enter three or four Citizens.

All. The gods preserve you both!

Sic. Good-e'en, our neighbours.

Bru. Good-e'en to you all, good-e'en to you all!

1 Cit. Ourselves, our wives, and children, on Are bound to pray for you both. [our knees,

Sic. Live, and thrive! [riolanus

Bru. Farewell, kind neighbours: We wish'd Co- Had lov'd you as we did.

All. Now the gods keep you!

Both Tri. Farewell, farewell.

[Exeunt Citizens.]

¹ Alluding, improperly, to the act of crossing upon any strange event. ² That is, drag him down by the ears into the dirt.—The word is derived from sow, i. e. to take hold of a person by the ears, as a dog seizes one of these animals. ³ That is, bared, cleared. ⁴ i. e. full of rumour, full of materials for discourse. ⁵ i. e. soften'd and dispirited, as wine is when burnt and sweeten'd. ⁶ i. e. ineffectual in times of peace like these.

Sic. This is a happier and more comely time,
Than when these fellows ran about the streets,
Crying, Confusion.

Bru. Caius Marcius was
A worthy officer i' the war; but insolent,
O'ercome with pride, ambitious past all thinking,
Self-loving,—

Sic. And affecting one sole throne,
Without assistance¹.

Men. I think not so.

Sic. We had by this, to all our lamentation,
If he had gone forth consul, found it so.

Bru. The gods have well prevented it, and Rome
Sits safe and still without him.

Enter Ædile.

Ædile. Worthy tribunes,
There is a slave, whom we have put in prison,
Reports,—the Volces with two several powers
Are enter'd in the Roman territories;
And with the deepest malice of the war
Destroy what lies before 'em.

Men. 'Tis Aufidius,
Who, hearing of our Marcius' banishment,
Thrusts forth his horns again into the world;
Which were in-shell'd, when Marcius stood for
And durst not once peep out. [Rome,

Sic. Come, what talk you of Marcius? [be,

Bru. Go, see this rumourer whipp'd.—It cannot
The Volces dare break with us.

Men. Cannot be!

We have record, that very well it can;
And three examples of the like have been Within my age. But reason² with the fellow,
Before you punish him, where he heard this;
Lest you shall chance to whip your information,
And beat the messenger who bids beware
Of what is to be dreaded.

Sic. Tell not me:

I know, this cannot be.

Bru. Not possible.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. The nobles, in great earnestness, are going
All to the senate-house; some news is come,
That turns their countenances.

Sic. 'Tis this slave:—

Go whip him 'fore the people's eyes:—his raising!
Nothing but his report!

Mes. Yes, worthy sir,
The slave's report is seconded; and more,
More fearful, is deliver'd.

Sic. What more fearful?

Mes. It is spoke freely out of many mouths,
(How probable, I do not know) that Marcius,
Join'd with Aufidius, leads a power 'gainst Rome;
And vows revenge as spacious, as between

The young'st and oldest thing.

Sic. This is most likely!

Bru. Rais'd only, that the weaker sort may wish Good Marcius home again.

Sic. The very trick on't.

Men. This is unlikely:

He and Aufidius can no more atone³,
Than violentest contrariety.

Enter another Messenger.

Mes. You are sent for to the senate:
A fearful army, led by Caius Marcius,
Associated with Aufidius, rages
Upon our territories; and have already O'er-borne their way, consum'd with fire, and took What lay before them.

Enter Cominius.

Com. O, you have made good work!

Men. What news? what news? [ters, and

Com. You have help to ravish your own daugh-
To melt the city leads upon your pates;
To see your wives dishonour'd to your noses;—

Men. What's the news? what's the news?

Com. Your temples burned in their cement; and Your franchises, whereon you stood, confin'd
Into an augre's bore.

Men. Pray now, the news?— [news?

You have made fair work, I fear me:—Pray, your
If Marcius should be joined with the Volces,—

Com. If!

He is their god; he leads them like a thing
Made by some other deity than nature,
That shapes man better: and they follow him,
Against us brats, with no less confidence,
Than boys pursuing summer butter-flies,
Or butchers killing flies.

Men. You have made good work,
You, and your apron-men; you that stood so much Upon the voice of occupation⁴, and
The breath of garlick-eaters⁵!

Com. He'll shake your Rome about your ears.

Men. As Hercules did shake down mellow
You have made fair work! [fruit⁶.

Bru. But is this true, sir?

Com. Ay; and you'll look pale
Before you find it other. All the regions
Do smilingly⁷ revolt; and, who resist,
Are mock'd for valiant ignorance, [him?
And perish constant fools. Who is't can blame
Your enemies, and his, find something in him.

Men. We are all undone, unless
The noble man have mercy.

Com. Who shall ask it?

The tribunes cannot do't for shame; the people
Deserve such pity of him, as the wolf
Does of the shepherds: for his best friends, if they Should say, Be good to Rome, they charg'd him even ¹ That is, without assessors; without any other suffrage. ² i. e. talk. ³ Dr. Johnson remarks, that to atone, in the active sense, is to reconcile, and is so used by our author. To atone here is, in the neutral sense, to come to reconciliation. To atone is to unite. ⁴ Occupation is here used for mechanicks, men occupied in daily business. ⁵ To smell of garlick was once such a brand of vulgarity, that garlick was a food forbidden to an ancient order of Spanish knights, mentioned by Guevara. It appears also, that garlick was once much used in England, and afterwards as much out of fashion. Hence, perhaps, the cant denomination Pil-garlick for a deserted fellow, a person left to suffer without friends to assist him. ⁶ Alluding to the apples of the Hesperides. ⁷ To re-volt smilingly, is to revolt with signs of pleasure, or with marks of contempt.

As those should do that had deserv'd his hate,
And therein shew'd like enemies.

Men. 'Tis true:

If he were putting to my house the brand
That should consume it, I have not the face [hands, 5
To say, 'Beseech you, cease.—You have made fair
You, and your crafts! you have crafted fair!

Com. You have brought
A trembling upon Rome, such as was never
So incapable of help.

Tri. Say not, we brought it. [like beasts,

Men. How! Was it we? We lov'd him; but,
And cowardly nobles, gave way to your clusters,
Who did hoot him out o' the city.

Com. But, I fear,
They'll roar him in again¹. Tullus Aufidius,
The second name of men, obeys his points
As if he were his officer:—desperation
Is all the policy, strength, and defence,
That Rome can make against them.

Enter a Troop of Citizens.

Men. Here come the clusters.—
And is Aufidius with him?—You are they
That made the air unwholesome, when you cast
Your stinking, greasy caps, in hooting at Coriolanus' exile. Now he's coming;
And not a hair upon a soldier's head,
Which will not prove a whip; as many coxcombs,
As you threw caps up, will he tumble down,
And pay you for your voices. 'Tis no matter;
If he could burn us all into one coal,
We have deserv'd it.

Omnes. 'Faith, we hear fearful news.

1 Cit. For mine own part,
When I said, banish him, I said, 'twas pity.

2 Cit. And so did I.

3 Cit. And so did I; and, to say the truth, so did very many of us: That we did, we did for the best; and though we willingly consented to his banishment, yet it was against our will.

Com. You are goodly things, you voices!

Men. You have made you [Capitol?
Good work, you and your cry!—Shall us to the

Com. O, ay; what else? [Exe. Com. and Men.

Sic. Go, masters, get you home, be not dismay'd; 45
These are a side, that would be glad to have
This true, which they so seem to fear. Go home,
And shew no sign of fear.

1 Cit. The gods be good to us! Come, masters, let's home. I ever said, we were i' the wrong, 50
when we banish'd him.

2 Cit. So did we all. But come, let's home.

[Exeunt Citizens.

Bru. I do not like this news.

Sic. Nor I. [wealth 55

Bru. Let's to the Capitol:—'Would, half my
Would buy this for a lie!

Sic. Pray, let us go. [Exeunt Tribunes.

SCENE VII.

A Camp; at a small distance from Rome.

Enter Aufidius, with his Lieutenant.

Auf. Do they still fly to the Roman?

Lieut. I do not know what witchcraft's in him;
but

Your soldiers use him as the grace 'fore meat,
Their talk at table, and their thanks at end;
And you are darken'd in this action, sir,
Even by your own.

Auf. I cannot help it now;

Unless by using means, I lame the foot
Of our design. He bears himself more proudly
Even to my person, than I thought he would,
When first I did embrace him: yet his nature
In that's no changeling; and I must excuse
What cannot be amended.

Lieut. Yet I wish, sir,

15 (I mean, for your particular) you had not Join'd in commission with him; but either borne
The action of yourself, or else to him
Had left it solely.

Auf. I understand thee well; and be thou sure,
20 When he shall come to his account, he knows not What I can urge against him. Although it seems,
And so he thinks, and is no less apparent

To the vulgar eye, that he bears all things fairly,
And shews good husbandry for the Volcian state;
25 Fights dragon-like, and does atchieve as soon
As draw his sword: yet he hath left undone

That, which shall break his neck, or hazard mine,
Whene'er we come to our account. [Rome?

Lieut. Sir, I beseech you, think you he'll carry

30 Auf. All places yield to him ere he sits down;
And the nobility of Rome are his:

The senators, and patricians, love him too:
The tribunes are no soldiers; and their people
Will be as rash in the repeal, as hasty

35 To expel him thence. I think, he'll be to Rome
As is the osprey² to the fish, who takes it

By sovereignty of nature. First he was
A noble servant to them; but he could not Carry his honours even: whether 'twas pride,

40 Which out of daily fortune ever taints
The happy man; whether defect of judgement,
To fail in the disposing of those chances

Which he was lord of; or whether nature,
Not to be other than one thing, not moving

45 From the casque to the cushion, but commanding
peace

Even with the same austerity and garb
As he controll'd the war: but, one of these,

(As he hath spices of them all, not all,
For I dare so far free him) made him fear'd,

So hated, and so banish'd: but he has a merit,
To choak it in the utterance. So our virtues

Lie in the interpretation of the time:
And power, unto itself most commendable,

55 Hath not a tomb so evident as a chair
To extol what it hath done³.

One fire drives out one fire; one nail, one nail;
Right's by right fouler⁴, strengths by strength do fail.

60 Come, let's away. When, Caius, Rome is thine,
Thou art poor'st of all; then shortly art thou mine.

[Exeunt.

¹ i. e. As they hooted at his departure, they will roar at his return; as he went out with scoffs, he will come back with lamentations. ² A kind of eagle. ³ The sense is, The virtue which delights to commend itself, will find the surest tomb in that chair wherein it holds forth its own commendations.

⁴ i. e. What is already right, and received as such, becomes less clear when supported by super-numerary proofs.

A public Place in Rome.Enter Menenius, Cominius, Sicinius, and Brutus, with others.Men. NO, I'll not go: you hear, what he hath said,

Which was sometime his general; who lov'd him In a most dear particular. He call'd me father: But what o' that? Go, you that banish'd him, A mile before his tent fall down, and knee The way into his mercy: nay, if he coy'd To hear Cominius speak, I'll keep at home.

Com. He would not seem to know me.Men. Do you hear?Com. Yet one time he did call me by my name: I urg'd our old acquaintance, and the drops That we have bled together. Coriolanus He would not answer to: forbad all names; He was a kind of nothing, titleless, 'Till he had forg'd himself a name i' the fire Of burning Rome.Men. Why, so; you have made good work: A pair of tribunes, that have rack'd¹ for Rome, To make coals cheap: a noble memory²!Com. I minded him, how royal 'twas to pardon When least it was expected: he replied, It was a bare³ petition of a state, To one whom they had punish'd.Men. Very well: Could he say less?Com. I offer'd to awaken his regard For his private friends: his answer to me was, He could not stay to pick them in a pile Of noisome, musty chaff: he said, 'twas folly, For one poor grain or two, to leave unburnt, And still to nose the offence.Men. For one poor grain or two? I am one of those; his mother, wife, his child, And this brave fellow too, we are the grains: You are the musty chaff; and you are smelt Above the moon: We must be burnt for you. [aid]Sic. Nay, pray, be patient: If you refuse your In this so never-needed help, yet do not Upbraid us with our distress. But sure, if you Would be your country's pleader, your good tongue, More than the instant army we can make, Might stop our countrymen.Men. No; I'll not meddle.Sic. Pray you, go to him.Men. What should I do?Bru. Only make trial what your love can do For Rome, towards Marcius.Men. Well, and say that Marcius

But as a discontented friend, grief-shot With his unkindness? Say't be so?

5 Sic. Yet your good will [sure Must have that thanks from Rome, after the mea- As you intended well.Men. I'll undertake it:

I think he'll hear me. Yet to bite his lip,

10 And hum at good Cominius, much unhearts me.

He was not taken well; he had not din'd:

The veins unfill'd, our blood is cold, and then

We pout upon the morning, are unapt

To give or to forgive; but when we have stuff'd

15 These pipes, and these conveyances of our blood

With wine and feeding, we have suppler souls [him

Than in our priest-like fasts: therefore I'll watch

'Till he be dieted to my request,

And then I'll set upon him.

20 Bru. You know the very road into his kindness, And cannot lose your way.Men. Good faith, I'll prove him, Speed how it will. I shall ere long have knowledge Of my success. [Exit.]25 Com. He'll never hear him.Sic. Not?Com. I tell you, he does sit in gold, his eye

Red as 'twould burn Rome: and his injury

The gaoler to his pity. I kneel'd before him:

30 'Twas very faintly he said, Rise; dismiss'd me

Thus, with his speechless hand: What he would do,

He sent in writing after me; what he would not,

Bound with an oath, to yield to his conditions⁴:

So that all hope is vain;

35 Unless his noble mother, and his wife,

Who, as I hear, mean to solicit him

For mercy to his country—Therefore, let's hence,

And with our fair entreaties haste them on.

[Exeunt.]

S C E N E II.

*The Volcian Camp.Enter Menenius to the Watch, or Guard.*1 Watch. Stay: whence are you?2 Watch. Stand, and go back. [your leave,45 Men. You guard like men; 'tis well: But, by

I am an officer of state, and come

To speak with Coriolanus.

1 Watch. From whence?50 Men. From Rome. [our general1 Watch. You may not pass, you must return;

Will no more hear from thence.

2 Watch. You'll see your Rome embrac'd with fire, before

¹ To rack means to harass by exactions.—The meaning is, You that have been such good stewards for the Roman people, as to get their houses burnt over their heads, to save them the expence of coals. ² Memory for memorial. ³ A bare petition means only a mere petition. ⁴ Dr. Johnson is of opinion, that here is a chasm.—The speaker's purpose seems to be this: To yield to his condition is ruin, and better cannot be obtained; so that all hope is vain.

You'll speak with Coriolanus.

Men. Good my friends,
If you have heard your general talk of Rome,
And of his friends there, it is lots¹ to blanks,
My name hath touch'd your ears: it is Menenius.

1 Watch. Be it so; go back: the virtue of your name
Is not here passable.

Men. I tell thee, fellow,
Thy general is my lover: I have been
The book of his good acts, whence men have read
His fame unparallel'd, happily, amplified;
For I have ever verified my friends,
(Of whom he's chief) with all the size that verity
Would without lapsing suffer²: nay, sometimes,
Like to a bowl upon a subtle³ ground,
I have tumbled past the throw; and in his praise
Have, almost, stamp'd the leasing: Therefore,
fellow,
I must have leave to pass.

1 Watch. 'Faith, sir, if you had told as many lies in his behalf, as you have utter'd words in your own, you should not pass here: no, though it were as virtuous to lie, as to live chastely.
Therefore, go back.

Men. Pr'ythee, fellow, remember my name is Menenius, always factionary on the party of your general.

2 Watch. Howsoever you have been his liar,
(as you say, you have) I am one that, telling true under him, must say, you cannot pass.
Therefore, go back.

Men. Has he din'd, canst thou tell? for I would not speak with him 'till after dinner.

1 Watch. You are a Roman, are you?

Men. I am as thy general is.

1 Watch. Then you should hate Rome, as he does. Can you, when you have push'd out of your gates the very defender of them, and, in a violent popular ignorance, given your enemy your shield, think to front his revenges with the easy groans of old women, the virginal palms⁴ of your daughters, or with the palsy'd intercession of such a decay'd dotant as you seem to be? Can you think to blow out the intended fire your city is ready to flame in, with such weak breath as this? No, you are deceiv'd; therefore, back to Rome, and prepare for your execution: you are condemn'd, our general has sworn you out of reprieve and pardon.

Men. Sirrah, if thy captain knew I were here,
he would use me with estimation.

2 Watch. Come, my captain knows you not.

Men. I mean, thy general.

1 Watch. My general cares not for you. Back,

I say, go, lest I let forth your half pint of blood;
—back, that's the utmost of your having:—back.

Men. Nay, but fellow, fellow,—

Enter Coriolanus, with Aufidius.

Cor. What's the matter?

Men. Now, you companion, I'll say an errand for you: you shall know now, that I am in estimation: you shall perceive that a Jack guardant cannot office me from my son Coriolanus: guess, by my entertainment with him, if thou stand'st not the state of hanging, or of some death more long in spectatorship, and crueller in suffering; behold now presently, and swoon for what's to come upon thee. The glorious gods sit in hourly synod about thy particular prosperity, and love thee no worse than thy old father Menenius does! O, my son, my son! thou art preparing fire for us; look thee, here's water to quench it. I was hardly moved to come to thee: but being assur'd, none but myself could move thee, I have been blown out of your gates with sighs; and conjure thee to pardon Rome, and thy petitionary countrymen.
The good gods assuage thy wrath, and turn the dregs of it upon this varlet here; this, who, like a block, hath denied my access to thee.

Cor. Away!

Men. How! away!

Cor. Wife, mother, child, I know not. My affairs
Are servanted to others: Though I owe
My revenge properly, my remission lies
In Volcian breasts⁵. That we have been familiar, Ingrate forgetfulness shall poison, rather Than pity note how much.—Therefore be gone.
Mine ears against your suits are stronger, than
Your gates against my force. Yet, for I lov'd thee,
Take this along; I writ it for thy sake,

[Gives him a letter.

And would have sent it. Another word, Menenius,
I will not hear thee speak.—This man, Aufidius,
Was my belov'd in Rome: yet thou behold'st—

Auf. You keep a constant temper. [Exeunt.

Manent the Guard, and Menenius.

1 Watch. Now, sir, is your name Menenius?

2 Watch. 'Tis a spell, you see, of much power:
You know the way home again.

1 Watch. Do you hear how we are shent⁶ for keeping your greatness back?

2 Watch. What cause, do you think, I have to swoon?

Men. I neither care for the world, nor your general: for such things as you, I can scarce think there's any, you are so slight. He that hath a will to die by himself, fears it not from another. Let your general do his worst. For you, be that you are, long; and your misery increase with your age!

¹ A lot here is a prize. ² Dr. Johnson explains this passage thus: To verify is to establish by testimony. One may say with propriety, he brought false witnesses to verify his title.—Shakspeare considered the word with his usual laxity, as importing rather testimony than truth, and only meant to say, I bore witness to my friends with all the size that verity would suffer. ³ Subtle means smooth, level. ⁴ By virginal palms may be understood the holding up the hands in supplication. ⁵ i. e. Though I have a peculiar right in revenge, in the power of forgiveness the Volcians are conjoined. ⁶ Shent means shamed, disgraced, made ashamed of ourselves.

I say to you, as I was said to, Away! [Exit.]

1 Watch. A noble fellow, I warrant him.

2 Watch. The worthy fellow is our general:
He is the rock, the oak not to be wind-shaken.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.

A Tent.

Enter Coriolanus and Aufidius.

Cor. We will before the walls of Rome to-morrow

Set down our host.—My partner in this action,
You must report to the Volcian lords, how plainly
I have borne this business.

Auf. Only their ends

You have respected; stopp'd your ears against
The general suit of Rome; never admitted
A private whisper, no, not with such friends
That thought them sure of you.

Cor. This last old man,
Whom with a crack'd heart I have sent to Rome,
Lov'd me above the measure of a father;
Nay, godded me, indeed. Their latest refuge
Was to send him: for whose old love, I have (Though I shew'd sourly to him) once more offer'd
The first conditions, which they did refuse,
And cannot now accept, to grace him only,
That thought he could do more; a very little
I have yielded too: Fresh embassies, and suits,
Nor from the state, nor private friends, hereafter
Will I lend ear to.—Ha! What shout is this?

[Shout within.]

Shall I be tempted to infringe my vow
In the same time 'tis made? I will not.—

Enter Virgilia, Volumnia, Valeria, young Marcius, with Attendants, all in mourning.

My wife comes foremost; then the honour'd mold
Wherein this trunk was fram'd, and in her hand
The grandchild to her blood. But, out, affection!
All bond and privilege of nature, break!
Let it be virtuous, to be obstinate.—

What is that curt'sy worth? or those dove's eyes,
Which can make gods forsworn?—I melt, and am not

Of stronger earth than others.—My mother bows;
As if Olympus to a mole-hill should
In supplication nod: and my young boy
Hath an aspect of intercession, which
Great Nature cries, Deny not.—Let the Volces Plough Rome, and harrow Italy; I'll never
Be such a gosling to obey instinct; but stand,
As if a man were author of himself,
And knew no other kin.

Virg. My lord and husband!

Cor. These eyes are not the same I wore in Rome.

Virg. The sorrow, that delivers us thus chang'd,
Makes you think so.

Cor. Like a dull actor now,
I have forgot my part, and I am out,

Even to a full disgrace.—Best of my flesh,
Forgive my tyranny; but do not say,
For that, Forgive our Romans.—O, a kiss
Long as my exile, sweet as my revenge!
5 Now by the jealous queen of heaven², that kiss
I carried from thee, dear; and by my true lip
Hath virgin'd it e'er since.—You gods! I prate,
And the most noble mother of the world
Leave unsaluted: Sink, my knee, i' the earth;

[Kneels.]

10 Of the deep duty more impression shew
Than that of common sons.

Vol. O, stand up blest!

Whilst, with no softer cushion than the flint,

15 I kneel before thee; and improperly
Shew duty, as mistaken all the while [Kneels,
Between the child and parent.

Cor. What is this?

Your knees to me? to your corrected son?

20 Then let the pebbles on the hungry beech
Fillop the stars; then let the mutinous winds
Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fiery sun;
Murd'ring impossibility, to make
What cannot be, slight work.

25 Vol. Thou art my warrior!

I help to frame thee. Do you know this lady?
[Pointing to Valeria.]

Cor. The noble sister of Publicola,
The moon of Rome; chaste as the isicle
That's curdled by the frost from purest snow,
And hangs on Dian's temple: Dear Valeria!

Vol. This is a poor epitome of yours,
[Shewing young Marcius.]

Which by the interpretation of full time
35 May shew like all yourself.

Cor. The god of soldiers,
With the consent of supreme Jove, inform Thy thoughts with nobleness: that thou may'st prove

40 To shame invulnerable, and stick i' the wars
Like a great sea-mark, standing every flaw³,
And saving those that eye thee!

Vol. Your knee, sirrah.

Cor. That's my brave boy.

45 Vol. Even he, your wife, this lady, and myself,
Are suitors to you.

Cor. I beseech you, peace:

Or, if you'd ask, remember this before;

50 The things, I have forsworn to grant, may never
Be held by you denials. Do not bid me
Dismiss my soldiers, or capitulate
Again with Rome's mechanics:—Tell me not Wherein I seem unnatural: Desire not 55 To allay my rages and revenges, with
Your colder reasons.

Vol. Oh, no more, no more!

You have said, you will not grant us any thing;
For we have nothing else to ask, but that 60 Which you deny already: Yet, we will ask;
That, if we fail in our request, the blame

² i. e. Juno.

³ i. e. every gust, every storm.

May hang upon your hardness: therefore hear us.

Cor. Aufidius, and you Volces, mark; for we'll Hear nought from Rome in private.—Your request?

Vol. Should we be silent and not speak, our raiment

And state of bodies would bewray what life
We have led since thy exile. Think with thyself,
How more unfortunate than all living women
Are we come hither: since that thy sight, which should

Make our eyes flow with joy, hearts dance with ¹ Constrains them weep, and shake with fear and sorrow;

Making the mother, wife, and child, to see
The son, the husband, and the father, tearing
His country's bowels out. And to poor we,
Thine enmity's most capital: thou barr'st us
Our prayers to the gods, which is a comfort
That all but we enjoy: For how can we,
Alas! how can we for our country pray,
Whereto we are bound; together with thy victory,
Whereto we are bound? Alack! or we must lose
The country, our dear nurse; or else thy person,
Our comfort in the country. We must find
An evident calamity, though we had
Our wish, which side should win: for either thou Must, as a foreign recreant, be led

With manacles thorough our streets; or else
Triumphantly tread on thy country's ruin;
And bear the palm, for having bravely shed
Thy wife and children's blood. For myself, son,
I purpose not to wait on fortune, 'till
These wars determine: if I cannot persuade thee
Rather to shew a noble grace to both parts,
Than seek the end of one, thou shalt no sooner
March to assault thy country, than to tread
(Trust to 't, thou shalt not) on thy mother's womb,
That brought thee to this world.

Virg. Ay, and mine,
That brought you forth this boy, to keep your name
Living to time.

Boy. He shall not tread on me;
I'll run away 'till I am bigger, but then I'll fight.

Cor. Not of a woman's tenderness to be,
Requires nor child nor woman's face to see.
I have sat too long.

Vol. Nay, go not from us thus.
If it were so, that our request did tend
To save the Romans, thereby to destroy [us,
The Volces whom you serve, you might condemn
As poisonous of your honour: No; our suit
Is, that you reconcile them: while the Volces
May say, "This mercy we have shew'd;" the Romans,

"This we receiv'd;" and each in either side
Give the all-hail to thee, and cry, "Be blest
"For making up this peace!" Thou know'st, great son,

The end of war's uncertain; but this certain,
That, if thou conquer Rome, the benefit

Which thou shalt thereby reap, is such a name,
Whose repetition will be dogg'd with curses;
Whose chronicle thus writ,—"The man was noble,
"But with his last attempt he wip'd it out,

5 "Destroy'd his country, and his name remains
"To the ensuing age, abhorr'd." Speak to me, son:

Thou hast affected the fine strains of honour,
To imitate the graces of the gods;

To tear with thunder the wide cheeks o' the air,
And yet to charge thy sulphur with a bolt

10 That should but rive an oak². Why dost not speak?
Think'st thou it honourable for a noble man
Still to remember wrongs?—Daughter, speak you;

He cares not for your weeping.—Speak thou, boy;

15 Perhaps, thy childishness will move him more Than can our reasons.—There is no man in the world

[prate,
More bound to his mother; yet here he lets me
Like one i' the stocks. Thou hast never in thy

20 Shew'd thy dear mother any courtesy; [life
When she, (poor hen!) fond of no second brood,
Has cluck'd thee to the wars, and safely home,

Loaden with honour. Say, my request's unjust,
And spurn me back: But, if it be not so,

25 Thou art not honest; and the gods will plague thee,
That thou restrain'st from me the duty, which
To a mother's part belongs.—He turns away:

Down, ladies; let us shame him with our knees.
To his surname Coriolanus 'longs more pride,

30 Than pity to our prayers. Down: An end:
This is the last:—So we will home to Rome,
And die among our neighbours. Nay, behold us:

This boy, that cannot tell what he would have,
But kneels, and holds up hands, for fellowship,

35 Does reason⁴ our petition with more strength
Than thou hast to deny 't.—Come, let us go:
This fellow had a Volce to his mother;

His wife is in Corioli, and this child
Like him by chance:—Yet give us our dispatch:

40 I am hush'd until our city be afire,
And then I'll speak a little.

Cor. Mother, mother!—
[Holds her by the hands, silent.

What have you done? Behold, the heavens do ope,
45 The gods look down, and this unnatural scene
They laugh at. O my mother, mother! O!

You have won a happy victory to Rome:
But, for your son,—believe it, O, believe it,

Most dangerously you have with him prevail'd,
If not most mortal to him. But, let it come:—

Aufidius, though I cannot make true wars,
I'll frame convenient peace. Now, good Aufidius,

Were you in my stead, say, would you have heard
A mother less? or granted less, Aufidius?

55 Auf. I was mov'd withal.

Cor. I dare be sworn, you were:
And, sir, it is no little thing, to make

Mine eyes to sweat compassion. But, good sir,
What peace you'll make, advise me: For my part,

60 I'll not to Rome, I'll back with you: and pray you,

¹ That is, constrains the eye to weep, and the heart to shake.

² The meaning is, to threaten much, and yet be merciful.

³ i. e. keeps me in a state of ignominy, talking to no purpose.

⁴ i. e. argue for.

Stand to me in this cause.—O mother! wife!

Auf. I am glad, thou hast set thy mercy and thy honour

At difference in thee: out of that I'll work

Myself a former fortune¹. [Aside. 5

[The Ladies make signs to Coriolanus.

Cor. Ay, by-and-by;

But we will drink together; and you shall bear

[To Volumnia, Virgilia, &c.

A better witness back than words, which we,

On like conditions, will have counter-seal'd.

Come, enter with us. Ladies, you deserve

To have a temple built you: all the swords

In Italy, and her confederate arms,

Could not have made this peace. [Exeunt. 15

S C E N E IV.

The Forum in Rome.

Enter Menenius and Sicinius.

Men. See you yon coign o' the Capitol; yon 20 corner-stone?

Sic. Why, what of that?

Men. If it be possible for you to displace it with 25 your little finger, there is some hope the ladies of Rome, especially his mother, may prevail with him.

But, I say, there is no hope in 't; our throats are sentenc'd, and stay upon execution.

Sic. Is 't possible, that so short a time can alter 30

the condition of a man?

Men. There is difference between a grub, and 30 a butterfly; yet your butterfly was a grub. This

Marcus is grown from man to dragon: he has wings; he's more than a creeping thing.

Sic. He lov'd his mother dearly.

Men. So did he me: and he no more remembers 35 his mother now, than an eight-year old horse².

The tartness of his face sours ripe grapes. When he walks, he moves like an engine, and the ground shrinks before his treading. He is able to pierce

a corslet with his eye; talks like a knell, and his 40

hum is a battery. He sits in his state, as a thing made for Alexander. What he bids be done, is finish'd with his bidding. He wants nothing of a god, but eternity, and a heaven to throne in.

Sic. Yes, mercy, if you report him truly. 45

Men. I paint him in the character. Mark what mercy his mother shall bring from him: There is no more mercy in him, than there is milk in a male tiger; and that shall our poor city find: and all this is 'long of you.

Sic. The gods be good unto us!

Men. No, in such a case the gods will not be good unto us. When we banish'd him, we respected not them: and, he returning to break our necks,

they respect not us.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Sir, if you'd save your life, fly to your house:

The plebeians have got your fellow-tribune,

And hale him up and down; all swearing, if

The Roman ladies bring not comfort home,

They'll give him death by inches.

Enter another Messenger.

Sic. What's the news?

Mes. Good news, good news;—The ladies have prevail'd,

The Volces are dislodg'd, and Marcius gone:

A merrier day did never yet greet Rome,

No, not the expulsion of the Tarquins.

Sic. Friend,

Art thou certain, this is true; is it most certain?

Mes. As certain, as I know the sun is fire:

Where have you lurk'd, that you make doubt of it?

Ne'er through an arch so hurry'd the blown tide,

As the recomfited through the gates. Why,

hark you;

[Trumpets, hautboys, drums beat, all together.

The trumpets, sackbuts, psalteries, and fifes,

Tabors, and cymbals, and the shouting Romans,

Make the sun dance. Hark you! [A shout within.

Men. This is good news:

I will go meet the ladies. This Volumnia

Is worth, of consuls, senators, patricians,

A city full; of tribunes, such as you,

A sea and land full: You have pray'd well to-day;

This morning, for ten thousand of your throats

I'd not have given a doit. Hark, how they joy!

[Sound still, with the shouts.

Sic. First, the gods bless you for your tidings:

Accept my thankfulness. [next,

Mes. Sir, we have all great cause to give great

thanks.

Sic. They are near the city?

Mes. Almost at point to enter.

Sic. We'll meet them, and help the joy. [Exeunt.

Enter two Senators, with the Ladies passing over the stage, &c. &c.

Sen. Behold our patroness, the life of Rome:

Call all your tribes together, praise the gods,

And make triumphant fires; strew flowers before

them:

Unshout the noise that banish'd Marcius,

Repeal him with the welcome of his mother:

Cry,—Welcome, ladies, welcome!—

All. Welcome, ladies, welcome!

[A Flourish with drums and trumpets.

S C E N E V.

A public Place in Antium.

Enter Tullus Aufidius, with Attendants.

Auf. Go tell the lords of the city, I am here:

50 Deliver them this paper: having read it,

Bid them repair to the market-place; where I,

Even in theirs and in the commons' ears,

Will vouch the truth of it. He I accuse,

The city ports by this hath enter'd, and

55 Intends to appear before the people, hoping

To purge himself with words: Dispatch.—Most welcome!

Enter three or four Conspirators of Aufidius' faction.

1 Con. How is it with our general?

Auf. Even so,

60 As with a man by his own alms impoison'd,

¹ I will take advantage of this concession to restore myself to my former credit and power. ² Subintelligitur remembers his dam.

And with his charity slain.

2 Con. Most noble sir,
If you do hold the same intent wherein
You wish'd us parties, we'll deliver you
Of your great danger.

Auf. Sir, I cannot tell;
We must proceed, as we do find the people.

3 Con. The people will remain uncertain, whilst 'Twixt you there's difference; but the fall of either
Makes the survivor heir of all.

Auf. I know it;
And my pretext to strike at him admits
A good construction. I rais'd him, and I pawn'd
Mine honour for his truth: Who being so heighten'd,
He water'd his new plants with dew of flattery,
Seducing so my friends; and, to this end,
He bow'd his nature, never known before
But to be rough, unswayable, and free.

3 Con. Sir, his stoutness,
When he did stand for consul, which he lost
By lack of stooping——

Auf. That I would have spoke of:
Being banish'd for't, he came unto my hearth;
Presented to my knife his throat: I took him;
Made him joint servant with me; gave him way
In all his own desires; nay, let him choose,
Out of my files, his projects to accomplish,
My best and freshest men; serv'd his designments
In mine own person; help to reap the fame,
Which he did end all his; and took some pride
To do myself this wrong; 'till, at the last,
I seem'd his follower, not partner; and
He wag'd¹ me with his countenance, as if I had been mercenary.

1 Con. So he did, my lord:
The army marvel'd at it. And, in the last,
When he had carried Rome; and that we look'd
For no less spoil, than glory,—

Auf. There was it;—
For which my sinews shall be stretch'd upon him².
At a few drops of women's rheum, which are
As cheap as lies, he sold the blood and labour
Of our great action; Therefore shall he die,
And I'll renew me in his fall. But, hark!

[Drums and trumpets sound, with great shouts of the people.]

1 Con. Your native town you enter'd like a post,
And had no welcomes home; but he returns,
Splitting the air with noise.

2 Con. And patient fools,
Whose children he hath slain, their base throats tear,
With giving him glory.

3 Con. Therefore, at your vantage,
Ere he express himself, or move the people
With what he would say, let him feel your sword,³
Which we will second. When he lies along,
After your way his tale pronounc'd shall bury
His reasons with his body.

Auf. Say no more;
Here come the lords.

Enter the Lords of the city.

Lords. You are most welcome home.

5 Auf. I have not deserv'd it.
But, worthy lords, have you with heed perus'd
What I have written to you?

Lords. We have.

1 Lord. And grieve to hear it.
10 What faults he made before the last, I think,
Might have found easy fines: but there to end,
Where he was to begin; and give away
The benefit of our levies, answering us
With our own charge³; making a treaty, where 15 There was a yielding; This admits no excuse.

Auf. He approaches, you shall hear him.
Enter Coriolanus, with drums and colours; the Commons being with him.

Cor. Hail, lords! I am return'd your soldier;
20 No more infected with my country's love,
Than when I parted hence; but still subsisting
Under your great command. You are to know,
That prosperously I have attempted, and
With bloody passage led your wars, even to 25 The gates of Rome. Our spoil, we have brought home,

Doth more than counterpoise, a full third part,
The charges of the action. We have made peace,
With no less honour to the Antiates,
30 Than shame to the Romans: And we here deliver,
Subscribed by the consuls and patricians,
Together with the seal o' the senate, what We have compounded on.

Auf. Read it not, noble lords;
35 But tell the traitor, in the highest degree
He hath abus'd your powers.

Cor. Traitor!—How now?

Auf. Ay, traitor, Marcius.

Cor. Marcius!

40 Auf. Ay, Marcius, Caius Marcius; Dost thou
I'll grace thee with that robbery, thy stol'n name
Coriolanus, in Corioli?—

You lords and heads of the state, perfidiously
He has betray'd your business, and given up,
45 For certain drops of salt, your city Rome
(I say, your city) to his wife and mother:
Breaking his oath and resolution, like
A twist of rotten silk; never admitting
Counsel o' the war; but at his nurse's tears
50 He whin'd and roar'd away your victory;
That pages blush'd at him, and men of heart
Look'd wondering each at other.

Cor. Hear'st thou, Mars?—

Auf. Name not the god, thou boy of tears.—

Cor. Ha!

Auf. No more.

Cor. Measureless liar, thou hast made my heart
Too great for what contains it. Boy! O slave!—

¹ The meaning, according to Dr. Johnson; is, He prescribed to me with an air of authority, and gave me his countenance for my wages; thought me sufficiently rewarded with good looks. ² This is the point on which I will attack him with my utmost abilities. ³ That is, rewarding us with our own expences.

Pardon me, lords, 'tis the first time that ever
I was forc'd to scold. Your judgements, my grave
lords,

Must give this cur the lie: and his own notion (Who wears my stripes imprest upon him; that Must bear my beating to his grave) shall join
To thrust the lie unto him.

1 Lord. Peace, both, and hear me speak.

Cor. Cut me to pieces, Volces, men and lads,
Stain all your edges in me.—Boy! False hound!
If you have writ your annals true, 'tis there,
'That, like an eagle on a dove-cote, I
Flutter'd your Volces in Corioli:
Alone I did it.—Boy!

Auf. Why, noble lords,
Will you be put in mind of his blind fortune,
Which was your shame, by this unholy braggart,
'Fore your own eyes and ears?

All Con. Let him die for't.

All People. Tear him to pieces, do it presently.
[The crowd speak promiscuously.]

He kill'd my son,—My daughter,—He kill'd my cousin Marcus,—

He kill'd my father.—

2 Lord. Peace, ho;—no outrage;—peace.—
The man is noble, and his fame folds in
This orb o' the earth¹: His last offences to us
Shall have judicious hearing.—Stand, Aufidius,
And trouble not the peace.

Cor. O, that I had him,
With six Aufidiuses, or more, his tribe,
To use my lawful sword!

Auf. Insolent villain!

All Con. Kill, kill, kill, kill, kill him.

[Aufidius and the Conspirators draw, and kill]

Marcus, who falls, and Aufidius stands on him.

Lords. Hold, hold, hold, hold.

Auf. My noble masters, hear me speak.

1 Lord. O Tullus,—

2 Lord. Thou hast done a deed, whereat
Valour will weep. [quiet;

3 Lord. Tread not upon him.—Masters all, be Put up your swords.

Auf. My lords, when you shall know (as in this rage,

Provok'd by him, you cannot) the great danger
Which this man's life did owe you, you'll rejoice
That he is thus cut off. Please it your honours

15 To call me to your senate, I'll deliver Myself your loyal servant, or endure
Your heaviest censure.

1 Lord. Bear from hence his body,
And mourn you for him: let him be regarded
As the most noble corse, that ever herald
Did follow to his urn.

2 Lord. His own impatience
Takes from Aufidius a great part of blame.
Let's make the best of it.

25 Auf. My rage is gone,
And I am struck with sorrow.—Take him up:
Help, three o' the chiefest soldiers; I'll be one.—
Beat thou the drum, that it speak mournfully:
Trail your steel pikes.—Though in this city he 30 Hath widow'd and unchilded many a one,
Which to this hour bewail the injury;
Yet he shall have a noble memory².

Assist.

[Exeunt, bearing the body of Marcus. A dead march sounded.]

² Memory, as before, for memorial.

1. The first part of the document discusses the importance of maintaining accurate records of all activities. It emphasizes that this is essential for ensuring the integrity and reliability of the information collected. The document also notes that this process is a continuous one, requiring regular updates and reviews.

2. The second part of the document outlines the specific procedures for data collection and analysis. It details the methods used to gather information, including interviews, surveys, and observations. It also describes the steps taken to analyze the data, ensuring that it is interpreted correctly and that any biases are identified and corrected.

3. The third part of the document focuses on the dissemination of information. It discusses the importance of sharing the results of the research with the relevant stakeholders, including management, clients, and the public. It also outlines the steps taken to ensure that the information is presented in a clear and accessible manner, and that it is protected from unauthorized access.

4. The fourth part of the document discusses the ethical considerations of the research. It emphasizes the importance of obtaining informed consent from all participants, and of ensuring that the research is conducted in a manner that respects their privacy and dignity. It also outlines the steps taken to ensure that the research is free from any conflicts of interest, and that the results are reported honestly and objectively.

5. The fifth part of the document discusses the future of the research. It outlines the plans for continuing the research, and for exploring new areas of interest. It also discusses the importance of maintaining the highest standards of quality and integrity in all research activities, and of ensuring that the research is always up-to-date and relevant.

A C T I.

SCENE I.

R O M E.

A Street.

Enter Flavius, Marullus, and certain Commoners.

Flav. HENCE; home, you idle creatures, get you home:

Is this a holiday? What! know you not,
Being mechanical, you ought not walk,
Upon a labouring day, without the sign
Of your profession?—Speak, what trade art thou?

Car. Why, sir, a carpenter.

Mar. Where is thy leather apron, and thy rule?
What dost thou with thy best apparel on?—
You, sir; what trade are you?

Cob. Truly, sir, in respect of a fine workman, I am but, as you would say, a cobbler.

Mar. But what trade art thou? Answer me directly.

Cob. A trade, sir, that, I hope, I may use with a safe conscience; which is, indeed, sir, a mender of bad soles.

Flav. What trade, thou knave? thou naughty knave, what trade?

Cob. Nay, I beseech you, sir, be not out with me: Yet, if you be out, sir, I can mend you.

Mar. What meanest thou by that? Mend me, thou saucy fellow?

Cob. Why, sir, cobble you.

Flav. Thou art a cobbler, art thou?

Cob. Truly, sir, all that I live by is, with the awl: I meddle with no trade,—man's matters, nor woman's matters, but with awl. I am, indeed, sir, a surgeon to old shoes; when they are in great danger, I recover them. As proper men as ever trod upon neats-leather, have gone upon my handy-work.

Flav. But wherefore art not in thy shop to-day? Why dost thou lead these men about the streets?

Cob. Truly, sir, to wear out their shoes, to get myself into more work. But, indeed, sir, we make holiday, to see Cæsar, and to rejoice in his triumph.

Mar. Wherefore rejoice? What conquest brings he home?

What tributaries follow him to Rome,
To grace in captive bonds his chariot wheels?
You blocks, you stones, you worse than senseless things!

O, you hard hearts, you cruel men of Rome,
Knew you not Pompey? Many a time and oft
Have you climb'd up to walls and battlements,
To towers and windows, yea, to chimney-tops,
Your infants in your arms, and there have sat
The live-long day, with patient expectation,
To see great Pompey pass the streets of Rome:
And when you saw his chariot but appear,

Have

Have you not made an universal shout,
That Tyber trembled underneath his banks,
To hear the replication of your sounds,
Made in his concave shores?

And do you now put on your best attire?
And do you now cull out a holiday?
And do you now strew flowers in his way,
That comes in triumph over Pompey's blood?
Be gone;

Run to your houses, fall upon your knees,
Pray to the gods to intermit the plague
That needs must light on this ingratitude. [fault,

Flav. Go, go, good countrymen, and, for this Assemble all the poor men of your sort;
Draw them to Tyber banks, and weep your tears
Into the channel, 'till the lowest stream
Do kiss the most exalted shores of all.

[Exeunt Commoners.

See, whe'r their basest metal be not mov'd?
They vanish tongue-ty'd in their guiltiness.
Go you down that way towards the Capitol;
This way will I: Disrobe the images,
If you do find them deck'd with ceremonies¹.

Mar. May we do so?

You know, it is the feast of Lupercal.

Flav. It is no matter; let no images
Be hung with Cæsar's trophies. I'll about,
And drive away the vulgar from the streets:
So do you too, where you perceive them thick.
These growing feathers pluck'd from Cæsar's wing,
Will make him fly an ordinary pitch;
Who else would soar above the view of men,
And keep us all in servile fearfulness. [Exeunt.

S C E N E II.

The same.

Enter Cæsar; Antony, for the course; Calphurnia, Portia, Decius², Cicero, Brutus, Cassius, Casca, a Soothsayer, &c.

Cæs. Calphurnia,—

Casca. Peace, ho! Cæsar speaks.

Cæs. Calphurnia,—

Calph. Here, my lord.

Cæs. Stand you directly in Antonius' way,
When he doth run his course.—Antonius.

Ant. Cæsar, my lord.

Cæs. Forget not, in your speed, Antonius,
To touch Calphurnia: for our elders say,
The barren, touched in this holy chase,
Shake off their sterile course.

Ant. I shall remember:

When Cæsar says, Do this, it is perform'd.

Cæs. Set on; and leave no ceremony out.

Sooth. Cæsar.

Cæs. Ha! Who calls? [again.

Casca. Bid every noise be still:—Peace yet

Cæs. Who is it in the press, that calls on me?

I hear a tongue, shriller than all the musick,
Cry, Cæsar: Speak; Cæsar is turn'd to hear.

Sooth. Beware the ides of March.

Cæs. What man is that?

[March.

Bru. A soothsayer bids you beware the ides of

Cæs. Set him before me, let me see his face.

Cæs. Fellow, come from the throng:—Look
5 upon Cæsar. [again.

Cæs. What say'st thou to me now? Speak once

Sooth. Beware the ides of March.

Cæs. He is a dreamer; let us leave him:—pass.

[*Sennet*³. Exeunt Cæsar and train.

Cæs. Will you go see the order of the course?

Bru. Not I.

Cæs. I pray you, do.

Bru. I am not gamesome; I do lack some part
Of that quick spirit that is in Antony.

15 Let me not hinder, Cassius, your desires;
I'll leave you.

Cæs. Brutus, I do observe you now of late;
I have not from your eyes that gentleness,
And shew of love, as I was wont to have:

20 You bear too stubborn and too strange⁴ a hand
Over your friend that loves you.

Bru. Cassius,

Be not deceiv'd: If I have veil'd my look,
I turn the trouble of my countenance

25 Merely upon myself. Vexed I am,
Of late, with passions of some difference⁵,
Conceptions only proper to myself,
Which give some soil, perhaps, to my behaviours:
But let not therefore my good friends be griev'd;
30 (Among which number, Cassius, be you one)
Nor construe any further my neglect,
Than that poor Brutus, with himself at war,
Forgets the shews of love to other men.

Cæs. Then, Brutus, I have much mistook your 35 passion;

By means whereof, this breast of mine hath bury'd
Thoughts of great value, worthy cogitations.

Tell me, good Brutus, can you see your face?

Bru. No, Cassius: for the eye sees not itself,
40 But by reflection, by some other things.

Cæs. 'Tis just:

And it is very much lamented, Brutus,
That you have no such mirrors, as will turn
Your hidden worthiness into your eye,

45 That you might see your shadow. I have heard
Where many of the best respect in Rome,
(Except immortal Cæsar) speaking of Brutus,
And groaning underneath this age's yoke,
Have wish'd that noble Brutus had his eyes.

50 Bru. Into what dangers would you lead me, Cassius,
That you would have me seek into myself
For that which is not in me?

Cæs. Therefore, good Brutus, be prepar'd to hear:
And, since you know you cannot see yourself

55 So well as by reflection, I, your glass,
Will modestly discover to yourself
That of yourself, which yet you know not of.
And be not jealous of me, gentle Brutus:
Were I a common laugh, or did use

¹ Ceremonies for religious ornaments. ² This person was not Decius, but Decimus Brutus. ³ We have before observed, that Sennet appears to be a particular tune or mode of martial musick. ⁴ Strange is alien, unfamiliar. ⁵ i.e. with a fluctuation of discordant opinions and desires.

To stale with ordinary oaths my love
To every new protester¹; if you know
That I do fawn on men, and hug them hard,
And after scandal them; or if you know
That I profess myself in banqueting
To all the rout, then hold me dangerous.

[Flourish and shout.

Bru. What means this shouting? I do fear, the Choose Cæsar for their king. [people

Cas. Ay, do you fear it?

Then must I think you would not have it so.

Bru. I would not, Cassius; yet I love him well:—

But wherefore do you hold me here so long?

What is it that you would impart to me?

If it be aught toward the general good,

Set honour in one eye, and death i' the other,

And I will look on both indifferently:

For, let the gods so speed me, as I love

The name of honour more than I fear death.

Cas. I know that virtue to be in you, Brutus,

As well as I do know your outward favour.

Well, honour is the subject of my story.—

I cannot tell, what you and other men

Think of this life; but, for my single self,

I had as lief not be, as live to be

In awe of such a thing as I myself.

I was born free as Cæsar; so were you:

We both have fed as well; and we can both

Endure the winter's cold, as well as he.

For once, upon a raw and gusty day,

The troubled Tyber chafing with his shores,

Cæsar said to me, Dar'st thou, Cassius, now

Leap in with me, into this angry flood,

And swim to yonder point?—Upon the word,

Accoutred as I was, I plunged in,

And bade him follow: so, indeed, he did.

The torrent roar'd; and we did buffet it

With lusty sinews; throwing it aside,

And stemming it with hearts of controversy.

But ere we could arrive the point propos'd,

Cæsar cry'd, Help me, Cassius, or I sink.

I, as Æneas, our great ancestor,

Did from the flames of Troy upon his shoulder

The old Anchises bear, so, from the waves of Tyber

Did I the tired Cæsar: And this man

Is now become a god; and Cassius is

A wretched creature, and must bend his body,

If Cæsar carelessly but nod on him.

He had a fever when he was in Spain,

And, when the fit was on him, I did mark

How he did shake: 'tis true, this god did shake:

His coward lips did from their colour fly;

And that same eye, whose bend doth awe the world,

Did lose his lustre: I did hear him groan:

Ay, and that tongue of his, that bade the Romans

Mark him, and write his speeches in their books,

Alas! it cry'd, Give me some drink, Titinius,

As a sick girl. Ye gods, it doth amaze me,

A man of such a feeble temper should

So get the start of the majestic world,

And bear the palm alone. [Shout. Flourish.]

Bru. Another general shout!

I do believe, that these applauses are
For some new honours that are heap'd on Cæsar.

Cas. Why, man, he doth bestride the narrow
world,

Like a Colossus; and we petty men

Walk under his huge legs, and peep about

To find ourselves dishonourable graves.

Men at some time are masters of their fates:

10 The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars,

But in ourselves, that we are underlings.

Brutus, and Cæsar: What should be in that Cæsar?

Why should that name be sounded more than yours?

Write them together, yours is as fair a name;

15 Sound them, it doth become the mouth as well:

Weigh them, it is as heavy; conjure with them,

Brutus will start a spirit as soon as Cæsar.

Now, in the names of all the gods at once,

Upon what meat doth this our Cæsar feed,

20 That he is grown so great? Age, thou art sham'd;

Rome, thou hast lost the breed of noble bloods!

When went there by an age, since the great flood,

But it was fam'd with more than with one man?

When could they say, 'till now, that talk'd of Rome,

25 That her wide walls encompass'd but one man?

Now is it Rome indeed, and room enough,

When there is in it but one only man.

O! you and I have heard our fathers say, [brook'd

There was a Brutus² once, that would have 30 The eternal devil to keep his state in Rome,

As easily as a king.

Bru. That you do love me, I am nothing jealous;

What you would work me to, I have some aim:

How I have thought of this, and of these times,

35 I shall recount hereafter; for this present,

I would not, so with love I might entreat you,

Be any further mov'd. What you have said,

I will consider; what you have to say,

I will with patience hear; and find a time

40 Both meet to hear, and answer, such high things.

'Till then, my noble friend, chew upon this³;

Brutus had rather be a villager,

Than to repute himself a son of Rome

Under such hard conditions as this time

45 Is like to lay upon us.

Cas. I am glad, that my weak words

Have struck but thus much shew of fire from

Brutus.

Re-enter Cæsar and his train.

50 Bru. The games are done, and Cæsar is returning.

Cas. As they pass by, pluck Casca by the sleeve:

And he will, after his sour fashion, tell you

What hath proceeded, worthy note, to-day.

55 Bru. I will do so:—But, look you, Cassius,

The angry spot doth glow on Cæsar's brow,

And all the rest look like a chidden train:

Calphurnia's cheek is pale; and Cicero

Looks with such ferret⁴ and such fiery eyes,

60 As we have seen him in the Capitol,

Being cross'd in conference by some senators.

¹ That is, to invite every new protester to my affection by the stale or allurements of customary oaths.

² i.e. Lucius Junius Brutus.

³ i.e. ruminate on this.

⁴ A ferret has red eyes.

Cas. Casca will tell us what the matter is.

Cas. Antonius.

Ant. Cæsar.

Cas. Let me have men about me, that are fat;
Sleek-headed men, and such as sleep o' nights:
Yon Cassius has a lean and hungry look;
He thinks too much: such men are dangerous.

Ant. Fear him not, Cæsar, he's not dangerous;
He is a noble Roman, and well given.

Cas. 'Would he were fatter:—But I fear him not:

Yet if my name were liable to fear,
I do not know the man I should avoid
So soon as that spare Cassius. He reads much;
He is a great observer, and he looks
Quite through the deeds of men: he loves no plays,
As thou dost, Antony; he hears no musick:
Seldom he smiles; and smiles in such a sort,
As, if he mock'd himself, and scorn'd his spirit
That could be mov'd to smile at any thing.
Such men as he be never at heart's ease,
Whiles they behold a greater than themselves;
And therefore are they very dangerous.
I rather tell thee what is to be fear'd,
Than what I fear; for always I am Cæsar.
Come on my right hand, for this ear is deaf,
And tell me truly what thou think'st of him.

[Exeunt Cæsar, and his train.]

Manent Brutus and Cassius: Casca to them.

Casca. You pull'd me by the cloak; Would you speak with me?

Bru. Ay, Casca; tell us what hath chanc'd to-day,
That Cæsar looks so sad.

Casca. Why, you were with him, were you not?

Bru. I should not then ask Casca what had chanc'd.

Casca. Why, there was a crown offer'd him:
and being offer'd him, he put it by with the back of his hand, thus; and then the people fell a' shouting.

Bru. What was the second noise for?

Casca. Why, for that too.

Cas. They shouted thrice; What was the last cry for?

Casca. Why, for that too.

Bru. Was the crown offer'd him thrice?

Casca. Ay, marry, was't, and he put it by thrice, every time gentler than other; and at every putting by, mine honest neighbours shouted.

Cas. Who offer'd him the crown?

Casca. Why, Antony.

Bru. Tell us the manner of it, gentle Casca.

Casca. I can as well be hang'd, as tell the manner of it: it was mere foolery, I did not mark it.
I saw Mark Antony offer him a crown;—yet
'twas not a crown neither, 'twas one of these coronets;—and, as I told you, he put it by once: but, for all that, to my thinking, he would fain have had it. Then he offer'd it to him again; then he put it by again: but, to my thinking, he was very loath to lay his fingers off it. And then he offer'd it the third time; he put it the third time by:

and still as he refus'd it, the rabblement hooted, and clapp'd their chopt hands, and threw up their sweaty night-caps, and utter'd such a deal of stinking breath because Cæsar refus'd the crown, that it had almost choak'd Cæsar; for he swooned, and fell down at it: And for mine own part, I durst not laugh, for fear of opening my lips, and receiving the bad air.

Cas. But, soft, I pray you: What? did Cæsar
swoon?

Casca. He fell down in the market-place, and foam'd at mouth, and was speechless.

Bru. 'Tis very like; he hath the falling-sickness.

Cas. No, Cæsar hath it not; but you, and I,
And honest Casca, we have the falling-sickness.

Casca. I know not what you mean by that; but,
I am sure, Cæsar fell down. If the tag-rag people did not clap him, and hiss him, according as he pleas'd, and displeas'd them, as they use to do the players in the theatre, I am no true man.

Bru. What said he, when he came unto himself?

Casca. Marry, before he fell down, when he perceiv'd the common herd was glad he refus'd the crown, he pluck'd me ope his doublet, and offer'd them his throat to cut.—An I had been a man of any occupation, if I would not have taken him at a word, I would I might go to hell among the rogues:—and so he fell. When he came to himself again, he said, If he had done, or said, any thing amiss, he desir'd their worships to think it was his infirmity. Three or four wenches, where I stood, cry'd, Alas, good soul!—and forgave him with all their hearts: But there's no heed to be taken of them: if Cæsar had stabb'd their mothers, they would have done no less.

Bru. And after that, he came, thus sad, away?

Casca. Ay.

Cas. Did Cicero say any thing?

Casca. Ay, he spoke Greek.

Cas. To what effect?

Casca. Nay, an I tell you that, I'll ne'er look you i' the face again: But those, that understood him, smil'd at one another, and shook their heads:
but for mine own part, it was Greek to me. I could tell you more news too: Marullus and Flavius, for pulling scarfs off Cæsar's images, are put to silence. Fare you well. There was more foolery yet, if I could remember it.

Cas. Will you sup with me to-night, Casca?

Casca. No, I am promis'd forth.

Cas. Will you dine with me to-morrow?

Casca. Ay, if I be alive, and your mind hold,
and your dinner worth the eating.

Cas. Good; I will expect you.

Casca. Do so: Farewell both. [Exit.]

Bru. What a blunt fellow is this grown to be!
He was quick mettle, when he went to school.

Cas. So is he now, in execution
Of any bold or noble enterprize,
However he puts on this tardy form.
This rudeness is a sauce to his good wit,

‡ i.e. Had I been a mechanick, one of the Plebeians, to whom he offered his throat.

Which

Which gives men stomach to digest his words
With better appetite.

Bru. And so it is. For this time I will leave you:
To-morrow, if you please to speak with me,
I will come home to you; or, if you will,
Come home to me, and I will wait for you.

Cas. I will do so:—till then, think of the world:
[Exit Brutus.]

Well, Brutus, thou art noble: yet I see,
Thy honourable metal may be wrought
From that it is dispos'd¹: Therefore 'tis meet
That noble minds keep ever with their likes:
For who so firm, that cannot be seduc'd?
Cæsar doth bear me hard; but he loves Brutus:
If I were Brutus now, and he were Cassius,
He should not humour me². I will this night,
In several hands, in at his windows throw,
As if they came from several citizens,
Writings, all tending to the great opinion
That Rome holds of his name; wherein obscurely Cæsar's ambition shall be glanced at:
And, after this, let Cæsar seat him sure;
For we will shake him, or worse days endure.

[Exit.]

SCENE III.

A Street.

Thunder and Lightning. Enter Casca, his sword drawn; and Cicero, meeting him.

Cic. Good even, Casca: Brought you Cæsar
home?

Why are you breathless? and why stare you so?

Casca. Are you not mov'd, when all the sway of earth³

Shakes, like a thing unfirm? O Cicero,
I have seen tempests, when the scolding winds
Have riv'd the knotty oaks; and I have seen
The ambitious ocean swell, and rage, and foam,
To be exalted with the threat'ning clouds:
But never 'till to-night, never 'till now,
Did I go through a tempest dropping fire.
Either there is a civil strife in heaven;
Or else the world, too saucy with the gods,
Incenses them to send destruction.

Cic. Why, saw you any thing more wonderful?

Casca. A common slave (you know him well by sight)

Held up his left hand, which did flame, and burn
Like twenty torches join'd; and yet his hand,
Not sensible of fire, remain'd unscorch'd.

Besides, (I have not since put up my sword)
Against the Capitol I met a lion,

Who glar'd upon me, and went surly by,

Without annoying me: and there were drawn
Upon a heap a hundred ghastly women,

Transformed with their fear; who swore, they saw
Men, all in fire, walk up and down the streets.

And, yesterday, the bird of night did sit,

Even at noon-day, upon the market-place,

Hooting, and shrieking. When these prodigies

Do so conjointly meet, let not men say,
These are their reasons,—They are natural;
For, I believe, they are portentous things
Unto the climate that they point upon.

Cic. Indeed, it is a strange-disposed time:
But men may construe things after their fashion,
Clean from the purpose of the things themselves,
Comes Cæsar to the Capitol to-morrow?

Casca. He doth: for he did bid Antonius
Send word to you, he would be there to-morrow.

Cic. Good-night then, Casca: this disturbed sky
Is not to walk in.

Casca. Farewell, Cicero. [Exit Cicero.]

Enter Cassius.

Cas. Who's there?

Casca. A Roman.

Cas. Casca, by your voice. [this?]

Casca. Your ear is good. Cassius, what night is

Cas. A very pleasing night to honest men.

Casca. Who ever knew the heavens menace so?

Cas. Those, that have known the earth so full of faults.

For my part, I have walk'd about the streets,
Submitting me unto the perilous night;

And, thus unbraced, Casca, as you see,
Have bar'd my bosom to the thunder-stone:
And, when the cross blue lightning seem'd to open
The breast of heaven, I did present myself
E'en in the aim and very flash of it.

Casca. But wherefore did you so much tempt the heavens?

It is the part of men to fear and tremble,
When the most mighty gods, by tokens, send
Such dreadful heralds to astonish us. [life]

Cas. You are dull, Casca; and those sparks of
That should be in a Roman, you do want,
Or else you use not: You look pale, and gaze,
And put on fear, and cast yourself in wonder,
To see the strange impatience of the heavens:

But if you would consider the true cause,
Why all these fires, why all these gliding ghosts,
Why birds, and beasts, from quality and kind⁴;
Why old men, fools, and children calculate⁵;
Why all these things change, from their ordinance,

Their natures, and pre-formed faculties,
To monstrous quality; why, you shall find,
That heaven hath infus'd them with these spirits,
To make them instruments of fear, and warning,
Unto some monstrous state.

Now could I, Casca, name to thee a man
Most like this dreadful night;
That thunders, lightens, opens graves, and roars
As doth the lion in the Capitol:

A man no mightier than thyself, or me,
In personal action; yet prodigious⁶ grown,
And fearful, as these strange eruptions are.

Casca. 'Tis Cæsar that you mean: Is it not, Cassius?

Cas. Let it be who it is: for Romans now
Have thews⁷ and limbs like to their ancestors;
But, woe the while! our fathers' minds are dead,
And we are govern'd with our mothers' spirits;

¹ i.e. The best metal or temper may be worked into qualities contrary to its original constitution.

² The meaning is, Cæsar loves Brutus; but if Brutus and I were to change places, his love should not humour me, should not take hold of my affections, so as to make me forget my principles. ³ The whole weight or momentum of this globe.

⁴ i.e. why they deviate from quality and nature. ⁵ i.e. foretell or prophesy. ⁶ Prodigious is portentous. ⁷ Thews is an obsolete word implying nerves or muscular strength.

Our yoke and sufferance shew us womanish.

Casca. Indeed, they say, the senators to-morrow
Mean to establish Cæsar as a king:
And he shall wear his crown by sea, and land,
In every place, save here in Italy.

Cas. I know where I will wear this dagger then;
Cassius from bondage will deliver Cassius:
Therein, ye gods, you make the weak most strong;
Therein, ye gods, you tyrants do defeat:
Nor stony tower, nor walls of beaten brass,
Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit;
But life, being weary of these worldly bars,
Never lacks power to dismiss itself.
If I know this, know all the world besides,
That part of tyranny, that I do bear,
I can shake off at pleasure.

Casca. So can I:
So every bondman in his own hand bears
The power to cancel his captivity.

Cas. And why should Cæsar be a tyrant then?
Poor man! I know, he would not be a wolf,
But that he sees, the Romans are but sheep;
He were no lion, were not Romans hinds.
Those that with haste will make a mighty fire,
Begin it with weak straws: What trash is Rome,
What rubbish, and what offal, when it serves
For the base matter to illuminate
So vile a thing as Cæsar? But, O, grief!
Where hast thou led me? I, perhaps, speak this Before a willing bondman: then I know
My answer must be made: But I am arm'd,
And dangers are to me indifferent.

Casca. You speak to Casca; and to such a man
That is no fleering tell-tale. Hold my hand¹:
Be factious² for redress of all these griefs;
And I will set this foot of mine as far,
As who goes farthest.

Cas. There's a bargain made.
Now know you, Casca, I have mov'd already
Some certain of the noblest-minded Romans,
To undergo, with me, an enterprize
Of honourable-dangerous consequence;
And I do know, by this, they stay for me

In Pompey's porch: For now, this fearful night,
There is no stir or walking in the streets;
And the complexion of the element,
It favours³ like the work we have in hand,
Most bloody, fiery, and most terrible.

Enter Cinna.

Casca. Stand close awhile, for here comes one in haste.

Cas. 'Tis Cinna, I do know him by his gait;
He is a friend.—Cinna, where haste you so?

Cin. To find out you: Who's that? Metellus Cimber?

Cas. No, it is Casca; one incorporate
To our attempts. Am I not staid for, Cinna?

Cin. I am glad on't. What a fearful night is this!
There's two or three of us have seen strange sights.

Cas. Am I not staid for? Tell me.

Cin. Yes,
You are. O, Cassius, if you could but win
The noble Brutus to our party—— [per,

Cas. Be you content: Good Cinna, take this paper,
And look you lay it in the prætor's chair,
Where Brutus may but find it; and throw this
In at his window; set this up with wax
Upon old Brutus' statue: all this done,
Repair to Pompey's porch, where you shall find us.
Is Decius Brutus, and Trebonius, there?

Cin. All but Metellus Cimber; and he's gone
To seek you at your house. Well, I will hie,
And so bestow these papers as you bade me.

Cas. That done, repair to Pompey's theatre.

[Exit Cinna.]

Come, Casca, you and I will, yet, ere day,
See Brutus at his house: three parts of him
Is ours already; and the man entire,
Upon the next encounter, yields him ours.

Casca. O, he sits high in all the people's hearts:
And that, which would appear offence in us,
His countenance, like richest alchymy,
Will change to virtue, and to worthiness. [him,

Cas. Him, and his worth, and our great need of
You have right well conceited. Let us go,
For it is after midnight; and, ere day,
We will awake him, and be sure of him. [Exeunt.]

A C T II.

S C E N E I.

Enter Brutus in his Orchard.

Bru. WHAT, Lucius! ho!—

I cannot, by the progress of the stars,
Give guess how near to day.—Lucius, I say!—
I would it were my fault to sleep so soundly.—
When, Lucius, when? Awake, I say: What, Lucius!

Enter Lucius.

Luc. Call'd you, my lord?

Bru. Get me a taper in my study, Lucius:
When it is lighted, come and call me here.

Luc. I will, my lord. [Exit.]

Bru. It must be by his death; and, for my part,
I know no personal cause to spurn at him,
But for the general. He would be crown'd:—
How that might change his nature, there's the question.

It is the bright day, that brings forth the adder;
And that craves wary walking. Crown him?—

² Factious seems here to mean active.

³ i. e. resembles.

And then, I grant, we put a sting in him,
That at his will he may do danger with.
The abuse of greatness is, when it disjoins
Remorse¹ from power: And, to speak truth of Cæsar,
I have not known when his affections sway'd
More than his reason. But 'tis a common proof²,
That lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber-upward turns his face:
But when he once attains the upmost round,
He then unto the ladder turns his back;
Looks in the clouds, scorning the base degrees³
By which he did ascend: So Cæsar may;
Then, lest he may, prevent. And, since the quarrel
Will bear no colour for the thing he is,
Fashion it thus; that what he is, augmented,
Would run to these, and these extremities:
And therefore think him as a serpent's egg,
Which, hatch'd, would, as his kind, grow mischie-
And kill him in the shell. [vous:

Re-enter Lucius.

Luc. The taper burneth in your closet, sir.
Searching the window for a flint, I found
This paper, thus seal'd up; and, I am sure,
It did not lie there, when I went to bed.

Bru. Get you to bed again, it is not day.
Is not to-morrow, boy, the ides of March?

Luc. I know not, sir.

Bru. Look in the kalendar, and bring me word.

Luc. I will, sir. [Exit.

Bru. The exhalations, whizzing in the air,
Give so much light, that I may read by them.
[Opens the letter, and reads.

"Brutus, thou sleep'st; awake, and see thyself.

"Shall Rome—Speak, strike, redress!

"Brutus, thou sleep'st; awake,—"

Such instigations have been often dropp'd
Where I have took them up.

"Shall Rome—" Thus must I piece it out;
Shall Rome stand under one man's awe? What!

My ancestors did from the streets of Rome [Rome?
The Tarquin drive, when he was call'd a king.

"Speak, strike, redress!"—Am I entreated
To speak, and strike? O Rome, I make thee pro-

If the redress will follow, thou receivest [mise,
Thy full petition at the hand of Brutus!

Re-enter Lucius.

Luc. Sir, March is wasted fourteen days.

[Knocks within.

Bru. 'Tis good. Go to the gate; somebody knocks. [Exit Lucius.

Since Cassius first did whet me against Cæsar,
I have not slept.

Between the acting of a dreadful thing,

And the first motion, all the interim is

Like a phantasma, or a hideous dream:

The genius, and the mortal instruments,

Are then in council⁴; and the state of man,

Like to a little kingdom, suffers then
The nature of an insurrection.

Re-enter Lucius.

Luc. Sir, 'tis your brother⁵ Cassius at the door,
Who doth desire to see you.

Bru. Is he alone?

Luc. No, sir, there are more with him.

Bru. Do you know them? [ears,

Luc. No, sir; their hats are pluck'd about their
And half their faces bury'd in their cloaks,
That by no means I may discover them
By any mark of favour.

Bru. Let them enter. [Exit Lucius.

They are the faction. O conspiracy!

Sham'st thou to shew thy dangerous brow by night,

When evils are most free? O, then, by day,

Where wilt thou find a cavern dark enough [racy;

To mask thy monstrous visage? Seek none, conspi-

Hide it in smiles, and affability;

For if thou path, thy native semblance on⁶,

Not Erebus itself were dim enough

To hide thee from prevention.

Enter Cassius, Casca, Decius, Cinna, Metellus, and Trebonius.

Cas. I think, we are too bold upon your rest:
Good morrow, Brutus; Do we trouble you?

Bru. I have been up this hour; awake, all night.
Know I these men, that come along with you?

Cas. Yes, every man of them; and no man here,
But honours you: and every one doth wish,

You had but that opinion of yourself,
Which every noble Roman bears of you.

This is Trebonius.

Bru. He is welcome hither.

Cas. This, Decius Brutus.

Bru. He is welcome too.

Cas. This, Casca; this, Cinna;

And this, Metellus Cimber.

Bru. They are all welcome.

What watchful cares do interpose themselves
Betwixt your eyes and night?

Cas. Shall I entreat a word? [They whisper.

Dec. Here lies the east: Doth not the day break

Casca. No. [here?

Cin. O, pardon, sir, it doth; and yon grey lines,
That fret the clouds, are messengers of day.

Casca. You shall confess, that you are both deceiv'd.

Here, As I point my sword, the sun arises;

Which is a great way growing on the south,

Weighing the youthful season of the year.

Some twomonths hence, up higher toward thenorth

He first presents his fire; and the high east

Stands, as the Capitol, directly here.

Bru. Give me your hands all over, one by one.

Cas. And let us swear our resolution.

Bru. No, not an oath; If not the face of men,

¹ i. e. pity. ² i. e. common observation, or experience. ³ i. e. low steps. ⁴ Shakspeare here describes what passes in a single bosom, the insurrection which a conspirator feels agitating the little king- dom of his own mind; when the genius, or power that watches for his protection, and the mortal instru- ments, the passions which excite him to a deed of honour and danger, are in council and debate; when the desire of action, and the care of safety, keep the mind in continual fluctuation and disturbance.
⁵ Cassius married Junia, Brutus' sister. ⁶ i. e. if thou walk in thy true form.

The sufferance of our souls, the time's abuse,—
 If these be motives weak, break off betimes,
 And every man hence to his idle bed;
 So let high-sighted tyranny range on,
 'Till each man drop by lottery¹. But if these,
 As I am sure they do, bear fire enough
 To kindle cowards, and to steel with valour
 The melting spirits of women; then, countrymen,
 What need we any spur, but our own cause,
 To prick us to redress? What other bond,
 Than secret Romans, that have spoke the word,
 And will not palter? and what other oath,
 Than honesty to honesty engag'd,
 That this shall be, or we will fall for it?
 Swear priests, and cowards, and men cautelous²,
 Old feeble carrions, and such suffering souls
 That welcome wrongs; unto bad causes, swear
 Such creatures as men doubt: but do not stain
 The even virtue of our enterprize,
 Nor th' insuppressive mettle of our spirits,
 To think, that, or our cause, or our performance,
 Did need an oath; when every drop of blood,
 That every Roman bears, and nobly bears,
 Is guilty of a several bastardy,
 If he do break the smallest particle
 Of any promise that hath past from him.

Cas. But what of Cicero? Shall we sound him?
 I think, he will stand very strong with us.

Casca. Let us not leave him out.

Cin. No, by no means.

Met. O, let us have him; for his silver hairs
 Will purchase us a good opinion,
 And buy men's voices to commend our deeds:
 It shall be said, his judgement rul'd our hands;
 Our youths, and wildness, shall no whit appear,
 But all be bury'd in his gravity. [him;

Bru. O, name him not: let us not break with
 For he will never follow any thing
 That other men begin.

Cas. Then leave him out.

Casca. Indeed, he is not fit. [Cæsar?

Dec. Shall no man else be touch'd, but only

Cas. Decius, well urg'd:—I think, it is not meet,
 Mark Antony, so well belov'd of Cæsar,
 Should out-live Cæsar: We shall find of him
 A shrewd contriver; and, you know, his means,
 If he improve them, may well stretch so far,
 As to annoy us all: which to prevent,
 Let Antony and Cæsar fall together. [Cassius,

Bru. Our course will seem too bloody, Caius
 To cut the head off, and then hack the limbs;
 Like wrath in death, and envy afterwards:
 For Antony is but a limb of Cæsar.

Let us be sacrificers, but not butchers, Caius.
 We all stand up against the spirit of Cæsar;
 And in the spirit of men there is no blood:

O, that we then could come by Cæsar's spirit,
 And not dismember Cæsar! But, alas!
 Cæsar must bleed for it; And, gentle friends,
 Let's kill him boldly, but not wrathfully;
 5 Let's carve him as a dish fit for the gods,
 Not hew him as a carcass fit for hounds:
 And let our hearts, as subtle masters do,
 Stir up their servants to an act of rage,
 And after seem to chide them. This shall make 10 Our purpose necessary, and not envious:
 Which so appearing to the common eyes,
 We shall be call'd purgers, not murderers.
 And for Mark Antony, think not of him;
 For he can do no more than Cæsar's arm,
 15 When Cæsar's head is off.

Cas. Yet I fear him:

For in the ingrafted love he bears to Cæsar,—

Bru. Alas, good Cassius, do not think of him:
 If he love Cæsar, all that he can do

20 Is to himself; take thought³, and die for Cæsar:
 And that were much he should; for he is given
 To sports, to wildness, and much company.

Treb. There is no fear in him; let him not die;
 For he will live, and laugh at this hereafter

[Clock strikes.

Bru. Peace, count the clock.

Cas. The clock hath strucken three.

Treb. 'Tis time to part.

Cas. But it is doubtful yet,

30 Whe'r Cæsar will come forth to-day, or no:

For he is superstitious grown of late;
 Quite from the main opinion he held once
 Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies:

35 It may be, these apparent prodigies,
 The unaccustom'd terror of this night,
 And the persuasion of his augurers,
 May hold him from the Capitol to-day.

Dec. Never fear that: If he be so resolv'd,
 I can o'ersway him: for he loves to hear,

40 That unicorns may be betray'd with trees⁴,
 And bears with glasses, elephants with holes,
 Lions with toils, and men with flatterers:
 But, when I tell him, he hates flatterers,
 He says, he does; being then most flatter'd.

45 Let me work:

For I can give his humour the true bent;
 And I will bring him to the Capitol.

Cas. Nay, we will all of us be there to fetch him.

Bru. By the eighth hour: Is that the uttermost?

50 Cin. Be that the uttermost, and fail not then.

Met. Caius Ligarius doth bear Cæsar hard⁵,
 Who rated him for speaking well of Pompey;
 I wonder, none of you have thought of him.

Bru. Now, good Metellus, go along to him:
 55 He loves me well, and I have given him reasons;
 Send him but hither, and I'll fashion him.

¹ Perhaps the poet here alludes to the custom of decimation, i.e. the selection by lot, of every tenth soldier, in a general mutiny, for punishment.

² i. e. cautious.

³ That is, turn melancholy.

⁴ Unicorns are said to have been taken by one who, running behind a tree, eluded the violent push the animal was making at him, so that his horn spent its force on the trunk, and stuck fast, detaining the beast till he was dispatched by the hunter.—Bears are reported to have been surprised by means of a mirror, which they would gaze on, affording their pursuers an opportunity of taking the surer aim.—Elephants were seduced into pitfalls lightly covered with hurdles and turf, on which a proper bait to tempt them was exposed.

⁵ i. e. hates Cæsar.

Cas. The morning comes upon us: We'll leave you, Brutus:—
And, friends, disperse yourselves: but all remember
What you have said, and shew yourselves true Romans.

Bru. Good gentlemen, look fresh and merrily;
Let not our looks put on our purposes;
But bear it as our Roman actors do,
With untir'd spirits, and formal constancy:
And so, good-morrow to you every one. [Exeunt.]

Manet Brutus.

Boy! Lucius!—Fast asleep? It is no matter;
Enjoy the honey-heavy dew of slumber:
Thou hast no figures, nor no fantasies,
Which busy care draws in the brains of men;
Therefore thou sleep'st so sound.

Enter Portia.

Por. Brutus, my lord! [now?]

Bru. Portia, what mean you? Wherefore rise you
It is not for your health, thus to commit
Your weak condition to the raw cold morning.

Por. Nor for yours neither. You have ungently,
Brutus,

Stole from my bed: And yesternight, at supper,
You suddenly arose, and walk'd about,
Musing, and sighing, with your arms across:
And when I ask'd you what the matter was,
You star'd upon me with ungentle looks:
I urg'd you further; then you scratch'd your head,
And too impatiently stamp'd with your foot:
Yet I insisted, yet you answer'd not;
But, with an angry wafture of your hand,
Gave sign for me to leave you: So I did;
Fearing to strengthen that impatience,
Which seem'd too much enkindled; and, withal,
Hoping it was but an effect of humour,
Which sometime hath his hour with every man.
It will not let you eat, nor talk, nor sleep;
And, could it work so much upon your shape,
As it hath much prevail'd on your condition,
I should not know you, Brutus. Dear my lord,
Make me acquainted with your cause of grief.

Bru. I am not well in health, and that is all.

Por. Brutus is wise, and, were he not in health,
He would embrace the means to come by it.

Bru. Why, so I do:—Good Portia, go to bed.

Por. Is Brutus sick; and is it physical
To walk unbraced, and suck up the humours
Of the dank morning? What, is Brutus sick;
And will he steal out of his wholesome bed,
To dare the vile contagion of the night?
And tempt the rheumy and unpurged air
To add unto his sickness? No, my Brutus;
You have some sick offence within your mind,
Which, by the right and virtue of my place,
I ought to know of: And, upon my knees,

I charm you, by my once-commended beauty,
By all your vows of love, and that great vow
Which did incorporate and make us one,
That you unfold to me, your self, your half,
Why you are heavy: and what men to-night
Have had resort to you: for here have been
Some six or seven, who did hide their faces
Even from darkness.

Bru. Kneel not, gentle Portia.

Por. I should not need, if you were gentle Brutus.
Within the bond of marriage, tell me, Brutus,
Is it excepted, I should know no secrets
That appertain to you? Am I yourself,
But, as it were, in sort or limitation;
To keep with you at meals, comfort¹ your bed,
And talk to you sometimes? Dwell I but in the suburbs

Of your good pleasure²? If it be no more,
Portia is Brutus' harlot, not his wife.

Bru. You are my true and honourable wife;
As dear to me as are the ruddy drops
That visit my sad heart. [secret.]

Por. If this were true, then should I know this
I grant, I am a woman; but, withal,
A woman that lord Brutus took to wife:
I grant, I am a woman; but, withal,
A woman well-reputed; Cato's daughter.
Think you, I am no stronger than my sex,
Being so father'd, and so husbanded?
Tell me your counsels, I will not disclose them:
I have made strong proof of my constancy,
Giving myself a voluntary wound
Here, in the thigh: Can I bear that with patience,
And not my husband's secrets?

Bru. O ye gods,
Render me worthy of this noble wife! [Knock.]
Hark, hark! one knocks: Portia, go in a while;
And by-and-by thy bosom shall partake
The secrets of my heart.

Por. All my engagements I will construe to thee,
All the charactery³ of my sad brows:—
Leave me with haste. [Exit Portia.]

Enter Lucius and Ligarius.

Lucius, who is that knocks? [you.]

Luc. Here is a sick man that would speak with

Bru. Caius Ligarius, that Metellus spake of.—

Boy, stand aside.—Caius Ligarius! how?

Lig. Vouchsafe good morrow from a feeble tongue. [Caius,]

Bru. O, what a time have you chose out, brave
To wear a kerchief? Would you were not sick!

Lig. I am not sick, if Brutus have in hand
Any exploit worthy the name of honour.

Bru. Such an exploit have I in hand, Ligarius,
Had you a healthful ear to hear of it.

Lig. By all the gods, that Romans bow before,

¹ Comfort your bed, "is but an odd phrase, and gives as odd an idea," says Mr. Theobald. He therefore substitutes, consort. But this good old word, however disused through modern refinement, was not so discarded by Shakspeare. Henry VIII. as we read in Cavendish's Life of Wolsey, in commendation of queen Katharine, in public said, "She hath beene to me a true obedient wife, and as comfortable as I could wish." In our marriage ceremony, also, the husband promises to comfort his wife; and Barrett's Alvearie, or Quadruple Dictionary, 1582, says, that to comfort is, "to recreate, to solace, to make pastime." ² Perhaps here is an allusion to the place in which the harlots of Shakspeare's age resided, ³ i. e. all that is character'd on, &c.

I here discard my sickness. Soul of Rome!
Brave son, deriv'd from honourable loins!
Thou, like an exorcist, hast conjur'd up
My mortified spirit. Now bid me run,
And I will strive with things impossible;
Yea, get the better of them. What's to do?

Bru. A piece of work, that will make sick men whole. [make sick?

Lig. But are not some whole, that we must

Bru. That must we also. What it is, my Caius,
I shall unfold to thee, as we are going
To whom it must be done.

Lig. Set on your foot;
And, with a heart new-fir'd, I follow you,
To do I know not what: but it sufficeth,
That Brutus leads me on.

Bru. Follow me then. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.

Cæsar's Palace.

Thunder and lightning. Enter Cæsar, in his night-gown.

Cæs. Nor heaven, nor earth, have been at peace
to-night:

Thrice hath Calphurnia in her sleep cry'd out,
Help, ho! They murder Cæsar. Who's within?

Enter a Servant.

Serv. My lord?

Cæs. Go, bid the priests do present sacrifice,
And bring me their opinions of success.

Serv. I will, my lord. [Exit.

Enter Calphurnia.

Cal. What mean you, Cæsar? Think you to walk
You shall not stir out of your house to-day. [forth?

Cæs. Cæsar shall forth: the things that threaten'd me,

Ne'er look'd but on my back; when they shall see
The face of Cæsar, they are vanished.

Cal. Cæsar, I never stood on ceremonies¹,
Yet now they fright me. There is one within,
Besides the things that we have heard and seen,
Recounts most horrid sights seen by the watch.
A lioness hath whelped in the streets; [dead:
And graves have yawn'd, and yielded up their
Fierce fiery warriors fight upon the clouds,
In ranks, and squadrons, and right form of war,
Which drizzled blood upon the Capitol:
The noise of battle hurtled² in the air,
Horses did neigh, and dying men did groan;
And ghosts did shriek, and squeal about the streets.
O Cæsar! these things are beyond all use,
And I do fear them.

Cæs. What can be avoided,
Whose end is purpos'd by the mighty gods?
Yet Cæsar shall go forth; for these predictions
Are to the world in general, as to Cæsar.

Cal. When beggars die, there are no comets seen; [princes.

The heavens themselves blaze forth the death of
Cæs. Cowards die many times before their deaths;
The valiant never taste of death but once.

Of all the wonders that I yet have heard,

It seems to me most strange that men should fear;
Seeing that death, a necessary end,
Will come, when it will come.

Re-enter a Servant.

5 What say the augurers? [day.

Serv. They would not have you to stir forth to-
Plucking the entrails of an offering forth,
They could not find a heart within the beast.

Cæs. The gods do this in shame of cowardice:

10 Cæsar should be a beast without a heart,
If he should stay at home to-day for fear.
No, Cæsar shall not: danger knows full well,
That Cæsar is more dangerous than he.
We were two lions litter'd in one day,
15 And I the elder and more terrible;
And Cæsar shall go forth.

Cal. Alas, my lord,
Your wisdom is consum'd in confidence.

20 Do not go forth to-day: call it my fear,
That keeps you in the house, and not your own.
We'll send Mark Antony to the Senate-house;
And he shall say, you are not well to-day:
Let me, upon my knee, prevail in this.

Cæs. Mark Antony shall say, I am not well;
25 And, for thy humour, I will stay at home.

Enter Decius.

Here's Decius Brutus, he shall tell them so. [Cæsar:

Dec. Cæsar, all hail! Good morrow, worthy
I come to fetch you to the senate-house.

30 Cæs. And you are come in very happy time,
To bear my greeting to the senators,
And tell them, that I will not come to-day:
Cannot, is false; and that I dare not, falser;
I will not come to-day: Tell them so, Decius.

Cal. Say, he is sick.

Cæs. Shall Cæsar send a lye?
Have I in conquest stretch'd mine arm so far,
To be afeard to tell grey-beards the truth?—
Decius, go tell them, Cæsar will not come. [cause,

40 Dec. Most mighty Cæsar, let me know some Lest I be laugh'd at, when I tell them so.

Cæs. The cause is in my will, I will not come;
That is enough to satisfy the senate.

45 But, for your private satisfaction,
Because I love you, I will let you know.

Calphurnia here, my wife, stays me at home;
She dreamt to-night she saw my statue,
Which, like a fountain, with a hundred spouts,
Did run pure blood; and many lusty Romans

50 Came smiling, and did bathe their hands in it.
And these does she apply for warnings, and por-
And evils imminent; and on her knee [tents,
Hath begg'd, that I will stay at home to-day.

Dec. This dream is all amiss interpreted;

55 It was a vision, fair and fortunate:
Your statue spouting blood in many pipes,
In which so many smiling Romans bath'd,
Signifies, that from you great Rome shall suck
Reviving blood; and that great men shall press
60 For tinctures, stains, relicks, and cognisance³.

¹ i. e. I never paid a ceremonious or superstitious regard to prodigies or omens. ² To hurtle is, perhaps, to clash, or move with violence and noise. ³ There are two allusions in this speech; one to coats armorial, to which princes make additions, or give new tinctures, and new marks of cognisance; the other to martyrs, whose reliques are preserved with veneration.—The Romans, says Decius, all come to you as to a saint, for reliques, as to a prince, for honours.

This by Calphurnia's dream is signify'd.

Cæs. And this way have you well expounded it.

Dec. I have, when you have heard what I can
And know it now; the senate have concluded [say;
To give, this day, a crown to mighty Cæsar.
If you shall send them word, you will not come,
Their minds may change. Besides, it were a mock,
Apt to be render'd, for some one to say,
"Break up the senate 'till another time,
"When Cæsar's wife shall meet with better dreams."
If Cæsar hide himself, shall they not whisper,
"Lo, Cæsar is afraid!"

Pardon me, Cæsar; for my dear, dear love
To your proceeding bids me tell you this;
And reason to my love is liable¹. [Calphurnia!]

Cæs. How foolish do your fears seem now, Cal-
I am ashamed I did yield to them.—

Give me my robe, for I will go:—

Enter Publius, Brutus, Ligarius, Metellus, Casca, Trebonius, and Cinna.

And look where Publius is come to fetch me.

Pub. Good morrow, Cæsar.

Cæs. Welcome, Publius.—

What, Brutus, are you stirr'd so early too?—
Good-morrow, Casca.—Caius Ligarius,
Cæsar was ne'er so much your enemy,
As that same ague which hath made you lean.—
What is't o'clock?

Bru. Cæsar, 'tis stricken eight.

Cæs. I thank you for your pains and courtesy.

Enter Antony.

See! Antony, that revels long o' nights,
Is notwithstanding up:—Good morrow, Antony.

Ant. So to most noble Cæsar,

Cæs. Bid them prepare within:—

I am to blame to be thus waited for.— [Cinna!]
Now, Cinna:—Now, Metellus:—What, Trebo-
I have an hour's talk in store for you;
Remember that you call on me to-day;
Be near me, that I may remember you.

Treb. Cæsar, I will:—and so near will I be,
[Aside.]

That your best friends shall wish I had been further.

Cæs. Good friends, go in, and taste some wine
with me;

And we, like friends, will straightway go together.

Bru. That every like is not the same, O Cæsar,
The heart of Brutus yerns to think upon! [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.

A Street near the Capitol.

Enter Artemidorus, reading a paper.

"Cæsar, beware of Brutus; take heed of Cas-sius; come not near Casca; have an eye to Cinna; trust not Trebonius; mark well Metellus Cimber; Decius Brutus loves thee not; thou hast wrong'd Caius Ligarius. There is but one mind in all these men, and it is bent against Cæsar. If thou be'st not immortal, look about you: security gives way to conspiracy.
The mighty gods defend thee!"

"Thy lover,

"ARTEMIDORUS."

Here will I stand, 'till Cæsar pass along,

And as a suitor will I give him this.

My heart laments, that virtue cannot live
Out of the teeth of emulation.

5 If thou read this, O Cæsar, thou may'st live;
If not, the fates with traitors do contrive². [Exit.]

SCENE IV.

Another part of the same Street.

Enter Portia, and Lucius.

10 Por. I pr'ythee, boy, run to the senate-house;
Stay not to answer me, but get thee gone:
Why dost thou stay?

Luc. To know my errand, madam. [gain,]

Por. I would have had thee there, and here a-15 Ere I can tell thee what thou should'st do there.
O constancy, be strong upon my side!

Set a huge mountain 'tween my heart and tongue!

I have a man's mind, but a woman's might.

20 How hard is it for women to keep counsel!
Art thou here yet?

Luc. Madam, what should I do?

Run to the Capitol, and nothing else?

And so return to you, and nothing else? [well,]

25 Por. Yes, bring me word, boy, if thy lord look
For he went sickly forth: And take good note,
What Cæsar doth, what suitors press to him.
Hark, boy! what noise is that?

Luc. I hear none, madam.

Por. Pr'ythee, listen well:

30 I heard a bustling rumour, like a fray,
And the wind brings it from the Capitol.

Luc. Sooth, madam, I hear nothing.

Enter Soothsayer.

Por. Come hither, fellow: Which way hast
35 thou been?

Sooth. At mine own house, good lady.

Por. What is't o'clock?

Sooth. About the ninth hour, lady.

Por. Is Cæsar yet gone to the Capitol?

40 Sooth. Madam, not yet; I go to take my stand,
To see him pass on to the Capitol. [not?]

Por. Thou hast some suit to Cæsar, hast thou?

Sooth. That I have, lady, if it will please Cæsar
To be so good to Cæsar, as to hear me:

45 I shall beseech him to befriend himself.

Por. Why, know'st thou any harm's intended towards him? [fear may chance.]

Sooth. None that I know will be, nauch that I
Good-morrow to you. Here the street is narrow:

50 The throng that follows Cæsar at the heels,
Of senators, of prætors, common suitors,

Will crowd a feeble man almost to death:

I'll get me to a place more void, and there
Speak to great Cæsar as he comes along. [Exit.]

55 Por. I must go in.—Ay me! how weak a thing
The heart of woman is! O Brutus!

The heavens speed thee in thine enterprize!

Sure, the boy heard me:—Brutus hath a suit,
That Cæsar will not grant.—O, I grow faint:—

60 Run, Lucius, and commend me to my lord;

Say, I am merry: come to me again,

And bring me word what he doth say to thee.

² i. e. the fates join with traitors in contriving thy destruction.

A C T III.

S C E N E I.

The Street, and thenThe Capitol: the Senate sitting.

Flourish. Enter Cæsar, Brutus, Cassius, Casca, Decius, Metellus, Trebonius, Cinna, Antony, Lepidus, Artemidorus, Popilius, Publius, and the Soothsayer.

Cæs. THE ides of March are come.

Sooth. Ay, Cæsar, but not gone.

Art. Hail, Cæsar! Read this schedule.

Dec. Trebonius doth desire you to o'er-read, At your best leisure, this his humble suit. [suit]

Art. O, Cæsar, read mine first; for mine's a That touches Cæsar nearer: Read it, great Cæsar.

Cæs. What touches us ourself, shall be last serv'd.

Art. Delay not, Cæsar; read it instantly.

Cæs. What, is the fellow mad?

Pub. Sirrah, give place.

Cæs. What urge you your petitions in the street? Come to the Capitol.

[Cæsar enters the Capitol, the rest following.]

Pop. I wish your enterprize to-day may thrive.

Cæs. What enterprize, Popilius?

Pop. Fare you well.

Bru. What said Popilius Læna? [thrive.]

Cæs. He wish'd, to-day our enterprize might I fear, our purpose is discover'd. [him.]

Bru. Look, how he makes to Cæsar: Mark

Cæs. Casca, be sudden, for we fear prevention. Brutus, what shall be done? If this be known, Cassius, or Cæsar, never shall turn back, For I will slay myself.

Bru. Cassius, be constant:

Popilius Læna speaks not of our purposes; For, look, he smiles, and Cæsar doth not change.

Cæs. Trebonius knows his time; for, look you, Brutus,

He draws Mark Antony out of the way.

[Exeunt Ant. and Treb.]

Dec. Where is Metellus Cimber? Let him go, And presently prefer his suit to Cæsar. [him.]

Bru. He is addrest¹: press near, and second

Cin. Casca, you are the first that rear your hand.

Cæs. Are we all ready? What is now amiss, That Cæsar, and his senate, must redress?

Met. Most high, most mighty, and most puissant Cæsar,

Metellus Cimber throws before thy seat [Kneeling.] An humble heart:—

Cæs. I must prevent thee, Cimber.

These couchings, and these lowly courtesies, Might fire the blood of ordinary men; And turn pre-ordinance², and first decree,

Into the lane³ of children. Be not fond, To think that Cæsar bears such rebel blood, That will be thaw'd from the true quality With that which melteth fools; I mean, sweet words,

Low-crooked cur'tsies, and base spaniel fawning. Thy brother by decree is banished; If thou dost bend, and pray, and fawn, for him, I spurn thee like a cur out of my way.

Know, Cæsar doth not wrong; nor without cause Will he be satisfied.

Met. Is there no voice more worthy than my own,

To sound more sweetly in great Cæsar's ear, For the repealing of my banish'd brother?

Bru. I kiss thy hand, but not in flattery, Cæsar; Desiring thee, that Publius Cimber may Have an immediate freedom of repeal.

Cæs. What, Brutus!

Cas. Pardon, Cæsar; Cæsar, pardon:

As low as to thy foot doth Cassius fall, To beg enfranchisement for Publius Cimber.

Cæs. I could be well mov'd, if I were as you; If I could pray to move, prayers would move me:

But I am constant as the northern star, Of whose true-fixt, and resting quality, There is no fellow in the firmament.

The skies are painted with unnumber'd sparks, They are all fire, and every one doth shine;

But there's but one in all doth hold his place:

So, in the world; 'Tis furnish'd well with men, And men are flesh and blood, and apprehensive⁴;

Yet, in the number, I do know but one That unassailable holds on his rank,

Unshak'd of motion: and, that I am he,

Let me a little shew it, even in this;

That I was constant Cimber should be banish'd, And constant do remain to keep him so.

Cin. O Cæsar,—

Cæs. Hence! Wilt thou lift up Olympus?

Dec. Great Cæsar,—

Cæs. Doth not Brutus bootless kneel?

Casca. Speak, hands, for me.

[They stab Cæsar.]

Cæs. Et tu, Brute?—Then fall, Cæsar!

[Dies.]

Cin. Liberty! Freedom! Tyranny is dead!—Run hence, proclaim, cry it about the streets.

Cæs. Some to the common pulpits, and cry out, "Liberty, freedom, and enfranchisement!"

Bru. People, and senators! be not affrighted; Fly not; stand still:—ambition's debt is paid.

Casca. Go to the pulpit, Brutus.

Dec. And Cassius too.

Bru. Where's Publius?

¹ i.e. he is ready. ² Pre-ordinance, for ordinance already established. ³ Dr. Johnson proposes to read, "the law of children. That is, change pre-ordinance and decree into the law of children; into such slight determinations as every start of will would alter." ⁴ i.e. susceptible of fear, or other passions.

Cin. Here, quite confounded with this mutiny.

Met. Stand fast together, lest some friend of Should chance—— [Cæsar's]

Bru. Talk not of standing:—Publius, good cheer;

There is no harm intended to your person,
Nor to no Roman else¹: so tell them, Publius.

Cas. And leave us, Publius; lest that the people,
Rushing on us, should do your agesome mischief.

Bru. Do so;—and let no man abide this deed,
But we the doers.

Re-enter Trebonius.

Cas. Where is Antony?

Tre. Fled to his house amaz'd:
Men, wives, and children, stare, cry out, and run,
As it were dooms-day.

Bru. Fates! we will know your pleasures:
That we shall die, we know; 'tis but the time,
And drawing days out, that men stand upon.

Cas. Why, he that cuts off twenty years of life,
Cuts off so many years of fearing death.

Bru. Grant that, and then is death a benefit:
So are we Cæsar's friends, that have abridg'd
His time of fearing death.—Stoop, Romans, stoop,

And let us bathe our hands in Cæsar's blood
Up to the elbows, and besmear our swords:
Then walk we forth, even to the market-place:
And, waving our red weapons o'er our heads,
Let's all cry, Peace! Freedom! and Liberty!

Cas. Stoop then, and wash.—How many ages
hence,

Shall this our lofty scene be acted over,
In states unborn, and accents yet unknown?

Bru. How many times shall Cæsar bleed in sport,
That now on Pompey's basis lies along,
No worthier than the dust?

Cas. So oft as that shall be,
So often shall the knot of us be call'd
The men that gave their country liberty.

Dec. What, shall we forth?

Cas. Ay, every man away:
Brutus shall lead; and we will grace his heels
With the most boldest and best hearts of Rome.

Enter a Servant.

Bru. Soft, who comes here? A friend of Antony's. [kneel;

Serv. Thus, Brutus, did my master bid me
Thus did Mark Antony bid me fall down;
And, being prostrate, thus he bade me say,
Brutus is noble, wise, valiant, and honest;
Cæsar was mighty, bold, royal, and loving:
Say, I love Brutus, and I honour him;
Say, I fear'd Cæsar, honour'd him, and lov'd him.

If Brutus will vouchsafe, that Antony
May safely come to him, and be resolv'd
How Cæsar hath deserv'd to lie in death,
Mark Antony shall not love Cæsar dead
So well as Brutus living; but will follow
The fortunes and affairs of noble Brutus,
Thorough the hazards of this untrod state,

With all true faith. So says my master Antony.

Bru. Thy master is a wise and valiant Roman;
I never thought him worse.

Tell him, so please him come unto this place,
He shall be satisfied; and, by my honour,
Depart untouch'd.

Serv. I'll fetch him presently. [Exit Servant.

Bru. I know, that we shall have him well to friend.

Cas. I wish we may: but yet have I a mind,
That fears him much; and my misgiving still Falls shrewdly to the purpose.

Re-enter Antony.

Bru. But here comes Antony.—Welcome,
Mark Antony.

Ant. O mighty Cæsar! Dost thou lie so low?
Are all thy conquests, glories, triumphs, spoils,
Shrunk to this little measure?—Fare thee well.—
I know not, gentlemen, what you intend,
Who else must be let blood, who else is rank²:
If I myself, there is no hour so fit
As Cæsar's death's hour; nor no instrument
Of half that worth, as those your swords, made
rich

With the most noble blood of all this world.
I do beseech ye, if you bear me hard, [smoke,
Now, whilst your purpled hands do reek and Fulfil your pleasure. Live a thousand years,
I shall not find myself so apt to die:

No place will please me so, no mean of death,
As here by Cæsar, and by you cut off,
The choice and master spirits of this age.

Bru. O Antony! beg not your death of us.
Though now we must appear bloody and cruel,
As, by our hands, and this our present act,
You see we do: yet see you but our hands,
And this the bleeding business they have done;
Our hearts you see not, they are pitiful;
And pity to the general wrong of Rome
(As fire drives out fire, so pity, pity)

Hath done this deed on Cæsar. For your part,
To you our swords have leaden points, Mark Antony:

Our arms, in strength of malice, and our hearts,
Of brother's temper, do receive you in,
With all kind love, good thoughts, and reverence³.

Cas. Your voice shall be as strong as any man's,
In the disposing of new dignities.

Bru. Only be patient, 'till we have appeas'd
The multitude, beside themselves with fear,
And then we will deliver you the cause,
Why I, that did love Cæsar when I struck him,
Have thus proceeded.

Ant. I doubt not of your wisdom.

Let each man render me his bloody hand:
First, Marcus Brutus, will I shake with you;—
Next, Caius Cassius, do I take your hand;—
Now, Decius Brutus, yours;—now yours, Metellus;—

Yours, Cinna;—and, my valiant Casca, yours;—

¹ This use of two negatives, not to make an affirmative, but to deny more strongly, is common to our ancient writers. ² i. e. who else is grown too high for the public safety. ³ Brutus' meaning is, Antony, our arms, strong in the deed of malice they have just perform'd, and our hearts, united like those of brothers in the action, are yet open to receive you with all possible affection.

Though last, not least in love, yours, good Trebonius.

Gentlemen, all, alas! what shall I say?

My credit now stands on such slippery ground,
That one of two bad ways you must conceit me,
Either a coward, or a flatterer.—

That I did love thee, Cæsar, O, 'tis true;

If then thy spirit look upon us now,

Shall it not grieve thee, dearer than thy death,

To see thy Antony making his peace,

Shaking the bloody fingers of thy foes,

Most noble! in the presence of thy corse?

Had I as many eyes as thou hast wounds,

Weeping as fast as they stream forth thy blood,

It would become me better, than to close

In terms of friendship with thine enemies.

Pardon me, Julius!—Here wast thou bay'd, brave hart;

Here didst thou fall; and here thy hunters stand,

Sign'd in thy spoil, and crimson'd in thy lethe¹.

O world! thou wast the forest to this hart;

And, this, indeed, O world, the heart of thee.—

How like a deer, stricken by many princes,
Dost thou here lie?

Cas. Mark Antony,——

Ant. Pardon me, Caius Cassius:

The enemies of Cæsar shall say this;

Then, in a friend, it is cold modesty.

Cas. I blame you not for praising Cæsar so;

But what compact mean you to have with us?

Will you be prick'd in number of our friends;

Or shall we on, and not depend on you? [indeed,

Ant. Therefore I took your hands; but was,

Sway'd from the point, by looking down on Cæsar.

Friends am I with you all, and love you all;

Upon this hope, that you shall give me reasons,

Why, and wherein, Cæsar was dangerous.

Bru. Or else were this a savage spectacle:

Our reasons are so full of good regard,

That were you, Antony, the son of Cæsar,

You should be satisfied.

Ant. That's all I seek:

And am moreover suitor, that I may

Produce his body to the market-place;

And in the pulpit, as becomes a friend,

Speak in the order of his funeral.

Bru. You shall, Mark Antony.

Cas. Brutus, a word with you.——

You know not what you do; Do not consent, [Aside.

That Antony speak in his funeral:

Know you how much the people may be mov'd

By that which he will utter?

Bru. By your pardon;—

I will myself into the pulpit first,

And shew the reason of our Cæsar's death:

What Antony shall speak, I will protest

He speaks by leave and by permission;

And that we are contented, Cæsar shall

Have all true rites and lawful ceremonies.

It shall advantage more than do us wrong.

Cas. I know not what may fall: I like it not.

Bru. Mark Antony, here, take you Cæsar's body.

You shall not in your funeral speech blame us,
But speak all good you can devise of Cæsar;

And say, you do't by our permission;

Else shall you not have any hand at all

About his funeral: And you shall speak

In the same pulpit whereto I am going,

After my speech is ended.

Ant. Be it so;

I do desire no more.

Bru. Prepare the body then, and follow us.

[Exeunt Conspirators.

Manet Antony.

Ant. O, pardon me, thou bleeding piece of earth,

That I am meek and gentle with these butchers!

Thou art the ruins of the noblest man,

That ever lived in the tide² of times.

Woe to the hand that shed this costly blood!

Over thy wounds now do I prophesy,—

Which, like dumb mouths, do ope their ruby lips,

To beg the voice and utterance of my tongue;—

A curse shall light upon the limbs³ of men;

Domestic fury, and fierce civil strife,

Shall cumber all the parts of Italy;

Blood and destruction shall be so in use,

And dreadful objects so familiar,

That mothers shall but smile, when they behold

Their infants quarter'd with the hands of war;

All pity choak'd with custom of fell deeds;

And Cæsar's spirit, ranging for revenge,

With Atè by his side, come hot from hell,

Shall in these confines, with a monarch's voice,

Cry, *Havock*⁴, and let slip the dogs of war;

That this foul deed shall smell above the earth

With carrion men, groaning for burial,

Enter a Servant.

You serve Octavius Cæsar, do you not?

Serv. I do, Mark Antony.

Ant. Cæsar did write for him, to come to Rome.

Serv. He did receive his letters, and is coming;

And bid me say to you by word of mouth,—

O Cæsar!— [Seeing the body.

Ant. Thy heart is big; get thee apart and weep,

Passion, I see, is catching; for mine eyes,

Seeing those beads of sorrow stand in thine,

Began to water. Is thy master coming?

Serv. He lies to-night within seven leagues of Rome, [hath chanc'd:

Ant. Post back with speed, and tell him what

Here is a mourning Rome, a dangerous Rome,

No Rome of safety for Octavius yet;

Hie hence, and tell him so. Yet, stay a while;

Thou shalt not back, 'till I have borne this corse

Into the market-place; there shall I try,

In my oration, how the people take

The cruel issue of these bloody men;

According to the which, thou shalt discourse

To young Octavius of the state of things.

Lend me your hand. [Exeunt, with Cæsar's body.

S C E N E II.

The Forum.

Enter Brutus, and Cassius, with the Plebeians.

Pleb. We will be satisfied; let us be satisfied.

¹ Lethe was a common French word, signifying death or destruction, from the Latin lethum, and used in that sense by many of the old translators of novels. ² i. e., the course of times. ³ Dr. Johnson proposes to read, "these lymnis of men;" that is, these bloodhounds of men. ⁴ See note ¹, p. 722.

Bru. Then follow me, and give me audience,
friends.—

Cassius, go you into the other street,
And part the numbers.—

Those that will hear me speak, let them stay here;
Those that will follow Cassius, go with him;
And public reasons shall be rendered
Of Cæsar's death.

1 Pleb. I will hear Brutus speak. [reasons,

2 Pleb. I will hear Cassius; and compare their
When severally we hear them rendered.

[Exit Cassius, with some of the Plebeians:
Brutus goes into the rostrum.

3 Pleb. The noble Brutus is ascended: Silence!

Bru. Be patient 'till the last.

Romans, countrymen, and lovers! hear me for my cause; and be silent, that you may hear: believe me for mine honour; and have respect to mine honour, that you may believe: censure me in your wisdom; and awake your senses, that you may the better judge. If there be any in this assembly, any dear friend of Cæsar's, to him I say, that Brutus' love to Cæsar was no less than his. If then that friend demand, why Brutus rose against Cæsar, this is my answer,—Not that I lov'd Cæsar less, but that I lov'd Rome more. Had you rather Cæsar were living, and die all slaves; than that Cæsar were dead, to live all free men? As Cæsar lov'd me, I weep for him; as he was fortunate, I rejoice at it; as he was valiant, I honour him: but, as he was ambitious, I slew him:
There are tears, for his love; joy, for his fortune;
honour, for his valour; and death, for his ambition. Who is here so base, that would be a bond-man? If any, speak; for him have I offended.
Who is here so rude, that would not be a Roman?
If any, speak; for him have I offended. Who is here so vile, that will not love his country? If any, speak; for him have I offended. I pause for a reply.

All. None, Brutus, none.

Bru. Then none have I offended. I have done no more to Cæsar, than you shall do to Brutus.
The question of his death is enroll'd in the Capitol:
his glory not extenuated, wherein he was worthy; nor his offences enforc'd, for which he suffered death.

Enter Mark Antony, &c. with Cæsar's body.

Here comes his body, mourn'd by Mark Antony:
who, though he had no hand in his death, shall receive the benefit of his dying, a place in the commonwealth; As which of you shall not?
With this I depart; That, as I slew my best lover for the good of Rome, I have the same dagger for myself, when it shall please my country to need my death.

All. Live, Brutus, live! live! [house.

1 Pleb. Bring him with triumph home unto his

2 Pleb. Give him a statue with his ancestors.

3 Pleb. Let him be Cæsar.

4 Pleb. Cæsar's better parts

Shall be crowned in Brutus.

1 Pleb. We'll bring him to his house with shouts and clamours.

Bru. My countrymen,—

2 Pleb. Peace; silence! Brutus speaks.

1 Pleb. Peace, ho!

Bru. Good countrymen, let me depart alone,
And, for my sake, stay here with Antony:

Do grace to Cæsar's corpse, and grace his speech
Tending to Cæsar's glories; which Mark Antony
By our permission is allow'd to make.

I do intreat you, not a man depart,
Save I alone, 'till Antony have spoke. [Exit.

1 Pleb. Stay, ho! and let us hear Mark Antony.

3 Pleb. Let him go up into the public chair;
We'll hear him:—Noble Antony, go up.

Ant. For Brutus' sake, I am beholden to you.

4 Pleb. What does he say of Brutus?

3 Pleb. He says, for Brutus' sake,
He finds himself beholden to us all. [here.

4 Pleb. 'Twere best he speak no harm of Brutus

1 Pleb. This Cæsar was a tyrant.

3 Pleb. Nay, that's certain:

20 We are blest, that Rome is rid of him.

2 Pleb. Peace; let us hear what Antony can say.

Ant. You gentle Romans,—

All. Peace, ho! let us hear him. [your ears;

Ant. Friends, Romans, countrymen, lend me

25 I come to bury Cæsar, not to praise him.

The evil, that men do, lives after them;

The good is oft interred with their bones;

So let it be with Cæsar! The noble Brutus

Hath told you, Cæsar was ambitious:

30 If it were so, it was a grievous fault;

And grievously hath Cæsar answer'd it.

Here, under leave of Brutus, and the rest,

(For Brutus is an honourable man;

So are they all, all honourable men)

35 Come I to speak in Cæsar's funeral.

He was my friend, faithful and just to me:

But Brutus says, he was ambitious;

And Brutus is an honourable man.

He hath brought many captives home to Rome,

40 Whose ransoms did the general coffers fill:

Did this in Cæsar seem ambitious?

When that the poor have cry'd, Cæsar hath wept;

Ambition should be made of sterner stuff;

Yet Brutus says, he was ambitious;

45 And Brutus is an honourable man.

You all did see, that, on the Lupercal,

I thrice presented him a kingly crown,

Which he did thrice refuse. Was this ambition?

Yet Brutus says, he was ambitious;

50 And sure, he is an honourable man.

I speak not to disprove what Brutus spoke,

But here I am to speak what I do know.

You all did love him once, not without cause;

55 What cause with-holds you then to mourn for
him?

O judgement, thou art fled to brutish beasts,

And men have lost their reason!—Bear with me:

My heart is in the coffin there with Cæsar,

And I must pause 'till it come back to me.

60 1 Pleb. Methinks, there is much reason in his sayings.

2 Pleb. If thou consider rightly of the matter,
Cæsar has had great wrong.

3 Pleb. Has he, masters?

65 I fear, there will a worse come in his place.

- 4 Pleb. Mark'd ye his words? He would not take the crown:
Therefore, 'tis certain, he was not ambitious.
- 1 Pleb. If it be found so, some will dear abide it.
- 2 Pleb. Poor soul! his eyes are red as fire with weeping. [Antony.
- 3 Pleb. There's not a nobler man in Rome, than
- 4 Pleb. Now mark him, he begins again to speak.
- Ant.* But yesterday the word of Cæsar might
Have stood against the world: now lies he there,
And none so poor to do him reverence.
O masters! if I were dispos'd to stir
Your hearts and minds to mutiny and rage,
I should do Brutus wrong, and Cassius wrong,
Who, you all know, are honourable men:
I will not do them wrong; I rather choose
To wrong the dead, to wrong myself, and you,
Than I will wrong such honourable men.
But here's a parchment, with the seal of Cæsar,
I found it in his closet, 'tis his will:
Let but the commons hear this testament,
(Which, pardon me, I do not mean to read)
And they would go and kiss dead Cæsar's wounds,
And dip their napkins¹ in his sacred blood;
Yea, beg a hair of him for memory,
And, dying, mention it within their wills,
Bequeathing it, as a rich legacy,
Unto their issue. [Antony.
- 4 Pleb. We'll hear the will: Read it, Mark An-
- All.* The will, the will; we will hear Cæsar's will.
- Ant.* Have patience, gentle friends, I must not read it;
- It is not meet you know how Cæsar lov'd you.
You are not wood, you are not stones, but men;
And, being men, hearing the will of Cæsar,
It will inflame you, it will make you mad:
'Tis good you know not that you are his heirs;
For if you should, O, what would come of it!
- 4 Pleb. Read the will; we will hear it, Antony;
- You shall read us the will; Cæsar's will.
- Ant.* Will you be patient? Will you stay awhile?
I have o'er-shot myself, to tell you of it!
I fear, I wrong the honourable men,
Whose daggers have stabb'd Cæsar: I do fear it.
- 4 Pleb. They were traitors: Honourable men!
- All.* The will! the testament!
- 2 Pleb. They were villains, murderers: The will! read the will! [will?—
- Ant.* You will compel me then to read the
Then make a ring about the corpse of Cæsar,
And let me shew you him that made the will.
Shall I descend? And will you give me leave?
- All.* Come down.
- 2 Pleb. Descend. [He comes down from the pulpit.
- 3 Pleb. You shall have leave.
- 4 Pleb. A ring; stand round. [body.
- 1 Pleb. Stand from the hearse, stand from the
- 2 Pleb. Room for Antony;—most noble Antony.
- Ant.* Nay, press not so upon me; stand far off.
- All.* Stand back! room! bear back!
- Ant.* If you have tears, prepare to shed them now.
- You all do know this mantle: I remember
The first time ever Cæsar put it on;
'Twas on a summer's evening, in his tent;
That day he overcame the Nervii:—
- 5 Look! in this place, ran Cassius' dagger through;
See, what a rent the envious Casca made:
Through this, the well-beloved Brutus stabb'd;
And, as he pluck'd his cursed steel away,
Mark how the blood of Cæsar follow'd it;
10 As rushing out of doors, to be resolv'd
If Brutus so unkindly knock'd, or no;
For Brutus, as you know, was Cæsar's angel:
Judge, O you gods, how dearly Cæsar lov'd him!
This was the most unkindest cut of all:
- 15 For when the noble Cæsar saw him stab,
Ingratitude, more strong than traitors' arms,
Quite vanquish'd him: then burst his mighty heart;
And, in his mantle muffling up his face,
Even at the base of Pompey's statue,
20 Which all the while ran blood, great Cæsar fell.
O, what a fall was there, my countrymen!
Then I, and you, and all of us fell down,
Whilst bloody treason flourish'd over us.
O, now you weep; and, I perceive, you feel 25 The dint of pity²: these are gracious drops.
Kind souls, what, weep you, when you but behold
Our Cæsar's vesture wounded? Look you here!
Here is himself, marr'd, as you see, with traitors.
- 1 Pleb. O piteous spectacle!
- 2 Pleb. O noble Cæsar!
- 3 Pleb. O woeful day!
- 4 Pleb. O traitors, villains!
- 1 Pleb. O most bloody sight!
- 2 Pleb. We will be reveng'd: Revenge: About,—
- 35 Seek,—burn,—fire,—kill,—slay!—let not a traitor live.
- Ant.* Stay, countrymen.
- 1 Pleb. Peace there:—Hear the noble Antony.
- 2 Pleb. We'll hear him, we'll follow him, we'll 40 die with him.
- Ant.* Good friends, sweet friends, let me not stir you up
To such a sudden flood of mutiny.
They, that have done this deed, are honourable;
What private griefs they have, alas, I know not,
That made them do it; they are wise, and honour-
And will, no doubt, with reasons answer you. [able,
I come not, friends, to steal away your hearts;
I am no orator, as Brutus is:
- 50 But, as you know me all, a plain blunt man,
That love my friend; and that they know full well
That gave me public leave to speak of him.
For I have neither wit, nor words, nor worth,
Action, nor utterance, nor the power of speech,
55 To stir men's blood: I only speak right on;
I tell you that, which you yourselves do know;
Shew you sweet Cæsar's wounds, poor, poor dumb mouths!
- And bid them speak for me; But were I Brutus,
And Brutus Antony, there were an Antony
60 Would ruffle up your spirits, and put a tongue

¹ i. e. their handkerchiefs.—Napery was the ancient term for all kinds of linen. ² i. e. the impression of pity.

In every wound of Cæsar, that should move
The stones of Rome to rise and mutiny.

All. We'll mutiny.

1 Pleb. We'll burn the house of Brutus.

3 Pleb. Away then, come, seek the conspirators.

Ant. Yet hear me, countrymen; yet hear me speak. [tony.]

All. Peace, ho! Hear Antony, most noble An-

Ant. Why, friends, you go to do you know not what:

Wherein hath Cæsar thus deserv'd your loves?

Alas, you know not:—I must tell you then:—

You have forgot the will I told you of.

All. Most true;—the will;—let's stay, and hear the will.

Ant. Here is the will, and under Cæsar's seal.

To every Roman citizen he gives,

To every several man, seventy-five drachmas¹.

2 Pleb. Most noble Cæsar!—We'll revenge his

3 Pleb. O royal Cæsar! [death.]

Ant. Hear me with patience.

All. Peace, ho!

Ant. Moreover, he hath left you all his walks,
His private arbours, and new planted orchards,

On this side Tiber; he hath left them you,

And to your heirs for ever; common pleasures,

To walk abroad, and recreate yourselves.

Here was a Cæsar! When comes such another?

1 Pleb. Never, never:—Come, away, away:

We'll burn his body in the holy place,

And with the brands fire the traitor's houses.

Take up the body.

2 Pleb. Go, fetch fire.

3 Pleb. Pluck down benches.

4 Pleb. Pluck down forms, windows, any thing.

[Exeunt Plebeians, with the body.]

Ant. Now let it work: Mischief, thou art afoot.

Take thou what course thou wilt!—How now,
fellow?

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Sir, Octavius is already come to Rome.

Ant. Where is he?

Serv. He and Lepidus are at Cæsar's house.

Ant. And thither will I straight to visit him:

He comes upon a wish. Fortune is merry,

And in this mood will give us any thing.

Serv. I heard him say, Brutus and Cassius
Are rid like madmen through the gates of Rome.

Ant. Belike, they had some notice of the people,
How I had mov'd them. Bring me to Octavius.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.

A Street.

Enter Cinna the Poet, and after him the Plebeians.

Cin. I dreamt to night, that I did feast with
And things unluckily charge my fantasy: [Cæsar,
I have no will to wander forth of doors,

Yet something leads me forth.

1 Pleb. What is your name?

2 Pleb. Whither are you going?

3 Pleb. Where do you dwell?

4 Pleb. Are you a married man, or a bachelor?

2 Pleb. Answer every man directly.

1 Pleb. Ay, and briefly.

4 Pleb. Ay, and wisely.

3 Pleb. Ay, and truly, you were best.

Cin. What is my name? Whither am I going?

Where do I dwell? Am I a married man, or a bachelor? Then to answer every man directly, and briefly, wisely, and truly. Wisely I say, I am a bachelor.

2 Pleb. That's as much as to say, they are fools that marry:—You'll bear me a bang for that, I fear. Proceed; directly.

Cin. Directly, I am going to Cæsar's funeral,

1 Pleb. As a friend, or an enemy?

Cin. As a friend.

2 Pleb. That matter is answer'd directly.

4 Pleb. For your dwelling,—briefly.

Cin. Briefly, I dwell by the Capitol.

3 Pleb. Your name, sir, truly.

Cin. Truly, my name is Cinna.

1 Pleb. Tear him to pieces, he's a conspirator.

Cin. I am Cinna the poet, I am Cinna the poet.

4 Pleb. Tear him for his bad verses, tear him for his bad verses.

Cin. I am not Cinna the conspirator.

4 Pleb. It is no matter, his name's Cinna;
pluck but his name out of his heart, and turn him going.

3 Pleb. Tear him, tear him. Come, brands, ho! firebrands. To Brutus' and to Cassius', burn
all. Some to Decius' house, and some to Casca's;
some to Ligarius'! away; go. [Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.

On a small Island near Mutina².

Enter Antony, Octavius, and Lepidus.

Ant. THESSE many then shall die; their names are prick'd. [Lepidus?]

Octu. Your brother too must die; Consent you,

Lep. I do consent.

Octa. Prick him down, Antony.

Lep. Upon condition Publius³ shall not live,
Who is your sister's son, Mark Antony. [him.]

Ant. He shall not live; look, with a spot I damn⁴
But, Lepidus, go you to Cæsar's house;

³ Lucius, not Publius, was the person

⁴ i. e. condemn him.

Fetch the will hither, and we shall determine
How to cut off some charge in legacies.

Lep. What, shall I find you here?

Octa. Or here, or at the Capitol. [Exit Lepidus.]

Ant. This is a slight unmeritable man,
Meet to be sent on errands: Is it fit,
The three-fold world divided, he should stand
One of the three to share it?

Octa. So you thought him;
And took his voice who should be prick'd to die,
In our black sentence and proscription.

Ant. Octavius, I have seen more days than you:
And though we lay these honours on this man,
To ease ourselves of divers slanderous loads,
He shall but bear them as the ass bears gold,
To groan and sweat under the business,
Either led or driven, as we point the way;
And having brought our treasure where we will,
Then take we down his load, and turn him off,
Like to the empty ass, to shake his ears,
And graze in commons.

Octa. You may do your will;
But he's a try'd and valiant soldier.

Ant. So is my horse, Octavius; and, for that,
I do appoint him store of provender.
It is a creature that I teach to fight,
To wind, to stop, to run directly on;
His corporal motion govern'd by my spirit.
And, in some taste, is Lepidus but so;
He must be taught, and train'd, and bid go forth:
A barren-spirited fellow; one that feeds
On objects, arts, and imitations;
Which, out of use, and stal'd by other men,
Begin his fashion: Do not talk of him,
But as a property. And now, Octavius,
Listen great things.—Brutus and Cassius
Are levying powers: we must straight make head:
Therefore let our alliance be combin'd, [out;
Our best friends made, and our best means stretch'd
And let us presently go sit in council,
How covert matters may be best disclos'd,
And open perils surest answered.

Octa. Let us do so: for we are at the stake,
And bay'd about with many enemies;
And some, that smile, have in their hearts, I fear,
Millions of mischief. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

Before Brutus' Tent, in the Camp near Sardis.

Drum. Enter Brutus, Lucilius, and Soldiers:
Titinius and Pindarus meeting them.

Bru. Stand, ho!

Luc. Give the word, ho! and stand.

Bru. What now, Lucilius? is Cassius near?

Luc. He is at hand; and Pindarus is come
To do you salutation from his master.

Bru. He greets me well.—Your master, Pindarus,
In his own change, or by ill officers,
Hath given me some worthy cause to wish
Things done, undone: but, if he be at hand,
I shall be satisfied.

Pin. I do not doubt,

But that my noble master will appear
Such as he is, full of regard, and honour.

Bru. He is not doubted.—A word, Lucilius;—
How he receiv'd you, let me be resolv'd.

Luc. With courtesy, and with respect enough;
But not with such familiar instances,
Nor with such free and friendly conference,
As he hath us'd of old.

Bru. Thou hast describ'd
A hot friend cooling: Ever note, Lucilius,
When love begins to sicken and decay,
It useth an enforced ceremony.

There are no tricks in plain and simple faith:
But hollow men, like horses hot at hand,
Make gallant shew and promise of their mettle;
But when they should endure the bloody spur,
They fall their crests, and, like deceitful jades,
Sink in the trial. Comes his army on?

Luc. They mean this night in Sardis to be quarter'd;

The greater part, the horse in general,
Are come with Cassius. [March within.]

Bru. Hark, he is arriv'd:—
March gently on to meet him.

Enter Cassius, and Soldiers.

Cas. Stand, ho!

Bru. Stand, ho! Speak the word along.

Within. Stand.

Within. Stand.

Within. Stand.
Cas. Most noble brother, you have done me wrong. [mies?

Bru. Judge me, you gods! Wrong I mine ene-
And, if not so, how should I wrong a brother?

Cas. Brutus, this sober form of yours hides
And when you do them— [wrongs;

Bru. Cassius, be content,
Speak your griefs softly,—I do know you well:—
Before the eyes of both our armies here,
Which should perceive nothing but love from us,
Let us not wrangle: Bid them move away;
Then in my tent, Cassius, enlarge your griefs,
And I will give you audience.

Cas. Pindarus,
Bid our commanders lead their charges off
A little from this ground.

Bru. Lucilius, do you the like; and let no man
Come to our tent, till we have done our conference.
Let Lucius and Titinius guard our door. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.

The inside of Brutus' Tent.

Enter Brutus, and Cassius.

Cas. That you have wrong'd me, doth appear in this:

You have condemn'd and noted Lucius Pella,
For taking bribes here of the Sardians;
Wherein, my letter, praying on his side,
Because I knew the man, was slighted off. [case.

Bru. You wrong'd yourself, to write in such a
Cas. In such a time as this, it is not meet
That every nice² offence should bear his comment.

² i. e. small trifling offence.

Bru. Let me tell you, Cassius, you yourself
Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm;
To sell and mart your offices for gold,
To undeservers.

Cas. I an itching palm?
You know, that you are Brutus that speak this,
Or, by the gods, this speech were else your last.

Bru. The name of Cassius honourst this corruption,
And chastisement doth therefore hide his head.

Cas. Chastisement! [member!]

Bru. Remember March, the ides of March re-
Did not great Julius bleed for justice' sake?

What villain touch'd his body, that did stab,
And not for justice? What, shall one of us,

That struck the foremost man of all this world,
But for supporting robbers; shall we now

Contaminate our fingers with base bribes?

And sell the mighty space of our large honours,
For so much trash, as may be grasped thus?—

I had rather be a dog, and bay the moon¹,
Than such a Roman.

Cas. Brutus, bay not me,
I'll not endure it: you forget yourself,

To hedge me in²; I am a soldier, I,
Older in practice, abler than yourself

To make conditions³.

Bru. Go to; you are not, Cassius.

Cas. I am.

Bru. I say, you are not.

Cas. Urge me no more, I shall forget myself;
Have mind upon your health, tempt me no further.

Bru. Away, slight man!

Cas. Is't possible?

Bru. Hear me, for I will speak.

Must I give way and room to your rash choler?
Shall I be frighted when a madman stares?

Cas. O ye gods! ye gods! Must I endure all this?

Bru. All this? ay, more: Fret, 'till your proud heart break;

Go, shew your slaves how cholerick you are,
And make your bondmen tremble. Must I budge?

Must I observe you? Must I stand and crouch
Under your testy humour? By the gods,

You shall digest the venom of your spleen,
Though it do split you: for, from this day forth,

I'll use you for my mirth, yea, for my laughter,
When you are waspish.

Cas. Is it come to this?

Bru. You say you are a better soldier:
Let it appear so; make your vaunting true,

And it shall please me well: For mine own part,
I shall be glad to learn of noble men. [Brutus:]

Cas. You wrong me every way, you wrong me,
I said, an elder soldier, not a better:

Did I say, better?

Bru. If you did, I care not. [mov'd me.]

Cas. When Cæsar liv'd, he durst not thus have

Bru. Peace, peace; you durst not so have

Cas. I durst not? [tempted him.]

5 Bru. No.

Cas. What? durst not tempt him?

Bru. For your life you durst not.

Cas. Do not presume too much upon my love,
I may do that I shall be sorry for. [for.]

10 Bru. You have done that you should be sorry

There is no terror, Cassius, in your threats;

For I am arm'd so strong in honesty,

That they pass by me; as the idle wind,

Which I respect not. I did send to you

15 For certain sums of gold, which you deny'd me;—

For I can raise no money by vile means:

By heaven, I had rather coin my heart,

And drop my blood for drachmas, than to wring
From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash,

20 By any indirection. I did send

To you for gold to pay my legions, [sius?]

Which you deny'd me: Was that done like Cas-
Should I have answered Caius Cassius so?

25 When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous,

To lock such rascal counters from his friends,

Be ready, gods, with all your thunderbolts,
Dash him to pieces!

Cas. I deny'd you not.

Bru. You did.

30 Cas. I did not:—he was but a fool,
That brought my answer back.—Brutus hath riv'd my heart:

A friend should bear his friend's infirmities,
But Brutus makes mine greater than they are.

35 Bru. I do not, 'till you practise them on me.

Cas. You love me not.

Bru. I do not like your faults.

Cas. A friendly eye could never see such faults.

40 Bru. A flatterer's would not, though they do
As huge as high Olympus. [appear]

Cas. Come, Antony, and young Octavius, come,

Revenge yourselves alone on Cassius,

For Cassius is aweary of the world:

Hated by one he loves; brav'd by his brother;

45 Check'd like a bondman; all his faults observ'd,

Set in a note-book, learn'd, and conn'd by rote,

To cast into my teeth. O, I could weep

My spirit from mine eyes!—There is my dagger,

And here my naked breast; within, a heart

50 Dearer than Plutus' mine, richer than gold:

If that thou be'st a Roman, take it forth;

I, that deny'd thee gold, will give my heart:

Strike, as thou didst at Cæsar; for, I know, [better]

When thou didst hate him worst, thou lov'dst him

55 Than ever thou lov'dst Cassius.

¹ Warburton comments on this passage thus: "The poets and common people, who generally think and speak alike, suppose the dog bays the moon out of envy to its brightness; an allusion to this notion makes the beauty of the passage in question: Brutus hereby insinuates a covert accusation against his friend, that it was only envy at Cæsar's glory which set Cassius on conspiring against him; and ancient history seems to countenance such a charge. Cassius understood him in this sense, and with much conscious pride retorts the charge by a like insinuation:—"Brutus, bay not me."

² i. e. to limit my authority by your direction or censure.

³ That is, to know on what terms it

Bru. Sheath your dagger:
Be angry when you will, it shall have scope;
Do what you will, dishonour shall be humour.
O Cassius, you are yoked with a lamb,
That carries anger, as the flint bears fire,
Who, much enforced, shews a hasty spark,
And straight is cold again.

Cas. Hath Cassius liv'd
To be but mirth and laughter to his Brutus,
When grief, and blood ill-temper'd, vexeth him?

Bru. When I spoke that, I was ill-temper'd too.

Cas. Do you confess so much? Give me your

Bru. And my heart too. [hand.

Cas. O Brutus!—

Bru. What's the matter?

Cas. Have not you love enough to bear with me,
When that rash humour, which my mother gave
Makes me forgetful? [me,

Bru. Yes, Cassius; and, from henceforth,
When you are over-earnest with your Brutus,
He'll think your mother chides, and leave you so.

[A noise within.

Poet. [within.] Let me go in to see the generals;
There is some grudge between them, 'tis not meet
They be alone.

Luc. [within.] You shall not come to them.

Poet. [within.] Nothing but death shall stay me.

Enter Poet.

Cas. How now? What's the matter? [mean?

Poet. For shame, you generals; What do you Love, and be friends, as two such men should be,
For I have seen more years, I am sure, than ye.

Cas. Ha, ha; how vilely doth this cynic rhyme!

Bru. Get you hence, sirrah; saucy fellow, hence.

Cas. Bear with him, Brutus; 'tis his fashion.

Bru. I'll know his humour, when he knows his time: [fools?—

What should the wars do with these jigging
Companion', hence.

Cas. Away, away, begone. [Exit Poet.

Enter Lucilius, and Titinius.

Bru. Lucilius and Titinius, bid the commanders
Prepare to lodge their companies to-night.

Cas. And come yourselves, and bring Messala
with you

Immediately to us. [Exeunt Lucilius and Titinius.

Bru. Lucius, a bowl of wine.

Cas. I did not think, you could have been so angry.

Bru. O Cassius, I am sick of many griefs.

Cas. Of your philosophy you make no use,
If you give place to accidental evils. [dead.

Bru. No man bears sorrow better:—Portia is Cas. Ha! Portia?

Bru. She is dead.

[so?—

Cas. How 'scap'd I killing, when I cross'd you
O insupportable and touching loss!—
Upon what sickness?

Bru. Impatient of my absence;
And grief, that young Octavius with Mark Antony
Have made themselves so strong;—for with her death

That tidings came: With this she fell distract.
And, her attendants absent, swallow'd fire².

Cas. And dy'd so?

Bru. Even so.

Cas. O ye immortal gods!

Enter Lucius, with wine, and tapers.

Bru. Speak no more of her.—Give me a bowl of wine:—

In this I bury all unkindness, Cassius. [Drinks.

Cas. My heart is thirsty for that noble pledge:—
Fill, Lucius, 'till the wine o'er-swell the cup;
I cannot drink too much of Brutus' love.

Re-enter Titinius, and Messala.

Bru. Come in, Titinius:—Welcome, good
Messala.—

Now sit we close about this taper here,
And call in question our necessities.

Cas. Portia! art thou gone?

Bru. No more, I pray you.—

Messala, I have here received letters,
That young Octavius, and Mark Antony,
Come down upon us with a mighty power,
Bending their expedition towards Philippi.

Mes. Myself have letters of the self-same tenour.

Bru. With what addition?

Mes. That by proscription, and bills of outlawry,
Octavius, Antony, and Lepidus,
Have put to death a hundred senators.

Bru. Therein our letters do not well agree;
Mine speak of seventy senators, that dy'd
By their proscriptions, Cicero being one.

Cas. Cicero one.

Mes. Cicero is dead,

And by that order of proscription.—

Had you your letters from your wife, my lord?

Bru. No, Messala.

Mes. Nor nothing in your letters writ of her?

Bru. Nothing, Messala.

Mes. That, methinks, is strange.

Bru. Why ask you? Hear you aught of her in yours?

Mes. No, my lord.

Bru. Now, as you are a Roman, tell me true.

Mes. Then like a Roman bear the truth I tell:
For certain she is dead, and by strange manner.

Bru. Why, farewell, Portia.—We must die,
Messala:

With meditating that she must die once,

I have the patience to endure it now. [dure.

Mes. Even so great men great losses should en-

Cas. I have as much of this in art as you,

But yet my nature could not bear it so. [think

Bru. Well, to our work alive. What do you

Of marching to Philippi presently?

Cas. I do not think it good.

Bru. Your reason?

Cas. This it is:

'Tis better, that the enemy seek us:

So shall he waste his means, weary his soldiers,
Doing himself offence; whilst we, lying still,
Are full of rest, defence, and nimbleness.

¹ i. e. fellow. ² This circumstance is taken from Plutarch, and is also mentioned by Val. Maximus. Pliny, however, reports her to have died at Rome of a lingering illness, while Brutus was abroad.

Bru. Good reasons must, of force, give place to better.

The people, 'twixt Philippi, and this ground,
Do stand but in a forc'd affection;
For they have grudg'd us contribution:
The enemy, marching along by them,
By them shall make a fuller number up,
Come on refresh'd, new-added, and encourag'd;
From which advantage shall we cut him off,
If at Philippi we do face him there,
These people at our back.

Cas. Hear me, good brother. [side,

Bru. Under your pardon.—You must note be-
That we have try'd the utmost of our friends,
Our legions are brim full, our cause is ripe:
The enemy increaseth every day,
We, at the height, are ready to decline.
There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life
Is bound in shallows, and in miseries.
On such a full sea are we now afloat;
And we must take the current when it serves,
Or lose our ventures.

Cas. Then, with your will, go on; we will along Ourselves, and meet them at Philippi.

Bru. The deep of night is crept upon our talk,
And nature must obey necessity;
Which we will niggard with a little rest.
There is no more to say?

Cas. No more. Good night:
Early to-morrow will we rise, and hence.

Bru. Lucius, my gown. [Exit Luc.] Farewell, good Messala;—

Good night, Titinius:—Noble, noble Cassius,
Good night, and good repose.

Cas. O my dear brother!
This was an ill beginning of the night:
Never come such division 'tween our souls!
Let it not, Brutus.

Bru. Every thing is well.

Cas. Good night, my lord.

Bru. Good night, good brother.

Tit. Mes. Good night, lord Brutus.

Bru. Farewell, every one. [Exeunt.

Re-enter Lucius, with the gown.

Give me the gown. Where is thy instrument?

Luc. Here in the tent.

Bru. What; thou speak'st drowsily?

Poor knave, I blame thee not; thou art o'erwatch'd,

Call Claudius, and some other of my men;
I'll have them sleep on cushions in my tent.

Luc. Varro, and Claudius!

Enter Varro, and Claudius.

Var. Calls my lord?

Bru. I pray you, sirs, lie in my tent, and sleep;
It may be, I shall raise you by-and-by
On business to my brother Cassius. [pleasure.

Var. So please you, we will stand and watch your
Bru. I will not have it so: lie down, good sirs;
It may be, I shall otherwise bethink me.

Look, Lucius, here's the book I sought for so;
I put it in the pocket of my gown. [me.

Luc. I was sure, your lordship did not give it

Bru. Bear with me, good boy; I am much forgetful.

Can'st thou hold up thy heavy eyes a while,
And touch thy instrument a strain or two?

5 Luc. Ay, my lord, an't please you.

Bru. It does, my boy:

I trouble thee too much, but thou art willing.

Luc. It is my duty, sir.

10 Bru. I should not urge thy duty past thy might;
I know, young bloods look for a time of rest.

Luc. I have slept, my lord, already. [again:

Bru. It was well done; and thou shalt sleep
I will not hold thee long: if I do live,

15 I will be good to thee. [Musick, and a song.
This is a sleepy tune:—O murd'rous slumber!

Lay'st thou thy leaden mace¹ upon my boy,
That playstheemusick?—Gentle knave, good night;

I will not do thee so much wrong to wake thee.—
If thou dost nod, thou break'st thy instrument;

20 I'll take it from thee: and, good boy, good night.
Let me see, let me see:—Is not the leaf turn'd down,

Where I left reading? Here it is, I think.

[He sits down to read.

Enter the Ghost of Caesar.

25 How ill this taper burns!—Ha! who comes here?
I think, it is the weakness of mine eyes
That shapes this monstrous apparition.

It comes upon me: Art thou any thing?

30 Art thou some god, some angel, or some devil,
That mak'st my blood cold, and my hair to stare?
Speak to me, what thou art.

Ghost. Thy evil spirit, Brutus.

Bru. Why com'st thou?

35 Ghost. To tell thee, thou shalt see me at Philippi.

Bru. Well; Then I shall see thee again?

Ghost. Ay, at Philippi. [Exit Ghost.

Bru. Why, I will see thee at Philippi then.—
Now I have taken heart, thou vanishest:

40 Ill spirit, I would hold more talk with thee.—
Boy! Lucius!—Varro! Claudius! Sirs, awake!
Claudius!

Luc. The strings, my lord, are false.

Bru. He thinks, he still is at the instrument.—
Lucius, awake.

Luc. My lord!

Bru. Didst thou dream, Lucius, that thou so cry'dst out?

Luc. My lord, I do not know that I did cry.

Bru. Yes, that thou didst: Didst thou see any thing?

Luc. Nothing, my lord.

Bru. Sleep again, Lucius.—Sirrah, Claudius!
Fellow thou! awake.

55 Var. My lord.

Clau. My lord.

Bru. Why did you so cry out, sirs, in your sleep?

Both. Did we, my lord?

Bru. Ay; Saw you any thing?

Var. No, my lord, I saw nothing.

Clau. Nor I, my lord. [sirs;

Bru. Go, and commend me to my brother Cas-
Bid him set on his powers betimes before,
And we will follow.

Both. It shall be done, my lord. [Exeunt.

A C T V.

S C E N E I.

The Plains of Philippi.Enter Octavius, Antony, and their Army.

Octa. NOW, Antony, our hopes are answer'd:

You said, the enemy would not come down,
But keep the hills and upper regions;
It proves not so: their battles are at hand;
They mean to warn us at Philippi here,
Answering before we do demand of them.

Ant. Tut, I am in their bosoms, and I know
Wherefore they do it: they could be content
To visit other places; and come down
With fearful bravery, thinking, by this face,
To fasten in our thoughts that they have courage;
But 'tis not so.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Prepare you, generals:
The enemy comes on in gallant shew;
Their bloody sign of battle is hung out,
And something's to be done immediately.

Ant. Octavius, lead your battle softly on,
Upon the left hand of the even field.

Octa. Upon the right hand I, keep thou the left.

Ant. Why do you cross me in this exigent?

Octa. I do not cross you; but I will do so.

[March.]

Drum. Enter Brutus, Cassius, and their Army; Lucilius, Titinius, Messala, &c.

Bru. They stand, and would have parley.

Cas. Stand fast, Titinius: We must out and talk.

Octa. Mark Antony, shall we give sign of battle?

Ant. No, Cæsar, we will answer on their charge.
Make forth, the generals would have some words.

Octa. Stir not until the signal. [men?]

Bru. Words before blows: Is it so, country-

Octa. Not that we love words better, as you do.

Bru. Good words are better than bad strokes,
Octavius.

Ant. In your bad strokes, Brutus, you give good words:

Witness the hole you made in Cæsar's heart,
Crying, Long live! hail, Cæsar!

Cas. Antony,
The posture of your blows are yet unknown;
But for your words, they rob the Hybla bees,
And leave them honeyless.

Ant. Not stingless too.

Bru. O, yes, and soundless too;
For you have stol'n their buzzing, Antony,
And, very wisely, threat before you sting.

Ant. Villains, you did not so, when your vile daggers

Hack'd one another in the sides of Cæsar:
You shew'd your teeth like apes, and fawn'd
like hounds,

And bow'd like bondmen, kissing Cæsar's feet;
Whilst damned Casca, like a cur, behind,
Struck Cæsar on the neck. O you flatterers!

Cas. Flatterers! Now, Brutus, thank yourself:
This tongue had not offended so to-day,
If Cassius might have rul'd. [us sweat,

Octa. Come, come, the cause: If arguing make
The proof of it will turn to redder drops.

Look, I draw a sword against conspirators;

10 When think you that the sword goes up again?—

Never, 'till Cæsar's three-and-twenty wounds

Be well aveng'd; or 'till another Cæsar

Have added slaughter to the sword of traitors.

Bru. Cæsar, thou can'st not die by traitor's hands,
15 Unless thou bring'st them with thee.

Octa. So I hope;
I was not born to die on Brutus' sword.

Bru. O, if thou wert the noblest of thy strain,
Young man, thou could'st not die more honour-20 able.

Cas. A pceevish school-boy, worthless of such honour,

Join'd with a masker and a reveller.

Ant. Old Cassius still!

25 Octa. Come, Antony: away.—

Defiance, traitors, hurl we in your teeth:

If you dare fight to-day, come to the field;

If not, when you have stomachs.

[Exeunt Octavius, Antony, and Army.]

Cas. Why now, blow, wind; swell, billow;
and swim, bark!

The storm is up, and all is on the hazard.

Bru. Ho, Lucilius; hark, a word with you.

[Lucilius and Messala stand forth.]

35 Luc. My lord. [Brutus speaks apart to Lucilius.

Cas. Messala.

Mes. What says my general?

Cas. Messala,

This is my birth-day; as this very day
40 Was Cassius born. Give me thy hand, Messala:

Be thou my witness, that, against my will,

As Pompey was, am I compell'd to set

Upon one battle all our liberties.

You know, that I held Epicurus strong,

45 And his opinion: now I change my mind,

And partly credit things that do presage.

Coming from Sardis, on our foremost ensign

Two mighty eagles fell; and there they perch'd,

Gorging and feeding from our soldiers' hands;

50 Who to Philippi here consorted us:

This morning are they fled away, and gone;

And, in their steads, do ravens, crows, and kites,

Fly o'er our heads, and downward look on us,

As we were sickly prey; their shadows seem

55 A canopy most fatal, under which

Our army lies, ready to give up the ghost.

Mes. Believe not so.

Cas. I but believe it partly;

For

For I am fresh of spirit, and resolv'd
To meet all perils very constantly.

Bru. Even so, Lucilius.

Cas. Now, most noble Brutus,
The gods to-day stand friendly; that we may,
Lovers, in peace, lead on our days to age!
But since the affairs of men rest still uncertain,
Let's reason with the worst that may befall.
If we do lose this battle, then is this
The very last time we shall speak together¹:
What are you then determined to do?

Bru. Even by the rule of that philosophy,
By which I did blame Cato for the death
Which he did give himself:—I know not how,
But I do find it cowardly and vile,
For fear of what might fall, so to prevent
The time of life:—arming myself with patience,
To stay the providence of some high powers,
That govern us below.

Cas. Then, if we lose this battle,
You are contented to be led in triumph
Thorough the streets of Rome? [Roman,

Bru. No, Cassius, no: think not, thou noble
That ever Brutus will go bound to Rome;
He bears too great a mind. But this same day
Must end that work, the ides of March began;
And whether we shall meet again, I know not.
Therefore our everlasting farewell take:—
For ever, and for ever, farewell, Cassius!
If we do meet again, why we shall smile;
If not, why then this parting was well made.

Cas. For ever, and for ever, farewell, Brutus!
If we do meet again, we'll smile indeed;
If not, 'tis true, this parting was well made.

Bru. Why then, lead on.—O, that a man might know

The end of this day's business, ere it come!
But it sufficeth, that the day will end,
And then the end is known.—Come, ho! away!

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.

Alarum. Enter Brutus, and Messala.

Bru. Ride, ride, Messala, ride, and give these bills

Unto the legions on the other side: [Loud alarum.

Let them set on at once; for I perceive
But cold demeanour in Octavius' wing,
And sudden push gives them the overthrow.

Ride, ride, Messala; let them all come down.
[Exeunt.

SCENE III.

Alarum. Enter Cassius, and Titinius.

Cas. O, look, Titinius, look, the villains fly!
Myself have to mine own turn'd enemy:
This ensign here of mine was turning back;
I slew the coward, and did take it from him.

Tit. O Cassius, Brutus gave the word too early:
Who, having some advantage on Octavius,
Took it too eagerly; his soldiers fell to spoil,
Whilst we by Antony are all enclos'd.

Enter Pindarus.

Pin. Fly further off, my lord, fly further off;
Mark Antony is in your tents, my lord:
Fly therefore, noble Cassius, fly far off.

5 Cas. This hill is far enough.—Look, look,
Titinius;

Are those my tents, where I perceive the fire?

Tit. They are, my lord.

Cas. Titinius, if thou lov'st me,
10 Mount thou my horse, and hide thy spurs in him,
'Till he have brought thee up to yonder troops,
And here again; that I may rest assur'd,
Whether yon troops are friend or enemy.

Tit. I will be here again, even with a thought.
[Exit.

Cas. Go, Pindarus, get thither on that hill;
My sight was ever thick; regard Titinius,
And tell me what thou not'st about the field.—
[Exit Pindarus.

20 This day I breathed first: time is come round,
And, where I did begin, there shall I end:
My life is run his compass.—Sirrah, what news?

Pind. [above.] O my lord!

Cas. What news?
25 Pind. Titinius is enclosed round about
With horsemen, that make to him on the spur;
Yet he spurs on.—Now they are almost on him;
now,

30 Titinius!—Now some 'light:—O, he 'lights too:
He's ta'en;—and, hark, they shout for joy.
[Shout.

Cas. Come down, behold no more.—
O, coward that I am, to live so long,
To see my best friend ta'en before my face!

35 Re-enter Pindarus.
Come hither, sirrah:
In Parthia did I take thee prisoner;
And then I swore thee, saving of thy life,
That whatsoever I did bid thee do, [oath;

40 Thou should'st attempt it. Come now, keep thine
Now be a freeman; and, with this good sword,
That ran thro' Caesar's bowels, search this bosom.
Stand not to answer: Here, take thou the hilts;
And when my face is cover'd, as 'tis now,
45 Guide thou the sword.—Caesar, thou art reveng'd,
Even with the sword that kill'd thee. [Dies.

Pind. So, I am free; yet would not so have been,
Durst I have done my will. O Cassius!
Far from this country Pindarus shall run,
50 Where never Roman shall take note of him. [Exit.

Re-enter Titinius, with Messala.

Mes. It is but change, Titinius; for Octavius
Is overthrown by noble Brutus' power,
As Cassius' legions are by Antony.

50 Tit. These tidings will well comfort Cassius.

Mes. Where did you leave him?

Tit. All disconsolate,
With Pindarus his bondman, on this hill.

Mes. Is that not he, that lies upon the ground?

60 Tit. He lies not like the living. O my heart!

Mes. Is not that he?

Tit. No, this was he, Messala,

¹ i.e. I am resolved in such a case to kill myself.

But Cassius is no more.—O setting sun!
As in thy red rays thou dost sink to night,
So in his red blood Cassius' day is set;
The sun of Rome is set! Our day is gone;
Clouds, dews, and dangers come; our deeds are done;

Mistrust of my success hath done this deed.

Mes. Mistrust of good success hath done this
O hateful error, melancholy's child! [deed.
Why dost thou shew to the apt thoughts of men 10
The things that are not? O error, soon conceiv'd,
Thou never com'st unto a happy birth,
But kill'st the mother that engender'd thee.

Tit. What, Pindarus! Where art thou, Pindarus?

Mes. Seek him, Titinius; whilst I go to meet 15
The noble Brutus, thrusting this report
Into his ears: I may say, thrusting it;
For piercing steel, and darts envenomed,
Shall be as welcome to the ears of Brutus,
As tidings of this sight.

Tit. Hie you, Messala,
And I will seek for Pindarus the while. [Exit Mes.
Why didst thou send me forth, brave Cassius?
Did I not meet thy friends? and did not they Put on my brows this wreath of victory,
And bid me give it thee? Didst thou not hear their shouts?

Alas, thou hast misconstrued every thing.
But hold thee, take this garland on thy brow;
Thy Brutus bid me give it thee, and I
Will do his bidding.—Brutus, come apace,
And see how I regarded Caius Cassius.—
By your leave, gods:—This is a Roman's part;
Come, Cassius' sword, and find Titinius' heart.

Alarum. Enter Brutus, Messala, young Cato,
Strato, Volumnius, and Lucilius.

Bru. Where, where, Messala, doth his body lie?

Mes. Lo, yonder: and Titinius mourning it.

Bru. Titinius' face is upward.

Cato. He is slain.

Bru. Oh Julius Cæsar, thou art mighty yet!
Thy spirit walks abroad, and turns our swords
In our own proper entrails. [Low alarums.

Cato. Brave Titinius!—

Look, whe'r he have not crown'd dead Cassius!
Bru. Are yet two Romans living such as these?—
Thou last of all the Romans, fare thee well!

It is impossible that ever Rome [tears
Should breed thy fellow.—Friends, I owe more 50
To this dead man, than you shall see me pay.—
I shall find time, Cassius, I shall find time.—

Come, therefore, and to Thassos send his body;
His funeral shall not be in our camp,
Lest it discomfort us.—Lucilius, come;—
And come, young Cato; let us to the field.—
Labeo, and Flavius, set our battles on:—

'Tis three o'clock; and, Romans, yet ere night,
We shall try fortune in a second fight. [Exeunt.

S C E N E IV.

Another Part of the Field.

Alarum. Enter Brutus, Cato, Lucilius, and others.

Bru. Yet, countrymen, O, yet, hold up your heads! [me?

Cato. What bastard doth not? Who will go with

I will proclaim my name about the field:—

I am the son of Marcus Cato, ho!

A foe to tyrants, and my country's friend;

I am the son of Marcus Cato, ho!

Enter Soldiers, and fight.

Bru. And I am Brutus, Marcus Brutus, I;
Brutus, my country's friend; know me for Brutus.

[Exit.

Luc. O young and noble Cato, art thou down?

Why, now thou dy'st as bravely as Titinius;

And may'st be honour'd being Cato's son.

1 Sold. Yield, or thou diest.

Luc. Only I yield to die:

There is so much, that thou wilt kill me straight;

[Offering money.

Kill Brutus, and be honour'd in his death.

1 Sold. We must not.—A noble prisoner!

2 Sold. Room, ho! Tell Antony, Brutus is ta'en.

1 Sold. I'll tell the news.—Here comes the general:—

Enter Antony.

Brutus is ta'en, Brutus is ta'en, my lord.

Ant. Where is he?

Luc. Safe, Antony; Brutus is safe enough:

25 I dare assure thee, that no enemy

Shall ever take alive the noble Brutus:

The gods defend him from so great a shame!

When you do find him, or alive or dead,

He will be found like Brutus, like himself.

30 Ant. This is not Brutus, friend; but, I assure you,

A prize no less in worth: keep this man safe,

Give him all kindness: I had rather have Such men my friends, than enemies. Go on,

And see whe'r Brutus be alive or dead;

And bring us word, unto Octavius' tent,

How every thing is chanc'd. [Exeunt.

S C E N E V.

Another Part of the Field.

Enter Brutus, Dardanius, Clitus, Strato, and Volumnius.

Bru. Come, poor remains of friends, rest on this rock. [lord,

Cli. Statilius shew'd the torch-light: but, my
He came not back, he is or ta'en, or slain.

Bru. Sit thee down, Clitus: Slaying is the word;
It is a deed in fashion. Hark thee, Clitus.—

[Whispering.

Cli. What I, my lord? No, not for all the world.

Bru. Peace then, no words.

Cli. I'll rather kill myself.

Bru. Hark thee, Dardanius!

Dar. Shall I do such a deed?

Cli. O, Dardanius!

Dar. O, Clitus!

55 Cli. What ill request did Brutus make to thee?

Dar. To kill him, Clitus: Look, he meditates.

Cli. Now is that noble vessel full of grief,

That it runs over even at his eyes.

Bru. Come hither, good Volumnius: list a word.

Vol. What says my lord?

Bru. Why, this, Volumnius:

The ghost of Cæsar hath appear'd to me

Two several times by night: at Sardis, once;

And, this last night, here in Philippi fields.

65 I know, my hour is come.

Vol.

Vol. Not so, my lord.

Bru. Nay, I am sure it is, Volumnius.

Thou see'st the world, Volumnius, how it goes;
Our enemies have beat us to the pit: [Alarum.

It is more worthy, to leap in ourselves,
Than tarry 'till they push us. Good Volumnius,
Thou know'st, that we two went to school together;
Even for that our love of old, I pray thee,
Hold thou my sword's hilt, whilst I run on it.

Vol. That's not an office for a friend, my lord.

[Alarum still.

Cli. Fly, fly, my lord; there is no tarrying here.

Bru. Farewell to you;—and you;—and you,
Volumnius,—

Strato, thou hast been all this while asleep;

Farewell to thee too, Strato.—Countrymen,

My heart doth joy, that yet, in all my life,

I found no man, but he was true to me.

I shall have glory by this losing day,

More than Octavius, and Mark Antony,

By this vile conquest shall attain unto.

So, fare you well at once; for Brutus' tongue

Hath almost ended his life's history; [rest,

Night hangs upon mine eyes; my bones would
That have but labour'd to attain this hour.

[Alarum. Cry within, Fly, fly, fly.

Cli. Fly, my lord, fly. [Exeunt Clitus, Dar, and Vol.

Bru. Hence; I will follow.

I pr'ythee, Strato, stay thou by thy lord:

Thou art a fellow of a good respect;

Thy life hath had some smack of honour in it:

Hold then my sword, and turn away thy face,

While I do run upon it. Wilt thou, Strato?

Stra. Give me your hand first: Fare you well, my lord.

Bru. Farewell, good Strato,—Cæsar, now be still;

I kill'd not thee with half so good a will.

[He runs on his sword, and dies.

Alarum. Retreat. Enter Octavius, Antony, Messala, Lucilius, and the Army.

5 Octa. What man is that? [master?

Mes. My master's man.—Strato, where is thy

Stra. Free from the bondage you are in, Messala;

The conquerors can but make a fire of him:

For Brutus only overcame himself,

10 And no man else hath honour by his death.

Luc. So Brutus should be found.—I thank thee,
Brutus,

That thou hast prov'd Lucilius' saying true.

Octa. All that serv'd Brutus, I will entertain them.

15 Fellow, wilt thou bestow thy time with me?

Stra. Ay, if Messala will prefer me to you.

Octa. Do so, good Messala.

Mes. How died my master, Strato?

Stra. I held the sword, and he did run on it.

20 Mes. Octavius, then take him to follow thee,

That did the latest service to my master.

Ant. This was the noblest Roman of them all;

All the conspirators, save only he,

Did that they did in envy of great Cæsar;

25 He, only, in a general honest thought,

And common good to all, made one of them.

His life was gentle; and the elements

So mix'd in him, that nature might stand up,

And say to all the world, This was a man!

30 Octa. According to his virtue let us use him,

With all respect, and rites of burial.

Within my tent his bones to-night shall lie,

Most like a soldier, order'd honourably.—

So, call the field to rest: and let's away,

35 To part the glories of this happy day. [Exeunt.

A C T I.

SCENE I.

Cleopatra's Palace at Alexandria.

Enter Demetrius, and Philo.

Phil. NAY, but this dotage of our general's O'erflows the measure: those his goodly eyes,

That o'er the files and musters of the war [turn
 Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now
 The office and devotion of their view
 Upon a tawny front: his captain's heart,
 Which in the scuffles of great fights hath burst
 The buckles on his breast, reneges¹ all temper:
 And is become the bellows and the fan,

To cool a² gypsy's lust.—Look, where they come!
Flourish. Enter Antony and Cleopatra, with their trains; Eunuchs fanning her.

Take but good note, and you shall see in him
 The triple³ pillar of the world transform'd
 Into a strumpet's fool: behold and see.

Cleo. If it be love indeed, tell me how much.

Ant. There's beggary in the love that can be reckon'd.

Cleo. I'll set a bourn⁴ how far to be belov'd.

Ant. Then must thou needs find out new heaven, new earth.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. News, my good lord, from Rome.

Ant. Grates me:—The sum⁵.

Cleo. Nay, hear them, Antony:

Fulvia, perchance, is angry; or, who knows
 If the scarce-bearded Cæsar have not sent
 His powerful mandate to you, "Do this, or this;
 10 "Take in that kingdom, and enfranchise that;
 "Perform't, or else we damn thee."

Ant. How, my love!

Cleo. Perchance,—nay, and most like,
 You must not stay here longer, your dismissal
 15 Is come from Cæsar; therefore hear it, Antony.—
 Where's Fulvia's process? Cæsar's, I would say?—
 Both?—

Call in the messengers.—As I am Ægypt's queen,
 Thou blushest, Antony; and that blood of thine
 20 Is Cæsar's homager: else so thy cheek pays shame,
 When shrill-tongu'd Fulvia scolds.—The messengers. [arch

Ant. Let Rome in Tyber melt! and the wide
 Of the rang'd empire fall! Here is my space;

¹ i. e. renounces. ² Gypsy is here used both in the original meaning for an Egyptian, and in its accidental sense for a bad woman. ³ Triple is here used improperly for third, or one of three. One of the triumvirs, one of the three masters of the world. ⁴ i. e. bound or limit. ⁵ i. e. be brief, sum thy business in a few words.

Kingdoms are clay: our dungy earth alike
Feeds beast as man: the nobleness of life
Is, to do thus; when such a mutual pair, [Embracing.]
And such a twain can do't; in which, I bind,
On pain of punishment, the world to weet¹,
We stand up peerless.

Cleo. Excellent falsehood!
Why did he marry Fulvia, and not love her?—
I'll seem the fool I am not; Antony
Will be himself.

Ant. But² stirr'd by Cleopatra.—
Now, for the love of love, and his soft hours,
Let's not confound the time with conference harsh:
There's not a minute of our lives should stretch
Without some pleasure now: What sport to-night?

Cleo. Hear the ambassadors.

Ant. Fye, wrangling queen!
Whom every thing becomes, to chide, to laugh,
To weep; whose every passion fully strives
To make itself, in thee, fair and admir'd!
No messenger, but thine;—And all alone,
To-night, we'll wander through the streets, and note

The qualities of people. Come, my queen;
Last night you did desire it:—Speak not to us.

[Exeunt Ant. and Cleop. with their train.]

Dem. Is Cæsar with Antonius priz'd so slight?

Phil. Sir, sometimes, when he is not Antony,
He comes too short of that great property
Which still should go with Antony.

Dem. I am full sorry,
That he approves the common liar³, who
Thus speaks of him at Rome: But I will hope
Of better deeds to-morrow. Rest you happy!

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

Another part of the Palace.

Enter Charmian, Iras, Alexas, and a Soothsayer.

Char. Lord Alexas, sweet Alexas, most any thing Alexas, almost most absolute Alexas, where's the soothsayer that you prais'd so to the queen?
O! that I knew this husband, which, you say,
must change⁴ his horns with garlands.

Alex. Soothsayer.

Sooth. Your will? [know things?]

Char. Is this the man?—Is't you, sir, that Sooth. In nature's infinite book of secrecy,

A little I can read.

Alex. Shew him your hand.

Enter Enobarbus.

Eno. Bring in the banquet quickly; wine enough,
Cleopatra's health to drink.

Char. Good sir, give me good fortune.

Sooth. I make not, but foresee.

Char. Pray then, foresee me one.

Sooth. You shall be yet far fairer than you are.

Char. He means in flesh.

Iras. No, you shall paint when you are old.

Char. Wrinkles forbid!

Alex. Vex not his prescience; be attentive.

Char. Hush!

Sooth. You shall be more loving, than belov'd.

Char. I had rather heat my liver with drinking⁵.

Alex. Nay, hear him.

Char. Good now, some excellent fortune! Let me be married to three kings in a forenoon, and widow them all! let me have a child at fifty, to whom Herod of Jewry may do homage⁶! find me to marry with Octavius Cæsar, and companion me with my mistress!

Sooth. You shall out-live the lady whom you serve.

Char. O excellent! I love long life better than figs⁷. [fortune,

Sooth. You have seen and prov'd a fairer former
Than that which is to approach.

Char. Then, belike, my children shall have no names⁸: Pry'thee, how many boys and wenches must I have?

Sooth. If every of your wishes had a womb,
And foretell every wish, a million⁹.

Char. Out, fool! I forgive thee for a witch.

Alex. You think, none but your sheets are privy to your wishes.

Char. Nay, come, tell Iras hers.

Alex. We'll know all our fortunes.

Eno. Mine, and most of our fortunes, to-night, shall be—drunk to bed.

Iras. There's a palm presages chastity, if nothing else.

Char. Even as the o'erflowing Nilus presageth famine.

Iras. Go, you wild bedfellow, you cannot sooth-say.

Char. Nay, if an oily palm be not a fruitful prognostication, I cannot scratch mine ear.—

Pr'ythee, tell her but a worky-day fortune.

⁹ The meaning is, If you had as many wombs as you will have wishes, and I should foretell all those wishes, I should foretell a million of children.—It is an ellipsis very frequent in conversation;—I should shame you, and tell all; that is, and if I should tell all. And is for and if, which was anciently, and is still provincially used for if.

Sooth.

Sooth. Your fortunes are alike.
Iras. But how, but how? give me particulars.
Sooth. I have said.
Iras. Am I not an inch of fortune better than she?
Char. Well, if you were but an inch of fortune better than I, where would you choose it?
Iras. Not in my husband's nose.
Char. Our worser thoughts heavens mend!—
 Alexas,—come, his fortune, his fortune.—O, let him marry a woman that cannot go, sweet Isis, I beseech thee! And let her die too, and give him a worse! and let worse follow worse, 'till the worst of all follow him laughing to his grave, fifty-fold a cuckold! Good Isis, hear me this prayer, though thou deny me a matter of more weight; good Isis, I beseech thee!
Iras. Amen. Dear goddess, hear that prayer of the people! for, as it is a heart-breaking to see a handsome man loose-wiv'd, so it is a deadly sorrow to behold a foul knave uncuckolded: Therefore, dear Isis, keep decorum, and fortune him accordingly.
Char. Amen.
Alex. Lo, now! if it lay in their hands to make me a cuckold, they would make themselves whores, but they'd do't.
Eno. Hush! here comes Antony.
Char. Not he, the queen.
Enter Cleopatra.
Cleo. Saw you my lord?
Eno. No, lady.
Cleo. Was he not here?
Char. No, madam.
Cleo. He was dispos'd to mirth; but on the sudden
 A Roman thought hath struck him.—[bus,—
Eno. Madam. [Alexas?
Cleo. Seek him, and bring him hither. Where's
Alex. Here, at your service.—My lord approaches.
Enter Antony, with a Messenger, and Attendants.
Cleo. We will not look upon him: Go with us.
 [Exeunt.
Mes. Fulvia thy wife first came into the field.
Ant. Against my brother Lucius?
Mes. Ay:
 But soon that war had end, and the time's state
 Made friends of them, jointing their force 'gainst
 Caesar;
 Whose better issue in the war, from Italy,
 Upon the first encounter, drave them.
Ant. Well, what worst?
Mes. The nature of bad news infects the teller.
Ant. When it concerns the fool, or coward.—
 On;
 Things that are past, are done, with me.—'Tis
 Who tells me true, though in his tale lie death,
 I hear him as he flatter'd.
Mes. Labienus (this is stiff news)

Hath, with his Parthian force, extended¹ Asia,
 From Euphrates his conquering banner shook,
 From Syria, to Lydia, and to Ionia;
 Whilst—
 5 Ant. Antony, thou wouldst say,—
Mes. O my lord! [tongue;
Ant. Speak to me home, mince not the general
 Name Cleopatra as she's call'd in Rome:
 Rail thou in Fulvia's phrase; and taunt my faults
 10 With such full licence, as both truth and malice
 Have power to utter. O, then we bring forth weeds, [us,
 When our quick winds lie still²; and our ill, told
 Is as our earring. Fare thee well a while.
 15 Mes. At your noble pleasure. [Exit.
Ant. From Sicyon how the news? Speak there.
 1 Att. The man from Sicyon.—Is there such an
 2 Att. He stays upon your will. [one?
Ant. Let him appear.—
 20 These strong Egyptian fetters I must break,
 Enter a second Messenger.
 Or lose myself in dotage.—What are you?
 2 Mes. Fulvia thy wife is dead.
Ant. Where died she?
 25 2 Mes. In Sicyon:
 Her length of sickness, with what else more serious
 Importeth thee to know, this bears. [Gives a letter.
Ant. Forbear me.— [Exit Messenger.
 There's a great spirit gone! Thus did I desire it:
 30 What our contempts do often hurl from us,
 We wish it ours again; the present pleasure,
 By revolution³ lowering, does become
 The opposite of itself: she's good, being gone; [on.
 The hand could⁴ pluck her back, that shov'd her 35 I must from this enchanting queen break off;
 Ten thousand harms, more than the ills I know,
 My idleness doth hatch.—How now, Enobarbus?
 Enter Enobarbus.
Eno. What's your pleasure, sir?
 40 Ant. I must with haste from hence.
Eno. Why, then we kill all our women: We see how mortal an unkindness is to them; if they suffer our departure, death's the word.
Ant. I must be gone.
 45 Eno. Under a compelling occasion, let women die: It were pity to cast them away for nothing; though, between them and a great cause, they should be esteem'd nothing. Cleopatra, catching but the least noise of this, dies instantly; I have 50 seen her die twenty times upon far poorer moment⁵: I do think, there is mettle in death, which commits some loving act upon her, she hath such a celerity in dying.
Ant. She is cunning past man's thought.
 55 Eno. Alack, sir, no; her passions are made of nothing but the finest part of pure love: We cannot call her winds and waters, sighs and tears;
 they are greater storms and tempests than almanacks can report: this cannot be cunning in her;

¹ i. e. seized. ² The sense is, that man, not agitated by censure, like soil not ventilated by quick winds, produces more evil than good. ³ i. e. by regular repetition. ⁴ Could for would.—Could, would, and should, are very often indiscriminately used in the old plays. ⁵ i. e. for less reason; upon meaner motives.

if it be, she makes a shower of rain as well as Jove.

Ant. 'Would I had never seen her!

Eno. O, sir, you had then left unseen a wonderful piece of work; which not to have been blest withal, would have discredited your travel.

Ant. Fulvia is dead.

Eno. Sir?

Ant. Fulvia is dead.

Eno. Fulvia?

Ant. Dead.

Eno. Why, sir, give the gods a thankful sacrifice. When it pleaseth their deities to take the wife of a man from him, it shews to man the tailors of the earth; comforting therein, that when old robes are worn out, there are members to make new¹. If there were no more women but Fulvia, then had you indeed a cut, and the case to be lamented: this grief is crown'd with consolation; your old smock brings forth a new petticoat:—and, indeed, the tears live in an onion, that should water this sorrow. [state,

Ant. The business she hath broach'd in the Cannot endure my absence.

Eno. And the business you have broach'd here, cannot be without you; especially that of Cleopatra's, which wholly depends on your abode.

Ant. No more light answers. Let our officers Have notice what we purpose: I shall break The cause of our expedience² to the queen, And get her love to part. For not alone The death of Fulvia, with more urgent touches³, Do strongly speak to us; but the letters too Of many our contriving friends in Rome Petition⁴ us at home: Sextus Pompeius Hath given the dare to Cæsar, and commands The empire of the sea: our slippery people (Whose love is never link'd to the deserver, 'Till his deserts are past) begin to throw Pompey the great, and all his dignities Upon his son; who, high in name and power, Higher than both in blood and life, stands up For the main soldier: whose quality, going on, Thesideso'theworldmaydanger:muchisbreeding, Which, like the courser's hair⁵, hath yet but life, And not a serpent's poison. Say, our pleasure, To such whose place is under us, requires Our quick remove from hence.

Eno. I shall do't.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Alexas.

Cleo. Where is he?

Char. I did not see him since. [does:—

Cleo. See where he is, who's with him, what he I did not send you⁶;—If you find him sad, Say, I am dancing; if in mirth, report, That I am sudden sick: Quick, and return.

[Exit Alex.

Char. Madam, methinks, if you did love him dearly,

You do not hold the method to enforce The like from him.

Cleo. What should I do, I do not?

Char. In each thing give him way, cross him in nothing. [him,

Cleo. Thou teachest like a fool: the way to lose

Char. Tempt him not so too far: I wish, forbear; In time we hate that which we often fear.

Enter Antony.

But here comes Antony.

Cleo. I am sick, and sullen. [pose.—

Ant. I am sorry to give breathing to my pur-

Cleo. Help me away, dear Charmian, I shall It cannot be thus long, the sides of nature [fall; Will not sustain it.

Ant. Now, my dearest queen,—

Cleo. Pray you, stand farther from me.

Ant. What's the matter? [news.

Cleo. I know, by that same eye, there's some good What says the marry'd woman?—You may go; 'Would, she had never given you leave to come! Let her not say, 'tis I that keep you here, I have no power upon you; hers you are.

Ant. The gods best know,—

Cleo. O, never was there queen So mightily betray'd! Yet, at the first, I saw the treasons planted.

Ant. Cleopatra,— [true,

Cleo. Why should I think, you can be mine, and Though you in swearing shake the throned gods, Who have been false to Fulvia? Riotous madness, To be entangled with those mouth-made vows, Which break themselves in swearing!

Ant. Most sweet queen,— [going,

Cleo. Nay, pray you, seek no colour for your But bid farewell, and go: when you su'd staying, Then was the time for words: No going then;— Eternity was in our lips, and eyes; Bliss in our brows' bent⁷; none our parts so poor, But was a race⁸ of heaven: They are so still, Or thou, the greatest soldier of the world, Art turn'd the greatest liar.

Ant. How now, lady! [know,

Cleo. I would, I had thy inches; thou should'st There were a heart in Egypt.

Ant. Hear me, queen:

The strong necessity of time commands Our services a while; but my full heart Remains in use with you. Our Italy Shines o'er with civil swords: Sextus Pompeius Makes his approaches to the port of Rome:

¹ The meaning is this: "As the gods have been pleased to take away your wife Fulvia, so they have provided you with a new one in Cleopatra; in like manner as the tailors of the earth, when your old garments are worn out, accommodate you with new ones." ² Expedience for expedition. ³ i. e. things that touch me more sensibly. ⁴ i. e. wish us at home. ⁵ Alluding to an old idle notion, that the hair of a horse dropped into corrupted water, will turn to an animal. ⁶ You must go as if you came without my order or knowledge. ⁷ i. e. in the arch of our eye-brows. ⁸ i. e. had a smack or flavour of heaven.—The race of wine is the taste of the soil.

Equality of two domestic powers Breeds scrupulous faction: The hated, grown to strength,

Are newly grown to love: the condemn'd Pompey,
Rich in his father's honour, creeps apace
Into the hearts of such as have not thriv'd
Upon the present state, whose numbers threaten;
And quietness, grown sick of rest, would purge
By any desperate change: My more particular,
And that which most with you should save my going,
Is Fulvia's death. [freedom,

Cleo. Though age from folly could not give me
It does from childishness:—Can Fulvia die?

Ant. She's dead, my queen:
Look here, and, at thy sovereign leisure, read
The garboils¹ she awak'd; at the last, best:
See, when, and where she died.

Cleo. O most false love!
Where be the sacred vials thou should'st fill
With sorrowful water²? Now I see, I see,
In Fulvia's death, how mine receiv'd shall be.

Ant. Quarrel no more, but be prepar'd to know
The purposes I bear; which are, or cease,
As you shall give the advice: By the fire,
That quickens Nilus' slime, I go from hence,
Thy soldier, servant; making peace, or war,
As thou affect'st.

Cleo. Cut my lace, Charmian, come;—
But let it be.—I am quickly ill, and well;
So³ Antony loves.

Ant. My precious queen, forbear;
And give true evidence to his love, which stands
An honourable trial.

Cleo. So Fulvia told me.
I prythee, turn aside, and weep for her;
Then bid adieu to me, and say, the tears
Belong to Ægypt⁴. Good now, play one scene
Of excellent dissembling; and let it look Like perfect honour.

Ant. You'll heat my blood; no more,

Cleo. You can do better yet; but this is meetly.

Ant. Now, by my sword,—

Cleo. And target.—Still he mends;
But this is not the best: Look, prythee, Charmian,
How this Herculean⁵ Roman does become
The carriage of his chafe.

Ant. I'll leave you, lady.

Cleo. Courteous lord, one word.
Sir, you and I must part,—but that's not it:
Sir, you and I have lov'd,—but there's not it;
That you know well:—Something it is I would,—

O, my oblivion is a very Antony,
And I am all-forgotten⁶.

Ant. But that your royalty
Holds idleness your subject, I should take you
For idleness itself⁷.

Cleo. 'Tis sweating labour,
To bear such idleness so near the heart
As Cleopatra this. But, sir, forgive me;
Since my becoming⁸ kill me, when they do not
Eye well to you: Your honour calls you hence;
Therefore be deaf to my unpitied folly,
And all the gods go with you! Upon your sword
Sit laurell'd victory! and smooth success
Be strew'd before your feet!

Ant. Let us go. Come;
Our separation so abides, and flies,
That thou, residing here, go'st yet with me,
And I, hence fleeting, here remain with thee.
Away. [Exeunt.

S C E N E IV.

Caesar's Palace in Rome.

Enter Octavius Caesar, Lepidus, and Attendants.

Cæs. You may see, Lepidus, and henceforth
It is not Caesar's natural vice to hate [know,
One great competitor: From Alexandria
This is the news; He fishes, drinks, and wastes
The lamps of night in revel: is not more manlike
Than Cleopatra; nor the queen of Ptolemy
More womanly than he: hardly gave audience, or Vouchsaf'd to think he had partners: You shall find there

A man, who is the abstract of all faults
That all men follow.

Lep. I must not think, there are
Evils enough to darken all his goodness:
His faults, in him, seem as the spots of heaven,
More fiery by night's blackness; hereditary,
Rather than purchas'd⁹; what he cannot change,
Than what he chooses. [not

Cæs. You are too indulgent: Let us grant, it is Amis to tumble on the bed of Ptolemy;
To give a kingdom for a mirth; to sit
And keep the turn of tippling with a slave;
To reel the streets at noon, and stand the buffet
With knaves that smell of sweat; say, this becomes him,

(As his composure must be rare indeed, [tony Whom these things cannot blemish!) yet must An-
No way excuse his foils, when we do bear
So great weight in his lightness¹⁰: If he fill'd

¹ i. e. the commotion she occasioned.—The word is derived from the old French garbouil, which Cotgrave explains by hurllyburly, great stir. ² Alluding to the lacrymatory vials, or bottles of tears, which the Romans sometimes put into the urn of a friend. ³ So for as. ⁴ i. e. to me, the queen of Ægypt. ⁵ Antony traced his descent from Anton, a son of Hercules. ⁶ The plain meaning is, My forgetfulness makes me forget myself.—But she expresses it by calling forgetfulness Antony; because forgetfulness had forgot her, as Antony had done. ⁷ i. e. according to Warburton, "But that your charms hold me, who am the greatest fool on earth, in chains, I should have adjudged you to be the greatest." ⁸ Cleopatra may perhaps here allude to Antony having before called her, in the first scene, "wrangling queen, whom every thing becomes." ⁹ The meaning, according to Mr. Malone, is, "As the stars or spots of heaven are not obscured, but rather rendered more bright, by the blackness of the night; so neither is the goodness of Antony eclipsed by his evil qualities, but, on the contrary, his faults seem enlarged and aggravated by his virtues." ¹⁰ i. e. trifling levity.

His vacancy with his voluptuousness,
Full surfeits, and the dryness of his bones,
Call on him¹ for't; but, to confound such time,—
That drums him from his sport, and speaks as loud
As his own state, and ours,—'tis to be chid
As we rate boys; who, being mature in knowledge²,
Pawn their experience to their present pleasure,
And so rebel to judgement.

Enter a Messenger.

Lep. Here's more news. [hour, 10

Mes. Thy biddings have been done; and every
Most noble Cæsar, shalt thou have report
How 'tis abroad. Pompey is strong at sea;
And it appears, he is belov'd of those
That only have fear'd Cæsar: to the ports
The discontents repair, and men's reports
Give him much wrong'd.

Cæs. I should have known no less:—
It hath been taught us from the primal state,
That he, which is, was wish'd, until he were;
And the ebb'd man, ne'er lov'd till ne'er worth love,
'Comes dear'd, by being lack'd. This common
Like to a vagabond flag upon the stream, [body,
Goes to, and back, lacking the varying tide,
To rot itself with motion.

Mes. Cæsar, I bring thee word,
Menecrates and Menas, famous pirates, [wound
Make the sea serve them; which they ear³ and
With keels of every kind: Many hot inroads
They make in Italy; the borders maritime Lack blood⁴ to think on't, and flush youth⁵ revolt:

No vessel can peep forth, but 'tis as soon
Taken as seen; for Pompey's name strikes more,
Than could his war resisted.

Cæs. Antony,
Leave thy lascivious wassels⁶. When thou once
Wast beaten from Modena, where thou slew'st
Hirtius and Pansa, consuls, at thy heel
Did famine follow; whom thou fought'st against,
Though daintily brought up, with patience more
Than savages could suffer: Thou didst drink
The stale of horses⁷, and the gilded puddle
Which beasts would cough at: thy palate then did deign

The roughest berry on the rudest hedge;
Yea, like the stag, when snow the pasture sheets,
The barks of trees thou browsedst: on the Alps,
It is reported, thou didst eat strange flesh,
Which some did die to look on: And all this
(It wounds thine honour, that I speak it now)
Was borne so like a soldier, that thy cheek
So much as lank'd not.

Lep. It is pity of him.

Cæs. Let his shames quickly
Drive him to Rome: Time is it, that we twain
Did shew ourselves i' the field; and, to that end,
Assemble me immediate council: Pompey
Thrives in our idleness.

Lep. To-morrow, Cæsar,
I shall be furnish'd to inform you rightly
Both what by sea and land I can be able,
To 'front this present time.

5 Cæs. 'Till which encounter,
It is my business too. Farewell.

Lep. Farewell, my lord: What you shall know mean time

Of stirs abroad, I shall beseech you, sir,
To let me be partaker.

Cæs. Doubt it not, sir; I knew it for my bond.
[Exeunt,

SCENE V.

The Palace in Alexandria.

15 Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Mardian.

Cleo. Charmian,—

Char. Madam.

Cleo. Ha, ha,—Give me to drink mandragora⁸.

20 Char. Why, madam? [time,

Cleo. That I might sleep out this great gap of My Antony is away.

Char. You think of him too much.

Cleo. O, 'tis treason!

25 Char. Madam, I trust, not so.

Cleo. Thou, eunuch! Mardian!

Mar. What's your highness' pleasure?

Cleo. Not now to hear thee sing; I take no
pleasure

30 In aught an eunuch has: 'Tis well for thee,
That, being unseminar'd, thy freer thoughts
May not fly forth of Ægypt. Hast thou affections?

Mar. Yes, gracious madam.

Cleo. Indeed? [thing

35 Mar. Not in deed, madam; for I can do no:
But what in deed is honest to be done:
Yet have I fierce affections, and think,
What Venus did with Mars.

Cleo. O Charmian! [he?

40 Where think'st thou he is now? Stands he, or sits
Or does he walk? or is he on his horse?

O happy horse, to bear the weight of Antony!
Do bravely, horse! for wot'st thou whom thou mov'st?

45 The demy Atlas of this earth, the arm
And burgonet⁹ of man.—He's speaking now,

Or murmuring, 'Where's my serpent of old Nile?'
For so he calls me;—Now I feed myself

50 With most delicious poison: Think on me,
That am with Phœbus' amorous pinches black,

And wrinkled deep in time! Broad-fronted Cæsar,
When thou wast here above the ground, I was

A morsel for a monarch; and great Pompey
Would stand, and make his eyes grow in my 55 brow;

There would he anchor his aspect, and die
With looking on his life.

Enter Alexas.

Alex. Sovereign of Ægypt, hail!

¹ Call on him, is visit him for it. ² i. e. boys old enough to know their duty. ³ To ear is to plow. ⁴ i. e. turn pale at the thought of it. ⁵ Flush youth is youth ripened to manhood; youth whose blood is at the flow. ⁶ Wassel is here put for intemperance in general. ⁷ All these circumstances of Antony's distress are taken literally from Plutarch. ⁸ A plant of which the infusion was supposed to procure sleep. ⁹ A burgonet is a kind of helmet.

Cleo. How much unlike art thou Mark Antony!
Yet, coming from him, that great medicine hath
With his tinct gilded thee¹.—

How goes it with my brave Mark Antony?

Alex. Last thing he did, dear queen,
He kiss'd, the last of many doubled kisses;
This orient pearl!—His speech sticks in my heart.

Cleo. Mine ear must pluck it thence.

Alex. Good friend, quoth he,
Say, "the firm Roman to great Ægypt sends
"This treasure of an oyster: at whose foot,
"To mend the petty present, I will piece
"Her opulent throne with kingdoms: All the east,
"Say thou, shall call her mistress." So he nodded,
And soberly did mount an arm-gaunt² steed,
Who neigh'd so high, that what I would have spoke
Was beastly dumb'd³ by him.

Cleo. What, was he sad, or merry?

Alex. Like to the time o' the year between the extremes

Of hot and cold; he was nor sad, nor merry.

Cleo. O well-divided disposition!—Note him,
Note him, good Charmian, 'tis the man; but note
him:

He was not sad; for he would shine on those
That make their looks by his: he was not merry;
Which seem'd to tell them, his remembrance lay

In Ægypt with his joy; but between both;
O heavenly mingle! Be'st thou sad, or merry,
The violence of either thee becomes;
So does it no man else.—Met'st thou my posts?

5 Alex. Ay, madam, twenty several messengers:
Why do you send so thick?

Cleo. Who's born that day
When I forget to send to Antony,
Shall die a beggar.—Ink and paper, Charmian.—
10 Welcome, my good Alexas.—Did I, Charmian,
Ever love Cæsar so?

Char. O that brave Cæsar!

Cleo. Be choak'd with such another emphasis!
Say, the brave Antony.

15 Char. The valiant Cæsar!

Cleo. By Isis, I will give thee bloody teeth,
If thou with Cæsar paragon again
My man of men.

Char. By your most gracious pardon,
20 I sing but after you.

Cleo. My sallad days!
When I was green in judgement: Cold in blood,
To say, as I said then⁴!—But, come, away;
Get me ink and paper: he shall have every day
25 A several greeting, or I'll unpeople Ægypt⁵.

[Exeunt.]

A C T II.

S C E N E I.

Messina. Pompey's House.

Enter Pompey, Menecrates, and Menas.

Pomp. IF the great gods be just, they shall assist
The deeds of justest men.

Men. Know, worthy Pompey,
That what they do delay, they not deny. [cays
Pomp. Whiles we are suitors to their throne, de-
The thing we sue for⁶.

Men. We, ignorant of ourselves,
Beg often our own harms, which the wise powers
Deny us, for our good: so find we profit,
By losing of our prayers.

Pomp. I shall do well:
The people love me, and the sea is mine;
My power's a crescent, and my auguring hope
Says, it will come to the full. Mark Antony
In Ægypt sits at dinner, and will make
Now wars without doors: Cæsar gets money, where

He loses hearts: Lepidus flatters both,
Of both is flatter'd; but he neither loves,
Nor either cares for him.

Men. Cæsar and Lepidus are in the field;
A mighty strength they carry.

Pomp. Where have you this? 'tis false.

Men. From Silvius, sir.

Pomp. He dreams; I know, they are in Rome together,

45 Looking for Antony: But all the charms of love,
Salt Cleopatra, soften thy wan lip!

Let witchcraft join with beauty, lust with both;

Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts,

Keep his brain fuming: Epicurean cooks,

50 Sharpen with cloyless sauce his appetite;

That sleep and feeding may prorogue his honour,
Even 'till a Lethè'd dulness—How now, Varrius?

Enter Varrius.

Var. This is most certain, that I shall deliver:
55 Mark Antony is every hour in Rome

¹ Alluding to the philosopher's stone, which, by its touch, converts base metal into gold. The alchemists call the matter, whatever it be, by which they perform transmutation, a medicine. ² Arm-gaunt perhaps means, a horse so slender that a man might clasp him, and therefore formed for expedition.—In Chaucer's description of a king of Thrace in the Knight's Tale, armgrete is used to signify as big as the arm; arm-gaunt therefore may mean as slender as the arm. We still say, in vulgar comparison, as long as my arm, as thick as my leg, &c. ³ i. e. put to silence by him. ⁴ The meaning is, Those were my sallad days, when I was green in judgement; but your blood is as cold as my judgement, if you have the same opinion of things now as I had then. ⁵ By sending out messengers. ⁶ The meaning is, While we are praying, the thing for which we pray is losing its value.

Expected; since he went from Ægypt, 'tis
A space for farther travel.

Pomp. I could have given less matter
A better ear.—Menas, I did not think, [helm
This amorous surfeiter would have don'd¹ his
For such a petty war: his soldiership
Is twice the other twain: But let us rear
The higher our opinion, that our stirring
Can from the lap of Ægypt's widow pluck
The ne'er lust-wearied Antony.

Men. I cannot hope²,
Cæsar and Antony shall well greet together:
His wife, that's dead, did trespasses to Cæsar;
His brother warr'd upon him; although, I think,
Not mov'd by Antony.

Pomp. I know not, Menas,
How lesser enmities may give way to greater.
Were't not that we stand up against them all,
'Twere pregnant they should square³ between themselves;

For they have entertained cause enough
To draw their swords: but how the fear of us
May cement their divisions, and bind up
The petty difference, we yet not know.

Be it as our gods will have it! It only stands
Our lives upon, to use our strongest hands.

Come, Menas.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

Rome.

Enter Enobarbus, and Lepidus.

Lep. Good Enobarbus, 'tis a worthy deed,
And shall become you well, to entreat your captain
To soft and gentle speech.

Eno. I shall entreat him
To answer like himself: if Cæsar move him,
Let Antony look over Cæsar's head,
And speak as loud as Mars. By Jupiter,
Were I the wearer of Antonius' beard,
I would not shave't to-day⁴.

Lep. 'Tis not a time for private stomaching.

Eno. Every time
Serves for the matter that is then born in it.

Lep. But small to greater matters must give

Eno. Not if the small come first. [way.

Lep. Your speech is passion:

But, pray you, stir no embers up. Here comes
The noble Antony.

Enter Antony, and Ventidius.

Eno. And yonder Cæsar.

Enter Cæsar, Mecænas, and Agrippa.

Ant. If we compose well here, to Parthia:
Hark you, Ventidius.

Cæs. I do not know,
Mecænas; ask Agrippa.

Lep. Noble friends, [not
That which combin'd us was most great, and let
A leaner action rend us. What's amiss,
May it be gently heard! When we debate
Our trivial difference loud, we do commit
Murder in healing wounds: Then, noble partners,
(The rather, for I earnestly beseech)
Touch you the sourest points with sweetest terms,
Nor curstness⁵ grow to the matter.

10 Ant. 'Tis spoken well:
Were we before our armies, and to fight,
I should do thus.

Cæs. Welcome to Rome.

Ant. Thank you.

15 Cæs. Sit.

Ant. Sit, sir!

Cæs. Nay, then—

Ant. I learn, you take things ill, which are not so;

20 Or, being, concern you not.

Cæs. I must be laugh'd at,

If, or for nothing, or a little, I

Should say myself offended; and with you

Chiefly i' the world: more laugh'd at, that I should 25 Once name you derogately, when to sound your name

It not concern'd me.

Ant. My being in Ægypt, Cæsar,

What was't to you?

30 Cæs. No more than my residing here at Rome
Might be to you in Ægypt: Yet, if you there
Did practise⁶ on my state, your being in Ægypt
Might be my question⁷.

Ant. How intend you, practis'd?

35 Cæs. You may be pleas'd to catch at mine intent,
By what did here befall me. Your wife, and brother,

Made wars upon me; and their contestation

Was theme for you⁸, you were the word of war.

40 Ant. You do mistake your business; my brother never

Did urge me in his act⁹: I did enquire it;

And have my learning from some true reports¹⁰,

That drew their swords with you. Did he not rather

Discredit my authority with yours;

And make the wars alike against my stomach,

Having alike your cause¹¹? Of this my letters

Before did satisfy you. If you'll patch a quarrel,

50 As matter whole you have not to make it with,
It must not be with this.

Cæs. You praise yourself,

By laying defects of judgement to me; but

You patch'd up your excuses.

55 Ant. Not so, not so:

I know you could not lack, I am certain on't,

Very necessity of this thought, that I,

¹ To don is do on, to put on. ² Hope for expect. ³ i. e. quarrel. ⁴ i. e. I would meet him undressed, without shew of respect. ⁵ i. e. Let not ill humour be added to the subject of our difference. ⁶ To practise means to employ unwarrantable arts or stratagems. ⁷ i. e. my theme or subject of conversation. ⁸ i. e. The pretence of the war was on your account; they took up arms in your name, and you were made the theme and subject of their insurrection. ⁹ i. e. never did make use of my name as a pretence for the war. ¹⁰ Reports for reporters. ¹¹ Having the same cause as you to be offended with me.

Your partner in the cause 'gainst which he fought,
 Could not with graceful eyes attend those wars
 Which fronted¹ mine own peace. As for my wife,
 I would you had her spirit in such another :
 The third o' the world is yours ; which with a snaffle

You may pace easy, but not such a wife.

Eno. 'Would we had all such wives, that the men might go to wars with the women !

Ant. So much uncurbable, her garboils, Cæsar,
 Made out of her impatience (which not wanted Shrewdness of policy too) I grieving grant,
 Did you too much disquiet : for that, you must
 But say I could not help it.

Cæs. I wrote to you,
 When rioting in Alexandria ; you
 Did pocket up my letters, and with taunts
 Did gibe my missive out of audience.

Ant. Sir, he fell on me, ere admitted ; then
 Three kings I had newly feasted, and did want
 Of what I was i' the morning : but, next day,
 I told him of myself² ; which was as much
 As to have ask'd him pardon : Let this fellow
 Be nothing of our strife ; if we contend,
 Out of our question wipe him.

Cæs. You have broken
 The article of your oath ; which you shall never Have tongue to charge me with.

Lep. Soft, Cæsar.

Ant. No, Lepidus, let him speak :
 The honour³ is sacred which he talks on now,
 Supposing that I lack'd it :—But on, Cæsar ;—
 The article of my oath,——

Cæs. To lend me arms, and aid, when I requir'd them ;
 The which you both deny'd.

Ant. Neglected, rather ;
 And then, when poison'd hours had bound me up
 From mine own knowledge. As nearly as I may,
 I'll play the penitent to you : but mine honesty
 Shall not make poor my greatness, nor my power
 Work without it : Truth is, that Fulvia,
 To have me out of Ægypt, made wars here ;
 For which myself, the ignorant motive, do
 So far ask pardon as befits mine honour
 To stoop in such a case.

Lep. 'Tis nobly spoken. [ther

Mec. If it might please you to enforce no fur-
 The griefs between you : to forget them quite,
 Were to remember that the present need
 Speaks to atone you.

Lep. Worthily spoken, Mæcnas.

Eno. Or, if you borrow one another's love for the instant, you may, when you hear no more words of Pompey, return it again : you shall have time to wrangle in, when you have nothing else to do.

Ant. Thou art a soldier only ; speak no more.

Eno. That truth should be silent, I had almost forgot. [no more.

Ant. You wrong this presence, therefore speak

Eno. Go to then ; your considerate stone⁴.

Cæs. I do not much dislike the matter, but
 The manner of his speech : for it cannot be,
 We shall remain in friendship, our conditions
 So differing in their acts. Yet, if I knew What hoop should hold us staunch, from edge to edge

O' the world I would pursue it.

Agr. Give me leave, Cæsar,—

Cæs. Speak, Agrippa.

Agr. Thou hast a sister by the mother's side,
 Admir'd Octavia : great Mark Antony
 Is now a widower.

Cæs. Say not so, Agrippa ;

15 If Cleopatra heard you, your reproof
 Were well deserv'd of rashness.

Ant. I am not married, Cæsar : let me hear
 Agrippa further speak.

Agr. To hold you in perpetual amity,
 To make you brothers, and to knit your hearts
 With an unslipping knot, take Antony
 Octavia to his wife : whose beauty claims
 No worse a husband than the best of men ;
 Whose virtue, and whose general graces, speak
 25 That which none else can utter. By this marriage,
 All little jealousies, which now seem great,
 And all great fears, which now import their dangers,
 Would then be nothing, truths would be tales,
 Where now half tales be truths : her love to both 30 Would each to other, and all loves to both,
 Draw after her. Pardon what I have spoke ;
 For 'tis a studied, not a present thought,
 By duty ruminated.

Ant. Will Cæsar speak ?

35 Cæs. Not 'till he hears how Antony is touch'd
 With what is spoke already.

Ant. What power is in Agrippa,
 If I would say, Agrippa, be it so,
 To make this good ?

40 Cæs. The power of Cæsar, and
 His power unto Octavia.

Ant. May I never

To this good purpose, that so fairly shews,
 Dream of impediment !—Let me have thy hand :
 45 Further this act of grace ; and, from this hour,
 The heart of brothers govern in our loves,
 And sway our great designs !

Cæs. There is my hand.

A sister I bequeath you, whom no brother
 50 Did ever love so dearly : Let her live
 To join our kingdoms, and our hearts ; and never Fly off our loves again !

Lep. Happily ! Amen ! [Pompey ;

Ant. I did not think to draw my sword 'gainst
 55 For he hath laid strange courtesies, and great,
 Of late upon me : I must thank him only,
 Lest my remembrance suffer ill report ;
 At heel of that, defy him.

Lep. Time calls upon us :

60 Of us must Pompey presently be sought,
 Or else he seeks out us.

¹ i. e. opposed. ² i. e. told him the condition I was in, when he had his last audience. ³ Meaning, the religion of an oath. ⁴ i. e. "I will henceforth seem senseless as a stone, however I may observe and consider your words and actions."

Ant. Where lies he?

Cæs. About the mount Misenum.

Ant. What is his strength by land?

Cæs. Great and increasing: but by sea
He is an absolute master.

Ant. So is the fame.

'Would, we had spoke together! Haste we for't:
Yet, ere we put ourselves in arms, dispatch we
The business we have talk'd of.

Cæs. With most gladness;
And do invite you to my sister's view,
Whither straight I will lead you.

Ant. Let us, Lepidus,
Not lack your company.

Lep. Noble Antony,
Not sickness should detain me.

[Flourish. Exeunt Cæsar, Antony, and Lepidus.]

Mec. Welcome from Ægypt, sir.

Eno. Half the heart of Cæsar, worthy Mecænas!—
My honourable friend, Agrippa!

Agr. Good Enobarbus!

Mec. We have cause to be glad, that matters are so well digested. You staid well by it in Ægypt.

Eno. Ay, sir; we did sleep day out of countenance, and made the night light with drinking.

Mec. Eight wild boars roasted whole at a breakfast, and but twelve persons there;—Is this true?

Eno. This was but as a fly by an eagle: we had much more monstrous matter of feast, which worthily deserved noting.

Mec. She's a most triumphant lady, if report be square to her¹.

Eno. When she first met Mark Antony, she purs'd up his heart, upon the river of Cydnus.

Agr. There she appear'd indeed; or my reporter
Devis'd well for her.

Eno. I will tell you:

The barge she sat in, like a burnish'd throne,
Burnt on the water: the poop was beaten gold;
Purple the sails, and so perfum'd, that
The winds were love-sick with them: the oars

were silver;

Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke, and made
The water, which they beat, to follow faster,
As amorous of their strokes. For her own person,
It beggar'd all description: she did lie
In her pavilion, (cloth of gold, of tissue)
O'er-picturing that Venus where we see
The fancy out-work nature: on each side her
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids,
With divers-colour'd fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool,
And what they undid, did.

Agr. O, rare for Antony!

Eno. Her gentlewomen, like the Nereides,
So many mermaids, tended her i' the eyes,
And made their bends² adornings: at the helm
A seeming mermaid steers; the silken tackles

Swell with the touches of those flower-soft hands,
That yarely frame the office. From the barge
A strange invisible perfume hits the sense
Of the adjacent wharfs. The city cast

5 Her people out upon her: and Antony,
Enthron'd i' the market-place, did sit alone,
Whistling to the air; which, but for vacancy,
Had gone to gaze on Cleopatra too,
And made a gap in nature.

10 Agr. Rare Ægyptian!

Eno. Upon her landing, Antony sent to her,
Invited her to supper: she reply'd,
It should be better, he became her guest;
Which she entreated: Our courteous Antony,
15 Whom ne'er the word of no woman heard speak,
Being barber'd ten times o'er, goes to the feast;
And, for his ordinary, pays his heart,
For what his eyes eat only.

Agr. Royal wench!

20 She made great Cæsar lay his sword to bed;
He plough'd her, and she cropt.

Eno. I saw her once
Hop forty paces through the publick street:
And having lost her breath, she spoke, and panted,
25 That she did make defect, perfection,
And, breathless, power breathe forth.

Mec. Now Antony must leave her utterly.

Eno. Never; he will not:
Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale
30 Her infinite variety: Other women cloy
The appetites they feed; but she makes hungry,
Where most she satisfies. For vilest things
Become themselves in her; that the holy priests
Bless her, when she is riggish³.

35 Mec. If beauty, wisdom, modesty, can settle
The heart of Antony, Octavia is
A blessed lottery to him.

Agr. Let us go.—
Good Enobarbus, make yourself my guest,
40 Whilst you abide here.

Eno. Humbly, sir, I thank you. [Exeunt.

S C E N E III.

Enter Cæsar, Antony, Octavia between them; Attendants, and a Soothsayer.

45 Ant. The world, and my great office, will sometimes

Divide me from your bosom.
Octa. All which time,
Before the gods my knee shall bow in prayers
50 To them for you.

Ant. Good night, sir.—My Octavia,
Read not my blemishes in the world's report:
I have not kept my square; but that to come
Shall all be done by the rule. Good night, dear lady.

55 Octa. Good night, sir.

Cæs. Good night. [Exeunt Cæsar, and Octavia.

Ant. Now, sirrah! you do wish yourself in Ægypt?

¹ i. e. if report quadrates with her, or suits with her merits. ² Mr. Tollet thinks bends or bands is the same word, and means in this place the several companies of Nereïds that waited on Cleopatra: while Mr. Malone apprehends, their bends refers to Cleopatra's eyes, and not to her gentlewomen.

"Her attendants, in order to learn their mistress's will, watched the motion of her eyes, the bends or "movements of which added new lustre to her beauty." ³ Rigg is an ancient word meaning a strumpet.

Sooth. 'Would I had ne'er come from thence,
Thither! [nor you]

Ant. If you can, your reason?

Sooth. I see it in My motion¹, I have it not in my tongue: But yet 5
Hie you again to Ægypt.

Ant. Say to me,
Whose fortunes shall rise higher, Cæsar's or mine?

Sooth. Cæsar's.
Therefore, O Antony, stay not by his side: 10
Thy dæmon, that's thy spirit which keeps thee, is Noble, courageous, high, unmatchable,
Where Cæsar's is not; but, near him, thy angel Becomes a fear², as being o'erpower'd; therefore
Make space enough between you. 15

Ant. Speak this no more. [to thee.]

Sooth. To none but thee; no more, but when
If thou dost play with him at any game,
Thou art sure to lose; and, of that natural luck,
He beats thee 'gainst the odds; thy lustre thickens, 20
When he shines by: I say again, thy spirit
Is all afraid to govern thee near him;
But, he away, 'tis noble.

Ant. Get thee gone:
Say to Ventidius, I would speak with him: 25
[Exit Soothsayer.]

He shall to Parthia.—Be it art, or hap,
He hath spoken true: The very dice obey him:
And, in our sports, my better cunning faints
Under his chance: if we draw lots, he speeds: 30
His cocks do win the battle still of mine,
When it is all to nought; and his quails³ ever
Beat mine, in hoop'd⁴, at odds. I will to Ægypt:
And though I make this marriage for my peace,

Enter Ventidius.
I' the east my pleasure lies.—O, come, Ventidius,
You must to Parthia; your commission's ready:
Follow me, and receive it. [Exeunt.]

S C E N E IV.

The same; a Street.

Enter Lepidus, Mecænas, and Agrippa.
Lep. Trouble yourselves no farther: pray you
Your generals after. [hasten]

Agr. Sir, Mark Antony
Will e'en but kiss Octavia, and we'll follow. 45
Lep. 'Till I shall see you in your soldiers' dress,
Which will become you both, farewell.

Mec. We shall,
As I conceive the journey, be at mount⁵
Before you, Lepidus.

Lep. Your stay is shorter,
My purposes do draw me much about;
You'll win two days upon me.

Both. Sir, good success!

Lep. Farewell. [Exeunt.] 55

S C E N E V.

The Palace in Alexandria.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Alexas.

Cleo. Give me some musick; musick, moody⁶
Of us that trade in love. [food] 60

Omnes. The music, ho!

Enter Mardian.

Cleo. Let it alone; let us to billiards: come, Charmian.

Char. My arm is sore, best play with Mardian.

Cleo. As well a woman with an eunuch play'd,
As with a woman:—come, you'll play with me,

Mar. As well as I can, madam. [sir?]

Cleo. And when good will is shew'd, though it come too short,

The actor may plead pardon. I'll none now:—
Give me mine angle,—We'll to the river: there,
My musick playing far off, I will betray
Tawny-finn'd fishes: my bended hook shall pierce 15
Their slimy jaws; and, as I draw them up,
I'll think them every one an Antony,
And say, Ah, ha! you're caught.

Char. 'Twas merry, when
You wager'd on your angling; when your diver 20
Did hang a salt-fish on his hook, which he
With fervency drew up.

Cleo. That time—O times!—
I laugh'd him out of patience; and that night
I laugh'd him into patience: and next morn,
Ere the ninth hour, I drank him to his bed; 25
Then put my tires and mantles on him, whilst
I wore his sword Philippan. O! from Italy;—

Enter a Messenger.

Ram⁷ thou fruitful tidings in mine ears,
That long time have been barren. 30

Mes. Madam, madam,—

Cleo. Antony's dead?—
If thou say so, villain, thou kill'st thy mistress:
But well and free,

35 If so thou yield him, there is gold, and here
My bluest veins to kiss; a hand, that kings
Have lipp'd, and trembled kissing.

Mes. First, madam, he is well.

Cleo. Why, there's more gold. But, sirrah, mark; we use 40

To say, the dead are well: bring it to that,
The gold I give thee, will I melt, and pour
Down thy ill-uttering throat.

Mes. Good madam, hear me.

Cleo. Well, go to, I will;
But there's no goodness in thy face: if Antony
Be free, and healthful,—so tart a favour
To trumpet such good tidings? If not well,
Thou should'st come like a fury crown'd with 50
Not like a formal⁸ man. [snakes,

Mes. Will't please you hear me? [speak'st:]

Cleo. I have a mind to strike thee, ere thou
Yet, if thou say, Antony lives, is well,
Or friends with Cæsar, or not captive to him,
I'll set thee in a shower of gold, and hail
Rich pearls upon thee⁹. 55

Mes. Madam, he's well.

Cleo. Well said.

Mes. And friends with Cæsar.

Cleo. Thou art an honest man.

¹ i. e. the divinitory agitation. ² i. e. a fearful thing.—A fear was a personage in some of the old moralities. ³ The antients used to match quails as we match cocks. ⁴ Inhoop'd is inclosed, confined, that they may fight. ⁵ i. e. Mount Misenum. ⁶ i. e. melancholy. ⁷ Shakspeare probably wrote (as Sir T. Hanmer observes) Rain thou, &c. which agrees better with the epithets fruitful and barren. ⁸ i. e. like a man in form or shape. ⁹ i. e. I will give thee a kingdom; it being the eastern ceremony, at the coronation of their kings, to powder them with gold-dust and seed-pearl.

Mes. Cæsar and he are greater friends than Cleo. Make thee a fortune from me. [ever.
Mes. But yet, madam,—
Cleo. I do not like but yet, it does allay
The good precedence; fye upon but yet:
But yet is as a jailer to bring forth
Some monstrous malefactor. Pr'ythee, friend,
Pour out the pack of matter to mine ear,
The good and bad together: He's friends with Cæsar;
In state of health, thou say'st; and thou say'st, free.
Mes. Free, madam! no; I made no such report:
He's bound unto Octavia.
Cleo. For what good turn?
Mes. For the best turn i' the bed.
Cleo. I am pale, Charmian.
Mes. Madam, he's married to Octavia.
Cleo. The most infectious pestilence upon thee!
[Strikes him down.
Mes. Good madam, patience.
Cleo. What say you?—Hence, [Strikes him again.
Horrible villain! or I'll spurn thine eyes
Like balls before me; I'll unhair thy head;
[She hales him up and down.
Thou shalt be whipt with wire, and stew'd in brine,
Smarting in ling'ring pickle.
Mes. Gracious madam,
I, that do bring the news, made not the match.
Cleo. Say, 'tis not so, a province I will give thee,
And make thy fortunes proud: the blow, thou hadst,
Shall make thy peace, for moving me to rage:
And I will boot thee with what gift beside Thy modesty can beg.
Mes. He's married, madam.
Cleo. Rogue, thou hast liv'd too long.
[Draws a dagger.
Mes. Nay, then I'll run:—
What mean you, madam? I have made no fault.
[Exit.
Char. Good madam, keep yourself within your—
The man is innocent. [self;
Cleo. Some innocents' scape not the thunder—
Melt Ægypt into Nile! and kindly creatures [bolt.—
Turn all to serpents! Call the slave again!
Though I am mad, I will not bite him:—Call.
Char. He is afraid to come.
Cleo. I will not hurt him:—
These hands do lack nobility, that they strike
A meaner than myself; since I myself
Have given myself the cause.—Come hither, sir.
Re-enter the Messenger.
Though it be honest, it is never good
To bring bad news: Give to a gracious message
An host of tongues; but let ill tidings tell Themselves, when they be felt.
Mes. I have done my duty.
Cleo. Is he married?
I cannot hate thee worser than I do,
If thou again say, Yes.
Mes. He is married, madam.
Cleo. The gods confound thee! dost thou hold there still?

Mes. Should I lye, madam?
Cleo. O, I would, thou didst;
So half my Ægypt were submerg'd¹, and made
A cistern for scald snakes! Go, get thee hence;
5 Hadst thou Narcissus in thy face, to me
Thou wouldst appear most ugly. He is married?
Mes. I crave your highness' pardon.
Cleo. He is married? [you:
Mes. Take no offence, that I would not offend
10 To punish me for what you make me do,
Seems much unequal: He is married to Octavia.
Cleo. O, that his fault should make a knave of thee, [hence:
Thou art not what thou'rt sure of²!—Get thee
15 The merchandise, which thou hast brought from Rome,
Are all too dear for me; Lye they upon thy hand,
And be undone by 'em! [Exit Messenger.
Char. Good your highness, patience. [sar.
20 Cleo. In praising Antony, I have disprais'd Cæ-
Char. Many times, madam.
Cleo. I am paid for it now. Lead me from hence,
I faint; O Iras, Charmian,—'Tis no matter:—
Go to the fellow, good Alexas: bid him
25 Report the feature³ of Octavia, her years,
Her inclination, let him not leave out
The colour of her hair:—bring me word quickly.—
[Exit Alexas.
Let him⁴ for ever go:—Let him not,—Charmian;
30 I though he be painted one way like a Gorgon,
The other way he is a Mars:—Bid you Alexas
[To Mardian.
Bring me word, how tall she is.—Pity me, Char-
mian,
35 But do not speak to me.—Lead me to my chamber.
[Exeunt.

SCENE VI.

Near Misenum.

40 Enter Pompey, and Menas, at one door, with drum and trumpet: at another, Cæsar, Lepidus, Antony, Enobarbus, Mecnas, with soldiers marching.
Pomp. Your hostages I have, so have you mine;
And we shall talk before we fight.
45 Cæs. Most meet,
That first we come to words; and therefore have we
Our written purposes before us sent;
Which if thou hast consider'd, let us know
If 'twill tie up thy discontented sword,
50 And carry back to Sicily much tall youth,
That else must perish here.
Pomp. To you all three,
The senators alone of this great world,
Chief factors for the gods,—I do not know,
55 Wherefore my father should revengers want,
Having a son, and friends; since Julius Cæsar,
Who at Philippi the good Brutus ghosted,
There saw you labouring for him. What was it,
That mov'd pale Cassius to conspire? and 60 What made all-honour'd, honest, Roman Brutus,
With the arm'd rest, courtiers of beauteous freedom,
To drench the Capitol; but that they would

¹ Submerg'd is whelm'd under water. ² i. e. Thou art an honest man, of which thou art thyself assured; but thou art in my opinion a knave by thy master's fault alone. ³ i. e. the beauty.
⁴ i. e. Antony. Have

Have one man but a man? And that is it,
Hath made me rig my navy; at whose burden
The anger'd ocean foams; with which I meant
To scourge the ingratitude that despightful Rome
Cast on my noble father.

Cæs. Take your time. [sails,

Ant. Thou canst not fear¹ us, Pompey, with thy We'll speak with thee at sea: at land, thou know'st
How much we do o'er-count thee.

Pomp. At land, indeed,
Thou dost o'er-count me of my father's house:
But, since the cuckow builds not for himself,
Remain in't as thou may'st.

Lep. Be pleas'd to tell us,
(For this is from the present) how you take
The offers we have sent you?

Cæs. There's the point.

Ant. Which do not be entreated to, but weigh
What it is worth embrac'd.

Cæs. And what may follow,
To try a larger fortune.

Pomp. You have made me offer
Of Sicily, Sardinia; and I must Rid all the sea of pirates: then, to send Measures of wheat to Rome: This 'greed upon,
To part with unhack'd edges, and bear back
Our targe undinted.

Omnes. That's our offer.

Pomp. Know then,
I came before you here, a man prepar'd
To take this offer: but Mark Antony
Put me to some impatience; though I lose
The praise of it by telling; you must know,
When Cæsar and your brother were at blows,
Your mother came to Sicily, and did find
Her welcome friendly.

Ant. I have heard it, Pompey;
And am well studied for a liberal thanks,
Which I do owe you.

Pomp. Let me have your hand:
I did not think, sir, to have met you here.

Ant. The beds i' the east are soft; and thankstoyou
That call'd me, timelier than my purpose, hither;
For I have gain'd by it.

Cæs. Since I saw you last,
There is a change upon you.

Pomp. Well, I know not,
What counts harsh fortune casts upon my face²;
But in my bosom shall she never come,
To make my heart her vassal.

Lep. Well met here.

Pomp. I hopeso, Lepidus.—Thus we are agreed:
I crave, our composition may be written,
And seal'd between us.

Cæs. That's the next to do.

Pomp. We'll feast each other, ere we part; and let Draw lots, who shall begin.

Ant. That will I, Pompey.

Pomp. No, Antony, take the lot: but, first,
Or last, your fine Ægyptian cookery
Shall have the fame. I have heard, that Julius Cæsar
Grew fat with feasting there.

Ant. You have heard much.

Pomp. I have fair meaning, sir,

Ant. And fair words to them.

Pomp. Then so much have I heard:—

5 And I have heard, Apollodorus carried—

Eno. No more of that:—He did so.

Pomp. What, I pray you?

Eno. A certain queen to Cæsar³ in a mattress.

Pomp. I know thee now; How far'st thou, sol-

10 Eno. Well; [dier?

And well am like to do; for, I perceive,
Four feasts are toward.

Pomp. Let me shake thy hand;
I never hated thee: I have seen thee fight,
15 When I have envied thy behaviour.

Eno. Sir,

I never lov'd you much; but I have prais'd you,
When you have well deserv'd ten times as much,
As I have said you did.

20 Pomp. Enjoy thy plainness,
It nothing ill becomes thee.—
Aboard my galley I invite you all:
Will you lead, lords?

All. Shew us the way, sir.

25 Pomp. Come. [Exeunt. Manent Eno. and Menas.

Men. [Aside.] Thy father, Pompey, would ne'er have made this treaty.—

You and I have known, sir.

Eno. At sea, I think.

30 Men. We have, sir.

Eno. You have done well by water.

Men. And you by land.

Eno. I will praise any man that will praise me:
though it cannot be denied what I have done by 35 land.

Men. Nor what I have done by water.

Eno. Yes, something you can deny for your own safety: You have been a great thief by sea.

Men. And you by land.

40 Eno. There I deny my land service. But give me your hand, Menas: If our eyes had authority, here they might take two thieves kissing.

Men. All men's faces are true, whatsoe'er their hands are.

45 Eno. But there is never a fair woman has a true face.

Men. No slander; they steal hearts.

Eno. We came hither to fight with you.

Men. For my part, I am sorry it is turn'd to a 50 drinking. Pompey doth this day laugh away his fortune.

Eno. If he do, sure, he cannot weep it back again.

Men. You have said, sir. We look'd not for Mark Antony here: Pray you, is he married to Cleopatra?

Eno. Cæsar's sister is call'd Octavia.

Men. True, sir; she was the wife of Caius Marcellus.

60 Eno. But now she is the wife of Marcus Antonius.

Men. Pray you, sir?

Eno. 'Tis true.

² A metaphor from making marks or lines in casting accounts in arithmetick.

³ i. e. to Julius Cæsar.

Men. Then is Cæsar, and he, for ever knit together.

Eno. If I were bound to divine of this unity, I would not prophesy so.

Men. I think, the policy of that purpose made more in the marriage, than the love of the parties.

Eno. I think so too. But you shall find, the band, that seems to tie their friendship together, will be the very strangler of their amity: Octavia is of a holy, cold, and still conversation.

Men. Who would not have his wife so?

Eno. Not he, that himself is not so; which is Mark Antony. He will to his Egyptian dish again: then shall the sighs of Octavia blow the fire up in Cæsar; and, as I said before, that which is the strength of their amity, shall prove the immediate author of their variance. Antony will use his affection where it is; he marry'd but his occasion here.

Men. And thus it may be. Come, sir, will you aboard?

I have a health for you.

Eno. I shall take it, sir: we have us'd our throats in Egypt.

Men. Come; let's away.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.

Near Mount Misenum.

On board Pompey's Galley.

Musick plays. Enter two or three Servants with a banquet.

1 Serv. Here they'll be, man: Some o' their plants¹ are ill-rooted already, the least wind i' the world will blow them down.

2 Serv. Lepidus is high-colour'd.

1 Serv. They have made him drink alms-drink².

2 Serv. As they pinch one another by the disposition³, he cries out no more; reconciles them to his entreaty, and himself to the drink.

1 Serv. But it raises the greater war between him and his discretion.

2 Serv. Why, this it is to have a name in great men's fellowship: I had as lief have a reed that will do me no service, as a partisan⁴ I could not heave.

1 Serv. To be call'd into a huge sphere, and not to be seen to move in't, are the holes where eyes should be, which pitifully disaster the cheeks⁵.

A sennet sounded. Enter Cæsar, Antony, Pompey, Lepidus, Agrippa, Mecænas, Enobarbus, Menas, with other Captains.

Ant. Thus do they, sir: They take the flow o' the Nile

By certain scales i' the pyramid; they know,
By the height, the lowness or the mean⁶, if dearth,
Or foizon⁷, follow: the higher Nilus swells,
The more it promises: as it ebbs, the seedsman

Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest.

Lep. You have strange serpents there.

Ant. Ay, Lepidus.

Lep. Your serpent of Egypt is bred now of your mud by the operation of your sun; so is your crocodile.

Ant. They are so.

Pomp. Sit,—and some wine.—A health to Lepidus.

Lep. I am not so well as I should be, but I'll ne'er out.

Eno. Not'till you have slept; I fear me, you'll be in, till'then.

Lep. Nay, certainly I have heard, the Ptolemies' Pyramises are very goodly things; without contradiction, I have heard that.

Men. Pompey, a word.

[Aside.]

Pomp. Say in mine ear: What is't?

Men. Forsake thy seat, I do beseech thee, captain,

[Aside.]

And hear me speak a word.

[Lepidus.]

Pomp. Forbear me 'till anon.—This wine for

Lep. What manner o'thing is your crocodile?

Ant. It is shap'd, sir, like itself: and it is as broad as it hath breadth: it is just so high as it is, and moves with its own organs: it lives by that which nourishes it; and, the elements once out of it, it transmigrates.

Lep. What colour is it of?

Ant. Of its own colour too.

Lep. 'Tis a strange serpent.

Ant. 'Tis so. And the tears of it are wet.

Cæs. Will this description satisfy him?

Ant. With the health that Pompey gives him, else he is a very epicure.

Pomp. [To Menas aside.] Go, hang, sir, hang; Tell me of that? away!

Do as I bid you.—Where's the cup I call'd for?

Men. If for the sake of merit thou wilt hear me, Rise from thy stool.

Pomp. [Rises, and walks aside.] I think, thou'rt mad. The matter?

Men. I have ever held my cap off to thy fortunes.

Pomp. [To Menas.] Thou hast serv'd me with much faith: What's else to say?

Be jolly, lords.

Ant. These quick-sands, Lepidus,—

Keep off them, for you sink.

Men. Wilt thou be lord of all the world?

Pomp. What say'st thou? [That's twice.]

Men. Wilt thou be lord of the whole world?

Pomp. How shall that be?

Men. But entertain it,

And, though you think me poor, I am the man Will give thee all the world.

Pomp. Hast thou drunk well?

Men. No, Pompey, I have kept me from the cup. Thou art, if thou dar'st be, the earthly Jove:

¹ Plants, besides its common meaning, is here used for the foot, from the Latin. ² A phrase amongst good fellows, to signify that liquor of another's share which his companion drinks to ease him. But it satirically alludes to Cæsar and Antony's admitting him into the triumvirate, in order to take off from themselves the load of envy. ³ A phrase equivalent to that now in use, of touching one in a sore place. ⁴ i. e. a pike. ⁵ i. e. Are in thy vessel: Let me cut the cable;
And, when we are put off, fall to their throats:
All then is thine.

Pomp. Ah, this thou should'st have done,
And not have spoke of it! In me, 'tis villainy;
In thee, it had been good service. Thou must know,
'Tis not my profit that does lead mine honour;
Mine honour, it. Repent, that e'er thy tongue
Hath so betray'd thine act: Being done unknown,
I should have found it afterwards well done;
But must condemn it now. Desist, and drink.

Men. For this,
I'll never follow thy pall'd² fortunes more.—
Who seeks, and will not take, when once 'tis of-
Shall never find it more. [fer'd,

Pomp. This health to Lepidus. [Pompey. 20

Ant. Bear him ashore.—I'll pledge it for him,

Eno. Here's to thee, Menas.

Men. Enobarbus, welcome.

Pomp. Fill 'till the cup be hid.

Eno. There's a strong fellow, Menas.

[Pointing to the attendant who carries off Lepidus.

Men. Why?

Eno. He bears

The third part of the world, man; See'st not?

Men. The third part then is drunk: 'Would it 30 were all,

That it might go on wheels!

Eno. Drink thou; increase the reels.

Men. Come.

Pomp. This is not yet an Alexandrian feast.

Ant. It ripens towards it.—Strike the vessels³,
Here is to Caesar. [ho!

Cæs. I could well forbear it.
It's monstrous labour, when I wash my brain,
And it grows fouler.

Ant. Be a child o' the time.

Cæs. Possess it,

I will make answer: but I had rather fast
From all, four days, than drink so much in one.

Eno. Ha, my brave emperor! [To Ant.
Shall we dance now the Egyptian Bacchanals,
And celebrate our drink?

Pomp. Let's ha't, good soldier.

Ant. Come, let's all take hands; [sense
'Till that the conquering wine hath steep'd our

Plumpy Bacchus, with pink cyne⁵:
In thy vats our cares be drown'd;
With thy grapes our hairs be crown'd;

Cup us, 'till the world goes round!*

Cæs. What would you more?—Pompey, good night, Good brother,

Let me request you off; our graver business
Frowns at this levity.—Gentle lords, let's part;
You see, we have burnt our cheeks: strong

Men. No, to my cabin,—

These drums!—these trumpets, flutes! what!—
Let Neptune hear we bid a loud farewell
To these great fellows: Sound and be hang'd, sound out. [Sound a flourish with drums.

Eno. Ho, says 'a!—There's my cap.

Men. Ho!—noble captain! Come! [Exeunt.

SCENE I.

A Plain in Syria.

*Enter Ventidius, as after conquest; with Silius and other Romans, and the dead body of Pa- 55
corus borne before him.*

Vent. NOW, darting Parthia, art thou struck⁶;
and now

Pleas'd fortune does of Marcus Crassus' death

Make me revenger.—Bear the king's son's body
Before our army:—Thy Pacorus⁷, Orodes!
Pays this for Marcus Crassus.

Sil. Noble Ventidius,
Whilst yet with Parthian blood thy sword is warm,
The fugitive Parthians follow; spur through Media,
Mesopotamia, and the shelters whither
The routed fly: so thy grand captain Antony

¹ i. e. embraces. ² Palled is rapid, past its time of excellence. ³ Dr. Johnson explains this passage by, Try whether the casks sound as empty: while Mr. Steevens thinks, that strike the vessels means no more than, chink the vessels one against the other, as a mark of our unanimity in drinking, as we now say, chink glasses. ⁴ i. e. the burden of the song. ⁵ i. e. eyes inflam'd with drinking. ⁶ Struck alludes to darting.—Thou whose darts have so often struck others, art struck now thyself. ⁷ Pacorus was the son of Orodes, king of Parthia.

Shall set thee on triumphant chariots, and Put garlands on thy head.

Ven. O Silius, Silius,
I have done enough: A lower place, note well,
May make too great an act: For learn this, Silius;
Better to leave undone, than by our deed
Acquire too high a fame, when he we serve's away.
Cæsar and Antony have ever won
More in their officer, than person: Sosius,
One of my place in Syria, his lieutenant,
For quick accumulation of renown,
Which he atchiev'd by the minute, lost his favour.
Who does i' the wars more than his captain can,
Becomes his captain's captain: and ambition,
The soldier's virtue, rather makes choice of loss,
Than gain, which darkens him.
I could do more to do Antonius good,
But 'twould offend him; and in his offence
Should my performance perish.

Sil. Thou hast, Ventidius, that,
Without the which a soldier, and his sword, [tony ?
Grants' scarce distinction. Thou wilt write to An-

Ven. I'll humbly signify what in his name,
That magical word of war, we have effected;
How, with his banners, and his well-paid ranks,
The ne'er-yet beaten horse of Parthia
We have jaded out o' the field.

Sil. Where is he now? [what haste

Ven. He purposeth to Athens; whither with
The weight we must convey with us will permit,
We shall appear before him.—On, there; pass along, [Exeunt.

SCENE II.

Rome.

Cæsar's House.

Enter Agrippa at one door, Enobarbus at another.

Agr. What, are the brothers parted? [gone;

Eno. They have dispatch'd with Pompey, he is
The other three are sealing. Octavia weeps,
To part from Rome: Cæsar is sad; and Lepidus,
Since Pompey's feast, as Menas says, is troubled
With the green-sickness.

Agr. 'Tis a noble Lepidus.

Eno. A very fine one: O, how he loves Cæsar!

Agr. Nay, but how dearly he adores Mark An-

Eno. Cæsar! Why, he's the Jupiter of men. [tony!

Agr. What's Antony; the god of Jupiter?

Eno. Speak you of Cæsar? How? the nonpareil!

Agr. O Antony! O thou Arabian bird¹!

Eno. Would you praise Cæsar? say, Cæsar!— go no further.

Agr. Indeed, he plied them both with excellent praises. [Antony:

Eno. But he loves Cæsar best;—Yet he loves

Kneel down, kneel down, and wonder.

Agr. Both he loves.

Eno. They are his shards, and he their beetle².
So,—This is to horse.—Adieu, noble Agrippa.

[Trumpets.

Agr. Good fortune, worthy soldier; and farewell.

10 Enter Cæsar, Antony, Lepidus, and Octavia.

Ant. No further, sir.

Cæs. You take from me a great part of myself:
Use me well in it.—Sister, prove such a wife [band
As my thoughts make thee, and as my furthest
15 Shall pass on thy approof³.—Most noble Antony,

Let not the piece of virtue, which is set
Betwixt us, as the cement of our love,

To keep it builded, be the ram, to batter

The fortress of it: for better might we

20 Have lov'd without this mean, if on both parts

This be not cherish'd.

Ant. Make me not offended

In your distrust.

Cæs. I have said.

25 Ant. You shall not find,

Though you be therein curious⁴, the least cause
For what you seem to fear: So, the gods keep you,
And make the hearts of Romans serve your ends!
We will here part.

30 Cæs. Farewell, my dearest sister, fare thee well;
The elements be kind to thee, and make
Thy spirits all of comfort! fare thee well.

Octa. My noble brother!

Ant. The April's in her eyes; it is love's spring, 35 And these the showers, to bring it on:—Be cheerful. [and—

Octa. Sir, look well to my husband's house;

Cæs. What, Octavia?

Octa. I'll tell you in your ear.

40 Ant. Her tongue will not obey her heart, nor can
Her heart inform her tongue: the swan's down feather,

That stands upon the swell at full of tide,

And neither way inclines.

45 Eno. Will Cæsar weep?

Agr. He has a cloud in his face. [horse⁶;

Eno. He were the worse for that, were he a
So is he, being a man.

Agr. Why, Enobarbus?

50 When Antony found Julius Cæsar dead,
He cried almost to roaring: and he wept,

When at Philippi he found Brutus slain.

Eno. That year, indeed, he was troubled with a rheum;

55 What willingly he did confound, he wail'd:
Believe it, 'till I weep too.

Cæs. No, sweet Octavia,

You shall hear from me still; the time shall not
Out-go my thinking on you.

Ant. Come, sir, come:
I'll wrestle with you in my strength of love:
Look, here I have you; thus I let you go,
And give you to the gods.

Cæs. Adieu; be happy!

Lep. Let all the number of the stars give light
To thy fair way!

Cæs. Farewell! farewell! [Kisses Octavia.]

Ant. Farewell! [Trumpets sound. Exeunt.]

SCENE III.

The Palace in Alexandria.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Alexas.

Cleo. Where is the fellow?

Alex. Half afeard to come.

Cleo. Go to, go to:—Come hither, sir,

Enter Messenger.

Alex. Good majesty,
Herod of Jewry¹ dare not look upon you,
But when you are well pleas'd.

Cleo. That Herod's head
I'll have: But how? when Antony is gone,
Through whom I might command it.—Come thou near.

Mes. Most gracious majesty,—

Cleo. Didst thou behold
Octavia?

Mes. Ay, dread queen.

Cleo. Where?

Mes. Madam, in Rome
I look'd her in the face; and saw her led Between her brother and Mark Antony.

Cleo. Is she as tall as me?

Mes. She is not, madam. [or low?]

Cleo. Didst hear her speak? Is she shrill-tongu'd,

Mes. Madam, I heard her speak; she is lowvoic'd. [long.]

Cleo. That's not so good:—he cannot like her

Char. Like her? O Isis! 'tis impossible.

Cleo. I think so, Charmian: Dull of tongue and dwarfish!—

What majesty is in her gait? Remember,
If e'er thou look'dst on majesty.

Mes. She creeps;

Her motion and her station² are as one:
She shews a body rather than a life;
A statue, than a breather.

Cleo. Is this certain?

Mes. Or I have no observance.

Char. Three in Ægypt
Cannot make better note.

Cleo. He's very knowing,
I do perceive't:—There's nothing in her yet:—
The fellow has good judgement.

Char. Excellent.

Cleo. Guess at her years, I pr'ythee.

Mes. Madam, she was a widow.

Cleo. Widow?—Charmian, hark.

Mes. And I do think, she's thirty.

Cleo. Bear'st thou her face in mind? ist long or round?

Mes. Round even to faultiness.

Cleo. For the most part too,

5 They are foolish that are so.—Her hair, what colour?

Mes. Brown, madam: And her forehead
As low as she would wish it.

Cleo. There's gold for thee.

10 Thou must not take my former sharpness ill:—
I will employ thee back again; I find thee
Most fit for business: Go, make thee ready;
Our letters are prepared.

Char. A proper man.

15 Cleo. Indeed, he is so: I repent me much
That I so harry'd⁴ him. Why, methinks, by him,
This creature's no such thing.

Char. Nothing, madam.

Cleo. The man hath seen some majesty, and should know.

Char. Hath he seen majesty? Isis else defend,
And serving you so long! [Charmian:—]

Cleo. I have one thing more to ask him yet, good
But 'tis no matter; thou shalt bring him to me
25 Where I will write: All may be well enough.

Char. I warrant you, madam. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.

Antony's House at Athens.

Enter Antony and Octavia.

30 Ant. Nay, nay, Octavia, not only that,—
That were excusable, that, and thousands more
Of semblable import,—but he hath wag'd [it]
New wars 'gainst Pompey; made his will, and read
35 To public ear:

Spoke scantily of me: when perforce he could not
But pay me terms of honour, cold and sickly
He vented them; most narrow measure lent me:
When the best hint was given him, he not took it,
40 Or did it from his teeth.

Octa. O my good lord,
Believe not all; or, if you must believe,
Stomach not all. A more unhappy lady,
If this division chance, ne'er stood between,
45 Praying for both parts; The good gods will mock me presently

When I shall pray, O, bless my lord and husband!
Undo that prayer, by crying out as loud,
O, bless my brother! Husband win, win brother,
50 Prays, and destroys the prayer; no midway
'Twixt these extremes at all.

Ant. Gentle Octavia,
Let your best love draw to that point, which seeks
Best to preserve it: If I lose mine honour,
55 I lose myself: better I were not yours,
Than yours so branchless. But, as you requested,
Yourself shall go between us: The mean time,
I'll raise the preparation of a war [lady,]

¹ See note 6, p. 768. ² This scene (says Dr. Grey) is a manifest allusion to the questions put by queen Elizabeth to Sir James Melvil, concerning his mistress, the queen of Scots.—Whoever will give himself the trouble to consult his Memoirs, will probably suppose the resemblance to be more than accidental. ³ Station, in this instance, means the act of standing. ⁴ To harry, is to use roughly. ⁵ i. e., disgrace.

Shall stain¹ your brother: Make your soonest
So your desires are yours. [haste;

Octa. Thanks to my lord. [weak,
The Jove of power make me most weak, most
Your reconciler! Wars 'twixt you twain would be
As if the world should cleave, and that slain men
Should solder up the rift.

Ant. When it appears to you where this begins,
Turn your displeasure that way; for our faults
Can never be so equal, that your love
Can equally move with them. Provide your going;
Choose your own company, and command what cost
Your heart has mind to. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.

The same.

Enter Enobarbus, and Eros.

Eno. How now, friend Eros?

Eros. There's strange news come, sir.

Eno. What, man? [Pompey.

Eros. Cæsar and Lepidus have made wars upon

Eno. This is old; What is the success?

Eros. Cæsar, having made use of him in the wars 'gainst Pompey, presently denied him² rivality; would not let him partake in the glory of the action: and not resting here, accuses him of letters he had formerly wrote to Pompey; upon his own appeal³, seizes him: So the poor third is up, 'till death enlarge his confine.

Eno. Then 'would thou hadst a pair of chaps,
no more;

And throw between them all the food thou hast,
They'll grind the other. Where is Antony?

Eros. He's walking in the garden—thus; and spurns

The rush that lies before him: cries, Fool, Lepidus!
And threats the throat of that his officer,
That murder'd Pompey.

Eno. Our great navy's rigg'd.

Eros. For Italy, and Cæsar. More, Domitius;
My lord desires you presently: my news
I might have told hereafter.

Eno. 'Twill be naught:

But let it be.—Bring me to Antony.

Eros. Come, sir.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VI.

Rome. Cæsar's House.

Enter Cæsar, Agrippa, and Mecænas.

Cæs. Contemning Rome, he has done all this:
and more;

In Alexandria,—here's the manner of it,—
I' the market-place, on a tribunal silver'd,
Cleopatra and himself in chairs of gold
Were publicly enthron'd: at the feet, sat
Cæsarion, whom they call my father's son;
And all the unlawful issue, that their lust
Since then hath made between them. Unto her
He gave the 'stablishment of Ægypt; made her
Of Lower Syria, Cyprus, Lydia,⁴
Absolute queen.

Mec. This in the public eye? [exercise.

Cæs. I' the common shew-place, where they
His sons he there proclaim'd, The kings of kings:
Great Media, Parthia, and Armenia,
He gave to Alexander; to Ptolemy he assign'd
Syria, Cilicia, and Phœnicia: She
In the habiliments of the goddess Isis
That day appear'd; and oft before gave audience,
As 'tis reported, so.

Mec. Let Rome be thus Informed.

Agr. Who, queasy with his insolence
Already, will their good thoughts call from him.

Cæs. The people know it; and have now receiv'd
His accusations.

Agr. Whom does he accuse?

Cæs. Cæsar: and that, having in Sicily
Sextus Pompeius spoil'd, we had not rated him
His part o' the isle: then does he say, he lent me
Some shipping unrestor'd: lastly, he frets,
That Lepidus of the triumvirate
Should be depos'd; and, being, that we detain
All his revenue.

Agr. Sir, this should be answer'd.

Cæs. 'Tis done already, and the messenger gone.
I have told him, Lepidus was grown too cruel;
That he his high authority abus'd, [quer'd,
And did deserve his change: for what I have con-
I grant him part; but then, in his Armenia,
And other of his conquer'd kingdoms, I Demand the like.

Mec. He'll never yield to that.

Cæs. Nor must not then be yielded to in this.

Enter Octavia.

Octa. Hail, Cæsar, and my lord! hail, most dear Cæsar!

Cæs. That ever I should call thee, cast-away!

Octa. You have not call'd me so, nor have you cause. [come not

Cæs. Why have you stol'n upon us thus? You
Like Cæsar's sister: The wife of Antony
Should have an army for an usher, and
The neighs of horse to tell of her approach,
Long ere she did appear: the trees by the way,
Should have borne men; and expectation fainted,
Longing for what it had not: nay, the dust
Should have ascended to the roof of heaven,
Rais'd by your populous troops: But you are come
A market-maid to Rome; and have prevented
The ostentation of our love, which, left unshewn,
Is often left unlov'd: we should have met you
By sea, and land; supplying every stage
With an augmented greeting.

Octa. Good my lord,

To come thus was I not constrain'd, but did it
On my free will. My lord, Mark Antony,
Hearing that you prepar'd for war, acquainted
My grieved ear withal; whereon, I begg'd
His pardon for return.

Cæs. Which soon he granted,
Being an obstruct⁵ 'tween his lust and him.

² i. e. equal rank.

³ i. e. upon Cæsar's accusation.

⁴ Lydia for Lybia.

⁵ i. e. an obstruction, a bar to the prosecution of his wanton pleasures with Cleopatra.

Octa. Do not say so, my lord.

Cæs. I have eyes upon him.
And his affairs come to me on the wind.
Where is he now?

Octa. My lord, in Athens.

Cæs. No, my most wronged sister; Cleopatra Hath nodded him to her. He hath given his em-
Up to a whore; who now are levying [pire
The kings o' the earth for war: He hath assembled
Bocchus, the king of Lybia; Archelaus,
Of Cappadocia; Philadelphos, king
Of Paphlagonia; the Thracian king, Adallas;
King Malchus of Arabia; king of Pont;
Herod of Jewry; Mithridates, king
Of Comagene; Polemon and Amintas,
The kings of Mede, and Lycaonia,
With a more larger list of scepters.

Octa. Ah me most wretched,
That have my heart parted betwixt two friends,
That do afflict each other!

Cæs. Welcome hither:
Your letters did withhold our breaking forth;
Till we perceived, both how you were wrong led,
And we in negligent danger. Cheer your heart:
Be you not troubled with the time, which drives
O'er your content these strong necessities;
But let determin'd things to destiny
Hold unbewail'd their way. Welcome to Rome;
Nothing more dear to me. You are abus'd
Beyond the mark of thought: and the high gods,
To do you justice, make their ministers
Of us, and those that love you. Be of comfort;
And ever welcome to us.

Agr. Welcome, lady.

Mec. Welcome, dear madam.
Each heart in Rome does love and pity you:
Only the adulterous Antony, most large
In his abominations, turns you off;
And gives his potent regiment¹ to a trull,
That noises it against us.

Octa. Is it so, sir?

Cæs. Most certain. Sister, welcome: Pray you,
Be ever known to patience: My dearest sister!
[Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.

Antony's Camp, near the Promontory of Actium.

Enter Cleopatra, and Enobarbus.

Cleo. I will be even with thee, doubt it not.

Eno. But why, why, why? [wars;

Cleo. Thou hast forspoke² my being in these
And say'st, it is not fit.

Eno. Well, is it, is it? [not we Cleo. Is't not denounc'd against us? Why should Be there in person?

Eno. [Aside.] Well, I could reply:—
If we should serve with horse and mares together,
The horse were merely lost; the mares would
A soldier, and his horse. [bear

Cleo. What is't you say?

Eno. Your presence needs must puzzle Antony.
Take from his heart, take from his brain, from his
time,

What should not then be spar'd. He is already
5 Traduc'd for levity; and 'tis said in Rome,
That Photinus an eunuch, and your maids,
Manage this war.

Cleo. Sink Rome; and their tongues rot, [war,
That speak against us! A charge we bear i' the 10 And, as the president of my kingdom, will Appear there for a man. Speak not against it;
I will not stay behind. [peror.

Eno. Nay, I have done: Here comes the em-

Enter Antony, and Canidius.

15 Ant. Is it not strange, Canidius,
That from Tarentum, and Brundisium,
He could so quickly cut the Ionian sea,
And take in³ Tornyne?—You have heard on't, sweet?

20 Cleo. Celerity is never more admir'd,
Than by the negligent.

Ant. A good rebuke,
Which might have well becom'd the best of men,
To taunt at slackness. Canidius, we 25 Will fight with him by sea.

Cleo. By sea! What else?

Can. Why will my lord do so?

Ant. For that he dares us to 't.

Eno. So hath my lord dar'd him to single fight.

30 Can. Ay, and to wage this battle at Pharsalia, Where Cæsar fought with Pompey: But these offers,

Which serve not for his vantage, he shakes off;
And so should you.

35 Eno. Your ships are not well mann'd:
Your mariners are muleteers, reapers, people
Ingrost by swift impress; in Cæsar's fleet
Are those, that often have 'gainst Pompey fought;
Their ships are yare⁴; yours, heavy: No disgrace
40 Shall fall you for refusing him at sea,
Being prepar'd for land.

Ant. By sea, by sea.

Eno. Most worthy sir, you therein throw away
The absolute soldiership you have by land;
45 Distract your army, which doth most consist
Of war-mark'd footmen; leave unexecuted
Your own renowned knowledge; quite forego
The way which promises assurance; and Give up yourself merely to chance and hazard,
50 From firm security.

Ant. I'll fight at sea.

Cleo. I have sixty sails, Cæsar none better.

Ant. Our overplus of shipping will we burn;
And, with the rest full-mann'd, from the head of 55 Actium

Beat the approaching Cæsar. But if we fail,
We then can do't at land.—Thy business?

Enter a Messenger.

60 Mes. The news is true, my lord; he is descried;
Cæsar has taken Tornyne.

¹ Regiment is used for regimen or government, by most of our ancient writers. ² To forspoke is to contradict, to speak against, as forbid is to order negatively. ³ i.e. conquer. ⁴ Yare generally signifies dextrous, manageable.

Ant. Can he be there in person? 'tis impossible; Strange, that his power should be.—Canidius, Our nineteen legions thou shalt hold by land, And our twelve thousand horse:—We'll to our ship; Away, my Thetis!—How now, worthy soldier?

Enter a Soldier.

Sold. O noble emperor, do not fight by sea; Trust not to rotten planks: Do you misdoubt This sword, and these my wounds? Let the Egyptians,

And the Phœnicians, go a-ducking; we Have us'd to conquer, standing on the earth, And fighting foot to foot.

Ant. Well, well, away.

[Exeunt Antony, Cleopatra, and Enobarbus.]

Sold. By Hercules, I think, I am i' the right.

Can. Soldier, thou art: but his whole action grows Not in the power on 't¹: So our leader's led, And we are women's men.

Sold. You keep by land

The legions and the horse whole, do you not?

Can. Marcus Octavius, Marcus Justeius, Publicola, and Cælius, are for sea:

But we keep whole by land. This speed of Cæsar's Carries beyond belief.

Sold. While he was yet in Rome, His power went out in such distractions², as Beguil'd all spies.

Can. Who's his lieutenant, hear you?

Sold. They say, one Taurus.

Can. Well I know the man.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. The emperor calls Canidius.

Can. With news the time's with labour; and throws forth,
Each minute, some. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VIII.

The same. A Plain.

Enter Cæsar, Taurus, Officers, &c.

Cæs. Taurus.—

Taur. My lord.

[not battle,

Cæs. Strike not by land; keep whole: provoke 'Till we have done at sea. Do not exceed The prescript of this scrawl: Our fortune lies Upon this jump. [Exeunt.]

Enter Antony and Enobarbus.

Ant. Set we our squadrons on yon side o' the hill, In eye of Cæsar's battle; from which place We may the number of the ships behold, And so proceed accordingly. [Exeunt.]

Enter Canidius, marching with his land army one way over the stage; and Taurus, the lieutenant of Cæsar, the other way. After their going in, is heard the noise of a sea-fight. Alarum. Enter Enobarbus.

Eno. Naught, naught, all naught! I can behold no longer:

The Antoniad³, the Egyptian admiral, With all their sixty, fly, and turn the rudder: To see 't, mine eyes are blasted.

Enter Scarus.

Scar. Gods, and goddesses,

All the whole synod of them!

Eno. What's thy passion?

Scar. The greater cantle⁴ of the world is lost With very ignorance; we have kiss'd away Kingdoms and provinces.

Eno. How appears the fight?

Scar. On our side like the token'd⁵ pestilence, Where death is sure. Yon ribald⁶ nag⁷ of Egypt, Whom leprosy⁸ o'ertake! i' the midst of the fight,—

When vantage like a pair of twins appear'd, Both as the same, or rather ours the elder,— The brize⁹ upon her, like a cow in June, Hoists sails, and flies.

Eno. That I beheld:

Mine eyes did sicken at the sight, and could not Endure a further view.

Scar. She once being looft⁹, The noble ruin of her magic, Antony, Claps on his sea-wing, and, like a doating mallard, Leaving the fight in height, flies after her: I never saw an action of such shame; Experience, manhood, honour, ne'er before Did violate so itself.

Eno. Alack, alack!

Enter Canidius.

Can. Our fortune on the sea is out of breath, And sinks most lamentably. Had our general Been what he knew himself, it had gone well: O, he has given example for our flight, Most grossly, by his own. [night

Eno. Ay, are you thereabouts? Why then, good Indeed.

Can. Towards Peloponnesus are they fled.

Scar. 'Tis easy to 't; and there will I attend What further comes.

Can. To Cæsar will I render My legions and my horse; six kings already Shew me the way of yielding.

Eno. I'll yet follow

The wounded chance of Antony, though my reason Sits in the wind against me. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IX.

The Palace in Alexandria.

Enter Antony, with Eros, and other Attendants.

Ant. Hark, the land bids me tread no more upon 't,

¹ That is, his whole conduct becomes ungoverned by the right, or by reason. ² i. e. detachments; separate bodies. ³ Which, Plutarch says, was the name of Cleopatra's ship. ⁴ Cantle is a corner. ⁵ i. e. spotted.—The death of those visited by the plague was certain when particular eruptions appeared on the skin; and these were called God's tokens. ⁶ A ribald is a lewd fellow.—Yon ribald nag means, Yon strumpet, who is common to every wanton fellow. ⁷ Leprosy was one of the various names by which the Lues venerea was distinguished. ⁸ The brize is the gad-fly. ⁹ To loof (or luff) is to bring a ship close to the wind.

It is asham'd to bear me!—Friends, come hither;
I am so lated¹ in the world, that I
Have lost my way for ever:—I have a ship
Laden with gold; take that, divide it: fly,
And make your peace with Cæsar.

Omnes. Fly! not we. [cowards]

Ant. I have fled myself; and have instructed To run, and shew their shoulders.—Friends, be gone:

I have myself resolv'd upon a course,
Which has no need of you; be gone:
My treasure's in the harbour, take it.—O,
I follow'd that I blush to look upon:
My very hairs do mutiny; for the white
Reprove the brown for rashness, and they them
For fear and doating.—Friends, be gone; you shall Have letters from me to some friends, that will Sweep your way for you. Pray you, look not sad,
Nor make replies of lothness: take the hint
Which my despair proclaims; let that be left
Which leaves itself: to the sea-side straightway:
I will possess you of that ship and treasure.

Leave me, I pray, a little: pray you now:—
Nay, do so; for, indeed, I have lost command,
Therefore I pray you:—I'll see you by-and-by.

Enter Eros, and Cleopatra, led by Charmian and Iras.

Eros. Nay, gentle madam, to him:—Comfort

Iras. Do, most dear queen. [him.]

Char. Do! Why, what else?

Cleo. Let me sit down. O Juno!

Ant. No, no, no, no, no.

Eros. See you here, sir?

Ant. O fye, fye, fye.

Char. Madam,——

Iras. Madam; O good empress!——

Eros. Sir, sir,——

Ant. Yes, my lord, yes;—He, at Philippi, kept
His sword even like a dancer²; while I struck
The lean and wrinkled Cassius; and 'twas I,
That the mad³ Brutus ended: he alone
Dealt on lieutenant⁴, and no practice had
In the brave squares of war: Yet now—No mat-

Cleo. Ah, stand by. [ter.]

Eros. The queen, my lord, the queen.

Iras. Go to him, madam, speak to him;
He is unquality'd with very shame.

Cleo. Well then,—Sustain me:—O! [es;]

Eros. Most noble sir, arise; the queen approach—
Her head's declin'd, and death will seize her, but
Your comfort makes the rescue.

Ant. I have offended reputation;
A most unnoble swerving.

Eros. Sir, the queen.

Ant. O, whither hast thou led me, Ægypt? See
How I convey my shame out of thine eyes,

By looking back on what I have left behind
'Stroy'd in dishonour.

Cleo. O my lord, my lord!

Forgive my fearful sails! I little thought,

5 You would have follow'd.

Ant. Ægypt, thou knew'st too well,
My heart was to thy rudder ty'd by the strings,
And thou should'st tow me after: O'er my spirit
Thy full supremacy thou knew'st; and that 10 Thy beck might from the bidding of the gods Command me.

Cleo. O, my pardon.

Ant. Now, I must

To the young man send humble treaties, dodge 15 And palter in the shifts of lowness; who
With half the bulk of the world play'd as I pleas'd,
Making, and marring fortunes. You did know
How much you were my conqueror; and that My sword, made weak by my affection, would 20 Obey it on all cause.

Cleo. Pardon, pardon.

Ant. Fall not a tear, I say; one of them rates
All that is won and lost: Give me a kiss;
Even this repays me.—We sent our school-master,
25 Is he come back?—Love, I am full of lead:—
Some wine, there, and our viands:—Fortune knows,

We scorn her most, when most she offers blows.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE X.

Cæsar's Camp, in Ægypt.

Enter Cæsar, Dolabella, Thyreus, with others.

Cæs. Let him appear that's come from An-35 tony.—

Know you him?

Dol. Cæsar, 'tis his school-master⁵:

An argument that he is pluck'd, when hither
He sends so poor a pinion of his wing,
40 Which had superfluous kings for messengers,
Not many moons gone by.

Enter Ambassador from Antony.

Cæs. Approach, and speak.

Amb. Such as I am, I come from Antony:

45 I was of late as petty to his ends,
As is the morn-dew on the myrtle leaf
To his grand sea⁶.

Cæs. Be it so; Declare thine office.

Amb. Lord of his fortunes he salutes thee, and 50 Requires to live in Ægypt: which not granted,
He lessens his requests; and to thee sues
To let him breathe between the heavens and earth,
A private man in Athens: This for him.
Next, Cleopatra does confess thy greatness;
55 Submits her to thy might! and of thee craves

¹ Alluding to a benighted traveller. ² Antony means, that Cæsar never offered to draw his sword, but kept it in the scabbard, like one who dances with a sword on, which was formerly the custom in England. ³ Nothing, says Dr. Warburton, can be more in character, than for an infamous debauched tyrant to call the heroic love of one's country and public liberty, madness. ⁴ Meaning, perhaps, that Cæsar only fought by proxy, made war by his lieutenants, or, on the strength of his lieutenants. ⁵ i. e. except or unless. ⁶ i. e. how, by looking another way, I withdraw my ignominy from your sight. ⁷ That is, by the heart-string. ⁸ The name of this person was Euphronius. ⁹ His grand sea may mean his full tide of prosperity.

The circle¹ of the Ptolemies for her heirs,
Now hazarded to thy grace.

Cæs. For Antony,
I have no ears to his request. The queen
Of audience, nor desire, shall fail; so she
From Ægypt drive her all-disgraced friend,
Or take his life there: This if she perform,
She shall not sue unheard. So to them both.

Amb. Fortune pursue thee!

Cæs. Bring him through the bands.

[Exit Ambassador.]

To try thy eloquence, now 'tis time: Dispatch;
From Antony win Cleopatra: promise,

[To Thyreus.]

And in our name, what she requires; add more,
From thine invention, offers: Women are not,
In their best fortunes, strong; but want will perjure

The ne'er touch'd vestal: Try thy cunning, Thy-Make thine own edict for thy pains, which we Will answer as a law.

Thyr. Cæsar, I go.

Cæs. Observe how Antony becomes his flaw²;
And what thou think'st his very action speaks
In every power that moves.

Thyr. Cæsar, I shall.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE XI.

The Palace in Alexandria.

Enter Cleopatra, Enobarbus, Charmian, and Iras.

Cleo. What shall we do, Enobarbus?

Eno. Think, and die³.

Cleo. Is Antony, or we, in fault for this?

Eno. Antony only, that would make his will Lord of his reason. What though you fled
From that great face of war, whose several ranges
Frighted each other? why should he follow?
The itch of his affection should not then
Have nick'd his captainship; at such a point,
When half to half the world oppos'd, he being
The meered question⁴: 'Twas a shame no less
Than was his loss, to course your flying flags,
And leave his navy gazing.

Cleo. Pr'ythee, peace.

Enter Antony, with the Ambassador.

Ant. Is that his answer?

Amb. Ay, my lord.

Ant. The queen shall then have courtesy,
So she will yield us up.

Amb. He says so.

Ant. Let her know it.—

To the boy Cæsar send this grizzled head,
And he will fill thy wishes to the brim
With principalities.

Cleo. That head, my lord?

Ant. To him again; Tell him, he wears therose
Of youth upon him; from which, the world should note

Something particular: his coin, ships, legions,
5 May be a coward's; whose ministers would prevail

Under the service of a child, as soon
As j' the command of Cæsar: I dare him therefore
To lay his gay comparisons apart,

10 And answer me declin'd⁵, sword against sword,
Ourselves alone: I'll write it; follow me.

[Exeunt Antony and Amb.]

Eno. Yes, like enough, high-battled Cæsar will Unstate his happiness, and be stag'd to the shew 15 Against a sworder. I see, men's judgements are
A parcel of their fortunes; and things outward
Do draw the inward quality after them,
To suffer all alike. That he should dream,
Knowing all measures, the full Cæsar will 20 Answer his emptiness! Cæsar, thou hast subdu'd
His judgement too.

Enter an Attendant.

Attend. A messenger from Cæsar.

25 Cleo. What? no more ceremony? See, my women!—

Against the blown rose may they stop their nose,
That kneel'd unto the buds.—Admit him, sir.

Eno. Mine honesty, and I, begin to square.

[Aside.]

30 The loyalty, well held to fools, does make
Our faith mere folly: Yet, he, that can endure
To follow with allegiance a fallen lord,
Does conquer him that did his master conquer,
35 And earns a place i' the story.

Enter Thyreus.

Cleo. Cæsar's will!

Thyr. Hear it apart.

40 Cleo. None but friends; say boldly.

Thyr. So, haply, are they friends to Antony.

Eno. He needs as many, sir, as Cæsar has;
Or needs not us. If Cæsar please, our master
Will leap to be his friend: For us, you know,
45 Whose he is, we are; and that is, Cæsar's.

Thyr. So.—

Thus then, thou most renown'd; Cæsar intreats,
Not to consider in what case thou stand'st
Further than he is Cæsar's.

50 Cleo. Go on: Right royal.

Thyr. He knows that you embrace not Antony
As you did love, but as you fear'd him.

Cleo. O!

55 Thyr. The scars upon your honour, therefore, he Does pity, as constrained blemishes,
Not as deserv'd.

² That is, how Antony conforms himself to this breach of his fortune.

⁵ The meaning is, I require of Cæsar not to depend on the superiority which the comparison of our different fortunes may exhibit to him, but to answer me man to man, in this decline of my age or power.

⁶ i. e. Cæsar intreats, that at the same time you consider your desperate fortunes, you would consider he is Cæsar; that is, generous and forgiving, able and willing to restore them.

Cleo. He is a god, and knows
What is most right: Mine honour was not yielded,
But conquer'd merely.

Eno. To be sure of that, [Aside.
I will ask Antony.—Sir, sir, thou art so leaky,
That we must leave thee to thy sinking, for Thy dearest quit thee. [Exit Enobarbus.

Thyr. Shall I say to Cæsar
What you require of him? for he partly begs
To be desir'd to give. It much would please him,
That of his fortunes you would make a staff
To lean upon: but it would warm his spirits,
To hear from me you had left Antony,
And put yourself under his shroud,
The universal landlord.

Cleo. What's your name?

Thyr. My name is Thyreus.

Cleo. Most kind messenger,
Say to great Cæsar this, In disputation
I kiss his conquering hand¹: tell him, I am prompt
To lay my crown at his feet, and there to kneel:
Tell him, from his all-obeying breath I hear
The doom of Ægypt.

Thyr. 'Tis your noblest course.
Wisdom and fortune combating together,
If that the former dare but what it can,
No chance may shake it. Give me grace² to lay
My duty on your hand.

Cleo. Your Cæsar's father oft,
When he hath mus'd of taking kingdoms in,
Bestow'd his lips on that unworthy place.
As it rain'd kisses.

Re-enter Antony, and Enobarbus.

Ant. Favours, by Jove that thunders!—
What art thou, fellow?

Thyr. One, that but performs
The bidding of the fullest man, and worthiest
To have command obey'd.

Eno. You will be whipp'd.

Ant. Approach, there:—Ah, you kite!—Now, gods and devils! [ho!
Authority melts from me: Of late, when I cry'd
Like boys unto a muss³, kings would start forth,
And cry, Your will? Have you no ears? I am

Enter Attendants.

Antony yet. Take hence this Jack, and whip him.

Eno. 'Tis better playing with a lion's whelp,
Than with an old one dying.

Ant. Moon and stars!— [butaries
Whip him:—Were 't twenty of the greatest tri-
That do acknowledge Cæsar, should I find them
So saucy with the hand of she here, (What's her
name,

Since she was Cleopatra?)—Whip him, fellows,
'Till, like a boy, you see him cringe his face,
And whine aloud for mercy: Take him hence.

Thyr. Mark Antony,—

Ant. Tug him away:—being whipp'd,
Bring him again:—This Jack of Cæsar's shall Bear us an errand to him.—

[Exeunt Att. with Thyreus.

You were half blasted ere I knew you: Ha!

Have I my pillow left unprest in Rome,
Forborne the getting of a lawful race,
And by a gem of women, to be abus'd
By one that looks on feeders?

Cleo. Good my lord,—

Ant. You have been a boggler ever:—
But when we in our viciousness grow hard,
(O misery on't!) the wise gods feel our eyes;
In our own filth drop our clear judgements; make us
Adore our errors; laugh at us, while we strut
To our confusion.

Cleo. O, is it come to this?

Ant. I found you as a morsel, cold upon
Dead Cæsar's trencher: nay, you were a fragment
Of Cneius Pompey's; besides what hotter hours
Unregister'd in vulgar fame, you have Luxuriously pick'd out:—For, I am sure,
Though you can guess what temperance should be,
You know not what it is.

Cleo. Wherefore is this?

Ant. To let a fellow that will take rewards,
And say, God quit you! be familiar with
My play-fellow, your hand, this kingly seal,
And plighter of high hearts! O, that I were
Upon the hill of Basan, to out-roar
The horned herd! for I have savage cause;
And to proclaim it civilly, were like
A halter'd neck, which does the hangman thank
For being yare about him.—Is he whipp'd?

Re-enter Attendants, with Thyreus.

Attend. Soundly, my lord.

Ant. Cry'd he? and begg'd he pardon?

Attend. He did ask favour.

Ant. If that thy father live, let him repent

Thou wast not made his daughter; and bethow sorry
To follow Cæsar in his triumph, since [forth,
Thou hast been whipp'd for following him: hence—
The white hand of a lady fever thee,
Shake thou to look on't.—Get thee back to Cæsar,
Tell him thy entertainment: Look, thou say,
He makes me angry with him: for he seems
Proud and disdainful; harping on what I am,
Not what he knew I was: He makes me angry;
And at this time most easy 'tis to do't;

When my good stars, that were my former guides,
Have empty left their orbs, and shot their fires
Into the abism of hell. If he mislike
My speech, and what is done; tell him, he has Hipparchus, my enfranchis'd bondman, whom
He may at pleasure whip, or hang, or torture,
As he shall like, to quit⁴ me: Urge it thou:
Hence with thy stripes, begone. [Exit Thyreus.

Cleo. Have you done yet?

Ant. Alack, our terrene moon
Is now eclips'd; and it portends alone
The fall of Antony!

Cleo. I must stay his time.

Ant. To flatter Cæsar, would you mingle eyes
With one that ties his points?

Cleo. Not know me yet?

Ant. Cold-hearted toward me?

Cleo. Ah, dear, if I be so,

¹ i. e. I own he has the better in the controversy,—I confess my inability to dispute or contend with him. ² i. e. Grant me the favour. ³ i. e. a scramble. ⁴ i. e. to requite me.

From my cold heart let heaven ingender hail,
And poison it in the source; and the first stone
Drop in my neck: as it determines, so Dissolve my life! The next Cæsarion¹ smite!
'Till, by degrees, the memory of my womb,
Together with my brave Ægyptians all,
By the discandying of this pelleted storm,
Lie graveless; 'till the flies and gnats of Nile
Have buried them for prey!

Ant. I am satisfy'd:
Cæsar sits down in Alexandria; where
I will oppose his fate. Our force by land
Hath nobly held; our sever'd navy too [like.
Have knit again, and fleet², threat'ning most sea-
Where hast thou been, my heart?—Dost thou hear, lady?

If from the field I should return once more
To kiss these lips, I will appear in blood;
I and my sword will earn my chronicle;
There is hope in it yet.

Cleo. That's my brave lord!

Ant. I will betreble-sinew'd, hearted, breath'd,
And fight maliciously: for when mine hours
Were nice³ and lucky, men did ransom lives
Of me for jests; but now, I'll set my teeth,

And send to darkness all that stop me.—Come,
Let's have one other gaudy⁴ night: call to me,
All my sad captains, fill our bowls; once more
Let's mock the midnight bell.

5 Cleo. It is my birth-day; [lord
I had thought, to have held it poor; but, since my
Is Antony again, I will be Cleopatra.

Ant. We'll yet do well.

Cleo. Call all his noble captains to my lord.

10 Ant. Do so, we'll speak to them; and to-night
I'll force [queen;
The wine peep through their scars. Come on, my There's sap in't yet. The next time I do fight,
I'll make death love me; for I will contend
15 Even with his pestilent scythe.

[Exeunt Ant. and Cleo.

Eno. Now he'll out-stare the lightning. To be furious,

Is to be frighted out of fear: and in that mood,
20 The dove will peck the estridge; and I see still,
A diminution in our captain's brain
Restores his heart: When valour preys on reason,
It eats the sword it fights with. I will seek
Some way to leave him. [Exit.

A C T IV.

S C E N E I.

Cæsar's Camp at Alexandria.

Enter Cæsar, reading a letter; Agrippa, Mecænas; &c.

Cæs. HE calls me boy; and chides, as he had power

To beat me out of Ægypt: my messenger [combat,
He hath whipp'd with rods; dares me to personal
Cæsar to Antony: Let the old ruffian know,
I have many other ways to die; mean time,
Laugh at his challenge.

Mec. Cæsar must think,
When one so great begins to rage, he's hunted
Even to falling. Give him no breath, but now
Make boot⁵ of his distraction: Never anger
Made good guard for itself.

Cæs. Let our best heads
Know, that to-morrow the last of many battles
We mean to fight:—Within our files there are
Of those that serv'd Mark Antony but late,
Enough to fetch him in. See it done;
And feast the army: we have store to do't,
And they have earn'd the waste. Poor Antony!
[Exeunt.

S C E N E II.

The Palace at Alexandria.

Enter Antony, and Cleopatra, Enobarbus, Charmian, Iras, Alexas, with others.

Ant. He will not fight with me, Domitius.

Eno. No.

Ant. Why should he not? [fortune,

Eno. He thinks, being twenty times of better
He is twenty men to one.

Ant. To-morrow, soldier,
By sea and land I'll fight: or I will live,
Or bathe my dying honour in the blood
40 Shall make it live again. Woo't thou fight well?

Eno. I'll strike; and cry, Take all.

Ant. Well said; come on.—

Call forth my household servants; let's to-night
Enter Servants.

45 Be bounteous at our meal.—Give me thy hand,
Thou hast been rightly honest;—so hast thou;—
And thou;—and thou;—and thou:—you have serv'd me well,

And kings have been your fellows.

50 Cleo. What means this?

Eno. [Aside.] 'Tis one of those odd tricks, which sorrow shoots
Out of the mind.

Ant. And thou art honest too.

55 I wish, I could be made so many men;
And all of you clapt up together in
An Antony; that I might do you service,
So good as you have done.

Omnes. The gods forbid! [night;

60 Ant. Well, my good fellows, wait on me to-
Scant not my cups; and make as much of me,

¹ Cæsarion was Cleopatra's son by Julius Cæsar. ² Fleet is the old word for float. ³ Nice here means trifling. ⁴ This epithet is still bestowed on feast-days in the colleges of Oxford and Cambridge. ⁵ i. e. take advantage of.

As when mine empire was your fellow too,
And suffer'd my command.

Cleo. What does he mean?

Eno. To make his followers weep.

Ant. Tend me to-night;

May be, it is the period of your duty:

Haply, you shall not see me more; or if¹,

A mangled shadow: perchance, to-morrow

You'll serve another master. I look on you,

As one that takes his leave. Mine honest friends,

I turn you not away; but, like a master

Married to your good service, stay 'till death:

Tend me to-night two hours, I ask no more,

And the gods yield² you for't!

Eno. What mean you, sir,

To give them this discomfort? Look, they weep:

And I, an ass, am onion-ey'd³: for shame,

Transform us not to women.

Ant. Ho, ho, ho!

Now the witch take me, if I meant it thus!

Grace grow where those drops fall! My hearty
friends,

You take me in too dolorous a sense:

For I spake to you for your comfort; did desire you

To burn this night with torches: Know, my hearts,

I hope well of to-morrow; and will lead you,

Where rather I'll expect victorious life,

Than death and honour⁴. Let's to supper; come,

And drown consideration. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.

Before the Palace.

Enter a Company of Soldiers.

1 Sold. Brother, good night: to-morrow is the day.

2 Sold. It will determine one way: fare you well.

Heard you of nothing strange about the streets?

1 Sold. Nothing: What news? [to you.]

2 Sold. Belike, 'tis but a rumour: Good night

1 Sold. Well, sir, good night.

[They meet with other Soldiers.]

2 Sold. Soldiers, have careful watch.

1 Sold. And you: Good night, good night.

[They place themselves on every corner of the stage.]

2 Sold. Here we: and if to-morrow

Our navy thrive, I have an absolute hope

Our landmen will stand up.

1 Sold. 'Tis a brave army, and full of purpose.

[Musick of hautboys under the stage.]

2 Sold. Peace, what noise?

1 Sold. List, list!

2 Sold. Hark!

1 Sold. Musick i' the air.

3 Sold. Under the earth.

4 Sold. It signs well⁵, does it not?

3 Sold. No.

1 Sold. Peace, I say. What should this mean?

2 Sold. 'Tis the god Hercules, whom Antony lov'd,
Now leaves him.

1 Sold. Walk; let's see if other watchmen

Do hear what we do.

2 Sold. How now, masters? [Speak together.]

Omnes. How now? how now? do you hear this?

1 Sold. Ay; Is't not strange?

3 Sold. Do you hear, masters? do you hear?

1 Sold. Follow the noise so far as we have quar-

Let's see how it will give off. [ter;]

Omnes. Content:—'Tis strange. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.

Cleopatra's Palace.

Enter Antony, and Cleopatra, with Charmian, and others.

Ant. Eros! mine armour, Eros!

Cleo. Sleep a little. [Eros!]

15 Ant. No, my chuck.—Eros, come; mine armour,

Enter Eros, with armour.

Come, good fellow, put thine iron on:—

If fortune be not ours to-day, it is Because we brave her.—Come.

20 Cleo. Nay, I'll help too. [art]

Ant. What's this for? Ah, let be, let be! thou

The armourer of my heart:—False, false; this, this,

Cleo. Sooth, la, I'll help: Thus it must be.

Ant. Well, well;

25 We shall thrive now.—Seest thou, my good fellow?

Go, put on thy defences.

Eros. Briefly⁶, sir.

Cleo. Is not this buckled well?

Ant. Rarely, rarely.

30 He that unbuckles this, 'till we do please

To doff⁷ it for our repose, shall hear a storm.—

Thou fumblest, Eros; and my queen's a squire

More tight at this than thou: Dispatch.—O love,

That thou could'st see my wars to-day, and knew'st

35 The royal occupation! thou should'st see

Enter an Officer, arm'd.

A workman in't.—Good morrow to thee; welcome:

Thou look'st like him that knows a warlike charge:

40 To business that we love, we rise betime,

And go to it with delight.

Off. A thousand, sir,

Early though it be, have on their rivetted trim,

And at the port expect you. [Shout. Trumpets flourish.]

45 Enter other Officers, and Soldiers.

Cap. The morn is fair.—Good morrow, general!

All. Good morrow, general!

Ant. 'Tis well blown, lads.

This morning, like the spirit of a youth

50 That means to be of note, begins betimes.—

So, so; come, give me that: this way; well said.

Fare thee well, dame, whate'er becomes of me:

This is a soldier's kiss: rebukeable, [Kisses her.]

And worthy shameful check it were, to stand

55 On more mechanic compliment; I'll leave thee

Now, like a man of steel.—You, that will fight,

Follow me close; I'll bring you to't.—Adieu.

[Exeunt Antony, Officers, &c.]

Char. Please you, retire to your chamber?

60 Cleo. Lead me.

He goes forth gallantly. That he and Cæsar might ¹ Subintelligitur, you see me more.

as if they had been fretted by onions.

⁶ i. e. quickly, sir.

⁷ To doff is to put off.

² i. e. reward you.

⁴ That is, an honourable death.

Determine this great war in single fight!
Then, Antony,—But now,—Well, on. [Exeunt.]

S C E N E V.

Near Alexandria.

Trumpets sound. Enter Antony, and Eros; a Soldier meeting them.

Sold. The gods make this a happy day to Antony!

Ant. 'Would, thou and those thy scars had once
To make me fight at land! [prevail'd

Eros. Hadst thou done so,
The kings that have revolted, and the soldier
That has this morning left thee, would have still Follow'd thy heels.

Ant. Who's gone this morning?

Eros. Who?

One ever near thee: Call for Enobarbus.
He shall not hear thee; or from Caesar's camp
Say, I am none of thine.

Ant. What say'st thou?

Sold. Sir,
He is with Caesar.

Eros. Sir, his chests and treasure
He has not with him.

Ant. Is he gone?

Sold. Most certain.

Ant. Go, Eros, send his treasure after; do it;
Detain no jot, I charge thee: write to him
(I will subscribe) gentle adieus, and greetings:
Say, that I wish he never find more cause
To change a master.—O, my fortunes have Corrupted honest men!—Dispatch.—Enobarbus!
[Exeunt.]

S C E N E VI.

Caesar's Camp.

Enter Caesar, Agrippa, with Enobarbus, and others.

Cas. Go forth, Agrippa, and begin the fight:
Our will is, Antony be took alive;
Make it so known.

Agr. Caesar, I shall. [Exit Agrippa.]

Cas. The time of universal peace is near:
Prove this a prosperous day, the three-nook'd world
Shall bear the olive freely.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Antony
Is come into the field.

Cas. Go, charge Agrippa
Plant those that have revolted in the vant,
That Antony may seem to spend his fury
Upon himself. [Exeunt Caesar, &c.]

Eno. Alexas did revolt; and went to Jewry, on Affairs of Antony; there did persuade Great Herod to incline himself to Caesar,
And leave his master Antony: for this pains,
Caesar hath hanged him. Canidius, and the rest
That fell away, have entertainment, but
No honourable trust. I have done ill;
Of which I do accuse myself so sorely,
That I will joy no more.

Enter a Soldier of Caesar's.

Sold. Enobarbus, Antony
Hath after thee sent all thy treasure, with
His bounty over-plus: The messenger
5 Came on my guard; and at thy tent is now,
Unloading of his mules.

Eno. I give it you.

Sold. Mock not, Enobarbus,
I tell you true: Best you safed the bringer
10 Out of the host; I must attend mine office,
Or would have done 't myself. Your emperor
Continues still a Jove. [Exit.]

Eno. I am alone the villain of the earth,
And feel I am so most. O Antony,
15 Thou mine of bounty, how wouldst thou have paid
My better service, when my turpitude [heart:
Thou dost so crown with gold? This blows¹ my
If swift thought break it not, a swifter mean [feel.
Shall out-strike thought; but thought will do't, I 20 I fight against thee!—No: I will go seek
Some ditch, wherein to die: the foul'st best fits
My latter part of life. [Exit.]

Before the Walls of Alexandria.

Alarum. Drums and Trumpets. Enter Agrippa, and others.

Agr. Retire, we have engag'd ourselves too far:
Caesar himself has work, and our oppression²
30 Exceeds what we expected. [Exeunt.]

Alarum. Enter Antony, and Scarus, wounded.

Scar. O my brave emperor, this is fought indeed!
Had we done so at first, we had driven them home
With clouts about their heads.

Ant. Thou bleed'st apace.

Scar. I had a wound here that was like a T,
But now 'tis made an H.

Ant. They do retire.

Scar. We'll beat 'em into bench-holes; I have yet 40 Room for six scotches more.

Enter Eros.

Eros. They are beaten, sir; and our advantage
For a fair victory. [serves

Scar. Let us score their backs,
And snatch 'em up, as we take hares, behind;
'Tis sport to maul a runner.

Ant. I will reward thee
Once for thy sprightly comfort, and ten-fold
For thy good valour. Come thee on.

Scar. I'll halt after. [Exeunt.]

Under the Walls of Alexandria.

Alarum. Enter Antony again in a march. Scarus,
with others.

Ant. We have beat him to his camp: Run one before, [row,
And let the queen know of our guests.—To mor-
Before the sun shall see us, we'll spill the blood 60 That has to-day escap'd. I thank you all;
For doughty-handed are you; and have fought
Not as you serv'd the cause, but as it had been

² Oppression for opposition.

Each man's like mine; you have shewn all Hectors.
Enter the city, clip¹ your wives, your friends,
Tell them your feats; whilst they with joyful tears
Wash the congealment from your wounds, and kiss
The honour'd gashes whole.—Give me thy hand; 5
[To Scarus.]

Enter Cleopatra.

To this great fairy² I'll commend thy acts, [world,
Make her thanks bless thee.—O thou day o' the Chain mine arm'd neck; leap thou, attire and all, 10
Through proof of harness³ to my heart, and there
Ride on the pants triumphing.

Cleo. Lord of lords!

O infinite virtue! com'st thou smiling from
The world's great snare uncaught?

Ant. My nightingale, [though grey
We have beat them to their beds. What, girl?
Do something mingle with our younger brown;
yet have we

A brain that nourishes our nerves, and can Get goal for goal of youth⁴. Behold this man;
Commend unto his lips thy favouring hand;—
Kiss it, my warrior:—He hath fought to-day,
As if a god, in hate of mankind, had Destroy'd in such a shape.

Cleo. I'll give thee, friend,
An armour all of gold; it was a king's.

Ant. He has deserv'd it, were it carbuncled
Like holy Phœbus' car.—Give me thy hand;—
Through Alexandria make a jolly march;
Bear our hack'd targets like the menthatowe⁵ them:
Had our great palace the capacity
To camp this host, we would all sup together;
And drink carouses to the next day's fate,
Which promises royal peril.—Trumpeters,
With brazen din blast you the city's ear;
Make mingle with our rattling tabourines⁶;
That heaven and earth may strike their sounds together,
Applauding our approach.

SCENE IX.

Cæsar's Camp.

Enter a Centinel, and his company. Enobarbus follows.

Cent. If we be not reliev'd within this hour,
We must return to the court of guard⁷: The night
Is shiny; and, they say, we shall embattle
By the second hour i' the morn.

1 Sold. This last day was a shrewd one to us.

Eno. O, bear me witness, night!—

2 Sold. What man is this?

1 Sold. Stand close, and list him.

Eno. Be witness to me, O thou blessed moon,
When men revolted shall upon record
Bear hateful memory, poor Enobarbus did
Before thy face repent!

Cent. Enobarbus!

3 Sold. Peace; hark further.

Eno. O sovereign mistress of true melancholy,
The poisonous damp of night dispunge upon me;
That life, a very rebel to my will,
May hang no longer on me: Throw my heart
Against the flint and hardness of my fault;
Which, being dried with grief, will break to powder,

And finish all foul thoughts. O Antony,

Nobler than my revolt is infamous,

10 Forgive me in thine own particular;

But let the world rank me in register

A master-leaver, and a fugitive:

O Antony! O Antony!

[Dies.]

1 Sold. Let's speak to him.

15 Cent. Let's hear him, for the things he speaks
May concern Cæsar.

2 Sold. Let's do so. But he sleeps.

Cent. Swoons rather; for so bad a prayer as his
Was never yet for sleep.

20 1 Sold. Go we to him.

2 Sold. Awake, sir, awake; speak to us.

1 Sold. Hear you, sir?

Cent. The hand of death hath raught⁸ him.

[Drums afar off.]

25 Hark, how the drums demurely⁹ wake the sleepers:
Let's bear him to the court of guard; he is
Of note; our hour is fully out.

2 Sol. Come on then:

He may recover yet. [Exeunt with the body.]

SCENE X.

Between the two Camps.

Enter Antony, and Scarus, with their Army.

Ant. Their preparation is to-day by sea;

35 We please them not by land.

Scar. For both, my lord.

Ant. I would they'd fight i' the fire, or in the air;
We'd fight there too. But this it is; Our foot
Upon the hills adjoining to the city,

40 Shall stay with us: order for sea is given;

They have put forth the haven,

Where their appointment we may best discover,
And look on their endeavour¹⁰. [Exeunt.]

Enter Cæsar and his Army.

45 Cæs. But being charg'd¹¹, we will be still by land,
Which, as I take it, we shall; for his best force
Is forth to man his gallies. To the vales,
And hold our best advantage. [Exeunt.]

Re-enter Antony, and Scarus.

50 Ant. Yet they're not join'd: Where yonder
pine does stand,

I shall discover all: I'll bring thee word

Straight, how 'tis like to go. [Exit.]

Scar. Swallows have built

55 In Cleopatra's sails their nests: the augurers Say, they know not,—they cannot tell;—
look grimly,

And dare not speak their knowledge. Antony

¹ i.e. embrace. ² Fairy comprises the idea of power and beauty. ³ i.e. armour of proof.

⁴ At all plays of barriers, the boundary is called a goal; to win a goal, is to be a superior in a contest of activity. ⁵ i.e. own them. ⁶ A tabourin was a small drum. ⁷ i.e. the guard-room, the place where the guard musters. ⁸ i.e. reached him. ⁹ Demurely for solemnly. ¹⁰ i.e. where we may best discover their numbers, and see their motions. ¹¹ But here signifies without, in which sense it is often used in the North.

Is valiant and dejected; and, by starts,
His fretted fortunes give him hope, and fear,
Of what he has, and has not. [Exit.]

Alarum afar off, as at a sea-fight.

Re-enter Antony.

Ant. All is lost;

This foul Egyptian hath betrayed me;
My fleet hath yielded to the foe; and yonder
They cast their caps up, and carouse together
Like friends long lost. Triple-turn'd whore!¹
'tis thou

Hast sold me to this novice; and my heart
Makes only wars on thee.—Bid them all fly;
For when I am reveng'd upon my charm,
I have done all:—Bid them all fly, be gone.
O sun, thy uprise shall I see no more:
Fortune and Antony part here; even here
Do we shake hands.—All come to this?—The hearts

That spaniel'd me at heels, to whom I gave
Their wishes, do discandy, melt their sweets
On blossoming Cæsar; and this pine is bark'd,
That over-topp'd them all. Betray'd I am:
O this false soul of Egypt! this grave charm,²—
Whose eye beck'd forth my wars, and call'd them
home;

Whose bosom was my crownet³, my chief end,—
Like a right gipsy⁴, hath, at fast and loose,
Beguil'd me to the very heart of loss⁵.
What, Eros, Eros!

Enter Cleopatra.

Ah, thou spell! avault.—

Cleo. Why is my lord enrag'd against his love?

Ant. Vanish; or I shall give thee thy deserving,
And blemish Cæsar's triumph. Let him take thee,
And hoist thee up to the shouting Plebeians:
Follow his chariot, like the greatest spot
Of all thy sex; most monster-like, be shewn
For poor'st diminutives to dolts; and let Patient Octavia plough thy visage up
With her prepared⁶ nails. 'Tis well thou'rt gone,— [Exit Cleopatra.]

If it be well to live: But better 'twere,
Thou fell'st into my fury; for one death
Might have prevented many.—Eros, ho!—
The shirt of Nessus is upon me: Teach me,

Alcides, thou mine ancestor, thy rage:
Let me lodge Lichas on the horns o' the moon;
And with those hands, that grasp'd the heaviest club,

5 Subdue my worthiest self. The witch shall die;
To the young Roman boy she has sold me, and I fall
Under this plot: she dies for 't.—Eros, ho! [Exit.]

SCENE XI.

Cleopatra's Palace.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Mardian.

Cleo. Help me, my women! O, he is more mad
Than Telamon for his shield⁷; the boar of Thessaly
15 Was never so emboss'd⁸.

Char. To the monument; [dead.
There lock yourself, and send him word you are
The soul and body rive not more at parting,
Than greatness going off.

20 Cleo. To the monument:—
Mardian, go tell him I have slain myself;
Say, that the last I spoke was, Antony,
And word it, pr'ythee, piteously: Hence, Mardian,
And bring me how he takes my death.—To the 25 monument. [Exeunt.]

SCENE XII.

The same.

Enter Antony and Eros.

30 Ant. Eros, thou yet behold'st me?

Eros. Ay, noble lord.

Ant. Sometime, we see a cloud that's dragonish;
A vapour, sometime, like a bear, or lion,
35 A tower'd citadel, a pendent rock,
A forked mountain, or blue promontory
With trees upon 't, that nod unto the world,
And mock our eyes with air: Thou hast seen
these signs;

40 They are black vespers' pageants.

Eros. Ay, my lord. [thought,

Ant. That, which is now a horse, even with a
The rack dislimns⁹; and makes it indistinct,
As water is in water.

45 Eros. It does, my lord. [is

Ant. My good knave¹¹, Eros, now thy captain
Even such a body: here I am Antony;

¹ She was first for Julius Cæsar, then for Pompey the great, and afterwards for Antony.

² i.e. "this sublime, this majestic beauty," according to Dr. Johnson; but according to Mr. Steevens, "this deadly or destructive piece of witchcraft." ³ Dr. Johnson supposes that crownet means last purpose, probably from finis coronat opus. ⁴ Sir John Hawkins observes, that there is a kind of pun in this passage, arising from the corruption of the word Egyptian into gipsy. The old law-books term such persons as ramble about the country, and pretend skill in palmistry and fortune-telling, Egyptians.—Fast and loose is a term to signify a cheating game, of which the following is a description: A leathern belt is made up into a number of intricate folds, and placed edgewise upon a table: one of the folds is made to resemble the middle of the girdle, so that whoever should thrust a skewer into it would think he held it fast to the table; whereas, when he has so done, the person with whom he plays may take hold of both ends and draw it away.—This trick is now known to the common people, by the name of pricking at the belt or girdle, and perhaps was practised by the Gypsies in the time of Shakspeare.

⁵ i.e. to the utmost loss possible. ⁶ i.e. with nails which she suffered to grow for this purpose. ⁷ The meaning is, let me do something in my rage, becoming the successor of Hercules.

¹⁰ i.e. the fleeting away of the clouds destroys the picture. ¹¹ Knave is servant.

Yet cannot hold this visible shape, my knave.
I made these wars for Ægypt; and the queen,—
Whose heart, I thought, I had, for she had mine;
Which, whilst it was mine, had annex'd unto't
A million more, now lost;—she, Eros, has Pack'd cards with Cæsar, and false play'd my glory
Unto an enemy's triumph¹.—

Nay, weep not, gentle Eros: there is left us
Ourselves to end ourselves.—O, thy vile lady!

Enter Mardian.

She has robb'd me of my sword.

Mar. No, Antony;
My mistress lov'd thee, and her fortunes mingled
With thine entirely.

Ant. Hence, saucy eunuch; peace;
She hath betray'd me, and shall die the death.

Mar. Death of one person can be paid but once;
And that she hath discharg'd: What thou would'st
Is done unto thy hand; the last she spake [do,
Was, Antony! most noble Antony!

Then in the midst a tearing groan did break
The name of Antony; it was divided Between her heart and lips; she render'd life,
The name so buried in her.

Ant. Dead then?

Mar. Dead.

Ant. Unarm, Eros; the long day's task is done,
And we must sleep:—That thou depart'st hence safe,
Does pay thy labour richly; Go.—Off, pluck off;—
[Exit Mardian.

The seven-fold shield of Ajax cannot keep
The battery from my heart. O, cleave, my sides!
Heart, once be stronger than thy continent²,
Crack thy frail case!—Apace, Eros, apace.—
No more a soldier:—Bruised pieces, go;
You have been nobly borne.—From me awhile.—
[Exit Eros.

I will o'ertake thee, Cleopatra, and Weep for my pardon. So it must be, for now
All length is torture:—Since the torch is out,
Lie down, and stray no further: Now all labour
Marrs what it does; yea, very force entangles
Itself with strength: Seal then³, and all is done.—
Eros!—I come, my queen:—Eros!—Stay for me:
Where souls do couch on flowers, we'll hand in hand,
And with our sprightly port make the ghosts gaze;
Dido and her Æneas shall want troops,
And all the haunt be ours.—Come, Eros, Eros!

Re-enter Eros.

Eros. What would my lord?

Ant. Since Cleopatra dy'd,
I have liv'd in such dishonour, that the gods
Detest my baseness. I, that with my sword
Quarter'd the world, and o'er green Neptune's back

With ships made cities, condemn myself, to lack
The courage of a woman, less noble mind
Than she, which, by her death, our Cæsar tells,
I am conqueror of myself. Thou art sworn, Eros,
5 That, when the exigent should come, (which now
Is come, indeed) when I should see behind me

The inevitable prosecution of Disgrace and horror, that, on my command,
Thou then would'st kill me: do't, the time is come:
10 Thou strik'st not me, 'tis Cæsar thou defeat'st.
Put colour in thy cheek.

Eros. The gods withhold me!
Shall I do that, which all the Parthian darts,
Though enemy, lost aim, and could not?

15 Ant. Eros,
Would'st thou be window'd in great Rome, and see
Thy master thus with pleach'd arms⁴, bending down
His corrigible⁵ neck, his face subdu'd
To penetrative shame; whilst the wheel'd seat
20 Of fortunate Cæsar, drawn before him, branded
His baseness that ensued?

Eros. I would not see't. [cur'd.

Ant. Come then; for with a wound I must be
Draw that thy honest sword, which thou hast worn
25 Most useful for thy country.

Eros. O, sir, pardon me. [then

Ant. When I did make thee free, swor'st thou not To do this when I bade thee? Do it at once;
Or thy precedent services are all

30 But accidents unpurpos'd. Draw, and come.

Eros. Turn from me then that noble countenance,
Wherein the worship⁶ of the whole world lies.

Ant. Lo thee.— [Turning from him.

Eros. My sword is drawn.

35 Ant. Then let it do at once
The thing why thou hast drawn it.

Eros. My dear master,
My captain, and my emperor! let me say,
Before I strike this bloody stroke, farewell.

40 Ant. 'Tis said, man;—and farewell.

Eros. Farewell, great chief. Shall I strike now?

Ant. Now, Eros.

Eros. Why, there then:—Thus do I escape the sorrow [Eros kills himself.

45 Of Antony's death. [Dies.

Ant. Thrice nobler than myself!
Thou teachest me, O valiant Eros, what
I should, and thou could'st not. My queen and Eros
Have, by their brave instruction, got upon me

50 A nobleness in record: But I will be
A bridegroom in my death, and run into't
As to a lover's bed. Come then; and, Eros,
Thy master dies thy scholar; to do thus

[Falling on his sword.

¹ Shakspeare has here, (Dr. Warburton says,) as usual, taken his metaphor from a low trivial subject; but has ennobled it with much art, by so contriving that the principal term in the subject from whence the metaphor was taken, should belong to, and suit the dignity of, the subject to which the metaphor is transferred; thereby providing at once for the integrity of the figure, and the nobleness of the thought; and this by the word triumph, which either signifies Octavius's conquest, or what we now call, contractedly, the trump at cards, then call the triumph or the triumphing sort. ² i.e. the thing that contains thee. ³ Dr. Johnson thinks we should read, "Seal then, and all is done:" i.e. Close thine eyes for ever, and be quiet.—To seal hawks is to close their eyes. ⁴ Arms folded in each other. ⁵ Corrigible for corrected, and afterwards penetrative for penetrating. ⁶ Worship is the dignity, the authority.

A Monument.Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, and Iras, above.Cleo. O Charmian, I will never go from hence.Char. Be comforted, dear madam.Cleo. No, I will not:All strange and terrible events are welcome,
But comforts we despise; our size of sorrow,
Proportion'd to our cause, must be as great*Enter Diomedes.*

As that which makes it.—How now? is he dead?

Dio. His death's upon him, but not dead.

Look out o' the other side your monument,

His guard have brought him thither.

Enter Antony, borne by the guard.Cleo. O sun, [standBurn the great sphere thou mov'st in;—darkling²The varying shore o' the world³!—O Antony!Antony, Antony!

Help, Charmian, help; Iras, help; help, friends

Below; let's draw him hither.

Ant. Peace:

Not Cæsar's valour hath o'erthrown Antony,

25 But Antony's hath triumph'd on itself.Cleo. So it should be, that none but Antony

Should conquer Antony; but woe 'tis so!

Ant. I am dying, Ægypt, dying; only

Here importune death a while, until

30 Of many thousand kisses the poor last

I lay upon thy lips.—

Cleo. I dare not,

Dear, dear, my lord, pardon; I dare not,

Lest I be taken: not the imperious shew

35 Of the full-fortun'd Cæsar ever shall [haveBe brooch'd with me⁴; if knife, drugs, serpents,

Edge, sting, or operation, I am safe.

Your wife Octavia, with her modest eyes,

And still conclusion⁵, shall acquire no honour*40* Demurring upon me. But come, come, Antony,

Help me, my women,—we must draw thee up;—

Assist, good friends.

Ant. O, quick, or I am gone. [my lord!Cleo. Here's sport, indeed⁶!—How heavy weighs*45* Our strength is all gone into heaviness,

That makes the weight: Had I great Juno's power,

The strong-wing'd Mercury should fetch thee up,

And set thee by Jove's side. Yet come a little,—

Wishers were ever fools;—O, come, come, come;—

[They draw Antony up to Cleopatra.

And welcome, welcome! die, where thou hast

liv'd:

Quicken with kissing⁷;—had my lips that power,

Thus would I wear them out.

All. A heavy sight!Ant. I am dying, Ægypt, dying:

Give me some wine, and let me speak a little.

I learn'd of thee. How! not dead? not dead?—

The guard?—how!—O, dispatch me.

Enter Dercetas, and Guards.1 Guard. What's the noise? [an end*Ant.* I have done my work ill, friends; O, make 5
Of what I have begun.2 Guard. The star is fallen.1 Guard. And time is at his period.All. Alas, and woe!Ant. Let him that loves me, strike me dead. 101 Guard. Not I.2 Guard. Nor I.3 Guard. Nor any one. [Exeunt.Der. Thy death and fortunes bid thy followers fly.
This sword but shewn to Cæsar, with this tidings, 15
Shall enter me with him.Enter Diomedes.Dio. Where's Antony?Der. There, Diomed, there.Dio. Lives he? Wilt thou not answer, man? 20[Exit Dercetas.Ant. Art thou there, Diomed? Draw thy sword, and give me
Sufficing strokes for death.Dio. Most absolute lord,
My mistress Cleopatra sent me to thee.Ant. When did she send thee?Dio. Now, my lord.Ant. Where is she? [phesying fear*Dio.* Lock'd in her monument. She had a pro- 30
Of what hath come to pass: for when she saw
(Which never shall be found) you did suspect
She had dispos'd¹ with Cæsar, and that your rage
Would not be purg'd, she sent you word she was dead;But, fearing since how it might work, hath sent Me to proclaim the truth; and I am come,
I dread, too late.Ant. Too late, good Diomed:—Call my guard,
I pr'ythee. [guard, what, ho! 40Dio. What, ho! the emperor's guard! The Come, your lord calls.Enter a Guard.Ant. Bear me, good friends, where Cleopatra bides;

'Tis the last service that I shall command you.

1 Guard. Woe, woe, are we, sir, you may not live to wear

All your true followers out.

All. Most heavy day! [fate 50Ant. Nay, good my fellows, do not please sharp
To grace it with your sorrows: bid that welcome
Which comes to punish us, and we punish it,
Seeming to bear it lightly. Take me up:I have led you oft; carry me now, good friends, 55
And have my thanks for all.[Exeunt, bearing Antony.]

¹ To dispose may here signify to make terms, to settle matters. ² i.e. without light. ³ She desires the sun to burn his own orb, the vehicle of light, and then the earth will be dark. ⁴ i.e. adorn'd.—A brooch was an ornament formerly worn in the hat. Brooches in the North are buckles set with stones, such as those with which shirt-bosoms and handkerchiefs are clasped. ⁵ i.e. silent coolness of resolution. ⁶ Dr. Johnson supposes the meaning of these strange words to be, "Here's trifling! You do not work in earnest." ⁷ That is, Revive by my kiss.

Cleo. No, let me speak; and let me rail so high,
That the false huswife Fortune break her wheel,
Provok'd by my offence.

Ant. One word, sweet queen:
Of Cæsar seek your honour, with your safety.—O!— 5

Cleo. They do not go together.

Ant. Gentle, hear me:—

None about Cæsar trust, but Proculeius.

Cleo. My resolution, and my hands, I'll trust,
None about Cæsar.

Ant. The miserable change now at my end,
Lament nor sorrow at: but please your thoughts
In feeding them with those my former fortunes
Wherein I liv'd, the greatest prince o' the world,
The noblest: and do now not basely die,
Nor cowardly; put off my helmet to
My countryman, a Roman, by a Roman Valiantly vanquish'd. Now, my spirit is going;
I can no more.— [Antony dies.]

Cleo. Noblest of men, woo't die?
Hast thou no care of me? shall I abide
In this dull world, which in thy absence is
No better than a sty!—O, see, my women,
The crown o' the earth doth melt:—My lord!—
O, wither'd is the garland of the war,
The soldier's spole is fallen¹; young boys, and girls,
Are level now with men: the odds is gone,
And there is nothing left remarkable
Beneath the visiting moon. [She faints.]

Char. O, quietness, lady!

Irás. She is dead too, our sovereign.

Char. Lady!

Irás. Madam!—

Char. O madam, madam, madam,—

Irás. Royal Egypt! empress!

Char. Peace, peace, Irás.

Cleo. No more—but e'en a woman; and commanded

By such poor passion as the maid that milks,
10 And does the meanest chares².—It were for me
To throw my scepter at the injurious gods;
To tell them, that this world did equal theirs,
Till they had stolen our jewel. All's but naught;
Patience is sottish; and impatience does
15 Become a dog that's mad: Then is it sin,
To rush into the secret house of death,
Ere death dare come to us?—How do you, women?
What, what? good cheer! Why, how now, Char-
mian?

20 My noble girls!—Ah, women, women! look,
Our lamp is spent, it's out:—Good sirs, take heart:— [noble,

We'll bury him: and then, what's brave, what's
Let's do it after the high Roman fashion,

25 And make death proud to take us. Come, away:
This case of that huge spirit now is cold.

Ah, women, women! come; we have no friend
But resolution, and the briefest end.

[Exeunt, bearing off Antony's body.]

A C T V.

SCENE I.

Cæsar's Camp.

Enter Cæsar, Agrippa, Dolabella, Mæcenas, Gallus, Proculeius, and train.

Cæs. GO to him, Dolabella, bid him yield;
Being so frustrated, tell him, he mocks
The pauses that he makes³.

Dol. Cæsar, I shall. [Exit Dolabella.]

Enter Dercetas, with the sword of Antony.

Cæs. Wherefore is that? and what art thou,
Appear thus to us? [that dar'st]

Der. I am call'd Dercetas;
Mark Antony I serv'd, who best was worthy
Best to be serv'd: whilst he stood up, and spoke,
He was my master; and I wore my life,
To spend upon his haters: If thou please
To take me to thee, as I was to him
I'll be to Cæsar; if thou pleasest not,
I yield thee up my life.

Cæs. What is't thou say'st?

Der. I say, O Cæsar, Antony is dead.

Cæs. The breaking of so great a thing should
A greater crack: The round world [make

40 Should have shook lions into civil streets,
And citizens to their dens⁴:—The death of Antony

Is not a single doom; in the name lay
A moiety of the world.

45 Der. He is dead, Cæsar;
Not by a public minister of justice,
Nor by a hired knife; but that self hand,
Which writ his honour in the acts it did,
Hath, with the courage which the heart did lend it,
50 Splitted the heart.—This is his sword,
I robb'd his wound of it; behold it stain'd
With his most noble blood.

Cæs. Look you sad, friends?

The gods rebuke me, but⁵ it is a tidings
55 To wash the eyes of kings.

Agr. And strange it is,

That nature must compel us to lament

Our most persisted deeds.

Mec. His taints and honours

¹ He at whom the soldiers pointed, as at a pageant held high for observation. ² i.e. taskwork.—
Hence the modern term charc-woman. ³ i.e. he trifles with us. ⁴ Dr. Johnson conjectures, that a line is lost here: Mr. Malone, however, believes that only two words are wanting, and proposes to read, "The round world should have shook, Thrown raging lions into civil streets, And citizens to their dens."
⁵ But for if not.

Waged equal with him¹.

Agr. A rarer spirit never Did steer humanity: but you, gods, will give us
Some faults to make us men. Cæsar is touch'd.

Mec. When such a spacious mirror's set before
He needs must see himself. [him,

Cas. O Antony!
I have follow'd thee to this;—But we do lance Diseases in our bodies. I must perforce
Have shewn to thee such a declining day,
Or look on thine; we could not stall together
In the whole world: But yet let me lament,
With tears as sovereign as the blood of hearts,
That thou, my brother, my competitor
In top of all design, my mate in empire,
Friend and companion in the front of war,
The arm of mine own body, and the heart
Where mine his thoughts did kindle,—that our stars,
Unreconcilable, should divide
Our equalness to this².—Hear me, good friends,—
But I will tell you at some meeter season;

Enter an Egyptian.

The business of this man looks out of him,
We'll hear him what he says.—Whence are you?

Egypt. A poor Egyptian yet: The queen my
mistress,

Confin'd in all she has, her monument,
Of thy intents desires instruction;
That she preparedly may frame herself
To the way she's forc'd to.

Cas. Bid her have good heart;
She soon shall know of us, by some of ours,
How honourably and how kindly we Determine for her: for Cæsar cannot live
To be ungentle.

Egypt. So the gods preserve thee! [Exit.

Cas. Come hither, Proculeius; Go, and say,
We purpose her no shame: give her what comforts

The quality of her passion shall require;
Lest, in her greatness, by some mortal stroke,
She do defeat us: for her life in Rome
Would be eternal in our triumph: Go,
And, with your speediest, bring us what she says,
And how you find of her.

Pro. Cæsar, I shall. [Exit Proculeius.

Cas. Gallus, go you along.—Where's Dolabbella,

To second Proculeius? [Exit Gallus.

All. Dolabella!

Cas. Let him alone, for I remember now
How he's employ'd; he shall in time be ready.
Go with me to my tent; where you shall see
How hardly I was drawn into this war;
How calm and gentle I proceeded still

In all my writings: Go with me, and see
What I can shew in this. [Exit.

SCENE II.

The Monument.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, and Iras.

Cleo. My desolation does begin to make
A better life: 'Tis paltry to be Cæsar;
Not being fortune, he's but fortune's knave³,
A minister of her will; And it is great
To do that thing that ends all other deeds;
Which shackles accidents, and bolts up change;
Which sleeps, and never palates more the dung⁴,
The beggar's nurse and Cæsar's.—

Enter, below, Proculeius, Gallus, &c.

Pro. Cæsar sends greeting to the queen of Egypt;
And bids thee study on what fair demands
Thou mean'st to have him grant thee.

Cleo. What's thy name?

Pro. My name is Proculeius.

Cleo. Antony

Did tell me of you, bade me trust you; but I do not greatly care to be deceiv'd,
That have no use for trusting. If your master
Would have a queen his beggar, you must tell him,
That majesty, to keep decorum, must
No less beg than a kingdom: if he please
To give me conquer'd Egypt for my son,
He gives me so much of mine own, as I
Will kneel to him with thanks.

Pro. Be of good cheer;

You are fallen into a princely hand, fear nothing:
Make your full reference freely to my lord,
Who is so full of grace, that it flows over
On all that need: Let me report to him
Your sweet dependency; and you shall find
A conqueror, that will pray in aid⁵ for kindness,
Where he for grace is kneel'd to.

Cleo. Pray you, tell him

I am his fortune's vassal, and I send him
The greatness he has got⁶. I hourly learn
A doctrine of obedience; and would gladly
Look him i' the face.

Pro. This I'll report, dear lady.

Have comfort; for, I know your plight is pity'd
Of him that caus'd it.

[Aside.] You see how easily she may be surpriz'd;

[Here Gallus and guard ascend the monument, and enter behind.

Guard her, 'till Cæsar come. [Exit.

Iras. Royal queen!

Char. O Cleopatra! thou art taken, queen!

Cleo. Quick, quick, good hands.

[Drawing a dagger.

Proculeius rushes in, and disarms the Queen.

¹ i. e. his taints and honours were an equal match; were opposed to each other in just proportions, like the counterparts of a wager. ² That is, should have made us, in our equality of fortune, disagree to a pitch like this, that one of us must die. ³ i. e. the servant of fortune. ⁴ i. e. Voluntary death produces a state which has no longer need of the gross and terrene sustenance, in the use of which Cæsar and the beggar are on a level. ⁵ Praying in aid is a law term, used for a petition made in a court of justice for the calling in of help from another that hath an interest in the cause in question. ⁶ I allow him to be my conqueror.

Pro. Hold, worthy lady, hold:
Do not yourself such wrong, who are in this Reliev'd, but not betray'd. [languish?

Cleo. What, of death too, that rids our dogs of Pro. Cleopatra,

Do not abuse our master's bounty, by
The undoing of yourself: let the world see
His nobleness well acted, which your death
Will never let come forth.

Cleo. Where art thou, death? [queen
Come hither, come! come, come, and take a
Worth many babes and beggars!

Pro. O, temperance, lady!

Cleo. Sir, I will eat no meat, I'll not drink, sir;
If idle talk will once be necessary¹,
I'll not sleep neither: This mortal house I'll ruin,
Do Cæsar what he can. Know, sir, that I
Will not wait pinion'd at your master's court;
Nor once be chastis'd with the sober eye
Of dull Octavia. Shall they hoist me up,
And shew me to the shouting varletry
Of censuring Rome? Rather a ditch in Ægypt
Be gentle grave unto me! rather on Nilus' mud
Lay me stark naked, and let the water-flies
Blow me into abhorring! rather make
My country's high pyramides my gibbet,
And hang me up in chains!

Pro. You do extend
These thoughts of horror further than you shall Find cause in Cæsar.

Enter Dolabella.

Dol. Proculeius,
What thou hast done, thy master Cæsar knows,
And he hath sent for thee: as for the queen,
I'll take her to my guard.

Pro. So, Dolabella,
It shall content me best: be gentle to her.—
To Cæsar I will speak what you shall please,
[To Cleopatra.

If you'll employ me to him.

Cleo. Say, I would die. [Exit Proculeius.

Dol. Most noble empress, you have heard of me?

Cleo. I cannot tell.

Dol. Assuredly, you know me.

Cleo. No matter, sir, what I have heard or known. [dreams;
You laugh, when boys, or women, tell their
Is't not your trick?

Dol. I understand not, madam.

Cleo. I dream'd, there was an emperor Antony;
O, such another sleep, that I might see
But such another man!

Dol. If it might please you,—

Cleo. His face was as the heavens; and therein stuck [lighted
A sun, and moon; which kept their course, and
The little² O, the earth.

Dol. Most sovereign creature,—

Cleo. His legs bestrid the ocean; his rear'd arm
Crested the world: his voice was property'd
As all the tuned spheres, and that to friends;
But when he meant to quail and shake the orb,
He was as rattling thunder. For his bounty,
There was no winter in't; an autumn 'twas,
That grew the more by reaping: His delights
Were dolphin-like; they shew'd his back above
The element they liv'd in: In his livery [were Walk'd crowns, and crownets; realms and islands
As plates³ dropt from his pocket.

Dol. Cleopatra,—

[man

Cleo. Think you there was, or might be, such a 15 As this I dream'd of?

Dol. Gentle madam, no.

Cleo. You lye, up to the hearing of the gods.
But, if there be, or ever were one such,
It's past the size of dreaming: Nature wants stuff
20 To vie strange forms with fancy; yet, to imagine
An Antony, were nature's piece 'gainst fancy,
Condemning shadows quite⁴.

Dol. Hear me, good madam:

Your loss is as yourself, great; and you bear it 25 As answering to the weight: 'Would I might never O'ertake pursu'd success, but I do feel,
By the rebound of yours, a grief that shoots
My very heart at root.

Cleo. I thank you, sir.

30 Know you, what Cæsar means to do with me?

Dol. I am loth to tell you what I would you

Cleo. Nay, pray you, sir,— [knew.

Dol. Though he be honourable,—

Cleo. He'll lead me then in triumph?

35 Dol. Madam, he will; I know it.

All. Make way there,—Cæsar.

Enter Cæsar, Gallus, Mecænas, Proculeius, and Attendants.

Cæs. Which is the queen of Ægypt?

40 Dol. It is the emperor, madam. [Cleo. kneels.

Cæs. Arise, you shall not kneel:

I pray you, rise; rise, Ægypt.

Cleo. Sir, the gods

Will have it thus; my master and my lord

45 I must obey.

Cæs. Take to you no hard thoughts:

The record of what injuries you did us,
Though written in our flesh, we shall remember
As things but done by chance.

Cleo. Sole sir o' the world,

I cannot project⁵ mine own cause so well
To make it clear; but do confess, I have Been laden with like frailties, which before
Have often sham'd our sex.

55 Cæs. Cleopatra, know,

We will extenuate rather than enforce:

If you apply yourself to our intents,

¹ Once may mean sometimes.—The meaning of Cleopatra seems to be this: If idle talking be sometimes necessary to the prolongation of life, why I will not sleep, for fear of talking idly in my sleep.

² i. e. the little orb or circle. ³ Plates probably mean, silver money. ⁴ The word piece is a term appropriated to works of art. Here Nature and Fancy produce each their piece, and the piece done by Nature had the preference.—Antony was in reality past the size of dreaming; he was more by Nature than Fancy could present in sleep. ⁵ To project a cause is to represent a cause; to project it well, is to plan or contrive a scheme of defence.

(Which towards you are most gentle) you shall find
A benefit in this change: but if you seek
To lay on me a cruelty, by taking Antony's course, you shall bereave yourself
Of my good purposes, and put your children
To that destruction which I'll guard them from,
If thereon you rely. I'll take my leave.

Cleo. And may, through all the world: 'tis yours; and we
Your'scutcheons, and your signs of conquest, shall Hang in what place you please. Here, my good lord.

Cæs. You shall advise me in all for Cleopatra.

Cleo. This is the brief of money, plate, and jewels,

I am possess'd of: 'tis exactly valued;
Not petty things admitted.—Where's Seleucus?

Sel. Here, madam. [lord,

Cleo. This is my treasurer; let him speak, my Upon his peril, that I have reserv'd
To myself nothing. Speak the truth, Seleucus.

Sel. Madam,
I had rather seal my lips¹, than, to my peril,
Speak that which is not.

Cleo. What have I kept back? [known.

Sel. Enough to purchase what you have made

Cæs. Nay, blush not, Cleopatra; I approve
Your wisdom in the deed.

Cleo. See, Cæsar! O, behold,
How pomp is follow'd! mine will now be yours;
And, should we shift estates, yours will be mine.
The ingratitude of this Seleucus does

Even make me wild:—O slave, of no more trust
Than love that's hir'd!—What, goest thou back?
thou shalt

Go back, I warrant thee; but I'll catch thine eyes,
Though they had wings: Slave, soul-less villain,
O rarely base²! [dog!

Cæs. Good queen, let us intreat you.

Cleo. O Cæsar, what a wounding shame is this;
That thou, vouchsafing here to visit me,
Doing the honour of thy lordliness
To one so meek, that mine own servant should Parcel the sum of my disgraces by Addition of his envy! Say, good Cæsar,
That I some lady trifles had reserv'd,
Immoment toys, things of such dignity
As we greet modern friends withal: and say,
Some nobler token I have kept apart
For Livia, and Octavia, to induce
Their mediation; must I be unfolded
With one that I have bred? The gods! It smites Beneath the fall I have. Pr'ythee, go hence;

[To Seleucus.
Or I shall shew the cinders of my spirits [man,
Through the ashes of my chance³: Wert thou a
Thou would'st have mercy on me.

Cæs. Forbear, Seleucus. [Exit Seleucus.

Cleo. Be it known, that we, the greatest, are misthought

For things that others do; and, when we fall,
We answer others' merits⁴ in our names,
Are therefore to be pitied.

Cæs. Cleopatra,
Not what you have reserv'd, nor what acknowledg'd,
Put we i' the roll of conquest: still be it yours,
Bestow it at your pleasure; and believe,
Cæsar's no merchant, to make prize with you
Of things that merchants sold. Therefore be cheer'd;
Make not your thoughts your prisons; no, dear
queen:

For we intend so to dispose you, as Yourself shall give us counsel. Feed, and sleep:
Our care and pity is so much upon you,
That we remain your friend: And so, adieu.

Cleo. My master, and my lord.

Cæs. Not so: Adieu.

[Exit Cæsar, and his train.
Cleo. He words me, girls, he words me, that I should not

Be noble to myself: But hark thee, Charmian.
[Whispers Charmian.

Irás. Finish, good lady; the bright day is done,
And we are for the dark.

Cleo. Hie thee again:
I have spoke already, and it is provided:
Go put it to the haste.

Char. Madam, I will.

Re-enter Dolabella.

Dol. Where is the queen?

Char. Behold, sir. [Exit Charmian.

Cleo. Dolabella? [mand,

Dol. Madam, as thereto sworn by your com-
Which my love makes religion to obey,
I tell you this: Cæsar through Syria
Intends his journey; and, within three days,
You with your children will he send before:
Make your best use of this: I have perform'd
Your pleasure, and my promise.

Cleo. Dolabella,
I shall remain your debtor.

Dol. I your servant.

Cleo. Farewell, and thanks. Now, Irás, what think'st thou?

Thou, an Egyptian puppet, shalt be shewn
In Rome, as well as I: mechanic slaves
With greasy aprons, rules, and hammers, shall Uplift us to the view; in their thick breaths,
Rank of gross diet, shall we be enclouded,
And forc'd to drink their vapour.

Irás. The gods forbid!

Cleo. Nay, 'tis most certain, Irás: Saucy lictors
Will catch at us, like strumpets; and scald⁵ rhi-mers

¹ i. e. close up my lips as effectually as the eyes of a hawk are closed. ² i. e. base in an uncommon degree. ³ Or fortune.—The meaning is, Begone, or I shall exert that royal spirit which I had in my prosperity, in spite of the imbecility of my present weak condition. ⁴ Merits is in this place taken in an ill sense, for actions meriting censure. ⁵ Scald was a word of contempt, implying poverty, disease, and filth.

Ballad us out o' tune: the quick comedians
Extemporally will stage us, and present
Our Alexandrian revels; Antony
Shall be brought drunken forth, and I shall see
Some squeaking Cleopatra boy¹ my greatness
P' the posture of a whore.

Iras. O the good gods!

Cleo. Nay, that's certain.

Iras. I'll never see it; for, I am sure, my nails
Are stronger than mine eyes.

Cleo. Why, that's the way
To fool their preparation, and to conquer
Their most absurd intents.—Now, Charmian!—

Enter Charmian.

Shew me, my women, like a queen;—Go fetch
My best attires;—I am again for Cydnus,
To meet Mark Antony:—Sirrah, Iras, go.—
Now, noble Charmian, we'll dispatch indeed:
And, when thou hast done this chare, I'll give thee leave

Toplay'till dooms-day.—Bring our crown and all.
Wherefore's this noise? [A noise within.]

Enter one of the Guard.

Guard. Here is a rural fellow,
That will not be deny'd your highness' presence;
He brings you figs.

Cleo. Let him come in. What a poor instrument
[Exit Guard.]

May do a noble deed! he brings me liberty.
My resolution's plac'd; and I have nothing
Of woman in me: Now from head to foot
I am marble-constant: now the fleeting² moon
No planet is of mine.

Re-enter Guard, with a Clown bringing a basket.

Guard. This is the man.

Cleo. Avoid, and leave him. [Exit Guard.]

Hast thou the pretty worm³ of Nilus there,
That kills and pains not?

Clown. Truly I have him: but I would not be the party that should desire you to touch him, for his biting is immortal; those, that do die of it, do seldom or never recover. [on't?]

Cleo. Remember'st thou any that have dy'd

Clown. Very many, men and women too. I heard of one of them no longer than yesterday:
a very honest woman, but something given to lye:
as a woman should not do, but in the way of honesty: how she dy'd of the biting of it, what pain
she felt,—Truly, she makes a very good report o'
the worm: But he that will believe all that they say, shall never be saved by half that they do:
But this is most fallible, the worm's an odd worm.

Cleo. Get thee hence; farewell.

Clown. I wish you all joy of the worm.

Cleo. Farewell.

Clown. You must think this, look you, that the worm will do his kind⁴.

Cleo. Ay, ay, farewell.

Clown. Look you, the worm is not to be trusted,

but in the keeping of wise people; for, indeed,
there is no goodness in the worm.

Cleo. Take thou no care; it shall be heeded.

Clown. Very good: give it nothing, I pray you, for it is not worth the feeding.

Cleo. Will it eat me?

Clown. You must not think I am so simple, but I know, the devil himself will not eat a woman: I know, that a woman is a dish for the gods, if the devil dress her not. But, truly, these same whoreson devils do the gods great harm in their women; for in every ten that they make, the devils mar five.

Cleo. Well, get thee gone; farewell.

Clown. Yes, forsooth; I wish you joy o' the worm. [Exit.]

Cleo. Give me my robe, put on my crown; I Immortal longings in me; Now no more [have
The juice of Egypt's grape shall moist this lip:—
Yare, yare⁵, good Iras; quick.—Methinks, I hear
Antony call; I see him rouse himself

To praise my noble act; I hear him mock
The luck of Cæsar, which the gods give men
To excuse their after wrath: Husband, I come:
Now to that name my courage prove my title!

I am fire, and air; my other elements
I give to baser life.—So,—have you done?
Come then, and take the last warmth of my lips.
Farewell, kind Charmian:—Iras, long farewell.

[Applying the asp.]
Have I the aspick in my lips? Dost fall? [To Iras.]

If thou and nature can so gently part,
The stroke of death is as a lover's pinch,
Which hurts, and is desir'd. Dost thou lye still?
If thus thou vanishest, thou tell'st the world
It is not worth leave-taking. [Iras dies.]

Char. Dissolve, thick cloud, and rain; that I may say,
The gods themselves do weep!

Cleo. This proves me base:
If she first meet the curled Antony,
He'll make demand of her; and spend that kiss,
Which is my heaven to have.—Come, thou mortal
wretch,

With thy sharp teeth this knot intrinsicate
[To the asp.]

Of life at once untie: poor venomous fool,
Be angry, and dispatch. O, couldst thou speak!
That I might hear thee call great Cæsar, ass Unpolicy'd⁶!

Char. O eastern star!

Cleo. Peace, peace!

Dost thou not see my baby at my breast,
That sucks the nurse asleep?

Char. O, break! O, break!

Cleo. As sweet as balm, as soft as air, as gentle,—
O Antony!—Nay, I will take thee too:—

[Applying another asp to her arm.]
What should I stay— [Dies.]

¹ We have before observed, that the parts of women were acted on the stage by boys in our author's time. ² i. e. inconstant. ³ Worm is the Teutonick word for serpent; and in the Northern counties, the word worm is still given to the serpent species in general. ⁴ i. e. will act according to his nature. ⁵ i. e. make haste, be nimble, be ready. ⁶ i. e. an ass without more policy than to leave the means of death within my reach, and thereby deprive his triumph of its noblest decoration.

Char. In this wild world¹?—So, fare thee well.
Now boast thee, death! in thy possession lies
A lass unparallel'd.—Downy windows, close;
And golden Phœbus never be beheld
Of eyes again so royal! Your crown's awry;
I'll mend it, and then play.

Enter the Guard, rushing in.

1 Guard. Where is the queen?

Char. Speak softly, wake her not.

1 Guard. Cæsar hath sent—

Char. Too slow a messenger.—

[Charmian applies the asp.]

O, come; apace, dispatch:—I partly feel thee.

1 Guard. Approach, ho! All's not well: Cæsar's beguil'd. [call him.]

2 Guard. There's Dolabella sent from Cæsar;—

1 Guard. What work is here?—Charmian, is this well done?

Char. It is well done, and fitting for a princess Descended of so many royal kings.

Ah, soldier! [Charmian dies.]

Enter Dolabella.

Dol. How goes it here?

2 Guard. All dead.

Dol. Cæsar, thy thoughts
Touch their effects in this: Thyself art coming
To see perform'd the dreaded act, which thou
So sought'st to hinder.

Enter Cæsar and Attendants.

[Within.] A way there, a way for Cæsar!

Dol. O, sir, you are too sure an augurer;
That you did fear, is done.

Cæs. Bravest at the last;
She levell'd at our purposes, and, being royal,
'Took her own way,—The manner of their deaths?—
I do not see them bleed.

Dol. Who was last with them? [figs;]

1 Guard. A simple countryman, that brought her
This was his basket.

Cæs. Poison'd then.

1 Guard. O Cæsar,
This Charmian liv'd but now; she stood, and spake;
I found her trimming up the diadem
On her dead mistress; tremblingly she stood,
And on the sudden dropp'd.

10 Cæs. O noble weakness!—
If they had swallow'd poison, 'twould appear
By external swelling: but she looks like sleep,
As she would catch another Antony
In her strong toil of grace.

15 Dol. Here, on her breast
There is a vent of blood, and something blown²;
The like is on her arm.

Guard. This is an aspick's trail; and these fig leaves
20 Have slime upon them, such as the aspick leaves
Upon the caves of Nile.

Cæs. Most probable,
That so she dy'd; for her physician tells me,
She hath pursu'd conclusions infinite
25 Of easy ways to die.—Take up her bed;
And bear her women from the monument:—
She shall be buried by her Antony:
No grave upon the earth shall clip in it
A pair so famous. High events as these 30 Strike those that make them: and their story is No less in pity, than his glory, which Brought them to be lamented. Our army shall,
In solemn shew, attend this funeral;
And then to Rome.—Come, Dolabella, see
35 High order in this great solemnity. [Exeunt omnes.]

¹ Mr. Steevens conjectures, that our author may have written vild (i. e. vile according to ancient spelling) for worthless. ² i. e. swoln.

A C T I.

SCENE I.

Athens.

A Hall in Timon's House.

Enter Poet, Painter, Jeweller, and Merchant, at several doors.

Poet. GOOD day, sir.

Pain. I am glad you are well.

Poet. I have not seen you long: How goes the world?

Pain. It wears, sir, as it grows.

Poet. Ay, that's well known:

But what particular rarity? what strange,
Which manifold record not matches? See,
Magick of bounty! all these spirits thy power
Hath conjur'd to attend. I know the merchant.

Pain. I know them both; the other's a jeweller.

Mer. O, 'tis a worthy lord!

Jew. Nay, that's most fix'd. [it were,

Mer. A most incomparable man; breath'd¹, as
To an untirable and continue goodness:
He passes².

Jew. I have a jewel here. [sir?

Mer. O, pray, let's see't: For the lord Timon,

Jew. If he will touch the estimate³: But, for that—

Poet.⁴ *When we for recompence have prais'd the vile,
It stains the glory in that happy verse
Which aptly sings the good.*

Mer. 'Tis a good form. [Looking on the jewel.

Jew. And rich: here is a water, look you.

Pain. You are rapt, sir, in some work, some
To the great lord. [dedication

Poet. A thing slipt idly from me.

Our poesy is as a gum, which oozes

From whence 'tis nourished: The fire i' the flint

Shews not, 'till it be struck; our gentle flame

Provokes itself, and, like the current, flies

Each bound it chases. What have you there?

Pain. A picture, sir. When comes your book forth?

Poet. Upon the heels of my presentiment, sir.

Let's see your piece.

Pain. 'Tis a good piece.

Poet. So 'tis: this comes off⁵ well and excellent.

Pain. Indifferent.

Poet. Admirable! How this grace

Speaks his own standing⁶! what a mental power

¹ Breathed is inured by constant practice; so trained as not to be wearied.—To breathe a horse is to exercise him for the course. ² i. e. he exceeds, goes beyond common bounds. ³ i. e. come up to the price. ⁴ We must here suppose the poet busy in reading his own work; and that these three lines are the introduction of the poem addressed to Timon, which he afterwards gives the painter an account of. ⁵ i. e. according to Dr. Johnson, The figure rises well from the canvas. C'est bien relevé. ⁶ That is, How the graceful attitude of this figure proclaims that it stands firm on its centre, or gives evidence in favour of its own fixture.

This eye shoots forth ! how big imagination
Moves in this lip ! to the dumbness of the gesture
One might interpret.

Pain. It is a pretty mocking of the life.
Here is a touch ; is't good ?

Poet. I'll say of it,
It tutors nature : artificial strife¹
Lives in these touches, livelier than life.

Enter certain Senators.

Pain. How this lord is follow'd !

Poet. The senators of Athens ;—Happy men !

Pain. Look, more ! [of visitors.]

Poet. You see this confluence, this great flood
I have, in this rough work, shap'd out a man,
Whom this beneath world doth embrace and hug
With amplest entertainment : My free drift
Halts not particularly², but moves itself
In a wide sea of wax³ : no levell'd malice
Infects one comma in the course I hold ;
But flies an eagle flight, bold, and forth on,
Leaving no tract behind.

Pain. How shall I understand you ?

Poet. I'll unbolt⁴ to you.
You see, how all conditions, how all minds,
(As well of glib and slippery⁵ creatures, as
Of grave and austere quality) tender down
Their services to lord Timon : his large fortune,
Upon his good and gracious nature hanging,
Subdues and properties to his love and tendance
All sorts of hearts ; yea, from the glass-fac'd flatterer⁶

To Apemantus, that few things loves better
Than to abhor himself ; even he drops down
The knee before him, and returns in peace
Most rich in Timon's nod.

Pain. I saw them speak together.

Poet. Sir, I have upon a high and pleasant hill
Feign'd Fortune to be thron'd : The base of the mount
Is rank'd with all deserts⁷, all kind of natures,
That labour on the bosom of this sphere
To propagate their states⁸ : amongst them all,
Whose eyes are on this sovereign lady fix'd,
One do I personate of Timon's frame,
Whom Fortune with her ivory hand wafts to her ;
Whose present grace to present slaves and servants
Translates his rivals.

Pain. 'Tis conceiv'd to scope⁹.
This throne, this Fortune, and this hill, methinks,
With one man beckon'd from the rest below,
Bowing his head against the steepy mount
To climb his happiness, would be well express'd
In our condition¹⁰.

Poet. Nay, sir, but hear me on :
All those which were his fellows but of late,
(Some better than his value) on the moment
Follow his strides, his lobbies fill with tendance,
5 Rain sacrificial whisp'rings in his ear¹¹,
Make sacred even his stirrop, and through him
Drink the free air¹².

Pain. Ay, marry, what of these ? [mood,

Poet. When Fortune, in her shift and change of 10 Spurns down her late lov'd, all his dependants,
Which labour'd after him to the mountain's top,
Even on their knees and hands, let him slip down,
Not one accompanying his declining foot.

Pain. 'Tis common :

15 A thousand moral paintings I can shew, [tune
That shall demonstrate these quick blows of for-
More pregnantly than words. Yet you do well,
To shew lord Timon, that mean eyes¹³ have seen
The foot above the head.

20 Trumpets sound. Enter Timon, addressing himself courteously to every suitor.

Tim. Imprison'd is he, say you ? [To a Messenger.

Mes. Ay, my good lord : five talents is his debt ;
His means most short, his creditors most strait :
25 Your honourable letter he desires
To those have shut him up ; which failing him,
Periods his comfort.

Tim. Noble Ventidius ! Well ;

I am not of that feather, to shake off [him
30 My friend when he must need me. I do know
A gentleman, that well deserves a help, [him.
Which he shall have : I'll pay the debt, and free

Mes. Your lordship ever binds him. [som ;

Tim. Commend me to him : I will send his ran-35 And, being enfranchis'd, bid him come to me :—
'Tis not enough to help the feeble up,
But to support him after.—Fare you well.

Mes. All happiness to your honour¹⁴ ! [Exit.
Enter an old Athenian.

40 Old Ath. Lord Timon, hear me speak.

Tim. Freely, good father.

Old Ath. Thou hast a servant nam'd Lucilius.

Tim. I have so : What of him ? [thee.

Old Ath. Most noble Timon, call the man before 45 Tim. Attends he here, or no ?—Lucilius !

Enter Lucilius.

Luc. Here, at your lordship's service.

Old Ath. This fellow here, lord Timon, this thy creature,
50 By night frequents my house. I am a man
That from my first have been inclin'd to thrift ;
And my estate deserves an heir more rais'd,

¹ Strife is either the contest or act with nature. ² i. e. My design does not stop at any single character. ³ Anciently they wrote upon waxen tables with an iron style. ⁴ i. e. I'll open, I'll explain. ⁵ Slippery is smooth, unresisting. ⁶ Meaning, the flatterer who shows in his own look, as by reflection, the looks of his patron. ⁷ i. e. cover'd with ranks of all kinds of men. ⁸ i. e. to advance or improve their various conditions of life. ⁹ i. e. 'Tis properly imagin'd. ¹⁰ Condition for art. ¹¹ That is, calumniate those whom Timon hated or envied, or whose vices were opposite to his own.—This offering up, to the person flattered, the murdered reputation of others, Shakespeare, with the utmost beauty of thought and expression, calls sacrificial whisp'rings ; alluding to the victims offered up to idols. ¹² That is, catch his breath in affected fondness. ¹³ i. e. inferior spectators. ¹⁴ The common address to a lord in our author's time, was your honour, which was indifferently used with your lordship.

Than one which holds a trencher.

Tim. Well; what further?

Old Ath. One only daughter have I, no kin else,
On whom I may confer what I have got:
The maid is fair, o' the youngest for a bride,
And I have bred her at my dearest cost,
In qualities of the best. This man of thine
Attempts her love: I pr'ythee, noble lord,
Join with me to forbid him her resort;
Myself have spoke in vain.

Tim. The man is honest.

Old Ath. Therefore he will be, Timon¹:
His honesty rewards him in itself,
It must not bear my daughter.

Tim. Does she love him?

Old Ath. She is young, and apt:
Our own precedent passions do instruct us
What levity is in youth.

Tim. [To Lucil.] Love you the maid?

Luc. Ay, my good lord, and she accepts of it.

Old Ath. If in her marriage my consent be missing,
I call the gods to witness, I will choose
Mine heir from forth the beggars of the world,
And dispossess her all.

Tim. How shall she be endow'd,
If she be mated with an equal husband? [all.

Old Ath. Three talents, on the present; in future,

Tim. This gentleman of mine hath serv'd me long;
To build his fortune, I will strain a little,
For 'tis a bond in men. Give him thy daughter:
What you bestow, in him I'll counterpoise,
And make him weigh with her.

Old Ath. Most noble lord,
Pawn me to this your honour, she is his.

Tim. My hand to thee; mine honour on my promise.

Luc. Humbly I thank your lordship: Never may

That state or fortune fall into my keeping,
Which is not ow'd² to you!

[Exeunt Lucil. and Old Ath.

Poet. Vouchsafe my labour, and long live your lordship!

Tim. I thank you; you shall hear from me anon:
Go not away.—What have you there, my friend?

Pain. A piece of painting; which I do beseech
Your lordship to accept.

Tim. Painting is welcome.

The painting is almost the natural man;
For since dishonour trafficks with man's nature,
He is but outside: These pencil'd figures are Even such as they give out. I like your work;
And you shall find, I like it: wait attendance
'Till you hear further from me.

Pain. The gods preserve you! [hand;

Tim. Well fare you, gentlemen: Give me your
We must needs dine together.—Sir, your jewel
Hath suffer'd under praise.

Jew. What, my lord? dispraise?

Tim. A mere satiety of commendations.

If I should pay you for 't, as 'tis extoll'd,
It would unclew me quite³.

Jew. My lord, 'tis rated

5 As those, which sell, would give: But you well
know,

Things of like value, differing in the owners,
Are prized by their masters: believe it, dear lord,
You mend the jewel by the wearing it.

10 Tim. Well mock'd.

Mer. No, my good lord; he speaks the common tongue,

Which all men speak with him.

Tim. Look, who comes here. Will you be chid?

Enter Apemantus.

Jew. We will bear, with your lordship.

Mer. He'll spare none.

Tim. Good morrow to thee, gentle Apemantus!

Apem. 'Till I be gentle, stay for thy good morrow; [honest.

20 When thou art Timon's dog, and these knaves

Tim. Why dost thou call them knaves? thou know'st them not.

Apem. Are they not Athenians?

25 Tim. Yes.

Apem. Then I repent not.

Jew. You know me, Apemantus.

Apem. Thou know'st I do; I call'd thee by thy name.

Tim. Thou art proud, Apemantus. [Timon.

Apem. Of nothing so much, as that I am not like

Tim. Whither art going?

Apem. To knock out an honest Athenian's brains.

Tim. That's a deed thou'lt die for.

Apem. Right, if doing nothing be death by the law.

Tim. How lik'st thou this picture, Apemantus?

Apem. The best, for the innocence.

Tim. Wrought he not well, that painted it?

Apem. He wrought better that made the painter; and yet he's but a filthy piece of work.

Poet. You are a dog.

Apem. Thy mother's of my generation; What's she, if I be a dog?

Tim. Wilt dine with me, Apemantus?

Apem. No; I eat not lords.

Tim. An thou should'st, thou'dst anger ladies.

Apem. O, they eat lords; so they come by great bellies.

Tim. That's a lascivious apprehension.

Apem. So thou apprehend'st it: take it for thy labour.

Tim. How dost thou like this jewel, Apemantus?

Apem. Not so well as plain-dealing, which will not cost a man a doit⁴.

Tim. What dost thou think 'tis worth?

Apem. Not worth my thinking.—How now, poet?

¹ Dr. Warburton explains this passage thus: "If the man be honest, my lord, for that reason he will be so in this; and not endeavour at the injustice of gaining my daughter without my consent."

² or due. ³ To unclew, is to unwind a ball of thread.—To unclew a man, is to draw out the whole mass of his fortunes. ⁴ This alludes to the proverb: "Plain dealing is a jewel; but they that use it, die beggars."

Poet. How now, philosopher?

Apem. Thou liest.

Poet. Art not one?

Apem. Yes.

Poet. Then I lie not.

Apem. Art not a poet?

Poet. Yes.

Apem. Then thou liest: look in thy last work, where thou hast feign'd him a worthy fellow.

Poet. That's not feign'd, he is so.

Apem. Yes, he is worthy of thee, and to pay thee for thy labour: He, that loves to be flatter'd, is worthy o' the flatterer. Heavens, that I were a lord!

Tim. What would'st thou do then, Apemantus?

Apem. Even as Apemantus does now, hate a lord with my heart.

Tim. What, thyself?

Apem. Ay.

Tim. Wherefore?

Apem. That I had no angry wit to be a lord¹.—Art thou not a merchant?

Mer. Ay, Apemantus.

Apem. I raffick confound thee, if the gods will [not!

Mer. If traffick do it, the gods do it.

Apem. Traffick's thy god, and thy god confound thee!

Trumpets sound. Enter a Messenger.

Tim. What trumpet's that?

Mes. 'Tis Alcibiades, and some twenty horse, All of companionship.

Tim. Pray, entertain them; give them guide to us.

You must needs dine with me:—Go not you 'Till I have thank'd you; and, when dinner's done,

Shew me this piece.—I am joyful of your sights.—

Enter Alcibiades, with the rest.

Most welcome, sir!

Apem. So, so; there!—

Aches contract and starve your supple joints!—That there should be small love 'mongst these sweet knaves,

And all this courtesy! the strain² of man's bred Into baboon and monkey. [out

Alcib. Sir, you have sav'd my longing, and I feed Most hungrily on your sight.

Tim. Right welcome, sir:

Ere we depart³, we'll share a bounteous time In different pleasures. Pray you, let us in.

[Exeunt all but Apemantus.

Enter two Lords.

1 Lord. What time a day is 't, Apemantus?

Apem. Time to be honest.

1 Lord. That time serves still.

Apem. The most accursed thou, that still omitt'st [it.

2 Lord. Thou art going to lord Timon's feast?

Apem. Ay; to see meat fill knaves, and wine heat fools.

2 Lord. Fare thee well, fare thee well.

Apem. Thou art a fool, to bid me farewell twice.

2 Lord. Why, Apemantus?

Apem. 'Should'st have kept one to thyself, for I mean to give thee none.

1 Lord. Hang thyself.

Apem. No, I will do nothing at thy bidding: make thy requests to thy friend.

2 Lord. Away, unpeaceable dog, or I'll spurn thee hence.

Apem. I will fly, like a dog, the heels of the ass.

1 Lord. He's opposite to humanity. Come, shall we in,

And taste lord Timon's bounty? he out-gees

The very heart of kindness.

2 Lord. He pours it out; Plutus, the god of gold, Is but his steward: no meed⁴, but he repays

Sevenfold above itself; no gift to him,

But breeds the giver a return exceeding

All use of quittance⁵.

1 Lord. The noblest mind he carries,

That ever govern'd man.

2 Lord. Long may he live in fortunes! Shall we in?

1 Lord. I'll keep you company. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.

Another Apartment in Timon's House.

Hautboys playing loud musick. A great banquet serv'd in; and then enter Timon, Alcibiades, Lucius, Lucullus, Sempronius, and other Athenian Senators, with Ventidius. Then comes, dropping after all, Apemantus discontentedly, like himself.

Ven. Most honour'd Timon, it hath pleas'd the gods to remember

My father's age, and call him to long peace.

He is gone happy, and has left me rich:

Then, as in grateful virtue I am bound

To your free heart, I do return those talents,

Doubled, with thanks and service, from whose help

I deriv'd liberty.

Tim. O, by no means,

Honest Ventidius: you mistake my love;

I gave it freely ever; and there's none

Can truly say, he gives, if he receives:

If our betters play at that game, we must not dare

To imitate them; Faults that are rich, are fair.

Ven. A noble spirit.

[They all stand ceremoniously looking on Timon.

Tim. Nay, my lords, ceremony

Was but devis'd at first

To set a gloss on faint deeds, hollow welcomes,

Recanting goodness, sorry ere 'tis shewn:

But where there is true friendship, there needs none.

Pray, sit; more welcome are ye to my fortunes, Than they to me. [They sit.

1 Lord. My lord, we always have confess'd it.

Apem. Ho, ho, confess'd it? hang'd it, have you not?

¹ The meaning may be, I should hate myself for patiently enduring to be a lord. ² or lineage of man's worn down into a monkey. ³ i. e. part. ⁴ Meed in this place seems to mean desert.

⁵ i. e. all the customary returns made in discharge of obligations.

Tim. O, Apemantus!—you are welcome.

Apem. No; you shall not make me welcome: I come to have thee thrust me out of doors.

Tim. Fye, thou art a churl; you have got a humour there

Does not become a man, 'tis much to blame:—

They say, my lords, ira furor brevis est,

But yonder man is ever angry.—

Go, let him have a table by himself;

For he does neither affect company,

Nor is he fit for it, indeed.

Apem. Let me stay at thine own peril, Timon; I come to observe; I give thee warning on't.

Tim. I take no heed of thee; thou art an Athenian,

Therefore welcome: I myself would have no I pr'ythee, let my meat make thee silent.

Apem. I scorn thy meat; 'twould choak me, for I should Ne'er flatter thee.—O you gods! what a number Of men eat Timon, and he sees them not!

It grieves me, to see so many dip their meat

In one man's blood: and all the madness is,

He cheers them up too².

I wonder, men dare trust themselves with men:

Methinks, they should invite them without knives;

Good for their meat, and safer for their lives.

There's much example for't; the fellow, that

Sits next him now, parts bread with him, pledges

The breath of him in a divided draught,

Is the readiest man to kill him: it has been prov'd.

If I were a huge man, I should fear to drink at meals;

Lest they should spy my wind-pipe's dangerous

Great men should drink with harness on their throats.

Tim. My lord, in heart³; and let the health go round.

2 Lord. Let it flow this way, my good lord.

Apem. Flow this way!

A brave fellow! he keeps his tides well. Timon,

Those healths will make thee, and thy state, look ill.

Here's that, which is too weak to be a sinner,

Honest water, which ne'er left man i' the mire:

This, and my food, are equals: there's no odds.

Feasts are too proud to give thanks to the gods.

APEMANTUS'S GRACE.

Immortal gods, I crave no pelf;

I pray for no man but myself:

Grant I may never prove so fond,

To trust man on his oath or bond;

Or a harlot, for her weeping;

Or a dog, that seems a sleeping;

Or a keeper with my freedom;

Or my friends, if I should need 'em.

Amen. So fall to't:

Rich men sin, and I eat root.

[Eats and drinks.

Much good dich thy good heart, Apemantus!

Tim. Captain Alcibiades, your heart's in the field now.

Alcib. My heart is ever at your service, my lord.

Tim. You had rather be at a breakfast of enemies, than a dinner of friends.

Alcib. So they were bleeding new, my lord, there's no meat like 'em; I could wish my best friend at such a feast.

Apem. 'Would all those flatterers were thine enemies then; that thou might'st kill 'em, and bid me to 'em.

1 Lord. Might we but have that happiness, my lord, that you would once use our hearts, whereby we might express some part of our zeals, we should think ourselves for ever perfect⁴.

Tim. O, no doubt, my good friends, but the gods themselves have provided that I shall have much help from you: How had you been my friends else? why have you that charitable⁵ title from thousands, did not you chiefly belong to my heart⁶? I have told more of you to myself, than you can with modesty speak in your behalf; and thus far I confirm you⁷. O, you gods, think I, what need we have any friends, if we should never have need of them? they were the most needless creatures living, should we ne'er have use for them: and would most resemble sweet instruments hung up in cases, that keep their sounds to themselves. Why, I have often wish'd myself poorer, that I might come nearer to you. We are born to do benefits: and what better or properer can we call our own, than the riches of our friends? O, what a precious comfort 'tis, to have so many, like brothers, commanding one another's fortunes! O joy, e'en made away ere it can be born! Mine eyes cannot hold water, methinks: to forget their faults, I drink to you.

Apem. Thou weep'st to make them drink, Timon.

2 Lord. Joy had the like conception in our eyes, And, at that instant, like a babe sprung up⁸.

Apem. Ho, ho! I laugh to think that babe a bastard.

3 Lord. I promise you, my lord, you mov'd me

Apem. Much.

Sound tucket.

Tim. What means that trump?—How now?

¹ Timon's meaning seems to be: I myself would have no power to make thee silent, but I wish thou would'st let my meat make thee silent. Timon, like a polite landlord, disclaims all power over the meanest or most troublesome of his guests.

² The allusion, says Dr. Johnson, is to a pack of hounds trained to pursuit by being gratified with the blood of an animal which they kill, and the wonder is, that the animal on which they are feeding cheers them to the chase.

³ That is, my lord's health with sincerity.

⁴ That is, arrived at the perfection of happiness.

⁵ i. e. that dear, endearing title.

⁶ That is, Why are you distinguished from thousands by that title of endearment, was there not a particular connexion and intercourse of tenderness between you and me?

⁷ i. e. I fix your characters firmly in my own mind.

⁸ To look for babies in the eyes of another, is no uncommon expression.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Please you, my lord, there are certain ladies most desirous of admittance.

Tim. Ladies? What are their wills?

Serv. There comes with them a fore-runner, my lord, which bears that office, to signify their pleasures.

Tim. I pray, let them be admitted.

Enter Cupid.

Cup. Hail to thee, worthy Timon;—and to all, That of his bounties taste!—The five best senses Acknowledge thee their patron; and come freely To gratulate thy plenteous bosom; [table rise; The ear, taste, touch, smell, pleas'd from thy They only now come but to feast thine eyes.

Tim. They are welcome all; let 'em have kind admittance:

Musick, make their welcome. [Exit Cupid.

1 Lord. You see, my lord, how amply you are belov'd.

Musick. Re-enter Cupid, with a Masque of Ladies as Amazons, with lutes in their hands, dancing and playing.

Apem. Heyday! what a sweep of vanity comes this way!

They dance! they are mad women.

Like madness is the glory of this life,

As this pomp shews to a little oil, and root¹.

We make ourselves fools, to disport ourselves;

And spend our flatteries, to drink those men,

Upon whose age we void it up again, [not

With poisonous spite, and envy. Who lives, that's

Depraved, or depraves? who dies, that bears

Not one spurn to their graves of their friends' gift?

I should fear, those that dance before me now,

Would one day stamp upon me: It has been done;

Men shut their doors against a setting sun.

The Lords rise from table, with much adoring of Timon; and to shew their loves, each singles out an Amazon, and all dance, men with women;

a lofty strain or two to the hautboys, and cease.

Tim. You have done our pleasures much grace, fair ladies,

Set a fair fashion on our entertainment,

Which was not half so beautiful and kind;

You have added worth unto't, and lively lustre,

And entertain'd me with mine own device.

I am to thank you for it.

1 Lady. My lord, you take us even at the best².

Apem. 'Faith, for the worst is filthy; and would not hold

Taking, I doubt me. [you.

Tim. Ladies, there is an idle banquet attends

Please you to dispose yourselves.

All Lad. Most thankfully, my lord. [Exeunt.

Tim. Flavius,—

Flav. My lord.

Tim. The little casket bring me hither.

Flav. Yes, my lord.—More jewels yet!

There is no crossing him in his humour; [Aside.

Else I should tell him,—Well,—i' faith, I should,

When all's spent, he'd be cross'd³ then, as he could.

'Tis pity, bounty had not eyes behind⁴;

That man might ne'er be wretched for his mind⁵.

[Exit, and returns with the casket.

1 Lord. Where be our men?

Serv. Here, my lord, in readiness.

2 Lord. Our horses.

Tim. O, my friends, I have one word

To say to you:—Look you, my good lord, I must

Intreat you, honour me so much, as to [lord.

Advance⁶ this jewel: accept, and wear it, kind my

1 Lord. I am so far already in your gifts,—

All. So are we all.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. My lord, there are certain nobles of the Newly alighted, and come to visit you. [senate

Tim. They are fairly welcome.

Flav. I beseech your honour,

Vouchsafe me a word; it does concern you near.

Tim. Near? why then another time I'll hear

I pr'ythee, let us be provided [thee:

To shew them entertainment.

Flav. [Aside.] I scarce know how.

Enter another Servant.

2 Serv. May it please your honour, lord Lucius,

Out of his free love, hath presented to you

Four milk-white horses, trapt in silver.

Tim. I shall accept them fairly: let the presents

Be worthily entertain'd.—How now? what news?

Enter a third Servant.

3 Serv. Please you, my lord, that honourable gentleman, lord Lucullus, entreats your company to-morrow to hunt with him; and has sent your honour two brace of greyhounds.

Tim. I'll hunt with him; and let them be re-

Not without fair reward. [ceiv'd,

Flav. [Aside.] What will this come to?

He commands us to provide, and give great gifts,

And all out of an empty coffer.—

Nor will he know his purse; or yield me this,

To shew him what a beggar his heart is,

Being of no power to make his wishes good:

His promises fly so beyond his state,

That what he speaks is all in debt, he owes

For every word; he is so kind, that he now

¹ The meaning is, according to Dr. Johnson, "The glory of this life is very near to madness, as may be made appear from this pomp, exhibited in a place where a philosopher is feeding on oil and roots. When we see by example how few are the necessities of life, we learn what madness there is in so much superfluity." ² i. e. you have seen the best we can do. ³ The poet does not mean here, that he would be cross'd in humour, but that he would have his hand cross'd with money, if he could. He is playing on the word, and alluding to our old silver penny, used before K. Edward the First's time, which had a cross on the reverse, with a crease, that it might be more easily broke into halves and quarters, half-pence and farthings. From this penny, and other pieces, was our common expression derived, I have not a cross about me; i. e. not a piece of money. ⁴ To see the miseries that are following her. ⁵ i. e. for his nobleness of soul. ⁶ i. e. to prefer it; to raise it to honour by wearing it.

Pays interest for't; his land's put to their books.
Well, 'would I were gently put out of office,
Before I were forc'd out!

Happier is he that has no friend to feed,
Than such that do even enemies exceed.

I bleed inwardly for my lord. [Exit.

Tim. You do yourselves much wrong, you bate too much [our love.

Of your own merits:—Here, my lord; a trifle of 2 Lord. With more than common thanks I will receive it.

3 Lord. O, he is the very soul of bounty!

Tim. And now I remember, my lord, you gave Good words the other day of a bay courser
I rode on: it is yours, because you lik'd it.

2 Lord. O, I beseech you, pardon me, my lord,
In that.

Tim. You may take my word, my lord; I know, no man

Can justly praise, but what he does affect:
I weigh my friend's affection with mine own;
I tell you true. I'll call on you.

All Lords. O, none so welcome.

Tim. I take all and your several visitations
So kind to heart, 'tis not enough to give;
Methinks, I could deal kingdoms to my friends,
And ne'er be weary.—Alcibiades,

Thou art a soldier, therefore seldom rich,
It comes in charity to thee: for all thy living
Is 'mongst the dead; and all the lands thou hast,
Lie in a pitch'd field.

Alcib. In defiled land, my lord.

1 Lord. We are so virtuously bound,—

Tim. And so am I to you.

2 Lord. So infinite endear'd,—

Tim. All ¹ to you.—Lights! more lights.

5 1 Lord. The best of happiness, [mon!—

Honour, and fortunes, keep with you, lord Ti-

Tim. Ready for his friends.

[Exeunt Alcibiades, Lords, &c.

Apem. What a coil's here!

10 Serving of becks², and jutting out of bums!

I doubt, whether their legs³ be worth the sums

That are given for 'em. Friendship's full of dregs:

Methinks, false hearts should never have sound legs.

Thus honest fools lay out their wealth on court'sies.

15 Tim. Now, Apemantus, if thou wert not sullen,

I would be good to thee.

Apem. No, I'll nothing: for,

If I should be brib'd too, there would be none left

To rail upon thee; and then thou would'st sin

20 the faster.

Thou giv'st so long, Timon, I fear me, thou

Wilt give away thyself in paper⁴ shortly:

What need these feasts, pomps, and vain-glories?

Tim. Nay,

25 If you begin to rail once on society,

I am sworn, not to give regard to you.

Farewell; and come with better musick. [Exit.

Apem. So;—

Thou wilt not hear me now,—thou shalt not then,

30 I'll lock [be

Thy heaven⁵ from thee. O, that men's ears should

To counsel deaf, but not to flattery! [Exit.

A C T II.

SCENE I.

A publick place in the City.

Enter a Senator.

Sen. AND late, five thousand to Varro; and to Isidore,

He owes nine thousand;—besides my former sum,
Which makes it five and twenty.—Still in motion

Of raging waste? It cannot hold; it will not.

If I want gold, steal but a beggar's dog,

And give it Timon, why, the dog coins gold:

If I would sell my horse, and buy twenty more

Better than he, why, give my horse to Timon,

Ask nothing, give it him, it foals me, straight,

And able horses⁶: No porter at his gate⁷;

But rather one that smiles, and still invites

All that pass by. It cannot hold; no reason

40 Can found his state in safety⁸.—Caphis, ho!

Caphis, I say!

Enter Caphis.

Caph. Here, sir; What is your pleasure?

Sen. Get on your cloak, and haste you to lord

45 Timon;

Importune him for my monies; be not ceas'd⁹

With slight denial; nor then silenc'd, when—

Commend me to your master—and the cap [rah,

Plays in the right hand, thus:—but tell him, sir—

50 My uses cry to me, I must serve my turn

Out of mine own; his days and times are past,

And my reliance on his fracted dates

Has smit my credit: I love, and honour him;

But must not break my back, to heal his finger:

55 Immediate are my needs; and my relief

Must not be tost and turn'd to me in words,

¹ i. e. all good wishes, or all happiness to you. ² To serve a beck, according to Johnson, is to offer a salutation: Mr. Steevens believes it in this place to mean, to pay a courtly obedience to a nod.

³ Our author plays upon the word leg, as it signifies a limb and a bow or act of obeisance. ⁴ i. e. be ruined by his securities entered into. ⁵ i. e. the pleasure of being flattered. ⁶ i. e. If I give my horse to Timon, it immediately foals, and not only produces more, but able horses. ⁷ Our author here alludes to that sternness which was in his days the general characteristic of a porter. ⁸ i. e.

Reason cannot find his fortune to have any safe or solid foundation. ⁹ i. e. stopp'd.

But find supply immediate. Get you gone:
Put on a most importunate aspect,
A visage of demand: for, I do fear,
When every feather sticks in his own wing,
Lord Timon will be left a naked gull¹,
Which² flashes now a phoenix. Get you gone.

Caph. I go, sir.

Sen. Ay go, sir:—take the bonds along with you,
And have the dates in compt.

Caph. I will, sir.

Sen. Go.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.

Timon's Hall.

Enter Flavius, with many bills in his hand.

Flav. No care, no stop! so senseless of expence,
That he will neither know how to maintain it,
Nor cease his flow of riot; Takes no account
How things go from him; nor resumes no care
Of what is to continue: Never mind
Was to be so unwise, to be so kind³.
What shall be done? He will not hear, 'till feel:
I must be round with him, now he comes from hunting.

Enter Caphis, with the servants of Isidore and Varro. 25
Fye, fye, fye, fye!

Caph. Good even⁴, Varro: What,
You come for money?

Var. Is't not your business too?

Caph. It is;—And yours too, Isidore?

Isid. It is so.

Caph. 'Would we were all discharg'd!

Var. I fear it.

Caph. Here comes the lord.

Enter Timon, Alcibiades, &c.

Tim. So soon as dinner's done, we'll forth again,
My Alcibiades.—With me? What is your will?

[They present their bills.]

Caph. My lord, here is a note of certain dues.

Tim. Dues? Whence are you?

Caph. Of Athens here, my lord.

Tim. Go to my steward.

Caph. Please it your lordship, he hath put me off
To the succession of new days this month:
My master is awak'd by great occasion,
To call upon his own; and humbly prays you,
That with your other noble parts you'll suit,
In giving him his right.

Tim. Mine honest friend,

I pr'ythee, but repair to me next morning.

Caph. Nay, good my lord,—

Tim. Contain thyself, good friend.

Var. One Varro's servant, my good lord,—

Isid. From Isidore;

He humbly prays your speedy payment,—

Caph. If you did know, my lord, my master's wants,—

Var. 'Twas due on forfeiture, my lord, six weeks,
And past.—

5 Isid. Your steward puts me off, my lord; and I Am sent expressly to your lordship.

Tim. Give me breath:—

I do beseech you, good my lords, keep on;

[Exeunt Alcibiades, &c.]

10 I'll wait upon you instantly.—Come hither, pray you.

[To Flavius.]

How goes the world, that I am thus encounter'd
With clamorous demands of broken bonds,
And the detention of long-since-due debts,
15 Against my honour?

Flav. Please you, gentlemen,

The time is unagreeable to this business:

Your importunacy cease, 'till after dinner;

That I may make his lordship understand

20 Wherefore you are not paid.

Tim. Do so, my friends: See them well entertain'd.

[Exit Timon.]

Flav. Pray draw near.

[Exit Flavius.]

Enter Apemantus, and a Fool.

25 Caph. Stay, stay, here comes the fool with Apemantus;

Let's have some sport with 'em.

Var. Hang him, he'll abuse us.

Isid. A plague upon him, dog!

30 Var. How dost, fool?

Apem. Dost dialogue with thy shadow?

Var. I speak not to thee.

Apem. No, 'tis to thyself.—Come away.

[To the Fool.]

35 Isid. [To Var.] There's the fool hangs on your back already.

Apem. No, thou stand'st single, thou art not on him yet.

Caph. Where's the fool now?

40 Apem. He last ask'd the question. Poor rogues, and usurers' men! bawds between gold and want!

All. What are we, Apemantus?

Apem. Asses.

All. Why?

45 Apem. That you ask me, what you are, and do not know yourselves.—Speak to 'em, fool.

Fool. How do you, gentlemen?

All. Gramercies, good fool: How does your mistress?

50 Fool. She's e'en setting on water to scald⁵ such chickens as you are. 'Would, we could see you at Corinth⁶.

Apem. Good! gramercy.

Enter Page.

55 Fool. Look you, here comes my master's page.

¹ A gull is a bird as remarkable for the poverty of its feathers, as a phoenix is supposed to be for the richness of its plumage. ² Which is here used for who, and refers to Timon. ³ Warburton supplies the sense of this passage thus: Never mind was [made] to be so unwise, [in order] to be so kind: i. e. Nature, in order to make a profuse mind, never before endowed any man with so large a share of folly. ⁴ Good even, or, as it is sometimes less accurately written, Good den, was the usual salutation from noon, the moment that Good morrow became improper. ⁵ The old name for a certain disease was the brenning, and a sense of scalding is one of its first symptoms. ⁶ A cant name for a bawdy-house, probably from the dissoluteness of that ancient Greek city.

Page. [To the Fool.] Why, how now, captain? what do you in this wise company?—How dost thou, Apemantus?

Apem. 'Would I had a rod in my mouth that I might answer thee profitably.

Page. Pr'ythee, Apemantus, read me the superscription of these letters; I know not which is which.

Apem. Can'st not read?

Page. No.

Apem. There will little learning die then, that day thou art hang'd. This is to lord Timon; this to Alcibiades. Go; thou wast born a bastard, and thou 'lt die a bawd.

Page. Thou wast whelp'd a dog; and thou shalt furnish, a dog's death. Answer not, I am gone. [Exit.]

Apem. Even so, thou out-run'st grace.

Fool. I will go with you to lord Timon's.

Fool. Will you leave me there?

Apem. If Timon stay at home.—You three serve three usurers?

All. Ay; 'would they serv'd us!

Apem. So would I,—as good a trick as ever hangman serv'd thief.

Fool. Are you three usurers' men?

All. Ay, fool.

Fool. I think, no usurer but has a fool to his servant: My mistress is one, and I am her fool. When men come to borrow of your masters, they approach sadly, and go away merry; but they enter my master's house merrily, and go away sadly: The reason of this?

Var. I could render one.

Apem. Do it then, that we may account thee a whore-master, and a knave; which notwithstanding, thou shalt be no less esteemed.

Var. What is a whore-master, fool?

Fool. A fool in good clothes, and something like thee. 'Tis a spirit: sometime, it appears like a lord; sometime, like a lawyer; sometime, like a philosopher, with two stones more than's artificial one¹: He is very often like a knight; and, generally, in all shapes, that man goes up and down in, from fourscore to thirteen, this spirit walks in.

Var. Thou art not altogether a fool.

Fool. Nor thou altogether a wise man; as much foolery as I have, so much wit thou lack'st.

Apem. That answer might have become Apemantus.

All. Aside, aside; here comes lord Timon.

Re-enter Timon, and Flavius.

Apem. Come with me, fool, come.

Fool. I do not always follow lover, elder brother, and woman; sometime, the philosopher.

Flav. Pray you, walk near; I'll speak with you anon. [Exeunt Apemantus and Fool.]

Tim. You make me marvel: Wherefore, ere this time,

5 Had you not fully laid my state before me; That I might so have rated my expence, As I had leave of means?

Flav. You would not hear me, At many leisures I propos'd.

10 Tim. Go to:

Perchance, some single vantages you took When my indisposition put you back; And that unaptness made your minister, Thus to excuse yourself.

15 Flav. O my good lord!

At many times I brought in my accounts, Laid them before you; you would throw them off, And say, you found them in mine honesty.

20 When, for some trifling present, you have bid me Return so much, I have shook my head, and wept; Yea, 'gainst the authority of manners, pray'd you

To hold your hand more close: I did endure Not seldom, nor no slight checks; when I have Prompted you, in the ebb of your estate,

25 And your great flow of debts. My dear-lov'd lord, Though you hear now, yet now's too late a time; The greatest of your having lacks a half To pay your present debts.

Tim. Let all my land be sold.

30 Flav. 'Tis all engag'd, some forfeited and gone; And what remains will hardly stop the mouth Of present dues: the future comes apace:

What shall defend the interim? and at length How goes our reckoning?

35 Tim. To Lacedæmon did my land extend.

Flav. O my good lord, the world is but a word²; Were it all yours, to give it in a breath, How quickly were it gone?

Tim. You tell me true.

40 Flav. If you suspect my husbandry, or falsehood, Call me before the exactest auditors, And set me on the proof. So the gods bless me, When all our offices have been oppress

With riotous feeders³; when our vaults have wept With drunken spilth of wine; when every room

45 Hath blaz'd with lights, and bray'd with minstrelsy; I have retir'd me to a wasteful cock⁴, And set mine eyes at flow.

Tim. Pr'ythee, no more.

[lord!]

50 Flav. Heavens, have I said, the bounty of this How many prodigal bits have slaves, and peasants, This night englutted! Who is not Timon's?

What heart, head, sword, force, means, but is lord

Timon's?

55 Great Timon's, noble, worthy, royal Timon's!

Ah! when the means are gone, that buy this praise,

¹ Meaning the celebrated philosopher's stone, which was in those times much talked of. ² The meaning is, As the world itself may be comprised in a word, you might give it away in a breath.

³ Feeders are servants, whose low debaucheries are practised in the offices of a house.—It appears, that what we now call offices, were anciently called houses of office.

⁴ A wasteful cock is what we now call a waste pipe; a pipe which is continually running, and thereby prevents the overflow of cisterns and other reservoirs, by carrying off their superfluous water.—This circumstance served to keep the idea of Timon's unceasing prodigality in the mind of the steward, while its remoteness from the scenes of luxury within the house, was favourable to meditation.

The breath is gone whereof this praise is made:
Feast won, fast lost; one cloud of winter showers,
These flies are couch'd.

Tim. Come, sermon me no further:
No villainous bounty yet hath past my heart;
Unwisely, not ignobly have I given. [lack,
Why dost thou weep? Can'st thou the conscience
To think I shall lack friends? Secure thy heart;
If I would broach the vessels of my love,
And try the argument¹ of hearts by borrowing,
Men, and men's fortunes, could I frankly use,
As I can bid thee speak.

Flav. Assurance bless your thoughts!

Tim. And, in some sort, these wants of mine are crown'd,

That I account them blessings; for by these Shall I try friends: You shall perceive, how you
Mistake my fortunes; I am wealthy in my friends.
Within there!—Flaminius! Servilius!

Enter Flaminius, Servilius, and other Servants.

Serv. My lord, my lord,—

Tim. I will dispatch you severally,—You, to lord Lucius,—

To lord Lucullus you; I hunted with his Honour to-day,—You, to Sempronius;—
Commend me to their loves; and, I am proud, say,
That my occasions have found time to use them
Toward a supply of money: let the request
Be fifty talents.

Flam. As you have said, my lord.

Flav. Lord Lucius, and Lucullus? hum!—

Tim. Go you, sir, to the senators, [To Flavius.
(Of whom, even to the state's best health, I have Deserv'd this hearing) bid 'em send o' the instant
A thousand talents to me.

Flav. I have been bold,
(For that I knew it the most general² way)
To them to use your signet, and your name;

But they do shake their heads, and I am here
No richer in return.

Tim. Is't true? can't be?

Flav. They answer, in a joint and corporate voice,
5 That now they are at fall, want treasure, cannot Do what they would; are sorry—you are honourable,—

But yet they could have wish'd—they know not—
Something hath been amiss—a noble nature
10 May catch a wrench—would all were well—'tis pity—

And so, intending³ other serious matters,
After distasteful looks, and these hard fractions⁴,
With certain half-caps⁵, and cold-moving nods,
15 They froze me into silence.

Tim. You gods, reward them!—

I pr'ythee, man, look cheerly: These old fellows
Have their ingratitude in them hereditary:
Their blood is cak'd, 'tis cold, it seldom flows;
20 'Tis lack of kindly warmth, they are not kind;
And nature, as it grows again toward earth,
Is fashion'd for the journey, dull, and heavy.—

Go to Ventidius,—Pr'ythee, be not sad,
Thou art true, and honest; ingenuously I speak,
25 No blame belongs to thee:—Ventidius lately
Bury'd his father; by whose death, he's stepp'd
Into a great estate: when he was poor,
Imprison'd, and in scarcity of friends, [me;
I clear'd him with five talents: Greet him from 30 Bid him suppose, some good necessity
Touches his friend, which craves to be remember'd With those five talents:—That had, give it these fellows

To whom 'tis instant due. Ne'er speak, or think, 35 That Timon's fortunes' mong his friends can sink.

Flav. I would, I could not think it; That thought is bounty's foe;
Being free⁶ itself, it thinks all others so. [Exeunt]

A C T III.

SCENE I.

Lucullus's House in Athens.

Flaminius waiting. Enter a Servant to him.

Serv. I HAVE told my lord of you, he is coming down to you.

Flam. I thank you, sir.

Enter Lucullus.

Serv. Here's my lord.

Lucul. [Aside.] One of lord Timon's men? a gift, I warrant. Why, this hits right; I dreamt of a silver bason and ewer to-night. Flaminius, honest Flaminius; you are very respectfully⁷ welcome, sir.—Fill me some wine.—And how 50 does that honourable, complete, free-hearted gentleman of Athens, thy very bountiful good lord and master?

Flam. His health is well, sir.

Lucul. I am right glad that his health is well, 55 sir: And what hast thou there under thy cloak, pretty Flaminius?

Flam. 'Faith, nothing but an empty box, sir?
which, in my lord's behalf, I come to entreat your honour to supply; who, having great and instant

¹ Argument may here be put for contents, as the arguments of a book; or for evidences and proofs.
² i. e. compendious way. ³ To intend and to attend had anciently the same meaning. ⁴ Fractions here mean broken hints, interrupted sentences, abrupt remarks. ⁵ A half-cap is a cap slightly moved, not put off. ⁶ i. e. liberal. ⁷ i. e. respectfully.

occasion to use fifty talents, hath sent to your lordship to furnish him; nothing doubting your present assistance therein.

Lucul. La, la, la, la,—nothing doubting, says he? alas, good lord! a noble gentleman 'tis, if he would not keep so good a house. Many a time and often I ha' din'd with him, and told him on't; and come again to supper to him, of purpose to have him spend less: and yet he would embrace no counsel, take no warning by my coming. Every man has his fault, and honesty is his; I ha' told him on't, but I could never get him from't.

Re-enter Servant, with wine.

Serv. Please your lordship, here is the wine.

Lucul. Flaminius, I have noted thee always wise. Here's to thee.

Flam. Your lordship speaks your pleasure.

Lucul. I have observ'd thee always for a towardsly prompt spirit,—give thee thy due,—and one that knows what belongs to reason; and canst use the time well, if the time use thee well: good parts in thee.—Get you gone, sirrah. [To the Servant, who goes out.—Draw nearer, honest Flaminius. Thy lord's a bountiful gentleman: but thou art wise; and thou know'st well enough, although thou com'st to me, that this is no time to lend money; especially upon bare friendship, without security. Here's three solidares¹ for thee; good boy, wink at me, and say, thou saw'st me not. Fare thee well.

Flam. Is't possible, the world should so much differ;
And we alive, that liv'd²? Fly, damned baseness,
To him that worships thee!

[Throwing the money away.

Lucul. Ha! Now I see, thou art a fool, and fit for thy master.

[Exit Lucullus.

Flam. May these add to the number that may scald thee!

Let molten coin be thy damnation,
Thou disease of a friend, and not himself!
Has friendship such a faint and milky heart,
It turns³ in less than two nights? O you gods,
I feel my master's passion! This slave,
Unto his honour, has my lord's meat in him:
Why should it thrive, and turn to nutriment,
When he is turned to poison?
O, may diseases only work upon't! [nature
And, when he's sick to death, let not that part of
